
Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LIBRARY OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

059.52
JW
v. 30

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Illinois
Nov. 41—16.
Sept. 16— Oct. 15/98

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW

OF

JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS,

LITERATURE, AND ART.

VOL. XXX.

JULY TO DECEMBER, 1898.

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

059.52
JW v.30

INDEX.

LEADING ARTICLES :—

Addition to the Imperial Property... ... 579
Appointment of Officials in Japan... ... 265
Autonomy 504
A word to the Liberals 482
Chinese Affairs 555
Charge of Assault against a British Subject 266
Count Okuma on the Problems of the Day 32
Emperor of China 409
England in the Far East 186
Far Eastern Question 240
Fashoda Incident 435
Financial Situation 108
Great Britain 483
Great Britain and China 33
Japan and China 555
Mr. Barrett on the Far Eastern Situation 662
Mr. Chamberlain's Speech 530
New Formosa Administration... 9
Past and Present 266
Passing of the Land Tax Bill... 637
Political Situation 9
Prince Bismarck... 136
Recent attempt to set the Church of England's House in Order 314
Responsibility and Responsibility 386
Spanish Rule 241
Spanish Fiasco 9
Single Tax 662
Spheres of Influence or the Open Door.. 579
Situation in China 409
The Cabinet 8
The "Genro" 482
The Powers in the Far East... 218
The Situation in China 613
Treaty Rights 637

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES :—

A Charge of Corruption 526
A Californian Health Resort 583
A Cheque without Assets... 264
A Colonial Administration School... ... 182
A Conservative Party 102
A Costly Grievance 184
Accuracy and Veracity 411
A Curious Theory 128
A Curious Point... 236
A Counterpoise 430
A Dirty-handed Politician 658
Admiral Camara 31
A Difficult Case 262
Administrative Reform ... ...77—214—262—312—427
Administrative Reform and the Tokyo Press... 428
Affairs in Peking 354
Affair of the German Stoker 79
Affairs in Manila 438
A Fearful Voyage 291
A Foreign Loan... 261
A Future Party Leader 312
A Hundred Losses and Not One Gain... 607
"A Leap into the Light"... 259
A Journalistic Incident 456
A Literary Achievement 248
Alcohol Smuggling 289
Alcohol Smuggling at Nagoya 502
Alcohol and Tobacco... 575
Americans at Manila 340
Americans and Rebels in the Philippines 239
America, England and Spain... 524
America, Japan and England... 154
American Terms of Peace 128
American-Japanese Bank 158
American Dinner in Yokohama 384
American Thanksgiving Day in Tokyo... 558
A Model Despatch 107
A Magazine Suspended 212
A Misstatement Corrected 141
An American Orchestra 79
An Impatient Public... 263
An Important Case for Foreigners ... 621
An Appeal 217
Anglo-German Understanding 342
An Anniversary Exhibition 237
Annexation of Hawaii 53
An Educational Tempest 310
A New Version 360
An Interview 342
Another Invention 162

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES :—

Anglo-Japanese Entente 415
Another Judicial Trouble... 259
Another N.Y.K. Steamer Ashore 195
Another Prohibited Publication 356
Another Violation of the Harbour Regulations 408
A Police Mistake 283
A Quiet Thrust 181
A Quaint Incident 404
A Radical Recommendation 214
Art-Library Publishing Company 316
Art Supplements 407
Arrest of a Foreigner 99
Artistic Competition 105
A Romantic Episode... 236
Army, The 550
Army and Navy... 210
Asiatic Society of Japan 478
"Asahi," The 282
Ashio Poison 217
Ashio Copper Mine 336
Ashio Complainants 357
A Singular Swindle 78
A Sharp Turn 526
Assetless Cheques 284
A Strange Story... 33
A Strange Double 632
A Sweeping Indictment 525
A Sweeping Measure 181
A Thief to catch a Thief 336
Attempted Murder in Yokohama 391
Attitude of Political Parties should be changed 550
Atmospheric Street Railway in Tokyo ... 527
A Typhoon 156
Autumn Manœuvres... 77
Austro-Hungarian Revised Treaty...58—310—529—576
Bank of Japan ... ... 382—630—658
Balance of Power and Office-Hunting Fever 529
Barley Crop... ... ...135—661
Baron Iwasaki 379
Baron Iwasaki's Detractors 307
Baron Iwasaki and his Successor 434
Baron Sonoda Dismissed 75
Baron Suyematsu 77
Birthday Ball in Tokyo 458
Bishop Cranston in Peking 417
Block in Deliveries of Imports 134
Board of Audit 658
Bourses 289
Bribery and Corruption 155
British (the) in Politics 408
Budget, The 306
Budget for 1899-1900 216
Budget and the Diet 487
Buddhists in Politics... 384
Buddhist Tumult 406
Business Men and the Situation 550
Business Tax 632
Cabinet and the Peers 52
Cabinet and the House of Peers 29
Cabinet and Armaments Expansion ... 313
Cabinet and Political Parties 632
Cabinet and its Political Supporters ... 105
Cabinet, The 658
Cabinet (The) and the Parties 498
Cabinet Difficulty 51
Capital in the form of Goods 28
Cement Companies 242
Cession of Newchwang 531
Chaffing the New Ministers 29
Changes of Provincial Governors 13
Charges against the Prime Minister ... 454
Cha-no-mizu Murder 500
China and Japan 313, 338
China's Ambassadors 185
Chinese Telegrams 367
Chinese Representative in Tokyo 334
Chinese Legation in Tokyo 185, 361
Chinese as Journalists 608
Chinese Customs Service 6
"Chinese Progress" and Kang Yu-wai.. 332
Chrysanthemum Party at Waseda ... 501
Christ Church Condemned 558
"Clan Officials" 217
Clash of Interests 333
Collision in the Inland Sea 426
Commercial and Manufacturing Classes in Politics... 237

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES :—

Commercial Code 28
Contra Bonos Mores... 391
Concert, The late 577
Consanguineous Marriages and Physical Deformities 523
Conservatism in Education 486
Consular Appointments and Changes... 234
Constitutionalists' Manifesto 12
Control of Elections 104
Consequences of the Peking Revolution.. 334
Concerning Foreigners' Disabilities ... 86
Cotton Spinning ... ... 134—556—660
Cotton Spinning Companies 184
Cotton Spinning in Shanghai 360
Cost of Neutrality 153
Count of Turin ... ...367—386
Count Itagaki 632
Count Itagaki's Essay 235
Count Itagaki and the Constitutionalists. 55
Count Itagaki and the Prison Officials.. 307
Count Itagaki's Supposed Assailants ... 477
Count Okuma ... ...181—631
Count Okuma's Lecture 408
Count Okuma's Party 287
Count Okuma and the Tax 212
Count Okuma's Retort 310
Count Okuma's Serenity 502
Counts Okuma and Itagaki 27
Count Okuma's Instructions 427
Count Okuma and his Omori Critic ... 661
Count Okuma on the Politics of the Hour 27
Court Mourning... ... ...287—382
Cruiser "Kasagi" 587
Crown Prince 503
Customs Returns 503
Death and a Birth 185
Deadlock in the Import Trade 262
Defective Criminal Procedure 658
Departure of the Chinese Minister... ... 407
Deposition of the Chinese Emperor ... 330
Democratic Ideas 6
Demand for floating Capital 162
Destruction of the Japan Silk Factory ... 635
Departure of Mr. and Mrs. von Trentler 14
Disastrous Fire at Hankow 392
Distressed Farmers 309
Disunited Advocates of Union 437
Disturbance in Kosuge Prison 286
Disruption 429
Disaster at Sea 83
Dissipated Secretary of Legation 612
Dispersal of a Political Meeting 610
Doshisha, The ... ... 358—385—551—576
Dr. George C. Needham 26
Dr. Hatoyama 3
Duplicated in Japan 316
Dutch as Colonizers 411
Dysentery 286
Earthquake at Gifu 501
Education in Japan 310
Election Complication in Tokyo 179
Emperor to visit Yokosuka 239
Empress-Dowager's First Direct Edict... 417
Empress-Dowager's Intentions 402
Emperor and the Cabinet... 636
Emperor's Speech 577
Emperor of China on "Squeeze Pidjin". 99
Emperor's Promise 636
Entertainment at the French Legation... 608
Ethnological Position of Japan 160
European Situation 456
Ex-Judge of Formosa 14
Expanding Telegrams 552
Experiences... 213
Export of Jinrikisha 50
Export Duties 661
Extension of Hongkong 58
"Extras" 408
Fall of Manila 250
Farewell dinner to Mr. Komura at the Tokyo Club 406
Federation of Women's Clubs 161
Fiftieth anniversary of what? 285
Field Marshal's Decoration 210
Fight between Russian and Japanese Marines at Nagasaki 660
Fugitive Forger, The 26
Fight at Santiago ... ... 54—200
First Trouble in the Constitutional Party. 75
Finance ... ... 78—203—306—430—458
Financial Questions 151

Digitized by Google
325971
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES:—

Finance in the Feudal Ages 162
Fires 245
Fire at Kobe 34
Foreign Office ... ... 155—181—286
Foreign Capital... 183
Foreign Capital for Japanese Railways.. 502
Foreign Capital and Japanese Companies 104
Foreign Capital and the Tenure of Land by Foreigners... 29
Foreign Insurance Companies and Agencies 499
Foreign Insurance in Japan 477
Foreign Prisoners in Japan Jails 161
Foreigners and Shares in Japan Companies 183
Foreign Ownership of Shares in Japanese Companies 53
Foreigners in Japanese Prisons 311
Foreign Practitioners in Japan 631
Forests in Japan... 214
Formosa... ... ...130—157—184—577—609
Formosan Loan 356
Formosa-Foochow Cable 631
Formosa and the Codes 102
Formosa Railway ... ...384—337
Formosa Railway Company 131
Formosan Rebels 157
Formosan Regulations 99
Formosa and the Tariff 310
Formosan Development 385
Formosan Insurgents 382
Fracas of last August 558
France and England 476
French National Fête 58
French Legation 30
Future of the Philippines... 105
Future of the Philippines and Cuba ... 238
Further Trouble in Connection with Warehousing Companies 55
Futen Biyo-in 577
General Election 159
Germany in the Far East... 79
Germany and England 408
Germany in the Philippines 185
Glyptic Society 527
Governors of Prefectures 357
Great Britain at Chusan 552
Gumma Prefecture 576
Hankow's Destructive Fire 416
Hawaiian Affairs 208
Hawaiian Indemnity 480
Hawaii and Shasi 184
Hawaiian Representative 356
Harvard Club of Tokyo and Mr. Komura. 402
"Hitachi Maru" 634
High Council on Education 431
High Council of Agriculture, Commerce, and Industry ... ... 431—479—529
Hokkaido 288
Hongkong and Shanghai Bank Dividends 169
House of Peers 128
Hyogo Warehousing Trouble 132
Hyogo Soko Kaisha Settlement 503
How the heat was felt in England ... 454
Ideas of Leading Chinese Statesmen ... 611
Imperialist Party 28
Imperial University 50
Imperial Stage in Peking 426
Imperial Commercial Museum 107
Imports under the New Tariff 307
Imports of Iron from China 131
Imports and Exports... 291
Illness of Princess Komatsu 487
Incident of the Chinese Drama 386
Increase of Taxation... 357
Influx of Foreigners 217
Is Buddhism the State Religion of Japan? 457
Itinerant Assassins 575
Irksome Privileges 180
Japan Fine Art Institution 432
Japan International Association of Journalists 2
Japan and the Philippines 5
Japan and Siam... 106
Japan and Korea 575
Japan as a Manufacturing Country ... 359
Japan's Industrial Future 14
Japan's Policy Towards China 435
Japan's Foreign Loan 335
Japan's Answer to Russia 311
Japan's Maritime Facilities 236
Japanese Bazaar 590
Japanese Judges 132
Japanese Business Methods 320
Japanese Companies... 160
Japanese Art Folio 407
Japanese Railways and Foreign Capitalists 154
Japanese in Korea 434
Japanese Travellers in America 211
Japanese Trade in 1898 86
Japanese Plums in America 31

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES:—

Japanese Government Forests 288
Japanese Silver Coins and Convertible Notes in Korea 56
Japanese Press on Chinese Affairs... ... 333
Japanese Suspect at Port Arthur 552
Japanese Torpedo Craft 107
Japanese Fishing in Korean Waters ... 52
Japanese Public Opinion and the Chinese Crisis 379
Japanese Trade with India 14
Jail Question and the Buddhists 430
Jinrikisha Coolies 404
Jinrikisha Fares 526
Joint Stock Companies 51
Journalists, Medical Practitioners, and Druggists... 633
Judiciary, The 208
Judge Takano ... ... 50— 587
Judicial Excitement 153
Judiciary, The 428
"Kasagi Kan" ... ... 553—608
Kang Yu-wei 435
Kawa-biraki Fracas 156
Killed by an Electric Wire 265
Kobe Memorial 212
Kobe and Yokohama 261
Kobe Swindle 30
Kobe's Knowledge 381
Kobe Chamber of Commerce and Foreign Ownership of Land in Japan 284
Korea ... ... 56—664
Korean Troubles 524
Korean Poisoning Affair ... ...289—308
Korea Partitioned 308
Kwangsi Rebellion 150
Kyobashi Hotch-potch 185
Ladies of the Corps Diplomatique in Peking 551
Land Tax ... ...78—553—574
Land Leases in Hyogo 635
Land of Refuge 331
Ladrones, The 105
Lady run down by a Carriage 503
Late Dr. Verbeck 311
Larceny of Mail Matter 360
Law of Election 576
Le Nu au Salon 237
Legislative Business 634
Legislative Work of the Diet in its Twelfth Session 43
Lighter side of the War 247
Life Assurance in Japan 335
Liberals and Progressists 154
Liberals and Progressists in China ... 264
Li Hung-chang ... ... 288—333—407
Li Hung-chang's Dinner Party 383
Liaotung Jurisdiction 576
Lieut.-General Viscount Torio 359
Locomotives 650
Locomotive building in Japan 115
Lord Charles Beresford at Singapore ... 367
Loss of the "Tayeyama Maru" 612
Mails for China 394
Marquis Ito... ... 28—53—203—458—577
Marquis Ito going to China 76
Marquis Ito and China 132
Marquis Ito in China 338
Marquis Ito on China ... ...611—615
Marquis Ito on the Situation ... ...477—552
Marquis Ito's visit to China 103
Marquis Ito and the Emperor of China.. 383
Marquis Ito's retirement 13
Marquis Yamagata 500
Marquis Yamagata and the Constitution 29
Marquis Tokugawa's Funeral 80
Marriage of Miss Eldridge 461
Manifesto of the National Unionists ... 29
Mayor of Tokyo... ... ...359—661
Masonic Installation (O'Tentosama Lodge) 417
Memorial Service for the late M. Sienkiewicz 434
Medicine for Phthisis 215
Merchant Captain's Adventure 26
Mitsui Ginko 135
Minister of Education ... ...214—285
Minister of Justice and Chief Public Procurator 263
Military and Naval Promotion 333
Modern Enamels 80
Money Market, The 311
More Insubordination on the part of Students... 134
M. Boissonade 133
Mr. John Barrett 638
Mr. John Barrett on the Philippines ... 659
Mr. Nakada 312
Mr. John Foster Fraser 107
Mr. Brocklebank's Pictures 432
Mr. Boku Yeiko... 264
Mr. Detring and China's Mines 192
Mr. H. C. Eustace 408
Mr. Frederic Yates' Portraits 111

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES:—

Mr. Fukuzawa ... ... 332—361—380
Mr. Fukuzawa's Students 612
Mr. Gladstone 14
Mr. Hoshi Toru ... ...182—663
Mr. Oishi's Speech 288
Mr. Ozaki's Successor and the Political Situation 428
Mr. Pak Yong-ho 79
Mr. Robertson's Pictures 342
Mr. Shimada Saburo 636
Mr. Shimada's Explanation 660
Mr. Taguchi Ukichi 479
Miss Tsuda... 361
Mrs. Hugh Fraser 185
Music in Yokohama... 99
Murder of a German Seaman... 58
Murder in a Railway Carriage 581
National Unionists 156
New Bishop of Osaka 361
New Boarding House in Sapporo 99
New Cabinet 3
New Copper Coins 335
New Cabinet and Public Opinion 475
New Dock at Uraga... 456
New Departure 156
New Fine Arts Association 60
New Italian Minister to China 335
New Japanese Settlement in Tientsin ... 635
New Newspaper... 184
New Palace Guard in Korea 308
New Railway 530
New Secretary of the British Legation... 381
New Submarine Cable 402
New Tax 135
New Vice-Ministers 35
Next Japanese Domestic Exhibition ... 386
Next Session of the Diet 6
Nippon Yusen Kaisha 61
N.Y.K. Steamer Wrecked 11
N.Y.K. Almanacks 587
Nippon Yusen Kaisha Insurance 500
Ningpo Joss House 127
North Eastern Politicians... 313
Notes on News 34
No. 23 Torpedo Boat 210
Object of the Chinese Reformers 384
Officers for the Navy and Army 105
Official appointments ... ... 502—554
Oji Paper Mill 261
One of the Fugitives 332
One Outspoken Member 480
One-eyed critics... 381
Opening of the Diet 335
Opinion of the Chinese Legation 336
Operation of the Revised Treaties... ... 209
Orders 502
"Oriental-like Political Changes" 479
Osaka Shosen Kaisha and Foreign Shareholders 55
Outrage at a Church in Shiba 57
Outrage on Christians at Shiraoka ... 528
Outrages in Railway Carriages 609
Ownership of Land by Foreigners 608
Ozaki (The) Incident 259
Party Platforms in Japan... 158
Paris Conference 242
Peking Government and Kang Yu-wei.. 633
Peking Usurpation, The 364
Peking Enigma 378
Personal Intelligence... 12
Pestilential Publication, A 456
Perverted History 380
Perry Incident, The 260
Perry (The) Episode... 237
Peers, The 311
Philippines ... ... 57—264—480—586
Philippines Problem ... ...128—529
Pickpockets and Railways 35
Plain Speaking and Excellent Sense ... 159
Platform of the Constitutionalists 52
Politics ... ... 289—312—634
Political 522
Political Notes 129
Political Items 4
Political Situation ... ...101—546
Political Horizon 379
Politicians and Governors 608
Political Crisis—Resignation of the Ministry 450
Politics of the Hour 403
Police and the Constitutional Party ... 478
Police and the Parties 455
Poisoning the Emperor of Korea 320
Portrait of Mr. Keil 159
Postal Communications 134
Portuguese National Holiday 342
Powers in Peking 402
Press and the Law 501
Presentation to Dr. Macdonald 133
President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha .. 262
President of the Board of Audit 634
Pneumatic Railways... 634
President of the Bank of Japan 100

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:
(SUPPLEMENT.)

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, JANUARY 28TH, 1899.

明治三十二年五月三十日郵便物認可

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD AT TOKYO.

IMPORTANT SPEECH AT A JAPANESE RECEPTION.

THE OPEN DOOR IN CHINA.

JAPANESE AND BRITISH INTERESTS.

THE QUADRUPLE ALLIANCE SCHEME.

The reception and dinner given to Lord Charles Beresford on Saturday evening, Jan. 21st, by the Toho Kyokai, or Japanese Oriental Association, and the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce was a most gratifying success, and must have had a very encouraging effect on the noble lord who is appearing in a new rôle as the commercial representative of the most commercial nation of the world. The Imperial Hotel, where the function took place, was crowded with guests; indeed, the number was so great that many who desired to take part had necessarily to be disappointed. The gathering comprehended representatives of every influential class in the Empire. There were Cabinet Ministers, in office and en retraite, members of the Peers' House, deputies, officials, Naval and Military notabilities, great leaders of commerce and industry, and a very large sprinkling of Japanese journalists. Most of the guests adopted the orthodox evening dress, but there was a considerable minority who attended in the national costume.

The dinner with which the proceedings opened was an elegant repast worthy the best traditions of the Imperial Hotel, about 150 persons sitting down. There was no formal toast list, but at the commencement of the dinner Mr. Inagaki spoke a few words of welcome to the guest of the evening, and at the conclusion Lord Charles himself proposed the health of the Emperor of Japan, Count Soyeshima, President of the Oriental Association, reciprocating by giving the health of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. Selections of the national music of both countries were given during the dinner. At the subsequent meeting there were over 500 persons present. It was impossible, in such a large gathering, to distinguish all the notabilities present, but among the principal Japanese were Prince Konoye (President of the House of Peers), presiding; Count Itagaki, Count Okuma, Marquis Tokugawa, Viscount Watanabe, Count Soyejima, Viscount Soga, Viscount Nagaoka, Baron Senke, Mr. Kataoka (President of the House of Representatives), Mr. Shibusawa (President of the Chamber of Commerce), Mr. Oishi, Mr. Nozume, Mr. Kuga, Mr. Kondo, Capt. Saito (Vice-Minister of the Admiralty), Mr. Kimotsuki, Mr. Miyaki, Professor Hijikata, Mr. Matsuura, Mr. Kato, Mr. Okura, Mr. Kaguchi, &c. There were comparatively few foreigners present, but among them were Sir Ernest Satow, H.B.M.'s Minister, Mr. H. A. C. Bonar, British Consul at Yokohama, and Mr. P. Mollison. The Japanese audience was most enthusiastic; the speech of Lord Charles Beresford was followed with keen and most intelligent interest by those who understood the language, and was punctuated with applause. It was afterwards interpreted into Japanese in a most able manner by Mr. Ichibara, of the Bank of Japan.

PRINCE KONOYE'S TRIBUTE TO LORD CHARLES.

Prince KONOYE, as Chairman, introduced his Lordship in a short speech, of which the following translation was handed to the Press:—

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen,—I have the honour of introducing to you our illustrious guest Lord Charles Beresford. As you well know, his Lordship is of noble birth; while young he joined Her British Majesty's navy, and subsequently rendered many meritorious services, especially in Egypt. As Member of Parliament, his Lordship has always been one of the strongest advocates of strengthening the British navy and of preserving peace in the Orient, and his Lordship's views command our high respect. His visit to the Far East must have confirmed his conviction, and this must be a matter for congratulation to those countries which he visited. His Lordship's visit to our country and especially his favouring us with his presence here to-night should be heartily appreciated. Ever since we heard of his Lordship's coming here, we desired most eagerly to meet him and hear his views, while at the same time he might have opportunity to observe our country. That we have been enabled to satisfy our desires to-night is a subject for deep gratification. In spite of the limited time at his disposal, his Lordship will now favour us with a speech, from which I dare say we shall all learn a great deal.

AN IMPORTANT VISIT.

Mr. SHIBUSAWA, President of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce, followed. He also spoke in Japanese, the substance of his remarks being as follow:—

Lord Charles Beresford, Excellencies, and Gentlemen,—I have the honour to represent the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce this evening, and in that capacity I deem it my good fortune to be able to express our sincere gratitude for the honour conferred upon us by our distinguished guest with his presence at this meeting. The name of Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford has always been associated even here in the Extreme East with civil as well as military honours of high distinctions and we naturally expect very much to hear his political and naval opinions, but, knowing that his present mission is to inquire into the commercial condition of our neighbour China, at the request of British Chambers of Commerce, we, as merchants and manufacturers, would like to avail ourselves of this opportunity to ask for his Lordship's views about our trade, especially at the present moment when we are placed under an urgent necessity of developing our commercial capacity. Commerce being the motive power for a nation's political and military progress, its prosperity bears a close relationship to our national welfare, and this is proved by the history of the great nation which his Lordship represents. And as a commissioner for the inspection of Chinese commerce and trade I think we can say that his Lordship's mission is not without very important bearings upon this country.

JAPAN'S DEBT TO GREAT BRITAIN.

Before venturing to ask his Lordship's advice I must dwell first of all on the source from which we have derived stimulus and inspiration in our commercial development, that is, Great Britain. Helped by her, our commerce has been developed, and I am glad to say that the tradal relations of the two countries are growing more and more intimate and extensive. For their helping in our new career as a commercial nation we deem it only our duty to express our warmest gratitude, and at the same time I venture to ask his Lordship to bear witness of the good will and gratitude which we entertain toward the people of Great Britain. As a nation we were formerly taught to look upon agriculture as our national foundation, and to attach the greatest importance to military attainments; so that the mercantile and industrial development has been comparatively slow and imperfect with us. Forty-two years ago, during the administration of the Tokugawa Shogunate, a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation was signed between Great Britain and this country. This was an event that roused our merchants and manufacturers, nay, the whole of our people, from the lethargy of exclusion, and it was from this time that we began to attach a great deal of importance to commerce and industry. But in those days our people were generally given to theorizing, and were yet far from attaining practical progress. Some went so far as to advocate an exclusive policy of an extreme nature, and this involved the nation, in some instances, in the misfortune of having its commercial development obstructed. In the midst of difficulties consequent upon the narrow and exclusive ideas of people in those days, British patience and perseverance prevailed and gradually gained the day, until we have realized what we see at present. In fact, Japan may be said to have been regenerated.

THE REVISION OF TREATIES.

And also in revising the Treaties that were signed in those days and were naturally imperfect, Great Britain led the way in acceding to our wishes in 1894. Other nations followed her example, and now we are approaching the happy time for carrying out the revised treaties. Glancing over our commercial conditions, we feel satisfied with the gradual progress thus far achieved in this line. About 1874, the total amount of our imports and exports was 18,780,079 yen, but the latest report, that is from January to November, 1898, shows a big total of 398,183,939 yen,—an increase of over twenty times—of which Great Britain had a share of 129,346,939 yen, or 32½ per cent of the whole volume. These figures go very clearly to show the condition of our tradal relations with Great Britain, a condition with which we are highly gratified. Lord Charles Beresford, on the occasion of a reception given him at Osaka, drew a comparison between this country and his own. We quite agree with his Lordship as to the similarity of the physical nature of the two countries, their limited size, and the insular formation, and also of the abundance of population necessitating supply of food material from other countries. But I am constrained to confess the truth that there is a vast difference in the economic condition of the two nations. Look, for instance, at the high rate of interest and low standard of wages prevailing in this country. This proves nothing else but the primitive condition of our commerce and industry. It is a matter of great regret that such a state of things still exists, and we are placed under an imperative necessity of remedying this prevailing condition in our country.

RELATIONS WITH CHINA.

Since 1895, we have come to see the necessity of developing our commercial relations with our neighbour, China. Should our neighbour open the door more widely, it would not

Digitized by Google
Digitized from the UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

be too much for us to expect to realize an opportunity of cooperation with Great Britain and other nations for an increased commercial activity in this part of the world. The sudden expansion of our commerce and industry during the past few years has not been free from evils, from the effects of which we are suffering at present. In order to remedy this evil and realize a further development, it is of the first importance to provide facilities for the introduction of European and American capital. But I regret to find the actual condition of our commerce and industry is only imperfectly known abroad. There was such a thing as an exclusion policy before the Restoration, but now I am glad to say that even a shadow of that kind of idea does not exist among our business men. We all stand on a cosmopolitan platform and I venture to assure his Lordship of this fact and to hope that his Lordship on his return home will give expression to this state of feeling prevailing in this country at present. Before closing I beg to say that, on account of the shortness of his Lordship's stay in this country, it is to our great regret that we could not find time sufficiently to entertain his Lordship and also to offer him better opportunites to see more fully the actual state of our commerce and industry. But it would be expecting too much to claim more time of a gentleman of his Lordship's standing and ability, and all we can do under the circumstances is to trust to his Lordship's power of insight, whereby we on this side of the globe as well as those in the other hemisphere will be benefited, so that this meeting here this evening may become a bright landmark in the history of Japan's tradal relations with the world and become a strong link in our future intercourse with Great Britain. I hope and trust that on the occasion of his Lordship's renewed visit to this country, if we may entertain such a hope, or when some of us meet him in his Lordship's own country, the pleasure of observing a growing amicability between the two countries will be realized. The pleasure we experienced this evening would thus be increased a hundredfold. Finally, I would beg on behalf of all gentlemen present to express our warmest appreciation of the honour and pleasure conferred upon us by his Lordship's presence here this evening, and his kindness in favouring us with an address.

A REPRESENTATIVE MEETING.

Lord CHARLES BERESFORD, who on rising was received with great applause, said :—

Your Highness, your Excellencies, my Lords and gentlemen,—When I came to Japan my object in coming to this country was to ascertain, as far as I was able, what the opinions were in this great Empire with regard to the future condition of trade and commerce in China. I unexpectedly received an invitation that I should make you a speech. I did not come here to give you my ideas. I came here to ask you for yours. I cannot conceal, Sir, from myself that you have paid me a most distinguished honour, for I am informed that all classes of the community in this great Empire are represented here this evening. I am informed that there are both sides of political opinions; that there are distinguished Cabinet Ministers, or ex-Cabinet ministers, that there are leaders of all parties. I myself observe distinguished soldiers and sailors, and I am glad to know there are a very large number of Chambers of Commerce, and those interested in commerce—that with which I am particularly associated at the present moment—to hear the few remarks I may address you this evening. I, Sir, am perfectly unofficial. I represent, however, the greatest power in Great Britain, that is the Associated Chambers of Commerce, and let me tell you why it is the greatest power. When the Government makes proposals, it is the duty of the Opposition to criticise these proposals, and as a rule they do so very drastically. But when Chambers of Commerce in my country—I have not been long enough to say what the custom in yours is—but in my country when Chambers of Commerce make their voices heard, Governments have to listen. Therefore it is highly satisfactory to me to know that when you ask me to speak, there is a very large number of these Chambers of Commerce in the audience which is here to listen to my remarks. Now, Sir, with regard to the view of the future of China. I have held in the few remarks I have made in that country, that the interests in the future, of trade and commerce in China are identical, absolutely identical, as far as Japan and Great Britain are concerned.

THE OPEN DOOR.

Great Britain, as you know, has declared in the most public manner that her policy in the future with regard to the safety of her interests and trade and commerce, must be the policy of the open door—(applause)—and as far as I can gather from the many kind interviews I have received in this country, the people of this great Empire are determined that the policy of the open door shall continue in China as far as they are concerned.—(Applause.) Therefore I say that our policy and our interests for the future are identical. But, Sir, it is all very well to put down a policy in a theoretical manner. Practical people endeavour to find out how it is to be carried out, and if you will allow me I will make a suggestion following those remarks as to the necessity of the policy of the open door, as to how I think it could be carried out without the slightest fear of war, and war, remember, is the one thing that affects trade and commerce in a very bad way. My policy—the one I have the honour to propose—I think would make for peace. Well, I have had the honour, several times in my own country and also a little in China, of suggesting that there should be a commercial alliance—well, let us call it an understanding (applause)—but if it is an understanding let it be a definite understanding, a clear understanding, that not only our countries, those four which I hope will join in this understanding, not only that they should understand it clearly and perfectly but that other countries should understand it clearly and perfectly as well.—(Hear, hear, and applause.)

GERMANY'S ATTITUDE.

This understanding or alliance should be in my opinion based on the principle of the open door. It will not be very much use unless you determine that China shall maintain its integrity.—(Applause.) Very well. Now, the four nations that I have referred to are the four great trading countries with China, and therefore it is to their interests to have this definite understanding and to base that definite understanding on the integrity of China, as that the door can be kept open. There was a remark made to me that Germany had not quite agreed to this point, or rather her action would incline one to believe that she would wish to take territory. I rather demur to that. Germany may in the interests of her nation have thought it proper to have land in China, but she has most definitely declared to all nations that Kiaochow shall be an open port, and that the territory she has at present shall be open to all nations. That is a definite and declared understanding of Germany between all the other nations. Therefore I cannot see that any objection should be made to Germany joining the other nations I have mentioned—or rather which I shall mention now, viz., Great Britain, Japan, Germany, and America. The policy of the open door is not a selfish policy. It is a most unselfish policy, because it means a fair field and no favour to all nations and that all nations should trade as they think fit without tariffs, in the great Empire of China. But, sir, speaking to a Japanese audience, I must confine my remarks perhaps to why I think it is necessary for Japan to maintain the policy of the open door.

THE EXPANSION OF JAPAN.

Japan is a very growing Empire. You have now, I believe I am correct in saying, something like forty-two million people; those people are increasing largely every year, but as I understand it you only have in your great Empire some one-twelfth part of it which you can by any means utilise for growing food for your people. That being so, it is imperative that you will have to buy food for your people in the near future, more particularly if you have bad years. Well, you must have money to buy that food; therefore it is absolutely essential that the Japanese nation should increase her manufactures and should have a fair and regular output for those manufactures in the nearest country to her, which is China.—(Applause.) It is China and Korea.—(Applause.) In some respects your country is very like Great Britain. We have to buy increasingly each year large food products for our people; but we have this advantage for the moment over your country, for as soon as the beginning of the century, when we won great victories at sea and had the command of the sea, Great Britain has to a great extent had the monopoly of the trade of the world. Now Great Britain is a competitor, but the result of her having that monopoly for so many years was that our capitalists invested their capital in trade not exactly with Great Britain itself, but in trade between other foreign nations. Therefore it became a great trading interest for Great Britain, and the result was that the interest of that capital went to Great Britain and enabled us with the aid of our large manufactures to buy food for our people, and to put ourselves in a better position. How then will Japan be in the future when her population increases, and her food supply decreases in proportion if she has not what she has the right to demand—an out-put for her great manufactures in the near future in China and Korea?—(Applause.)

THE SPHERE OF INFLUENCE.

Sir, in thinking of the great question of this character, which is the future of trade and commerce in China,—I venture to suggest that it is one of the most important questions of the future that the world possibly will have to face—it is worth while to study the history of the world in the past and to study the history of those nations that form that world. There are nations in the world—I am always very careful as a public man to be most courteous to all nations because I believe nations have a right to go in any way they think is for their own interests—but there are nations in the world whose policy appears to be the annexation of territory, and those nations we know very well, when they do annex territory, put on tariffs. Well, they put on tariffs in their own interests, but what we have to do in these days is to see that while other nations are embodying a policy which they conceive to be for their own interests, they do not do anything which hurts our interests. And I think you will agree with me that if nations take territory in China and put on tariffs, it would certainly be to the detriment of the trade and commerce of Great Britain, and certainly of Japan.—(Applause.) Now, Sir, it is the duty and business of our country certainly, and of the country to which you, gentlemen, belong to watch most carefully and most cautiously what other nations are doing, and if you see them putting themselves in a predominant position of advantage and by getting that position of advantage they may do something to affect your trade and commerce in the future, it is your bounden duty, and that of Great Britain also, to take such steps as will stop them interfering with your interests of trade and commerce in the future.—(Applause.)

THE VALUE OF DIPLOMATIC ASSURANCES.

Now let me turn for one moment to what is called the policy of the open door. I am suggesting to you nothing new. It is the policy that is supposed to exist at this moment. All that we want in Great Britain, all that I imagine you want here, is to stick to the treaties as they are laid down now between your country and China, and not allow them to be interfered with in any way whatever. That is all you require. But it is no use making treaties and it is no use having great quantities of documentary evidence unless you take steps to see that those treaties are enforced, and that your interests are not interfered with; and here again I want to point out the necessity for a commercial alliance or undertaking such as I have already remarked upon, for ensuring that your interests are not interfered with, and assuring that those treaties which you enjoy at present are rigidly kept. There is also the question of trade and commerce and financial interests which you either enjoy or shortly hope to enjoy in China and Korea. Well, there again comes a point, and a great point, for Japan to look into. You should be very careful also to take steps that your vested interests in that country are not affected in any way. How can you do it better than by joining such a commercial alliance as I have indicated to you to secure the open door for the future? Well now, gentlemen, there is this point to remember, that trade and commerce and vested interests cannot be enjoyed or secured in the future by protocols, by diplomatic utterances, or by paper assurances, particularly when one side holds nothing but those diplomatic utterances and paper assurances, and the other side holds a very important and very formidable military force to carry out the objects which it may have in view. I believe you will agree with me, I believe that the people at home will very soon wake up to the fact that the diplomatic utterances and paper assurances are not sufficient either to keep the peace or to ensure the development of your trade in the future, and the security for that trade, when once you have developed it.—(Applause.)

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

A COMMERCIAL ALLIANCE NECESSARY.

Well, gentlemen, those are my views with regard to the open door. I have tried to show you that I think this commercial alliance or understanding is necessary. I am absolutely certain of this—that if you can get the four countries, Great Britain, Japan, America, and Germany, whose interests are identical with regard to the open door, to join together and put down a definite policy, there will be no war.—(Applause.) I am perfectly certain that if they do join together it will be the better for trade and commerce in the future, and I believe myself that if this alliance would make for peace if we all think it out and the great trading classes of those countries think it out, it will be perfectly possible to bring about such an understanding as I have suggested. This is my view of the case. Now it is no use having such an understanding as I have suggested in China without you have another sort of security. The basis of all commerce, of all trade, of all peace, and of all security is an efficient military or police force in a country—(applause)—as I think you will all agree.

THE CONDITION OF CHINA.

Well, I have been all over China. I have been treated with the greatest courtesy and the greatest kindness by the whole of the Chinese officials. I have inspected their armies,—all their armies but one—I have been allowed to put them through their manœuvres, to see what they knew; I have been to all their forts and have also trained their guns myself; I have been to all their arsenals, to all their training establishments, and to their ships, and to their one dock-yard; therefore I think I may say, being a naval man and knowing something about military service, I am in a position to judge how far they can give that security which it is our right to demand for our vested interests, and for our trade and commerce. Well, I found in China a very excellent lot of men—as good a lot of men as I suppose any country could produce. I believe they would make most excellent soldiers. I am told by those who know them better than I do—your own officers—that they would make excellent soldiers if they were properly trained, properly led, properly fed, and properly clothed.

THE HONEST MANDARIN.

I have also found in that country some very patriotic and honest Mandarins. I do not say there were very many of them—(laughter),—but there certainly were some, and those that did hold these characteristics I found invariably very poor men.—(Laughter.) But I do not blame the other Mandarins. If I am going to speak harm of anybody I rather like to put myself in the same position, and I do not know if I were asked to manage one of those great provinces containing from twenty to ninety million people, and if when I accepted I had to pay a very large sum of money for going there and was then told I would get no salary whatever—I do not understand how it would be possible for me to undertake the Government of that province unless I went through the process which is generally described as "squeezing."—(Laughter). Therefore I say that it is the system which is all wrong, and if we got this understanding which I have referred to it would be our business—the business of these four countries—to see first that China did give us that security which is imperative for the success of our future development in trade, and, having seen that they did that, that we should help them ourselves to try to get their army into proper order for police purposes. You will agree with me that it is no use calling loudly for the open door, and demanding that the door shall be opened, unless the room inside is in order.—(Laughter.) And therefore it is for us to consider how to put that room in order. We may invest our money—this country and Great Britain and the other two I have referred to—in trade and property in China, and in commercial enterprises, but if there is no military and police a mob may come down and burn the whole of your property and everything may be destroyed in a short time. There are two cases to be looked at. One is the open door, and I have tried to show that it is necessary you should see how to keep it open. And the second case is that you should have that security and that efficiency of police and military without which your trade cannot continue in China.

A VALUABLE ALLY.

I think the four countries I have already referred to have the right to this, that the Army should be put in order, and I would point out to you, that if we can carry this idea out, China will be a very valuable ally to those countries, when her army and her organisation are efficient. When she has her army in proper order she will improve her own condition enormously, so it will be the business of this great empire to help us to keep the door open and to keep her integrity intact. But first of all I would refer to your own country. The Japanese understand the Chinese better than any nation in the world, and the Japanese officers have told us the Chinese would make very good soldiers. Now, why should not the Japanese officers try to put the Chinese army in order on the understanding that the Chinese should keep the door open?—(Hear, hear). In this connection I can refer to Germany. I have myself seen a large number of Chinese troops drilled by the Germans, and nothing could possibly be better than one of those Chinese armies which was drilled by those German officers. Unfortunately, through the influence of another Power, or perhaps it may be through their own decision, the Chinese have turned off all those non-commissioned officers and officers of the German Army, and the consequence is that these men who have been drilled, and most excellently drilled, by the Germans, are going back in their drill, as every officer knows men will go back if they are not kept up to the mark and drilled day by day. Then I come to my own country, Great Britain. We have been not unsuccessful in drilling men of eastern nations, and I hope and believe Great Britain will be glad to help these other countries in making the Chinese army efficient. I am in hopes also that America, that great continent whose trade is increasing by leaps and bounds in the East, will see the necessity of looking to it that the door is kept open in a thoroughly practical way; and I daresay she would lend some officers and men to help to get this great army of China in order. For my own part, I have nothing but a good word to say for the Chinese.

A ROTTEN SYSTEM.

As I said before, the people are a very good people; the traders are honest; the people are very easily handled, very docile, and they are a very peaceful people; but their system is bad, and as rottenly bad as any country could suffer under. I have been through all their six arsenals, but there are only two of those arsenals, that at Shanghai and that at Tientsin, turning out anything useful; and these two arsenals are more or less under the management of countrymen of my own. I found guns in some of their forts that neither you, nor Germany, nor France, nor England, could make better, but the fronts of their forts were in many cases in ruins, and the forts themselves were not defended in the rear, and that is not a very good position for a gun—(laughter); and it is upon these points that China wants to be shown how to put herself on a level with other nations with regard to defence. Well, gentlemen, I was speaking about these four nations. I am rather a practical man myself, and I think there is a great sympathy here and at home with regard to what is going on in China; but I believe that sympathies with nations are often generated by personal interests. You know very well that in these days fleets and armies are not created by countries for gaining territory, or for some domestic dispute, or for the settlement of differences of opinion between monarchs. Fleets, and armies now are created to look after our interests and our trade and commerce, and therefore, when I see a great country like your country getting, or rather I should say already having got, your army and your fleets into the excellent condition they are in, I look upon that as merely for defensive purposes for yourselves, and to look after your trade and commerce in the future. Now, what is the other possible policy with regard to China? There is a policy which you have all heard called the policy of spheres of influence.

A DANGEROUS POLICY.

I cannot conceive any policy more absolutely certain to provoke tradal and commercial conflict, and therefore more certain to lead to war than that policy. There has been much discussion with regard to the outcome of that policy, but to my mind this is what the result would be. Some countries would say that this "sphere of influence" belongs to them, and they would thereupon proceed to put on a restrictive tariff. I do not know how you are to allow countries particular spheres of influence and then tell them what they are to do in those spheres, and as soon as these countries do take those spheres of influence, and put on preferential rates, their action in this regard will ultimately lead to war. Therefore anything I can do to prevent this policy going into effect I shall do; and I most earnestly hope that your great commercial classes will think this question out and determine to do their level best to prevent such a policy being carried out.—(Applause.)

THEN AND NOW.

Might I for a moment refer to the extraordinary progress your country has made in the last thirty years? I was here thirty years ago as a young lieutenant, and I remember very accurately all I then saw, and I do not believe it is possible for any country to progress at a greater rate than the Japanese have done. I have read there is nothing in history that approaches it nearly. I have heard continually the remark—I have read it in different papers on the Continent and sometimes at home—that Japan was going too fast, but to my mind that is rather a ludicrous remark. How can any country go too fast in the direction of progress? I think rather Japan has at times delayed, but she has never gone back, and until I see Japan going back I shall not think Japan is going too fast. She has never failed yet in anything she has undertaken. I may say this, and it is a notable fact, that Japan is the first Eastern nation that ever had a budget. I understand that you have an eight years budget for your defensive forces, and if you have I must take the news home for my own people, because for years I have been trying in the House of Commons, and have succeeded on two occasions, to get a programme laid down based on what you want, vote the money for it, and spread that money out over so many years. Then you get a properly efficient force for your money, whereas yearly estimates for defences on such questions as the question of an army or navy, must be very expensive to a country and less efficient.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

EDUCATION AND INDUSTRY.

This is the first Eastern country that ever had free education, which is the beginning of national prosperity. Governments which teach their people how to understand important problems are bound to prosper. Then you have a very excellent system of technical education, so as to give your people some chance in life when they begin. I wish I could stay here a year—(hear, hear)—to see all I want to see and all there is to be seen. But I have seen something. I have visited some of your manufactories. I went to Osaka, went over the cotton and sugar mills, and nothing could exceed the excellence of the management of these establishments or the excellence of what is turned out. I found on enquiry that some 75 mills have been established in the last thirty years, representing four millions sterling I have seen it remarked in the papers, "Oh, if Japan opens up great industries it will clash with Great Britain's interests or America's interests." Now in my opinion there never was a more insensible thing said. It is the greatest mistake to think that one country's trade and commerce will suffer because of another's opening up.—(Applause).

SHIPBUILDING AT NAGASAKI.

Well, then, I went to another manufactory, your great shipbuilding industry in Nagasaki, and was perfectly delighted to see the great merchant ship laid down there. There are two points about it that struck me with special force. It is a safe ship, either going over a mine, or in the event of being rammed, or anything. She has got a double bottom, and she has bulkheads with no watertight doors. I shall continually speak about this ship, and hold her up as an evidence of the enterprise of Japan. Then I went to Kyoto and visited the electric plant, and I have never seen one which, in my opinion, was more excellent or successful than that. It works some 60 industries, a tramway and the electric light, and as for the machinery itself, it is the most perfect I have ever seen, a fact which is due to our cousins in America, who can certainly produce electric machinery second to none in the whole world. Then I saw the Japanese Army, and there has never been anything more striking than the progress of that Army in detail. I saw the Army in company with a notable man, and I am a very good judge of discipline, and when I went on the ground, which I did with the Minister of War, I saw there was no non-commissioned officer in too great a hurry to salute his officers. I saw the men looked cheery, well contented and thoroughly drilled, and in fact you could not have a more perfect organisation. I made one remark to the Minister of War. I said I did not think the gaiters which the men wore were very good for service because the buttons come out and I thought there were no buttons to put on in their place; but the Minister of War took me around when all was over and showed me for myself that each man had three spare buttons on his gaiters. I took off my hat to the Minister and apologised for what I had said.

THE CHINO-JAPAN WAR.

You have proved yourselves good also in war. Nothing could be better than your hospital arrangements, your transport, commissariat, and your reserves of ammunition. During my progress through China I asked many Mandarins questions on the subject, but I heard no remarks except those which were civil and courteous to Japan, which proved to me that your arrangements after the war were those which are exhibited by all civilised nations. May I refer for a moment to the Navy? You have a Navy second to none in the world for its size. I know a good number of the ships.—I have seen them in England,—and a good many of the officers who handle them. And you have officers who can navigate the ships, and as I understand took a large number of troops in the transports without one single accident during the most difficult and dangerous operations. You have officers who can bring the ships through any sea, and bring them safe to any port in the world; and therefore you have the more wonderful organisation for rapidity of growth in history.

THE TREATIES.

Turning to another point in my remarks, I do not think anyone in the room will misunderstand me. I believe I personally was the first public man in England that ventured to suggest that what would be for the interests of your own country and ours would be an alliance between the Empire of the West and the Empire of the East.—(Applause.) In view of my friendliness to Japan, as whenever I have had an opportunity that has been made as apparent as I could make it, in the remarks I am going to make now I am confident I will not be misunderstood. There have been great fears expressed in some papers at home and here with regard to the new treaties; but I may point out that the new treaty as it stands first received great sympathy from England.—(Applause.) I myself have not the slightest fear as to the success of that treaty. I have heard curious arguments from people, and those arguments seemed to imply in some cases that if a man is sent to prison, he is to be sent there for his own pleasure, but I do not think everybody will agree with those arguments.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.

But there is this point. In England, we had our personal liberty long before we got our political liberty. I do not know how you are in this country. If we arrest a Japanese for some offence in England we endeavour to give him the help of counsel, let him see his friends, and render him assistance, especially if he cannot speak a word of the English language. In England we hold that a man is innocent until you have proved that he is guilty. I don't know exactly what your rules are in Japan, but if you arrest a man and do not allow him the advantage of counsel and do not allow him to see his friends, then it seems to me you are holding him guilty until he has proved himself innocent. It is the English and Americans who are in predominant numbers among the foreigners in Japan, and it is English and Americans who hold those principles of justice to which I have referred. I may ask—I put it forward only as a suggestion—would it be possible for the Japanese Government, not to alter the treaty—but to take the case into consideration whether there should not be some reciprocity with regard to the matter, so that Japanese should pursue towards English and Americans in this country the course English and Americans pursue towards them in their own.—(Applause.) I say this most respectfully, gentlemen. I find no fault with the treaty, but I merely say I want to do all that within me lies to make this country and the country I have the honour to belong to cement a strong friendship for each other, and I find there is this feeling, and after the extraordinary kindness and courtesy I have received from you I don't think it would be honest and straight for me if I did not tell you this feeling exists.

LAND OWNERSHIP.

One question more. It is a question which arouses some consideration and reflection in England. It is the subject, gentlemen, of foreigners buying land. I have spoken to several Japanese gentlemen about that and they think it is not possible. Now I have always thought that if either a nation or an individual offers to tell another nation or another individual its business it is most impertinent conduct. But when we are here on friendly terms we can—not give advice—but ask opinions. One or two of the Japanese gentlemen have said to me, "I am afraid the land question will be very difficult, but under the new Treaties the foreigners will be allowed to take shares in railways or cotton mills or other manufactures." I said, Yes, but you have missed one point. Suppose the foreigner takes shares in a railway or other enterprise that becomes insolvent and the only asset left is the land, where does the foreigner come in? Under the law he can have nothing to do with it. I put it forward respectfully for your consideration. I believe in the future if this country wanted money to increase her great resources she could get it from England. England has plenty of money to lend, and is willing to lend it. This country may want to borrow from her, and I am sure she could get much better terms if this question of foreigners holding land were carefully considered with the one object to increase the friendship—and when I say friendship I mean that friendship of two nations which is based on vested interests—to bring the two countries nearer together in the future.—(Applause.)

THE FUTURE OF JAPAN.

Well, I will say, gentlemen, in ending my remarks, that I regard the future of Japan as assured.—(Applause.) I have none of those gloomy forebodings that some people have. I like to see things as they are and not as they might or could be. Japan has gone on, not steadily but by leaps and bounds. I see nothing to stop that progress; I see every reason why it should be continued. If any remarks I have made can increase the cordial friendship which I am persuaded exists between Japan and the nation I have the honour to belong to I shall be very happy. Your finances are excellent; you have no foreign loan and you have not even the luxury of a national debt—I do not know, of course, how long you will be without it.—(Laughter.) You have the certainty that the Pacific Ocean must be in future the highway of the world; whatever policy is carried out China will be opened and Japan will benefit from the opening. You are a sort of point of departure from China and a point of arrival from America. You are absolutely certain in my opinion to progress provided you and the countries I have named will work together for the objects I have named —the integrity of China and the open door.—(Applause.) I must apologise for having brought in the political question as well as the commercial question. But there is not really much reason for apology. The political question and the commercial question are absolutely undivided. Upon your political action, upon the political action of Great Britain, America, and Germany, depends the commercial future—whether it will be of success or whether it be of failure. Therefore I hope you will not think I have in any way exceeded my mission by placing the political question side by side with the commercial question. When I get home I shall take an early opportunity of letting the important commercial bodies I represent know of this meeting, and I shall also take an early opportunity of letting the Cabinet and the Government of Great Britain and its great Empire know of this meeting. And I do hope it will promote your interests and the interests of Great Britain, America, Germany, and China, and the interests of the trade and commerce of the whole world and of all nations. I think you will agree with me that the remarks I have made tend in that direction, and in that of the greatest interest of all, which is the interest of peace.—(Loud applause.)

The speech was afterwards interpreted by Mr. Ichibara, of the Bank of Japan. Taking very few notes, Mr. Ichibara expounded the speaker's words for the space of about three-quarters of an hour, and even a very imperfect acquaintance with the language showed how thoroughly he entered into every point mentioned. It was a wonderful display not only of memory but of command over the two languages.

"COMMON INTERESTS AND COMMON DUTIES."

Prince KONOYE then, turning to Lord Charles Beresford, addressed him in these words:—

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Your Lordship.—On behalf of all assembled here, I beg to express to your Lordship our sincere thanks for the great honour and benefit you have conferred upon us by your able and valuable speech, which has been warmly appreciated by us all and will be as warmly appreciated by the public at large when they read it reported by the press. Allow me to say that, from what I have been able to gather from your instructive speech, your Lordship has been marvellously successful in your inquiries into the condition of things in the Far East. I hope, all of us hope, most ardently that, on your return to your great country, the valuable information your Lordship has been able to gather in your travels out in the East will bear fruit, and that the views with which you have favoured us will be carried out in practice. In conclusion, allow me also to express our hope that the relations of the two nations, which have common interests and common duties, may become closer and firmer through the presentation of your views before the enlightened public of Great Britain—views which are so fair, so just, and so conducive to the cause of peace and civilization.

JAPAN'S SENTIMENTS.

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD, in reply, said :—

Your Highness—I have to offer you my most grateful thanks for the way in which you have received me. I gather from the translation of your remarks that has been handed me that you approve of the proposals I have to make. I am glad to see at the end of his Highness's speech the remark that these proposals tend to the peace of the world and to the spread of civilisation, both of which points must be for the future benefit of trade and commerce. I thank you most heartily for your kind reception, and I shall make it my duty on my return to let my people know what your sentiments are.

A resounding Bansai was then given for the guest, and after partaking of Japanese refreshments, the meeting dispersed.

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD AT YOKOHAMA.

RECEPTION AND DINNER BY BRITISH RESIDENTS.

THE "OPEN-DOOR" AND EXPANDING TRADE.

BRITISHERS AND JAPANESE UNDER NEW TREATIES.

MUTUAL GOODWILL TO SMOOTH THE WAY.

THE DESTINY OF JAPAN AS A DISTRIBUTING CENTRE.

Lord Charles Beresford was entertained on Monday night by the British communities of Tokyo and Yokohama with a dinner at the Oriental Hotel. Seldom before, we venture to suggest, has a heartier welcome been extended in Japan to a public man than was accorded to the distinguished guest of last evening. Every unit of the big assembly was animated with the one desire, to do honour, and fitting honour, to a representative Britisher. The magnificent dining room of the Hotel presented a beautiful sight when, at a quarter to 8 o'clock, Lord Charles Beresford entered with the Reception Committee. The tables had been charmingly decorated and appointed ; light festoons of greenery were entwined in the electric-light chandeliers, otherwise the heavy carved oak of ceiling and walls was left in its splendour unadorned. Before the Chairman was placed a handsome pot of orchids—(the cultivation of these exotics is a hobby of Lord Charles) —while every participator in the feast was provided with a spray of flowers. The menu was simple in design but very happy, the white and red ensigns being printed in their appropriate colours above Nelson's famous signal, "England expects that every man will do his duty." The company seated themselves to the strains of the Yokosuka Naval Band and full justice was done to the capital feast provided. M.M. Muraour and Dewette are to be congratulated on the success of the serving as well as on the viands and wines they placed upon the board ; nothing could have been better in any way. The menu was as follows :—

Huitres au Citron.
Potage, Bisque de Crevette.
Potage, consomme Regence.

Saumon a la Victoria.
Pommes de Terre a l'Anglaise.

Bouchees a la Pompadour.

Filet de bœuf a la Godard.
Becassines a la Marechale.
Jambon d'York a la Gelee.

Punch au Kirch.

Asperges Sauce Mousseline.

Cuisso de Chevreuil Sa Venaison.
Dindonneau truffe.
Salade.
Pouding Diplomate a l'abricot.

Bombe glacee.
Dessert.

As originally arranged on the printed table plan, Mr. W. F. Mitchell (Messrs. Samuel, Samuel & Co.), was in the Chair and had the guest of the evening, Lord Charles Beresford, R.N., C.B., M.P., etc., on his right. Next to this Lordship sat Mr. H. M. Bevis, Yokohama Manager of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank ; then Colonel Churchill, military attache at the British Legation ; the Hon. T. H. Whitehead, Mr. A. Woolley, Dr. D. T. Hoskyn, R.N., and Mr. Robin Grey, Private Secretary to Lord Charles Beresford. On the Chairman's left sat His Honour Mr. Justice Hiram Shaw Wilkinson, Mr. N. P. Kingdom, His Excelleney Governor Asada, of Kanagawa ; Mr. J. H. Gubbins, C.M.G., Mr. E. Flint Kilby, Mr. Montague Kirkwood, Mr. H. A. C. Bonar, H.B.M. Consul ; and Dr. E. Divers, F.R.S. To the right of the Chairman, running down the room, sat Messrs. J. P. Mollison, Otani Kahei, Chairman of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce ; W. Waters, J. D. Hutchison, W. R. Bennett, M. H. R. Harris, Simon Strauss, J. C. Nicholson, J. F. Lowder, E. Coutts, James Martin, H. W. Lea, J. W. Cain, A. B. Brown, A. R. G. Clarke, V. R. Bowden, G. Blundell, J. B. Coulson, J. W. Hall, J. Conder, H. C. Pigott, E. Beart, J. M. James, M. Beart, K. F. Crawford, A. Le Prevost, G. Syme Thomson, J. McArthur, F. J. Lias, H. W. Buckland, and F. R. Daniel. To the left of the Chairman sat Messrs. W. B. Walter, R. G. E. Forster, T. B. Glover, E. M. Janion, Capt. Brinkley, A. B. Walford, H. M. Arnould, R. Howie, R. J. Kirby, L. Pollard, C. J. Strome, G. S. Gregory, R. P. Forshaw, H. MacArthur, J. Diack, A. J. Lines, E. W. George, H. N. Robson, H. Rose, A. J. Lefroy, C. Thwaites, F. T. Leak, H. W. Fraser, E. G. Fradgeley, A. B. McDonald, E. Hutchinson, L. J. Healing, B. Hyde Pearson, J. Maclean, & L. Jephson. Supporting Mr, James Dodds (Messrs. Butterfield and Swire), Vice-Chairman, sat Messrs. P. de C. Morriss, D. McLaren, J. Stewart, G. A. Adam, G. W. Rogers, H. F. Arthur, T. Herlihy, F. Harrold, C. J. Heep, C. Lefroy, E. C. Fox, H. Moss, J. J. Efford, C. M. Martin, J. G. Watson, F. Gillett, F. E. White, W. Reid, W. G. MacVicar, A. Scott, C. V. Sale, H. J. Sharp, W. G. Bayne, A. C. H. Potts, and J. R. Parsons. Mr. R. D. Robison, Chairman of the Yokohama General Chamber of Commerce, the second Vice-Chairman, was supported by Messrs. R. Paget, W. Gordon, W. Sutter, H. J. Snow, F. J. Hall, P. C. Potts, F. L. Taverner, E. A. Leather, B. J. Jackson, F. Elliott, Herbert Bethell. W. B. Clayton, F. H. Bugbird, P. E. F. Stone, W. H. Forbes, J. Johnstone, J. H. Curtis, F. W. Thomas, W. F. Page, W. B. Mason, A. J. Easton, H. Bent, W. K. Wilson, Dr. Gordon Munro, J. H. Brooke. At the middle table inside the horseshoe sat Dr. Wheeler, Messrs. James Walter, E. Whittall, H. Parlett, A. S. Garfit, R. A. Wylie, F. S. James, C. B. Stedman, Yeend Duer, E. C. Davis, R. S. Schwabe, F. Townley, L. Plummer, W. C. Duncan, K. Wilson, H. V. Henson, four representatives of the Press ; A. F. MacNab, G. R. D. Singleton, T. A. Singleton, W. K. Tresize, C. M. Duff, G. Philip, A. H. Cole Watson, C. W. Ure, W. W. Till, T. W. McIlraith, T. Harrington, W. Silver Hall, J. T. Griffin, A. J. Wilkin, Capt. M. Squire, Prof. Hillhouse, Rev. E. C. Irwine and Mr. H. C. Litchfield.

The above is the list as printed. Unfortunately, owing to indisposition, Mr. W. W. Till, Capt. Brinkley, Mr. F. Townley, Mr. W. G. Bayne, Capt. J. M. James, and one or two more were prevented from attending, but their places were occupied by other Britishers whose applications came in after the list had closed, so that eventually 162 sat down—a most representative gathering in every way, as the names given above will show.

The following was the list of guests invited to meet Lord Charles Beresford : —Sir Ernest M. Satow K.C.M.G., Mr. J. H. Gubbins, C.M.G., Mr. Justice Wilkinson, Mr. H. A. Bonar, Lt. Col. A. G. Churchill, Mr. R. S. Paget, Mr. Robin Grey, Staff Surgeon Donald T. Hoskyn, R.N., Mr. R. G. E. Foster, the Rev. E. C. Irwine, also the Governor of Kanagawa and the Chairman of the Yokohama (Japanese) Chamber of Commerce. Sir Ernest Satow was not able to be present.

THE TOAST LIST.

At the conclusion of the repast the CHAIRMAN rose and proposed the healths of the Queen and of the Emperor of Japan. These having been honoured, he submitted the health of "Our Guest Lord Charles Beresford." In speaking to the toast Mr. MITCHELL, said :—

GENTLEMEN.—I rise to propose the toast of the evening, our illustrious guest Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford—(applause)—whose fame and achievements are well known to us. —(Applause.) It would be an onerous matter for me to attempt to refer to his many public services this evening, but I may say that amongst Britishers in the Far East his name is more particularly associated with the renewed interest in the Navy—(applause)—which he by his own efforts, aroused at home.—(Applause.) And I am sure that we all of us very much appreciate the stimulated interest which has been taken in that very important branch of the service.—(Hear, hear.) The candid criticisms of his lordship on a branch of the service which is of vital importance to our country have aroused our enthusiasm and I am sure that you will unite with me when I say that the British Navy is to us a matter of very great importance.—(Applause.) My lord, I wish to express on behalf of the branch of the China Association of this port and of the British community in general the very great pleasure which it gives us to meet you here this evening.—(Hear, hear.) And I may say that we have looked forward with very great pleasure to this opportunity which has been afforded to your countrymen of meeting with you on this occasion. We are indeed delighted to be able to offer you our congratulations on the very many services which you have by your own efforts produced on behalf of ourselves and our countrymen.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE OPEN DOOR.

We have been much interested in be question of the commercial alliance which you so strongly advocate.—(Hear hear.) And we are in full sympathy with the movement of the open door in China and of the means of keeping it open. (Hear hear.) Many of those who are present this evening are very much interested in China, and to them the question is one of vital importance, and if the methods which you have brought forward are the means of opening this door and of maintaining British trade and supremacy in the Chinese Empire we shall consider that your lordship has achieved a work of which this generation will not be forgetful. (Loud applause.) Unfortunately the shortness of your visit to Yokohama was unknown to us or we should have wished to make this meeting this evening of a more cosmopolitan nature. But when your desires were communicated to us it was unfortunately too late to change the arrangements already made for this dinner. I can only say had we known earlier we should have been only too pleased to have united our forces with those of other nationalities in extending you the hearty welcome we give you this evening.—(Applause.) Our object in meeting to-night is to extend to your lordship a hearty welcome—possibly it may be undemonstrative, but it is none the less sincere.—(Renewed applause.) Had your visit been a few months later you would have found this community quietly settled down under Japanese jurisdiction. I say quietly, because I believe it is the desire of the Japanese Government that foreigners should be fairly and liberally dealt with—(hear, hear)—and I am sure that it is their wish, gentlemen, that we should feel as little as possible the loss of our own laws and customs, which we have been so long accustomed to enjoy and have in fact grown to regard as a sort of feature of this country.—(Hear, hear.)

JAPAN'S PROGRESS.

It is an undisputed fact that this country has progressed with remarkable rapidity.—(Hear, hear). One of the most striking points in the development of trade. In 1868 the exports and imports amounted to some £5,250,000, taking the rate of exchange as it was in those days—unfortunately it is no longer so.—(Laughter.) If we go on to 1897 we find that the trade of the port has advanced to the remarkable figure of £46,000,000. The fact, gentlemen cannot be overlooked that to this foreign enterprise has largely contributed. The country has advanced, gentlemen, as I am sure you will be only too willing to recognise, and the British merchants have certainly had their share in the advancement of these figures which I have just given to you, and therefore it is to our interest that this country should continue to prosper in the future as it has done in the past. If the Japanese wish to maintain their trade they must pursue a liberal policy with regard to the facilities for re-export, which at the present time are unfortunately in a very primitive condition. We feel that in this respect it will be necessary that some arrangement shall be made whereby re-exports from this country may be vastly facilitated—(hear, hear);—the present arrangement are not such as would facilitate the question of re-exports from Japan. My lord, I may say that Tokyo and Yokohama are ringing with the speech that you delivered last Saturday, and I can assure you that this community is very much in accord with the remarks that were made in regard, to I have said before, to the open door in China and also in respect to the policy of the Japanese Government as regards foreigners under the conditions of the Revised Treaties. We have to thank your lordship for your very kind services in mentioning one or two matters which, when placed before the Japanese Government in the light your lordship placed them, must have a satisfactory effect on the Government. —(Hear hear.)

DESIDERATA.

As your speech is now public property I hope I shall be excused in referring to it again. Your lordship referred to the position of Japan, situated as it is with the American continent on the one side and Siberia, China, Manila, and the Straits on the other, and said there is every reason that it should become a distributing centre. But in order that this may be arrived at it is necessary that the Japanese Government should provide a proper system of drawbacks. I have no doubt this institution will receive their attention, but at the present moment there is certainly a necessity that some arrangement should be made which would enable importers to receive goods in Japan and afterwards to export them with facility to the points that I have mentioned.—(Hear hear.) For the development of the country foreign capital is required for its trade, its mining, and its industrial enterprises, but I doubt if it will be forthcoming until aliens are allowed the absolute right of ownership of land.—(Applause.) His lordship referred to this at Tokyo, and, as I said before, I am quite sure his words will be considered. We are most desirous of cooperating with this nation and if they offer us the facilities which will enable us to do so I am perfectly certain we shall lose no opportunity of bringing capital into the country, which will be of very great service to it and at the same time will increase the investments of the British merchants who are represented here this evening.—(Applause.)

TAXATION OF CAPITAL.

I may further say that although this would be a most important concession, the value of such will be greatly minimised if the Japanese Government places heavy taxes on capital, which, in the best interest of the country, should be free and unfettered. If capital is to be imported into this country it must not be taxed, and while there is a heavy tax on money which foreigners may introduce for commerce or mining enterprises they will be very loth indeed to bring it to Japan. And I hope that the methods which the Japanese Government contemplate of increasing taxes or of raising money will not, at any rate, be placed upon capital, as there is no doubt that capital is the soul of trade, and if we have no capital we can do no business. The bankers might tell us differently, but I think that the policy of the two great Banks that are here represented—(A Voice: "Three")—the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation and the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China—are such that in future we can rely on them as we have done in the past. We cannot work without a proper amount of capital. My remarks are actuated with a desire to see the country go on and prosper, and that the trade of the place may not only be satisfactory but may increase to the same extent that it has done before.—(Applause.) We as British merchants here to-night are largely interested in the advancement of Japan.—(Applause.) It is our desire to see the country make that progress which we may say she deserves, and as far as within us lies we, I am sure, will do all we can do contribute to her prosperity. Foreigners and Japanese alike will sink their prejudices, and seek by mutual concessions to advance their common interest both socially and commercially.—(Hear, hear.) I would ask you, gentlemen, to now unite with me in drinking the health of our illustrious guest, Lord Charles Beresford, and every success to his mission in this and the other countries he has visited, and we hope that on his return to the old country he will be able to lay before our fellow countrymen such a list of successes that they will be delighted to receive him —(Loud applause.)

The toast was drunk with musical honours, and amid loud cries of "Well done, Condor."

LORD CHARLES'S SPEECH.

Lord CHARLES BERESFORD, in reply, said:—

Mr. Mitchell, your Excellency, and Gentlemen—I have to offer you, my warmest and most grateful thanks for the far too complimentary speech which you, Sir, made concerning me, and you, gentlemen, for the kind way in which you received it. It was much too complimentary.—("No, no.") That is my opinion, gentlemen; it may not be yours.—(Laughter.) You spoke, Sir, of what you described as my achievements. There are a lot of Britishers in this room, and I think one of the characteristics of our race is that when a man does his best for his country he doesn't want any credit for it.—("Bravo.") It is his business to do it, and it has to be done to the best of his ability. My countrymen are always very kind to me because probably they think I have had an uphill game. However, with the aid of some of the Navy officers, and with the aid of the Press—when they came round to my way of thinking (laughter)—we succeeded in getting the Navy placed in that position that it was right for every British person, and particularly those connected with trade and commerce, to demand. You have spoken also of what you described as the many services I have rendered out here.—(Applause.) I cannot lay claim to any services whatever, but I have secured a very substantial backing, and when I get home I hope I may be able to render some small service to trade and commerce in the Far East. As you may know very well, I was asked by the Associated Chambers of Commerce to go out to China to see how British trade was getting on, how it could be further developed, and what security there was for such development and such trade as at present exists. I was not told to go to Japan, but I had several invitations from Japanese gentlemen to come here, and I had many more invitations from our cousins in America to go home that way, so I thought to myself, well, perhaps I can further the ends of my mission if I go to those countries and try to find out from their Chambers of Commerce and perhaps from their Governments what views they hold of the future of the Far East. And that accounts for my presence among you this evening.—(Applause.)

THE QUADRUPLE ENTENTE.

I am desirous of doing this because I have publicly advocated what I believe to be the best plan for securing our trade, certainly, and in securing that it means the trade of all nations.—(Hear, hear.) In securing our trade by means of the open door in China, I thought if I went to those countries I should be able to see how far they agree with that proposal which I have made publicly of trying to get a commercial alliance, or, if they do not like that word, an understanding—(laughter)—of a very definite character. They should combine as far as Germany, America, Japan, and Great Britain go, to secure that upon which our trade much depends in the Far East—the open door and the integrity of China.—(Hear, hear.) Well, Sir, when you were good enough to ask me to this meeting I expressed the wish that it might be cosmopolitan because the days of splendid isolation as far as the British go, I am afraid, are done.—(Laughter, and a voice, "No, No!") A gentleman says "No, No." I must have a little argument with that gentleman.—(Laughter.) Perhaps he has not calculated it as far as I have. At this moment our Empire is so large that even if we had conscription we could not properly police it in the event of there being a disturbance in several of our properties at once, and in the event of there being what I may describe as disagreeables with foreign countries. Therefore, in the interests of trade and commerce, which are our great interests—we are called a nation of shopkeepers; thank God we are, or we would not be where we are—(laughter)—that being so we must look about for other nations whose interests are identical with ours, to try to leave that door open to our trade with China on which our great future trade will depend. Therefore I think my friend opposite will agree that my view of the case will perhaps be more substantial to his interests in the future—(laughter)—than if we adopted the old idea of splendid isolation.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE LOST MONOPOLY.

But I must once more attack him. In the old days we had, owing to the last war at the beginning of the century—when we absolutely had command of the sea—we had the monopoly of the trade of the world. That is past. We have gone from monopolists to competitors and that being so I again say we must try to keep the tariffs clear and the doors open so as to enable us to have a fair chance as competitors, and in taking the place of competitors instead of monopolists Therefore, again I think my friend will agree with me that my view of the case is the proper one.—(Laughter and applause.) Sir, in your remarks, which I thought were so conciliatory and so fair with regard to the altering conditions in this country, I was delighted to hear you say that under this new treaty with regard to the judicature especially, the British were going to enter into it with a sentiment, or wish, that it should go smoothly, and as far as they can, they will try to make it go smooth. After all the British are celebrated for respect for law and order.—(Hear, hear.) In the remarks I ventured to make the other night, to which you call attention, I pointed to one or two things which I knew my countrymen felt keenly here, and which I knew they felt keenly about at home. But I did it in terms which I hope every one of my fellow countrymen here and, more particularly the Japanese,—because after all we are in a foreign country; it does not belong to us remember—(laughter)—that the Japanese seeing the respectful way that I called attention to it, which after all is only due to a foreign country—is only due to those under whose rule we live here—that in the way I presented it, they would take the matter into consideration in future and see that something were done in the case of the law, something of a reciprocal nature certainly as far as the English and Americans go. I ventured to point out that as they are the majority of the foreign community, possibly if there are such persons found that may have to go to prison—(laughter)—those persons will be in the majority so far as Americans and English are concerned.—(Laughter.) But I hoped and trusted further that the Japanese Government will try to let the preliminary stages of these prisoners if confined, be something similar to what they are in England and America, where we always hold that a man is innocent until he is proved guilty—(Hear, hear,)—and not that he is guilty until he is proved innocent.

THE LAND QUESTION.

And I also made, Sir, some remarks relative to the land, which I endeavoured to make in the same conciliatory tone, but as I have made those remarks it is no use repeating them, but what I am delighted to see is that you and this great assemblage of my fellow countrymen approve of what I said in that speech generally. —(Hear, hear, and applause.) That I need not say has given to me the most intense satisfaction. In your remarks you made an observation as to Japan being the future distributing point of this great ocean. That I believe is as assured as anything can be assured in this world. And you made some remarks relative to capital and other points. But I would say with great respect though I sympathise undoubtedly with your view, that this country cannot do everything at once. This country has gone forward by such leaps and bounds in the direction of progress that I have every faith that those points that you called attention to will be looked into in the future, and if they are brought before the Japanese Government in the same manner that you spoke, and more in the nature of argument than in a dictatorial character, I am perfectly certain that all will be smooth and that things will go as you would wish them to go,

THE WORLD WIDE BRITISH.

Sir, I am entertained to-night by the British community. I have been a very great deal about the world; I think I have been three times round the world, and as I have been round both Capes I have that privilege which seamen enjoy of being able to put both my feet on the table.—(Laughter.) When I look upon the picture in this room I remember that wherever I have been about the world there I found the persevering, energetic, may I say pushing, British merchant, and here I find in this room in Japan this large assembly to bid me a welcome, and when I look round it, and see two bankers near me, I cannot quite calculate what this room represents in income—(laughter)—though being an Irish landlord I only wish I had a hundredth part of it.—(Laughter.) Sir, there are some points in the East that have been very much brought to my notice with regard to the British merchant. One is the British merchant sometimes complains.—(Laughter.) I may add that I have heard a very large proportion of their complaints—and I have as far as I was able looked into them very narrowly to get at the facts—but I must say that in a great number of cases I have not been able to see the facts calculated to make my argument listened to at home. In other cases I have got very palpable facts, but there is one fact the British merchant has brought to my attention particularly in China; he has not said it to me here, but I dare say he will—(Laughter.) He has said to me: "This is a monstrous thing; I believe I understand that the British merchant by his enterprise and energy, and sometimes by his blood has opened up the trade of the East. He made the platform possible for other nations to come in and enjoy trade." (A voice: "So he did.") Quite right—so he did my friend.—(Laughter.) That point will be argued and I think always agreed with. My friend has not heard the rest of my argument.—(Laughter.) The British merchant then proceeds to say something in this way: "This has to be stopped!" "Here,' some gentleman would say, "I came here at such and such a time, and developed trade and my friends helped me to make this trade. Now here come the American and the German, and will you believe it, he is underselling me?" "Well," I said, "I can quite believe that, but my actual business mission was not so much individual industries as the volume of trade in which this great Empire is concerned." What I wanted to point out to my friend who said this—and I did point it out—was that it was a very disagreeable case and I quite sympathised with him, but it was this case of making trade and making it with the open door that made us the Empire we are; and again I say that it is the enormous volume of our trade which has made our people so rich, so happy, and so contented, and therefore it was on this point that I used to say to my friend that if I was to touch such a thing as this, or if you or the British communities should do so, you would defeat the very object of the whole of the British communities whether at home or abroad, which is to keep that open door, whether the other nations come in and profit by individual enterprises, so long as we have a fair field and no favour.—(Applause.)

A WORD FOR THE MERCANTILE MARINE.

Sir, on your programme I observe two flags,—(applause)—and they give me the keenest pleasure. I hope in the future those two flags will be oftener seen together than they were in the past, because there was not quite so much sympathy between the two great services—the mercantile and military shipping—the navy and the mercantile marine—that there should be. That sympathy has grown. The mercantile marine depends upon the strength of the fleet, and to the mercantile marine we are more dependant than is generally given in the way of credit. Upon their energy, readiness of resource, upon their pluck and insistence we are able to carry on the great trade of our Empire. The British mercantile officer and seaman has a very hard life, but remember most of our commerce is water-borne, nearly all our food is water-borne and it depends upon the punctual and certain delivery of those cargoes whether our trade flourishes or whether it does not flourish. The defence of that mercantile marine depends upon efficiency and accuracy of seamanship, and therefore those two services ought to be like brothers, more particularly when you remember that in time of war if we want reserves we shall call heavily upon that mercantile marine. Therefore I say I am delighted to see those two flags interlocked as I see them on that card, and as far as I am concerned I have not lost an opportunity for many years to try to get those services more together as they are dependent upon each other so for the welfare of our country.—(Applause.)

A HIT AT ARM CHAIR POLITICIANS.

Sir, the education of a seaman is a very practical education. As far as the word education goes I do not think we can apply it very literally to the British seaman, whether he be a man-of-war's-man or a mercantile seaman. I know myself in the House of Commons, I often feel quite ashamed of my want of education —(Laughter, and deprecation.) My education has been the practical one which you get by going about the world, by seeing a great number of people, by having conversations and arguments with a great number of people, but it is not quite that education which is so useful and powerful in the House of Commons. But there is this about a British seaman: he really does understand foreign policy very much better than a great number of people who have charge of him.—(Loud laughter and applause.) I hope that what I have just remarked will in no way be understood to indicate that I have the slightest intention of applying what somebody called the pin-prick lately, to our most gallant, excellent, and talented Foreign Secretary Lord Salisbury.—(Applause.) I was merely saying what has often occurred to me in the House of Commons. I have heard a gentleman get up after I have ventured to say what should be done—not rudely, but in a courteous manner, but certainly very clearly—and afterwards I have sat down and listened to that gentleman. What his profession was I do not know; I know he had never been out of England, and he would rise in the House of Common and say: "Don't listen to that man. He may be a good sailor, but what in the world can he know about foreign policy." I often replied that those who go about the world and see the effect of foreign policy are better able to judge about that question—better able to judge about it than people who never go about the world and who get all their information from books and other sources.—(Applause.)

A WORD OF THANKS.

Sir, I must thank you, and I must thank this most distinguished assembly, for the great honour you have done me to-night. I do not intend to make a speech.—(Cries of "Go on! ") I think I said during an hour and some minutes the other night all I could possibly say about the great question of the trade in the East, but what I was going to say at this moment—I do not intend to make a speech—but I must give you my most warm thanks for your having taken the trouble to the number of 160 British merchants of the British community here, to come and welcome me at this most excellent dinner to-night. It has been a most excellent dinner. I have heard most beautiful music, which I understand is by a naval band. Well, wherever the band came from, if it is a naval band it would be a credit to any ship—(Hear, hear.) I have been delighted with my favourite plant. I don't know where they come from, but whoever grew them understands orchids. The only regret I had during my visit to China is that I have been entertained soluxuriously and so well that either I shall have to let my stirrup leathers down two holes, or let my staylaces out. —(Loud laughter.) I am perfectly certain that I have got into a condition that if I had a wick put in me now I should burn like a nightlight—(Loud laughter.) Everywhere I have been received with extreme courtesy and kindness, and sympathy by the people of those countries, and I shall not forget that kindness and

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

courtesy; but I shall also remember with warm gratitude that 160 of my countrymen in Japan took the trouble to entertain me and to send me off to my own country with good wishes and an honest British farewell.—(Loud and long continued applause, during which his Lordship resumed his seat.)

THE HEALTH OF THE GOVERNOR OF KANAGAWA.

After a short interval, the CHAIRMAN rose and said:—

Gentlemen, we have had the pleasure of listening to the interesting remarks and sound advice of our distinguished guest, Lord Charles Beresford—(applause)—and on your behalf I thank him. If only Yokohama had a few orators like him what could we not achieve—(Hear, hear.) I will now call upon you to drink to the health of His Excellency the Governor of Kanagawa.—(Loud and prolonged cries of Bansai).

A CORDIAL GREETING.

Governor ASADA in reply, said—

Mr. Chairman, and Gentlemen all—I feel very pleased and gratified to be the guest of the Yokohama Britishers this evening, and I esteem it a very great honour to be able to meet your noble guest, Lord Charles Beresford.—(Applause.) I am sure his visit to Japan will conduce to draw closer the relations that already exist between this country and Great Britain.—(Hear, hear.) I feel equally sure that the policy that he so earnestly advocates—the policy of the "open door"—will be a very great benefit to the commerce of all the nations trading in the East.—(Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, I have the honour of drinking to the continued prosperity of all the British Community here.—(Loud applause.)

A POPULAR TOAST.

The CHAIRMAN next gave the toast of the health of Mr. Otani Kahei, Chairman of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce in Yokohama. In doing so he again referred to the regret that the Britishers of Yokohama felt at the shortness of Lord Charles' visit which prevented them from giving him the reception that they would have wished. Had time allowed it would have been possible to have made the meeting a truly cosmopolitan one, for many Americans and Germans had expressed a wish to join in the welcome to Lord Charles. Unfortunately the space at the Committee's disposal had been all too short, and they had only been able to extend their invitations to the Governor of the Prefecture and Mr. Otani Kahei, the genial Chairman of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce. He now begged to propose the toast of the health of Mr. Otani coupling with it the hope that such meetings as they were holding that night would act as a stimulant to draw closer together the bonds that existed socially and commercially between the Japanese people and the foreign communities.—(Applause.)

A HAPPY SIMILE.

Mr. OTANI KAHEI (whose remarks were ably interpreted by Mr. H. A. C. Bonar, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul) said—Mr. Chairman, your Lordship, and gentlemen: I have been a long resident of Yokohama, but I confess it to my shame that I am not able to speak to you in English, and I crave your permission to speak in Japanese. As a representative of the Chamber of Commerce of Yokohama I must state my gratitude for the kind sentiments expressed this evening for my country. Lord Charles Beresford has come to China to inquire into the condition of trade, and in connection with his visit he has come to this country. In 40 years or so, owing to the excellent tuition imparted to us by Great Britain, we have been able to attain the position we now hold as regards commerce. With reference to the new condition of things after July next, when mixed residence etc., will prevail, I wish to say this: For the subjects of an enlightened country like yours to meet this new order of things is like placing you in the position of a bride-groom who receives an inexperienced bride. We are the inexperienced bride; we come to you knowing but little; we are anxious for your regard and therefore only too conscious of our shortcomings; we beg you to condone our faults, to bear with our inexperience, and to continue to impart the tuition and education that you began in our infancy, so that finally we may be thoroughly competent to carry out the duties that have now been assigned to us.—(Loud and long continued applause.) Gentlemen, I thank you, and in drinking the health of Lord Charles Beresford, I wish also to drink to that of all the members constituting this assembly.—(Applause.)

The CHAIRMAN thanked Mr. Otani for his remarks and then called for three cheers for the guest of the evening. These were given and then the meeting spontaneously broke out with "Rule Britannia," during which Lord Charles retired. The healths of the proprietors of the Hotel, the Chairman and Vice-Chairmen were then informally given and all were received with hearty applause, the assembly finally breaking up about an hour after midnight.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR:—As I see by your newspaper that the dinner to be given this evening has not been quite understood, I venture to trouble you with a few lines of explanation to those whom it may interest. At the first sight, the mission of Lord Charles Beresford, representing the Chambers of Commerce of Great Britain, seemed to us Englishmen peculiarly worthy of our approval as his countrymen, and it was thus that the Branch of the China Association here, which is composed entirely of British residents in this settlement,—an Association which had welcomed him all over China and in Kobe,—it seemed to be peculiarly their duty and pleasure to welcome him in Japan. Their Committee, therefore, organized a social party to meet him at dinner this evening. We have since learned by his speeches, and heard from Lord Charles himself, that his object is not a national one, but an international one. The object that he has in view "the greatest amount of good to the greatest number of people," and that while he was glad to meet his own countrymen, he would have preferred to meet a cosmopolitan body of the residents of Yokohama and Tokyo. We have also since heard from some of our fellow residents of other nationalities, that it would have been a pleasure to them to have joined us in welcoming our guest, and it would have been our unanimous pleasure to ask them to join us, but the capabilities of the largest dining-room here are limited, our number is already so large that it would have been simply impossible to have increased it, without making invidious distinctions, and we have therefore, with regret, to abandon the idea.

I may add that the General Chamber of Commerce here had taken the matter in hand some time back, but finding that the China Association had already moved in the matter, and learning that Lord Charles' time was very limited, the idea was not followed up, and now we find that his engagements prevent our carrying out any such project.

Yours truly, R. D. ROBISON,
Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce.

Yokohama, 23rd January, 1899.

CHINA NEWS.

Shanghai suffered from two fires on the night of the 15th instant. The first broke out in rooms occupied by Mr. Cecil Brent in Messrs. Bavier's magnificent premises at 18-B Szechuen-road, but was fortunately soon under control, damage to the extent of a couple of hundred dollars only being done. The second fire broke out in the store of Messrs. Ah Ping, furniture dealers, Bubbling Well Road, and, despite the endeavours of the brigades, spread, assisted by a moderate North-east wind, to the adjoining premises. The whole block was eventually burnt out. Immediately behind is a terrace of foreign dwelling-houses but fortunately the wind was in the right quarter or they must have gone too. Mr. Jackson, of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, on entering the "Metropole" had a narrow escape, a falling beam struck him on the head and inflicted a nasty facial wound, and P.C. Johannsen had to be taken off the premises by the fire-escape, the staircase, his only exit, being envolved in flames. The houses burnt are Ah Ping and Co. already mentioned; the Hotel Metropole;—Mr. Schiemanofski the proprietor of the waxworks is, with his wife and family, left destitute and has suffered a loss of some $6,000;—a Chinese dwelling-house; Messrs. Fong Kwo Tsing-sue and Co. curio dealers, and the International Bicycle Co. The estimated loss amounts to Tls 52,000 and the insurances effected stand at Tls. 64,300. The buildings were covered by the Royal for Tls. 20,000, and the contents as follows:—Ah Ping's furniture store, Manchester, Tls. 10,000, Imperial, Tls. 10,000, and South British, Tls. 5 000—total Tls. 25,000. The Hotel Métropole, including personal effects, was insured for Tls. 3 300 in the Hongkong Fire, and for Tls. 1,000 in the New Zealand,—total Tls. 4,300. The London and Lancashire had a line of Tls. 15,000 on the International Cycle Co., and have the police and others to thank for the small loss sustained.

The Shanghai mandarins received on Jan. 14th an important telegram from Ichang reporting the capture by rebels—Kolao Hui—of the district city of Changlo in Shinan prefecture, Hupeh province, on the 12th instant, and the reported murder of the district magistrate, besides other officials. Changlo, says a contemporary, is about a hundred miles to the south-east of Ichang, as the crow flies, and borders on the Hupeh-Hunan frontier. About a fortnight ago troops sent by Viceroy Chang visited the place and drove the malcontents into Hunan and having restored order were sent back to Ichang.

The Belgian Consul in Hankow, says the Universal Gazette, has communicated to the Taotai and Director General Shêng requesting the grant of a settlement in that port, but the Taotai and Director General have decided to refuse this on the ground that Belgian commercial interests are comparatively small there.

The Sin Wan Pao, states that the French Consul in Tientsin has received a sum of 5,000 francs from the Foreign Office in Paris to found a French school in Tientsin for the training of Chinese students. The Consul has engaged a teacher and made the necessary arrangements and the school will shortly be opened. Already a number of students have applied for admission.

According to the Universal Gazette, Count de Bezaure has given up the negotiation of the Ningpo Joss House Affair which is to be settled by the French Minister and the Tsungli Yamên. It is stated that the Minister adheres to the six original demands made by Count de Bezaure. The Tsungli Yamên was advised by one of the Foreign Ministers to accede to the demands, but this was objected to by Viceroy Liu Kunyi.

The following is the N.-C. Daily News translation of a dispatch received lately by Governor Liao of Cheking from the R.C. Bishop of the province with reference to the recent anti-missionary outbreaks in Yenchou and Tunglu:—"On the 20th of December last some 400 or 500 members of a secret society belonging to the district of Chientê, Yenchou prefecture, attacked the R.C. Chapel in the hamlet of Tsililung, plundered the converts, and set fire to several of their houses, destroying property valued in all at over Tls. 4 000. At daybreak on the 22nd of the same month the members of the same society attacked the R.C. Chapel in Tunglu district and burned it, doing damage to a total value of over Tls. 2,000. I have therefore to request your Excellency to investigate these outrages and make compensation therefore, etc., etc.,"

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES :—

Prince Cyril ... ... 30—52
Prince Imperial ... ... 391—456—527
Prince Imperial visits Count Okuma ... 575
Prince Iwakura ... ...636—659
Prices 132
Professor Bell 437
Prison Question 130
Prison Reform 216
Professor Toyama ... ... 30—251
Prof. Clay MacCauley at the Literary Society 437
Prof. Bell and the Dumb in Japan ... 485
Proposed Tax on Silk Stuffs 428
Proposed International Exhibition... ... 261
Progressists and the Government 660
Promotions in the Army 360
Public Recreation Ground in Tokyo ... 503
Purchase of Loan Bonds 287
Questions of Revenue 307
Quick-firers for Japanese Artillery ... 660
Railways ... ... 53—226
Railway Loan 552
Railways in Korea 211
Railway Question 237
Railway Project... 657
Railway Accidents 553
Railways in China 434
Railway Concessions in China 309
Railway Association 14
Railway and Steamship Competition ... 239
Radicalism 525
Red Cross Society 458
Recent Disaster in the Harbour 134
Reforms in Formosa 102
Reform of the Electoral System 608
Reinforcement of the British Squadron... 361
Religious Service for Soldiers killed in the War 356
Reign of Terror in Peking 416
Reprieve of Chang 359
Resignation of the Minister of Justice ... 334
Resignation of the Minister of Education. 429
Resurrected Errors 183
Result of the Elections 180
Reuter 106
Reuter's Agent 128
Reuter Again 383
Revised Treaties and the Tariff 30
Revelations 262
Revenue for 1899 576
Rice 162
Rice Crop ... ... 287—502
Rice Harvest 157
Roman Catholic Chapel Burnt 169
Royal Arch Masonry... 500
Russia in the Far East 2
Russia in Manchuria 274
Russian Peace Proposals... 262
Russia's Peace Proposals... 435
Rules of the Road ... ...528—551
"Sake" Brewers 529
Sampan and Jinrikisha Fares... 361
Scene at a Garden Party... 217
Sectional Assertion of Opinion 284
Seiwa Tetsudo 358
"Sekai-no-nihon" 477
Sendai News 59
Serious Affray in Tokyo 76
Service of Trains from Yokohama to Kamakura and Zoshi 157
Seven Months' trade... 164
Severin 360
Shan-hai-kwan and Newchwang Railway 384
Shanton or Chengtu 551
Shinagawa Tram Company 528
Shintai Ukagai 500
Shipwreck and Heavy Loss of Life ... 610
Shipping Disaster in the Inland Sea ... 461
Silkmen of Yokohama 258
Sincere Flattery... 503
Silver Yen 129
Slavery Case in Mexico 432
Smuggling of Alcohol 27
Social Evil, The... 526
Social and International Courtesies ... 56
Solitary Confinement of Suspects 107
Some Legal Questions of the Day ... 127
Söul 558
Söul-Fusan Railway ... ... 263—286—309
Spanish Squadron 5
Spain and the Philippines 552
Special First-Class Carriages... 61
Speculators and Swindlers 357
Spoils, The 27
Spoils System 104
State Purchase of Private Railways.210—631
State Railway Question 609
Star in the East Installation 674
Story of a Remarkable Man 235
Story (A) and a Moral 504
Storm, The 285
Stormy Times 630

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES :—

Strange Story 407
Street Railways in Tokyo 286
Strike of Letter Carriers in Yokohama... 151
Students Abroad 631
Stumping the County 661
Subjective Villainy 636
Suicide at Negishi 50
Sugamo Affair 478
Sugamo Prison Affair 312
"Sun's" Musical Criticism 480
Surrender of Manila... 192
Suspension of a Magazine 106
Swimming Matches 153
Sword of Damocles 499
Szechuan Troubles 355
Taking of Guam... 50
Taxation 288
Taxation Measures 283
Tax on Business Capital 575
Tea-Tax Memorial 30
Tea-Growers 77
Tea-preparing Machine 135
Telephones 359
Telephone Expansion 131
Temple Chion-in and its debt 107
Tenure of Land by Foreigners 477
Terrible Affair in Yokohama harbour ... 135
Testimonial to the Rev. and Mrs. Geo. Needham... 534
That Admirable Memorial 260
This Picture—and That 534
Timid Reformers 209
Title of "Doctor" 610
Tosa Doshin Kai 480
Tobacco 28
Tokyo City Government 529
Tokyo Election Affair 261
Tokyo Lady's Suicide 85
Tokyo Tram Company 527
Tokyo Street Railways ... ...131—553
Tokyo Water-works 458
Tonnage Dues and the "Jiji Shimpo" 661
Torture in Korea 406
Toyo Kisen Kaisha ... ...104—479
Treaties and the Tariff 282
Treasury's Silver ... ... 56—182
Treasury's Purchases of Bonds 360
Tram Car Fares in Tokyo 553
Troubled Korea 591
Trouble in the Cabinet 258
Twenty Millions of Yen 606
Twenty Millions for the Emperor 574
Twenty-fifth anniversary of the Foundation of the German Asiatic Society ... 461
Two Exhibitions of Pictures 432
Two-hundred-and-tenth Day 239
Two Parties... 476
Unearned Increment in Japan 295
"Unkwa" 55
Union of Cotton Importers 261
United States in the Far East... 661
Unveiling of Saigo's Statue 633
Untiring Onset, The 215
Urban Lands ... ...309—381
Vantine Case, The 610
Various Views 455
Various Routes in one Goal 633
Violation of Trade Marks 51
Viscount Torio 380
Wait 503
War, The 34
War Expenditures 103
Weather ... ...263—239
Wealth of Japan 337
Wei-hai-wei... ... ...382—552
What will the Cabinet do? 478
"Why don't the Authorities?" 526
Working of the Corrupt Practises Ordinance 180
Wu Mow-ting 13
"Yamato" in the Typhoon 185
Yamagata Cabinet Organized 474
"Yakumo"... 500
Yokohama Commerce 286
Yokohama and Kobe 313
Yokohama Lodge Installation 647
Yokohama Merchants and Japanese Buyers 58
Yokohama Trade Depression 40
Yokohama Waterworks 234
Yokota Affair ... ... 313—358—408

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE :—

A Correction 463
A good song misused 89
"An Anniversary Exhibition" 294
An Appeal 295
A Terrible Storm 560
An Unsavoury Subject 560
A Worthy Physician... 673
A Word in Conclusion 221
Bismarck's Religious Faith 463

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE :—

Buddhist Criticism of Christianity... ... 439
Distress in Hokkaido ... ...318—463
Doshisha—the other side 318
Doshisha 344
Doshisha: A reply 363
Doshisha Trustees and Mr. Cady... ... 417
Doshisha Question 438
Doubtful Disputations 272
Dr. Hatoyama 18
Educating Japanese Christians Abroad ... ...167—195
Elasticity of the United States 589
Engines in Use on Japanese Railways... 116
Fancy Dress Ball 673
Fire on board the "Kaimou Kan" ... 648
Grand Duke Cyril's Donations 65
Habeas Corpus 673
Hokkaido Floods 438
"Ijin Baka" and the Imperial University 535
India and the Gold Standard... 317
Japonicizing Christianity... 620
Jurisdiction in Liaotung 589
Kinkwazan 463
Land Transfers under the New Treaties 487
Late Concert, The ... ... 559—589
Mr. Cady and the Doshisha 415
Mr. Boissonade and the abolition of Torture 116
Mr. MacNair on "Genesis" 221
Missions in Japan ... ... 20—116—140
"Mint Price" of Silver 343
Morality in Japan 239
Orchestral Tempest in the Social Teapot 589
Pious Impiety 195
Postal Deliveries 674
Prayer Wheels 535
Railway Questions 166
Re-United States of America 90
Right of Foreigners to establish Schools 438
Romaji Reform 41
Rule of the Road 560
"Shadow we Pursue" 295
Single Tax and Stupidity 511
Single Tax Started in China 487
Starvation in Japan 90
Sugamo Prison Affair 512
Three Contrasted Public Notices 141
To "Eitekou" ... ... 272—295
The Fourth 42
The Iwate Famine 116
The Government's feelings towards Foreigners 195
The Perry Incident 270
The U. S. School Policy 65
Tokyo-Yokohama Express Trains 294
U. S. and Colonial Government 589
Value of Gold 363
Wherefore Perry? 317
Will Adams' Grave at Yokosuka 512

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS :—

Affairs at Manila 366
An Ocean Duel 364
Arrival of U.S. Transports at Manila ... 66
Attempt to Poison Aguinaldo... 367
A Trip to Hokkaido and Back 272
Australia and Japan... 275
Austro-Japanese Treaty 225
Chinese Classic Drama 677
Chinese Problem 166
Coup d'Etat at Peking 395
Coronation Festivities in Holland... ... 461
Destroying a Fur-Seal Rookery 415
England the Truest Republic... 165
Fire in Kobe Harbour—"Baring Brothers" 196
Foreigners and the Revised Treaties ... 117
Formosa 647
Hawaii 274
High Agricultural, Commercial, and Industrial Council 535
In German New Guinea 227
Japanese Literature ... ... 618—642—668
Japanese Names for Number... 415
Japanese Settlers in Australia... 91
Japanese Women... ... ... 508—536—562
Japonicizing Christianity... 563
Life in East London 193
Mr. Ogawa on Prisons 295
New Cricket Pavilion 588
Origin of Japanese Roots... 554
Present Exhibitions of Paintings 487
Single Tax 514
Situation at Manila 66
Sir Henry Hawkins 651
Terrible Boat Accident near Canton ... 299
The "Irene" at Manila 169
The Fête of Confucius 391
Typhoon and Floods in Formosa 221
West River Rebellion 91

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

REPORTS :—

Bank of China, Japan, and the Straits... 443
Board of Home Missions of the Church of Christ in Japan 137
Countess Pourtales 323
General Meeting of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha 558
Girls' High School 19
Gotemba Leper Hospital... 591
Japan Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church ... ... 90—118
Kwangsi Rebellion 322
Mosquito Yacht Club 649
Manila Affairs 170
Mrs. Patton's Siberian Experiences ... 465
N.Y.K. Liner Ashore on the American Coast 316
Portuguese Prisoner at Kajibashi ... 91
Presentation to Wor. Bro. Keil 363
Synod of the Church of Christ in Japan. 138
Testimonial to Dr. D. Macdonald... ... 142
Trade of Yokohama 368
Waste Silk Export 34

ENTERTAINMENTS :—

Concert in Tokyo 481
"Gibson" Tableaux... 296
Herr Junker's Concert 636
Junker's Concert in Tokyo 406
Philharmoic Concert in Yokohama ... 553
St. Andrew's Ball 559
Tokyo Dramatic and Musical Society... 578
Tonic Sol-fa Concert... 35
"The Magistrate" at the Public Hall. 587
"The Magistrate" 612
Y.C. & A.C. Ball 648

MEETINGS :—

Asiatic Society of Japan (Dr. Reiss' paper) 563
Asiatic Society of Japan (annual) 676
A School for the Blind 65
Christ Church (Selling Settlement Lots) 623
Farewell Dinner to Wor. Bro Andrew Patterson 13
Grand Hotel, Ltd. 118
International Association of Journalists 361
Japan Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church 65
Mr. Barrett at the Oriental Society ... 674
Railway Meetings 169
St. Andrew's Society... 391
W.C.T.U. For. Aux. Convention 363
Yokohama Choral Society 342
Yokohama Chess Club 367
Yokohama Literary Society 358

OBITUARY :—

Death of Baron Kanda Kobei 29
Death of Mr. Henry Hennessy 296
Death of Mr. Sienkzewicz 380
Death of Mr. William Barrie... 459
Death of the Empress of Austria 282
Death of Mr. Fujii 334
Death of Rev. C. E. Garst 674
Death of Frank H. Hooper 621
Late Marquis Tokugawa 57
Late Mexican Consul-General 559
Late Mr. Tennant 51
Late Mr. Isono 636
Prince Bismarck 130
Sir George Grey 343
Suicide of Capt. Hijikata... 78
Suicide of Mr. W. G. Ward 264
The Hon T. F. Bayard 361
The late George Pauncefote 296

REVIEWS :—

A History of Protestant Missions in Japan 501
"A Voyage of Consolation" 273
"Bismarck" 490
Classical Tales of Old Japan 614
Chinese Literature 664
"Condition of Foreigners under the new Treaties"... 211
"Evelyn Innes" 207
Fairy Tales from Japan 638
"Helbeck of Bannisdale" 297
"Hugh Wynne" 82
Japanese Art Folio 7
"Kokubo Seisaku" (Far Eastern Question) 556
"La Vie Japonaise" 529
"New Japanese Laws" and the "Code of Commerce" 216
"Petit cours du Japonais" 480
Philatelists' Almanack for 1899 638
"Plain Living"—Rolf Boldrewood ... 316
"Rodman, the Boat-steerer"... 588
"Roden's Corner" 614
"Secretary to Bayne, M.P." 440
"Soshi Bushi" 614
"The Crook of the Bough" 274
"The Forest Lovers" 588
"The Golfing Pilgrim" 274
"The Making of a Saint" 165
"The Okuma Cabinet and Education" 526
"The Silver Christ" and other Stories... 273
"The Standard Bearer"... 82
"The Well Beloved"—Thomas Hardy 316

LAW REPORTS :—

Alleged Frauds by a Young Foreigner... 170
Drowning Fatality in Yokohama (cook of Formosa) 368
Fatality in Yokohama Harbour 142
Fatal Accident at Sea 466
Fire on the Troop (Sailing Ship) 649
H.B.M. Court for Japan (Arson on the "Troop") 670
H.B.M. Court for Japan (Leopold) ... 198
H.B.M. Court for Japan (Apcar v. Moss) 346
Japanese Law Court (Mottet v. Takenouchi)... 483
"Kinshiu-Maru" Collision 491
Kobe Insurance Case 67
Loss of the "Baring Brothers" 218
"Melpomene"—"Patroclus" Collision case 43
Murder of German stoker (sentence) ... 267
Naval Court of Inquiry—"Hougomont" 119
"Patroclus"—"Melpomene" Case ... 19
Suicide in Yokohama 18
Suicide of Mr. Tennant 62
The Case of Edwards ... ...217—466
The Leopold Case (committal) 226
The Great Fur Case (Queen v. Leopold) 592—626

SPORTS :—

Autumn Meeting of N.R.C. 440
Baseball (Japanese Club v. Yokohama). 361
Cricket (The Club v. The Rest) 170
Close of the Cricket Season 487
Fourth of July Baseball 13
Interport Cricket Match 394
Interport Baseball 385
Mosquito Yacht Club 218
Mosquito Yacht Club 169
Nippon Race Club 466
Opening of the Y. C. & A. C. Pavilion... 621

TRANSLATIONS :—

Chinese Bureau of Railways and Mines.. 167
Formosa and New Treaties 39
Government of Formosa 18
Government Notification 169
Harbour Regulations... 64
Harbour Regulations for the Open Ports. 293
High Agricultural, Commercial, and Industrial Council ... ...560—590
Japanese Legal Decisions... 15
Official Notices 34
Speeches by Counts Itagaki and Okuma. 35
Tax Collection in Formosa 18
Urgency Ordinance relating to Elections. 116
Yokohama Harbour Regulations 343

POETRY :—

Peking... 414
Why did I Love Her? 391

SUMMARY OF NEWS .1—25—49—73—97—125—149—177—205—233—257—281—305—329—353—377—401—425—449—473—497—521—545—573—605—629—657

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS ... ...2—26—50—74—98—126—150—178—206—234—269—292—315—341—362—387—410—436—459—484—504—530—556—580—613—637—664

JAPANESE FACTS AND COMMENTS ... ... 12—36—60—80—111—163—193—219—246—270—293

KOREAN ITEMS ...16—40—87—112—223—248—297—344—366—392—419—434—462—512

AMERICAN AFFAIRS... ... ... 225—322

CHINESE NEWS .16—63—88—112—137—167—225—249—298—320—345—392—419—491—513—539—567—622—648—678

NEWS OF THE WEEK ...17—41—63—89—114—137—168—196—225—250—274—299—323—346—367—393—418—437—464—490—514—539—568—622—648—679

GERMAN NOTES ... ... 88—113—190—299

IMPERIAL DIET ...487—558—584—616—638—671

TELEGRAMS... ...20—44—67—91—119—144—172—200—227—252—275—300—324—347—373—396—420—443—467—492—515—540—569—600—624—652—680

CHESS ... ...21—45—69—93—120—145—173—201—229—252—277—302—324—349—370—397—422—445—469—493—517—541—569—601—625—653—681

FRENCH NEWS ... ...192—223—299—463

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS 37—187—268—289—388—506—582

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF CURRENT JAPANESE LITERATURE 83—243—338—412—531—665

NOTES ON NEWS ...87—110—215—259—313

SHIPPING ... ...21—45—69—93—120—146—173—202—229—254—278—302—325—350—374—398—422—446—469—494—517—541—569—602—626—653—682

COMMERCIAL ...22—46—70—94—122—147—174—202—230—254—278—302—326—350—374—398—422—446—470—494—518—542—570—603—626—654—682

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Digitized by Google

Original from
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 1.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, JULY 2ND, 1898. 明治三十五年七月二日 Vol. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 1
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 2
Japan International Association of Journalists 2
Russia in the Far East 2
The New Cabinet 3
Dr. Hatoyama 3
Political Items 4
Japan and the Philippines 5
The Spanish Squadron 5
The Next Session of the Diet 6
Democratic Ideas 6
The Chinese Customs 6
"Japanese Art Folio" 7
Leading Articles:—
The Cabinet 8
The Political Situation 9
New Formosa Administration 9
The Spanish Fiasco 10
N.Y.K. Steamer Wrecked 11
Mr. Frederic Yates' Portraits 12
Japanese Facts and Comments 12
The Constitutionalists' Manifesto 12
Personal Intelligence 12
Farewell Dinner to Wor. Bro. Andrew Patterson 13
Wu Mow-Ting 13
Changes of Provincial Governors 13
Marquis Ito's Retirement 13
Fourth of July Baseball 13
Japan's Industrial Future 14
Railway Association 14
Japanese Trade with India 14
The ex-Judge of Formosa 14
Departure of Mr. and Mrs. von Treutler 14
Mr. Gladstone 14
Japanese Legal Decisions 15
Notice to Mariners 16
Korean Items 16
Chinese News 16
News of the Week 17
The Government of Formosa 18
Tax Collection in Formosa 18
Correspondence:—Dr. Hatoyama 18
Suicide in Yokohama 18
Girls' High School 19
The "Patroclus" & "Melpomene" Case 19
Latest Telegraphic News 20
Chess 21
Latest Shipping 21
Latest Commercial 22

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"FAISCE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, JULY 2ND, 1898.

BIRTH.

On the 26th inst., at 17, Reinanzaka-machi, Akasaka, the wife of ALFRED R. PATTISON, Chief Engineer, Royal Navy, of a son.

MARRIAGE.

At Nagasaki, on the 22nd June, 1898, by the Rev. A. R. Fuller, JAMES MARKHAM DOW, of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, to ISABEL MARION, eldest daughter of J. M. ANTHONY, Esq., of Penang.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

A NEW Mexican legation is being built at Nagatacho, Tokyo.

DYSENTERY is rather prevalent among the coast villages between Oiso and Atami.

Marquis Ito is reported to have expressed a desire to retire completely into private life.

THE new Cabinet is remarkable for the number of untried men who have been given portfolios.

AT present the following German warships are in Manila Bay:—Kaiser, Kaiserin Augusta, Irene, and Cormoran.

A DEAD body was found in the water near Shohei bridge, Kanda, Tokyo, on the 23rd ult. It was that of a coolie named Tahara Gentaro, 53 years old. It is supposed he missed his footing, and fell into the water while intoxicated.

THERE is some talk of Mr. Hoshi Toru being recalled from Washington to assume the direction of foreign affairs.

A NEW Cabinet has been formed with Count Okuma as Minister-President, and Count Itagaki as Minister for Home Affairs.

THE Italian warship Marco Polo, which is now in Hongkong, will probably leave there for Yokohama about the middle of July.

PRESIDENT McKinley has proclaimed an extensive blockade of the whole of the southern coast of Cuba, also San Juan de Puerto Rico.

THE new Takasago Kan, lately built at Glasgow for the Japanese Navy, arrived at Aden on the 26th June, and left on the 29th for Corombo.

A CLERK of the Tokyo Central Post Office named Yamamoto, 49 years of age, is charged with stealing stamps and money. He unsuccessfully attempted suicide.

THE news of the American landing at Santiago has excited intense agitation at Madrid. Senor Sagasta has prorogued the Cortes owing to heated and futile debates.

IN the House of Commons, Mr. Curzon stated that the Government would insist on the Chinese Government revising the regulations for inland navigation in a satisfactory sense.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN, in the House of Commons, stated that the Government has decided to sanction the re-enactment of the Hongkong Contagious Diseases Act.

ON the 28th, 200 Japanese emigrants left for Hawaii by the steamer Gaelic. About 550 will leave for the same port on the 10th inst. by the Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Keelung Maru.

AN arrangement has been come to whereby the portfolios of War and the Navy have been removed from the political arena, so that Viscount Katsura and Marquis Saigo remain in their old positions.

THE New York Herald states that the U.S. Government is sending a fleet under Admiral Schley to bombard Spanish ports and pursue Camara. The Spanish are actively preparing for defence.

H.M.S. Powerful left Yokohama on Saturday last. On Friday H.M.S. Barfleur, Grafton, Undaunted, Fame, and Hart arrived from the North, but only the two torpedo-boat destroyers came inside the breakwater.

A HONGKONG telegram, dated the 7th inst., states that the insurgents are encroaching closer and closer on Manila. The Spanish have decided to fall back on the castle, where great quantities of powder and ammunition are stored.

WANG WÊN-SHAO has been appointed Chinese Minister of War, in place of Wang Tung-hwo, who has been relieved of his office; and Yung Luh has been promoted Minister of the North Sea and Viceroy of Chihli (the offices formerly held by Wang Wên-shao).

IT is reported from New York that the Americans have cut the watermains supplying Santiago. General Merritt is to hurry to Manila, and on arrival is ordered to issue a proclamation announcing the establishment of a Provisional Government.

A WOMAN named Fujii Teisu, the wife of Doi Fusanori, living at Hana-machi, Honjo, Tokyo, on the 12th May murdered her younger sister, 28 years of age, in a fit of jealousy. She was sentenced, on the 28th ultimo, to 15 years' penal servitude.

ON the 28th ultimo, the Kanagawa Kencho issued a Regulation for the control of the milk business, to be enforced from the 1st inst. The principal points are the enforcement of cleanliness in dairies, and punishment for selling milk of poor quality.

A MAN named Tajima Masataro, 25 years old, living at Tate-Daiku-cho, Kanda, Tokyo, attempted suicide by cutting his throat, about 4 a.m. on the 30th June, in a house of ill-fame in the Yoshiwara. He was sent to the hospital at once, but is in a very serious condition.

THE Mexican Emigration scheme promoted by Viscount Enomoto, Messrs. Sakuma, Nemoto, and others, is showing reviving prosperity. The Japan and Mexican Emigrants' Association has purchased land to the value of yen 97,500, to be paid for within 15 years. The emigrants are now principally cultivating coffee.

ADMIRAL CAMARA, with a squadron of two ironclads, two cruisers, three torpedo boats, and five transports, was refused coal at Port Said by the Egyptian Government. He was then ordered to proceed to Suez. It is reported that arrangements have been made for colliers to meet the squadron in the Red Sea or elsewhere.

THE following law officers on the 27th ultimo resigned their respective posts by request:—Mr. Kitabatake, President of Osaka Appeal Court; Mr. Toshi, President of Tokyo Appeal Court; Mr. Nomura, Public Procurator of Tokyo Appeal Court, and Messrs. Kurizuka, Nakamura, Judges of the Court of Cassation.

ON the 26th ult. over 1,400 female members of the Red Cross Society in Kanagawa Prefecture held a general meeting at the Yokohama School. H. I. H. Princess Komatsu, accompanied by Princess Mori, Marquise Nabeshima, and other ladies, was present. The princess presented medals to Mesdames Otani, Watanabe, and Minoda.

BUSINESS cannot be said to be looking bright in Yokohama from the Importer's point of view, but still it is not quite so bad as it was a week ago. A few small sales of wire nails have been effected as well as some parcels of galvanized wire. In yarns, grey shirtings, fancy cottons, and woollens the dreary tale of the past few months is repeated. Kerosene is dull, only retail business passing at the moment. In view of large arrivals of brown sugars, prices have been tumbling down a few points, 10 sen for Chinas, and 45 sen per picul for Formosas. White refined sees no change. The market for raw silk opened on 22nd of last month and up to the 25th, 33 piculs changed hands at 870 yen, this being given for No. 1 filatures, coarse sizes. Europe has been paying more attention to the staple lately and many enquiries were set afloat. It is expected that this year's crop will be smaller than last season's. Total settlements last year, including 12,000 piculs direct shipment by Japanese, was 57,730 piculs against 50,162 for 1896 97. Very little is doing in waste silk at unchanged rates. Tea is as brisk as ever, the scare of the U.S. duty having entirely died away. Over 11,987 piculs were settled during the week at gradually hardening prices, making the total settlements for the season 114 050 piculs against 124,388 piculs at corresponding date last year. Fish oil continues firm, but in Japan copper there is nothing to report

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the organization of the so-called "Constitutional Party" and the political outlook in general occupy a large share of the vernacular journals' attention. The Chuo Shimbun (National Unionist organ) attacks the new association with much vigour, pointing out that while it proclaims a very fine platform made up of such planks as the maintenance of the Imperial prestige, the promotion of industry and commerce, the encouragement of intellectual and material progress, and the facilitating of State business, its acts are calculated to operate in precisely the contrary manner. All the objects that it appropriates for itself are, in reality, the very objects which the Government has uniformly endeavoured to compass, and the course which Dr. Hatoyama, spokesman of the new Party, mapped out for it to pursue is the most effectual course conceivable for defeating those objects. If the Cabinet retreats, says Dr. Hatoyama, and suffers us to take its place quietly, well and good. If not, we shall drive it out by the simple expedient of refusing, session after session, to vote the Budget. Unless the Budget is voted, all progress must be suspended, so far as the Government is concerned. The business of administration can, indeed, be carried on as directed by the Constitution; namely, by working with the old Budget. But there can be no advance in any direction. Yet the Party professing such a plan of campaign merely for the sake of hoisting itself into power pretends to be solicitous about progress and development.

* * *

Journal after journal devotes long articles to the problem of domestic politics. It would be strange if the leading vernacular prints failed to discuss this topic, for the present crisis is certainly the most interesting and important that has been witnessed during the Meiji era. In view, however, of the very definite turn that events have now taken, it were merely wearisome to reproduce the long arguments marshalled by our contemporaries for the purpose of proving that "clan cabinets" are out of date; that the progress of the country must be interrupted unless the party system of government is introduced, and that the nation can no longer brook the fruitless friction now taking place between the administration and the political associations. Such points have been deprived of any vivid interest by the announcement that wholesale ministerial changes are on the tapis. We, therefore, refrain from any further reference to numerous articles, and ask our readers to understand that if the dimensions of this summary are much smaller than usual, it is because they could not developed to their usual extent without embodying unreadable matter.

* * *

That very antiquated subject, the relations between a bride and her parent-in-law, is discussed at great length by the Jiji Shimpo, but the article is so cleverly written that the Jiji's readers are not likely to quarrel with its dimensions. When Kaibara composed the Onna Daigaku, which might almost be called the woman's gospel so reverently has it been regarded ever since, he wrote that the destiny of a girl when she grows up is to enter another house and there practise obedience to her husband and his parents. From her tenderest years every Japanese girl learned to look forward to that time, and when, dressed in her bridal robes, she thrust a little sword into her girdle before setting out for her husband's home, she doubtless whispered to herself a firm resolve to abide by the purpose thus portrayed, namely, to die by her own hand rather than return to her parents with the disgrace of having failed to please her husband and to conciliate her mother-in-law and father-in law. It was a fine system upon paper, and ought to have secured the eternal sunshine of peace and contentment. But it did not work at all in practice. Wives received their divorce without cutting their throats, and fought with their mothers-in-law without recalling any of the fine texts of the Daigaku. They found that to live with parents-in-law was perfect hell (shiraji), and that instead of remembering the three duties (sanju, namely, obedience to parents in youth; to husband in middle life, and to children in old age), the seven causes of divorce (shichi-kyo) occupied a prominent place in their existence. They even learned to regard a second marriage, after divorce, not as a permanent disgrace, but as a consolation. Nor is the fact to be wondered at, for the sufferings they endured at the hands of their mothers-in-law were enough to break down any strength of patience. The Jiji gives an account of these sufferings. The impression its writing produces is that the Japanese mother-in-law must be among the worst specimens of her class to be found in any country, but the truth is simply that she occupies a more prominent place in married life than does her Occidental representative, for whereas a mother-in-law living with her daughter is the exception in the West, it is the rule in Japan. The Jiji's object is to change the rule. It advocates a separate establishment for the married couple wherever such an arrangement is contrivable in any way, and says that an incredible amount of suffering would thereby be obviated.

* * *

The Jiji Shimpo writes in very emphatic terms about the Hispano-American war. It declares the struggle to be between liberty and despotism; between enlightened civilization and benighted stagnation. The condition of the Cubans and of the inhabitants of the Philippines under Spanish rule invited the interference of the civilized world, and if America has drawn the sword in their behalf, her success must be the earnest wish of all progressive countries. What we have to hope for Spain is that she herself will emerge with a new system of Government and a new development of progressive tendencies. As for the future of the Philippines, the Jiji unhesitatingly declares that Japan must desire to see them in American hands. It is out of the question that they should be declared independent and placed under the control of the semi-barbarous people now in rebellion. The result would merely invite future complications. It would be impossible for the inhabitants to maintain their independence, and their manifest inability to repel aggression would afford a constant temptation to Powers whose propinquity to her shores Japan could not view without disquiet. But she knows that the policy of the United States is one of commercial expansion only, and with every nation honestly pursuing such a policy her relations can not be too close. She has no ambition for territorial aggrandisement herself, and she entertains such a genuine sentiment of friendship toward America that she desires nothing better than to have the Great Republic for a neighbour.

JAPAN INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF JOURNALISTS.

On Sunday afternoon, June 26th, a meeting of Japanese and foreign journalists was held at the Club Hotel, Yokohama, to discuss and adopt a constitution and set of rules for the proposed Japan International Association of Journalists, as drawn up by the provisional committee elected in Tokyo a month previously. There were present, Mr. Shimada, Mainichi Shimbun; Mr. Taguchi, Keisai Zasshi; Mr. Schroeder, Eastern World; Mr. Adam, Japan Daily Advertiser; Mr. R. Hay, Japan Gazette, Mr. Tsuchiya, Jiji Shimpo; Mr. Kotegawa, Kenzo Zasshi; Mr. Sakuma, Sekai-no Nippon; Mr. Matsumoto, Dai Nippon; Mr. Isobe, Chugai Yeigo Zasshi; Mr. Arnold, Japan Times; Mr. J. H. Brooke, Japan Herald; Mr. Tsuda, Nogyo Zasshi; Mr. Quinton, Japan Advertiser; Mr. Tennant, Japan Gazette; Mr A. Bellamy Brown, Japan Mail; Mr. Uchimura, Tokyo Dokuritsu Zasshi, and Mr. Takahashi, Japan Times.

Mr. Uchimura took the chair and briefly announced the object of the meeting. The following constitution, after considerable discussion, in which all present bore a part, was unanimously adopted.

I.—That an Association be formed to be called "The Japan International Association of Journalists," with the view of promoting goodwill, interchanging views between, and extending mutual aid among, the members of the journalistic profession both Japanese and foreign; and we, the undersigned organize ourselves into "The Japan International Association of Journalists."

II.—The meetings of the Association will be held in Tokyo or Yokohama at least once in two months or oftener as the Committee may decide.

III.—The meetings of the Association shall be attended exclusively by professional journalists.

IV.—Admittance to membership of the Association shall be decided by the Committee, who shall have it in their power to fix the qualifications of each member.

V.—A committee of five shall be appointed to consist of three Japanese journalists and two foreign journalists, which Committee shall include a Japanese Treasurer and a Japanese Secretary who shall reside in Tokyo, and a foreign Secretary who shall reside in Yokohama, the Committee to appoint its own Chairman and Vice-Chairman: the Japanese members of the Association shall elect their own representatives on the Committee, and the foreign members their representatives, the election to be confirmed by the whole meeting.

VI.—The expenses of each meeting shall be collected each time on the spot.

VII.—Each member shall pay yearly towards the support of the Association the sum of two yen, out of which the postage, cost of printing circulars, and other miscellanies be defrayed: the amount of subscription to be altered when occasion demands.

VIII.—The Committee shall be elected for one year by ballot at each annual general meeting of the Association, which shall be held each year in the month of June: any vacancy in the ranks of the Committee shall be filled by the same method at the next gathering of the members after the vacancy has been declared.

The Managing Committee of five elected at the meeting comprised Mr. Takahashi, Japan Times; Mr. J. H. Brooke, Japan Herald; Mr. Kotegawa, Kenzo Zasshi; Mr. Uchimura, Tokyo Dokuritsu Zasshi; and Mr. A. Bellamy Brown, Japan Mail.

After the meeting, the members of the new Association sat down to a capital dinner supplied by the Club Hotel. Mr. J. H. Brooke took the chair. Mr. Shimada Saburo (Mainichi Shimbun), late M.P. for Kanagawa Prefecture, proposed the toast of the Japan International Association of Journalists in an eloquent speech. He thought that great good should result from such an association of professional gentlemen. Journalism was the most suitable vehicle, he held, for promoting a better understanding between Japanese and foreigners, and in view of the near approach of mixed residence the duty of the profession lay clear before its members. He wished the Association a long career of usefulness. Other speeches followed, a most enjoyable evening being spent.

RUSSIA IN THE FAR EAST.

A telegram from Odessa, published in The Times of May 21st, says:—"The Russian Government, acting in the name of the Russian Volunteer Fleet Committee, will next year station permanently at Vladivostock or Port Arthur two cruisers, which are to be devoted to commercial purposes in time of peace. These vessels are to form the beginning of a large fleet of such cruisers which the Russian Government intends to maintain in those waters. The number is to be increased to six year the after next, and will be considerably augmented later on."

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE NEW CABINET.

The new Cabinet has been formed, and the portfolios were distributed as follows:—

Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs .....Count Okuma.
Minister of—
Home Affairs .....Count Itagaki.
Navy .....Marquis Saigo.
War .....Viscount Katsura.
Agriculture and Commerce .....Mr. Oishi Masami.
Finance .....Mr. Matsuda Masahisa.
Communications.....Mr. Hayashi Yuzo.
Justice .....Mr. Ohigashi Gitetsu.
Education .....Mr. Ozaki Yukio.

The five last names on this list should be familiar to those of our readers that have read the debates in the House of Representatives during the past few sessions. Mr. Oishi Masami was for some time a leader of one of the minor political parties which existed before the groups constituting a section of the Opposition amalgamated with the Kaishin-to to form the Progressists. He made himself conspicuous in the House in connexion with several questions, especially Korean affairs, and he served for some time as Japanese Representative in Söul, where his diplomacy showed a distinctly "stalwart" tendency. Subsequently he became Vice-Minister of Agriculture and Commerce when Count Okuma presided temporarily over that Department last year. Mr. Oishi is generally regarded as an able man, and he has the advantage of some official experience.

Practically the same description applies to Mr. Matsuda Masahisa and Mr. Hayashi Yuzo. They have been known as Count Itagaki's chief lieutenants ever since the Liberal Party was originally organized, and their influence in the Party of late years has scarcely been second to that of Count Itagaki himself. As to Mr. Hayashi Yuzo, probably no one contributed so materially to the recent amalgamation of the Liberals and Progressists as he did, and that his name appears in the first party cabinet was a foregone conclusion. Mr. Matsuda, like Count Itagaki, owes much of the influence he enjoys to the purity of his character and the blamelessness of his life. He is thoroughly trusted, but we are not aware that he has ever given any evidence of financial ability.

The appointment of Mr. Ohigashi Gitetsu to the post of Minister of Justice is a surprise. He has always been a sufficiently prominent figure in politics, and for a long time he had a small but devoted following of his own in the Lower House. But we were not aware that he had distinguished himself to the extent of being eligible for a portfolio.

The ex-Liberals stand before the country as the supporters of the post-bellum programme, including the expansion of national armaments, and the ex-Liberals hold the portfolios of Finance and Communications, which—apart from the Army and Navy—are the Departments chiefly concerned in carrying out the programme. We may assume, therefore, that there will be no retrenchment in those directions.

Mr. Ozaki Yukio is a brilliant writer and debater. His reputation both as a journalist and as a member of the Lower House stands very high, and it is probably safe to say that among all the assailants of the so-called "Clan System" not one showed himself, from first to last, more vehement and more uncompromising. We doubt very much, however, whether the educational world will regard his appointment with confidence or satisfaction, though it is possible that his abounding energy and earnest liberalism will enable him to achieve an unlooked-for success.

So far as the number of portfolios is concerned, the claims of the former Liberal Party have received most consideration. If we divide the Cabinet on political lines, the result is this:—

Ex Liberal Party.
Count Itagaki .....Home Affairs.
Mr. Matsuda Masahisa .....Finance.
Mr. Hayashi Yuzo.....Communications.

Ex-Kaishin-to.
Count Okuma ...Premier and Foreign Affairs.
Mr. Ozaki Yukio .....Education.

Minor Parties (affiliated with the Kaishin-to to form the Progressists.)
Mr. Oishi Masami.....Agriculture and Commerce.
Mr. Ohigashi Gitetsu .....Justice.

Meiji Statesmen.
Marquis Saigo.....Navy.
Viscount Katsura.....War.

With regard to the general character of the Cabinet, the most notable point is that it includes so many untried men, thus making a large demand upon the country's trustfulness. We suspect that there has been some repetition of the familiar experience, the tail wagging the dog. Veterans like Count Okuma and Count Itagaki would doubtless have been glad to enlist the cöoperation of some of the so-called "Clan Statesmen," although recourse to such aid might have cast doubts upon their own Party's independent competence. But the sentiment of their followers—sentiment to which we have alluded elsewhere—stood in the way. "Let us prove that we can take the place of the men we have driven out," has been the cry of the rank and file, and the leaders, yielding, have distributed the portfolios entirely among their own followers, the Departments of the Army and Navy alone excepted. It is a courageous venture. The next interesting question is the effect that will be produced on the officials of the various branches of the Government. Will they work contentedly under the new men, or will they resign? We suspect that very difficult tasks await Mr. Matsuda, Mr. Hayashi, and Mr. Ozaki.

There will be much surprise that neither the name of Baron Ito nor that of Dr. Hatoyama appears in the list. The former was confidently spoken of as Minister of Foreign Affairs and the latter as Minister of Justice But Baron Ito's appointment is understood to have been opposed by certain members of the ex-Progressist Party, and Dr. Hatoyama was equally unwelcome to some of the ex-Liberals. Difficulties of that nature ought not to have occurred. Let us hope that they will not be repeated.

An extra of the Official Gazette of the 30th ultimo, announces the resignations of Marquis Ito, Count Inouye, Viscount Yoshikawa, Baron Nishi, Baron Suyematsu Kencho, Mr. Kaneko Kentaro, and Professor Toyama.

The delay in performing the ceremony of inauguration was not due to any hitch in organizing the Cabinet. The portfolio-holders were fixed two days ago and submitted for His Majesty's approval. But a curious difficulty presented itself. Mr. Ozaki Yukio, the new Minister of Education, was appointed in the fall of last year to be a chokunin Councillor of the Foreign Office. During his occupation of the post the split between the Cabinet and the Progressists occurred, and Mr. Ozaki, while still an official, attended a meeting of the Party and took a prominent part in proposing and advocating a resolution in which the conduct of the Government was denounced in very strong terms. That was, of course, a marked breach of official discipline, and Mr. Ozaki, instead of being allowed to resign his post, was removed from it by way of disciplinary punishment. A sentence of that nature precludes reappointment for two years, and Mr. Ozaki's present eligibility for a portfolio could not be secured without a special pardon from the Emperor. Marquis Ito lent his services to effect the arrangement, but a little delay was, of course, unavoidable. The incident is regrettable as an accompaniment of the inauguration of party cabinets.

DR. HATOYAMA.

Dr. Hatoyama, who delivered the speech of the day on the occasion of the grand amalgamation meeeting of the Liberal and Progressists, has succeeded in getting himself universally talked about, which is an end that publicists are usually pleased to compass. Dr. Hatoyama certainly did not expend any brain power upon the choice of euphemisms. He declared, in the bluntest way possible, that the purpose of the new Party was to drive the Government out of office and step into its place, and he said that for the sake of achieving the object the Party must assume an uniformly destructive attitude in the House, throwing out Budget after Budget, and, in short, employing every available means to render legislation and administration impossible. Some good people are considerably shocked by such language. They find its frankness quite brutal, and they think it really very immoral to talk of getting into office as though that were the sole aim to be achieved. Others deem it necessary to apologise for Dr. Hatoyama, and to explain that he speaks of driving out the Government, not because the leaders of the Constitutionalists covet the sweets of office, but because they desire to have the power of carrying out their own policy. What futile recriminations! Dr. Hatoyama's words need no commentary. They were simply a declaration of war, and nobody imagines, we presume, that the Liberals and Progressists have combined for any purpose except to fight. Their platform is nothing. They have only one object, to introduce the system of party cabinets. The nation is not suffering from any wrongs that their assumption of office would enable than to redress. There can not be the most shadowy pretence that the affairs of the State are not well administered by the present Ministers, that its progress is checked by the incompetence of the men in office, or that its development is impeded because the Ministers of the Crown take their mandate from the Sovereign instead of taking it from one House of the Legislature. If there were any great problems, domestic or foreign, that could not be solved by Marquis Ito and his colleagues and could be solved by Dr. Hatoyama and his fellow-politicians; if there were any flagrant abuses to be corrected, any misappropriation of public funds to be arrested, any national misfortunes to be retrieved, the new Party might honestly talk of the things it hopes to accomplish on getting into office, rather than of the steps it intends to take for the sake of getting into office. But it has one aim, and one aim only, to compass—party Cabinets. Dr. Hatoyama was perfectly ingenuous when he refrained from attempting to show what the nation would gain by substituting party politicians for the Meiji statesmen. There is nothing to show. We admire his fine frankness,

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

It appears to us that somewhat exaggerated importance has been attached to the recent utterances of Dr. Hatoyama Kazuo when addressing the amalgamation meeting of the Liberals and Progressists. The rough summaries of his speech originally published represented him as having conveyed to his hearers a solemn warning against any recourse to assassination or physical violence, and the inference has been drawn, not unnaturally, that the standard of political morality must be low in Japan if a publicist considers such an admonition necessary when speaking to a concourse of nominally respectable party politicians. Now it would be absurd to profess any belief that Japan has shaken off all the fetters linking her to feudal times, when life was held cheaper than the purpose to be accomplished in taking it. The old bonds are there still, though they grow looser year by year. Dr. Hatoyama, however, does not seem to have been actuated by the grave purpose subsequently connected with his words. Reference to fuller reports of his speech show that he intended to guard himself against misinterpretation, rather than to warn his hearers against lawlessness. He said that there were two ways of replacing clan Government by Party Cabinets. One was the gentle way; the other the violent (muri). Then, having explained that the "gentle way" signified the voluntary retirement of the Clan statesmen and the succession of the party leaders to the vacated places, he passed on to define the "violent way," and prefaced his definition by saying:—"When I use the term violent (muri), I do not refer to assassination or anything of the kind: I refer to Parliamentary methods." It appears to us that there was no necessity for such a repudiation. But that is a matter of opinion. Dr. Hatoyama may have thought it expedient to guard himself against the charge of having used an equivocal term, a term certainly apt to be remembered against him, without a very explicit limitation of its intended significance. Be that as it may, we have to note that his deliverance was not an independent exhortation to eschew assassination and violence, but a warning against misconstruction of his own words. The difference is not radical, but, at the same time, deserves attention.

During the passage from Shanghai to Nagasaki, of the N.Y.K. steamer Satsuma Maru, which arrived on the 21st inst., a European was robbed of a portmanteau containing valuable articles and a Chinese passenger was also robbed of a packet containing twenty gold rings. After a careful search, says the Press, the portmanteau was found and restored to its owner, but the property of the Chinese is still missing.

POLITICAL ITEMS.

It will be readily conjectured that all kinds of rumours, assertions, and conjectures are published by the vernacular press with regard to the political situation. The great majority of them rest on such obviously slender foundations that they seem scarcely worthy of reproduction. Perhaps it may be interesting, however, to refer briefly to some of them as illustrations of the subjects that occupy publicists' thoughts.

Count Inouye's name appears to be on everybody's lips. It is evident that a great deal of uncertainty exists as to his real attitude. At one moment we are told confidently not only that he has abandoned all his old objections to party cabinets, but even that he is ready to resign his official position and take the lead in organizing a party if a suitable person can be found to succeed him at the Finance Department. At another, journalists busy themselves endeavouring to discover reasons why he should not be opposed to government by party and incidents in his career which go to prove that at heart he does not believe in Imperial Cabinets. The truth is, we supect, that Count Inouye has no faith in make-shifts. He would have one thing or the other in a distinct form, but he eschews a mélange of both. Thus a cabinet which, while professing to be quite independent of Parliamentary mandates, relies all the time on the assistance of a political party, seems to him a hybrid kind of affair, doomed to failure.

There is another story in circulation to the effect that Count Inouye, having from the first adopted a negative policy in finance, was opposed to presenting the Bill for increased taxation in the special session of the Diet, and advocated waiting until the regular session at the close of the year. It is added, indeed, that he confidently predicted the rejection of the Bill if any such attempt were made to force it through the Lower House. Hence he is supposed to be much chagrined at finding himself saddled with responsibility for a failure which would not have occurred had his advice been taken, and to be determined to resign his portfolio. Marquis Ito—so the story continues—has accordingly approached Count Matsukata, with a view to his return to the Finance Department. These tales appear to us to be altogether groundless. People are evidently determined to imagine that they know Count Inouye's mind a great deal better than he knows it himself; but if there is one thing more certain than another, it is that his financial policy is not negative, and that, whatever step was taken as to the Bill for increased taxation, he was a consenting party.

One of our Tokyo contemporaries alleges that the members of the Privy Council are opposed to the idea of any direct effort by Marquis Ito and Count Inouye to against a political party. They do not at all object to political parties, or to government by party, but they think that Cabinet Ministers should stand aloof from such doings. It is inconceivable, in our opinion, that the members of the Privy Council should be so inconsistent as to endorse the principle of party cabinets and, at the same time, condemn the idea of a Cabinet Minister associating himself with party organization. There is a vast deal of romantic talk about the sacro-sanct character of a portfolio-holder. If party leaders are to have portfolios what conceivable reason is there why a portfolio-holder should not become a party leader?

The Opposition journals industriously circulate rumours calculated to injure the prospects of the new Imperialist Party (Teisei-to). They say, for example, that the 127 members who voted for reassessment of the taxable value of land, have lost all cohesion, and are persuaded that assessment and increase of the Land Tax are altogether independent matters, and should be treated independently. The same newspapers report that the Ko-ha (stalwarts) in the House of Peers would at once enrol their names as members of the new constitutional Party were they not restrained by special considerations. Thus Prince Konoye, their leader, is president of the Nobles' Club; Viscount Tani has military rank, and Viscount Soga is a Court Councillor. As for the other prominent members of the section, they think that since their own organization in the House of Peers is based on the principle of entirely eschewing party connexions, a split would be caused if they entered the ranks of the new party. The only thing which appears quite certain is that the titled "stalwarts" have not joined the Constitutionalists and do not intend to join them.

Reference is made by more than one vernacular journal to a conference, said by some to have been actually held on the 24th instant in the presence of the Emperor, but reported by others to be pending. The subjects of discussion are believed to be the Cabinet's responsibility and the increase of the Land Tax. We need scarcely say that accounts published by newspapers about such a function must be more or less conjectural, but, so far as the broad facts are concerned, there are apparently grounds for believing that the political problems of the day are deemed sufficiently important to call for a conference in the Imperial presence. The Constitution, as we have more than once pointed out, provides that the Ministers of the Crown shall take their mandate from the Sovereign only, and if that part of the Imperial Prerogatives is now to be delegated to the Diet, it can only be with the consent of the Emperor himself. Whatever may be the theories entertained by publicists in Occidental countries, it is certain that in Japan no right to take a part in the government of the State is supposed to be vested in the people. The Sovereign is the source of all governing power, and if the Sovereign now chooses to extend the Constitution so that a Cabinet's tenure of office shall depend, not on the Imperial will, but on the political complexion of one House of the Legislature, it is for the Sovereign to announce that intention. Marquis Ito is said to be convinced that the change is inevitable, and to be prepared to counsel His Majesty in that sense; but whether the remainder of the elder statesmen will endorse his views is uncertain. We do not see much use in quoting the various hypotheses published by our local contemporaries. The German method of administering public affairs without care for the mood of the majority in the House of Representatives, does not seem possible to pursue in Japan, and the Meiji statesmen must be supposed to have reached that conclusion.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

More than one of the leading vernacular journals does not hesitate to suggest that the sudden resolve of Marquis Ito and his colleagues to resign their portfolios and hand over to the Constitutional Party the duty of organizing a Cabinet, was in the main a device to embarrass their assailants. The "Clan statesmen" are supposed to have assumed that the Constitutionalists were not themselves prepared to undertake the task which they have prevented others from performing, and that if they were called on to practically inaugurate the system of party cabinets, they would shrink dismayed from the attempt. This curious idea might be regarded as an illustration of the very light-hearted view which its exponents take of Ministerial responsibilities did not a more obvious explanation suggest itself. The fact is that the party politicians are not a little chagrined to discover how unprepared they really are for the great trust which they have been struggling so long and so vehemently to assume. After all, state the case how they may, they can not conceal from themselves that no Cabinet organised by them could be a working possibility unless it were a compromise. They have to fall back upon the assistance of the "Clan Statesmen," and to confess the somewhat humiliating necessity by leaving the portfolios of War and of the Navy in the hands of their previous holders. Not unnaturally they dread the construction which the public will put upon that phase of the situation. It is not pleasant to foresee the accusation that while they effectually checked the progress of State business for the sake of ousting the men who were conducting it, they were nevertheless unready to conduct it themselves. Their sense of discomfiture suggests an uneasy suspicion that they have been victimized. But they need not be greatly concerned, we imagine. Every system makes a groove for itself if it be suffered to work long enough. The system of Imperial Cabinets has made its groove, a deep groove, too, and the pioneers of party government will not be seriously blamed by history though they fail to smoothe out the ancient furrows and build their own system on an even foundation from the very outset.

JAPAN AND THE PHILIPPINES.

A Reuter's telegram from Washington, dated May 19th, says:—

Mr. Hoshi, the Japanese Minister, when calling upon Mr. Long, Secretary for the Navy, and Mr. Alger, Secretary for War, in order to obtain credentials for Lieutenant Narita and Major Shiba to act as observers respectively of the naval and military operations against Spain, definitely confirmed the denial previously given that Japan purposed to protest against an American occupation of the Philippines. He declared that Japan was naturally interested in all that affected the Philippines, for there were many Japanese in the islands, which, moreover, were geographically allied to the Japanese Empire. But Japan had not shown the slightest intention of interfering in the present course of events. The fact that the reports of a Japanese protest came via London was regarded by Mr. Hoshi as suggestive.

German surveyors at Potato Island, in Kiaochou Bay, have discovered several errors in the British Admiralty chart of 1893. The Germans are said to have found land between the north-west side of the island and the mainland, which is covered only by very high spring tides. They have further discovered two other ways to the island which can easily be raised above high water mark.

THE SPANISH SQUADRON.

There can not be any doubt, we imagine, that Admiral Camara's Squadron is bound for the Philippines. The announcement made by the Minister of Marine in the Cortes might not be regarded as conclusive, but the fact that the ships have been detained at Port Said settles the question. It is not surprising that considerable uncertainty should exist as to the movements of this Squadron. It has been behaving in a most mysterious manner. A telegram dated "London, May 30th," said that the Spanish Reserve Squadron had left Cadiz, and that "its destination was either Cuba, the Philippines, or America as the Government might deem expedient." That intelligence apparently emanated from a Spanish source, and was framed with the object not of informing but of deluding the public—an object to which Reuter's agents seem to have lent themselves with charming naïveté. The next news came from London, under date of June 20th. It said that the Cadiz Squadron under Admiral Camara, accompanied by six liners, carrying 4,000 troops, had finally sailed, and had passed Gibraltar, on Thursday, June 16th, going east. A day later the Squadron was sighted off some place the name of which came to us mutilated beyond recognition in passage across the wires, and nothing could be inferred except that a squadron was actually at sea. But on June 22nd Reuter telegraphed:—"The American Government has learned that the Cadiz Fleet has returned to a Spanish port." Thus again everything became dubious. It now appears, however, that the knowledge attributed to the American Government is erroneous, for a telegram, dated "London June 27th," says:—"The Spanish Fleet has been sighted at Port Said." We have often had occasion to comment on the very misleading method pursued in dating the telegrams now published in Japan. This last message is a case in point. "London, June 27th" is naturally interpreted to mean that the telegram was sent from London on the 27th, from which it would follow that the Spanish Fleet was in the neighbourhood of Port Said on the 26th, at latest. But the truth is that the date "27th" is fictitious: it is added at this end, the recipients of the London telegrams being apparently of the opinion that intelligence published by them should be given an air of freshness, by superscribing a date only 24 hours old. Now, London time being nine hours behind Japanese, even direct telegrams to Tokyo could scarcely be in time for insertion in a newspaper which goes to press on the evening of the day of the telegram's despatch. For example, a telegram sent from London at 9 a.m. would start on its journey at 6 p.m. by Tokyo time, and could scarcely reach Japan before midnight. But there are no direct telegrams. All these press messages go round by India, Singapore, Hongkong, and Shanghai. It is generally safe, therefore, to conclude that the time of a telegram's despatch from London is some three days earlier than the date of its publication in Japan. Applying the correction to the present case, we arrive at the result that the Cadiz Squadron passed Gibraltar on June 16th and reached Port Said on June 24th. We know now that it consists of two ironcrads, two cruisers, three torpedo boats, and five transports. The ships collected at Cadiz on May 18th, and said to be then in readiness for sea, were as follow:—

	Tons.	Speed Knots.
Pelayo, Battleship	9,900	... 16
Carlos V.	9,235	... 20
Alfonso XIII., Second-class Cruiser	5,000	... 20
Vitoria, First-class Cruiser	7,250	... 14(?)
Alfonso XII., Auxiliary Cruiser ...	3,020	... 17½
Pepido, Auxiliary Cruiser	570	... 18
Buenos Aires, Auxiliary Cruiser ...	?	... ?
Antonio Lopez, Auxiliary Cruiser...	?	... ?
Gralda, Despatch-boat	?	... ?

Three torpedo vessels.

With regard to the four liners said to be accompanying the fleet, they seem to be the Rotida and Patriota, two Hamburg-American steamers which have been fitted as cruisers, and the Audax and the Proserpina.

The above is certainly a formidable squadron. There are no American ships in these waters competent to cope with the Pelayo, the Carlos V. and the Vitoria. It is true that both the Pelayo and the Vitoria are old vessels, the former having been built in 1887 and the latter in 1865. But the Pelayo recently underwent thorough repairs at La Soyne, and the Vitoria has just been rebelted and supplied with new machinery. The Carlos V. is the newest and probably the finest of the trio. She was launched in 1895, and had not been completed when the war broke out. Had the battleship Oregon (10,288 tons) remained on the Pacific station, the situation would now be different. Since her withdrawal to the Atlantic, the strongest fighting ships that fly the Stars and Stripes on the Pacific side are the two double-turreted monitors Monterey and Monondnock, each 4,000 tons, with speeds of 13.6 and 14.5 knots respectively. There is a belief among American experts that these vessels are a match for a battle-ship. We find some difficulty in sharing that view. The Monterey is considerably stronger than the Monondnock. Let us compare the former with the Pelayo:—

Monterey, 4,000 tons—13.6 speed—13" belt—14" gun"—3" deck—two 12-in., two 10-in. armour-piercing guns—six 2 2"; four 1-4" quick firers.

Pelayo, 9,900 tons—16 speed—18" belt—19" gun—4" deck—two 12½-in., two 11-in. armour-piercing guns—nine 5.5"; two 2 7"; four 2.2"; four 1 4" quick firers.

There can not be much question, we think, as to which of the two ships is the more powerful. The Monterey is now on her way eastward and she will doubtless be quickly followed by the Monondnock. In fact, we may assume that no time will be lost in assembling all the American Pacific ships at the Philippines. Were that accomplished, the United States Squadron would consist of the following:—

	Tons.	Knots.
Monterey, monitor	4.000	... 13 6
Monondnock, monitor	4,000	... 14 5
Olympia, cruiser	5 870	... 21.6
Baltimore, cruiser	4.413	... 20
Philadelphia, cruiser	4.324	... 19
Charleston, cruiser	3,730	... 18
Raleigh, cruiser...	3.213	... 19
Boston, cruiser	3,000	... 15.6
Concord, cruiser	1,710	... 16.8
Yorktown, cruiser	1,710	... 16
Bennington, cruiser	1,710	... 17 5
Wheeling, cruiser	1,200	... 12
Petrel, gun-boat	892	... 11 8

There should now be no difficulty in getting these thirteen vessels to Manila before the arrival of Admiral Camara's Squadron.

Apparently the object of the Spanish Government in sending out Admiral Camara is simply a naval engagement. Cuba has evidently been abandoned to its fate. It is interesting to note that the arrival of Admiral Cerveras' squadron at Santiago, without encountering the combined American fleet, was regarded in Madrid as "a triumph of naval strategy." We are at a loss to see how the operation justifies such an epithet. If the Admiral had convoyed a flotilla of transports, carrying a military force for the defence of the island, he might justly have been congratulated on eluding the United States ships. But he had no such duty to perform, and the result of the step taken by him is that his squadron has been placed completely hors de combat. He seems to us to have sailed into a trap, where he will have nothing to do but to await destruction. If the topographical features at Santiago were such as to expose him to the danger of being sealed in, he certainly ought never to have entered the harbour; or, having entered, should not have remained there a day without making provision against an exploit like Lieutenant Hobson's. It is true that incidents such as that of the Merrimac do not belong to the category of every-day doings, and a commanding officer may possibly be excused for not reckoning them among ordinary contingencies. But the history of naval wars waged by Anglo-Saxon seamen can not have been familiar to Admiral Cervera, or he would have known better what to expect. He was said to be the most popular man in Spain when the news of his safe arrival at Santiago was received. Probably a different feeling is entertained towards him now.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The broad fact is that Spain has virtually denuded herself of all capacities for maritime resistance. One half of her fleet is hermetically sealed up in Santiago; the other is detained at Port Said for lack of coal, the Egyptian Government refusing to supply its needs, and, pending further orders, the ships remain there. Spain lies helpless and undefended. It would be easy now for the squadron of either Admiral Sampson or Commodore Schley to visit the whole Spanish coast from Cadiz to Barcelona. And that is a course Reuter tells us, on the authority of the New York Herald, the U.S. Government intend taking.

There is a vague sentiment of alarm lest Germany should be preparing some design with regard to the Philippines. She has assembled all her available ships in Manila Bay, and since the object of such a manœuvre is not immediately apparent, some people suspect that she contemplates taking over the Philippines or the Carolines from Spain should the latter succeed in recovering temporary possession of them. It may be presumed that Germany would gladly embrace any legitimate opportunity of acquiring a colony to attract and retain her surplus population; and it must be granted that her action at Kiaochou evinced remarkable ability and promptitude to take occasion by the hand. But the project now attributed to her is too large, and has too many issues, to be lightly entertained. We can not imagine that in sending Admiral Camara eastward the Spanish Government has any understanding with Germany. Manila was the only place where Spain saw any chance of striking a successful blow, and she made a gallant effort to strike that blow. There is nothing more in the matter, we imagine.

THE NEXT SESSION OF THE DIET.

It is stated by vernacular journals that the next session of the Diet will not be an extraordinary session. The Lower House having been dissolved on the 10th instant, it becomes necessary, according to the Constitution, that the Houses shall be called together again before November 10th. Now November used to be the month for opening the regular session. Owing to special reasons December was chosen in 1896 and 1897, but that was purely a matter of official convenience. November is perfectly suitable from a general point of view. It would obviously be absurd, however, to convene a special session in October, lasting fifteen or twenty days, and thus to prorogue the Houses until November or December. If there were any particular business to be done, the case would be different; but the revised Civil Code and the Supplementary Budget having been passed already, there is nothing to occupy the Diet's attention in a special session. Then there is another consideration which very probably weighs with the Government: namely, that if a special session were convened, it would be incumbent upon the Cabinet to present the Bill for increased taxation once more, and the House, as a matter of course, would again decline to to discuss it unless it were accompanied by the Budget of expenditures. To convene a special session, therefore, would be merely to precipitate another dissolution. The better plan is to make the regular annual session commence in November, when it will be possible to submit the Budget for 1899-1900 simultaneously with the Bill for increased taxation.

THE CHINESE CUSTOMS.

It is confidently asserted that the long-wished-for increase of salary has at length been granted to the officials of the Chinese Customs Service. The rumour could be more easily credited if the amount of the increase were not so large, but when we are told that "the pay of the indoor staff has been doubled and that of the outdoor staff proportionately raised according to degree," the magnitude of the change suggests doubts which are not dispelled by the conundrum-like terms of the announcement. To double the pay of one set of men and increase the pay of another set "proportionately" is to double the pay of the whole, if words have any meaning. The prolix ambiguity of the statement invests it with an air of considerable uncertainty. At any rate we can not suppose that the Chinese Government has been persuaded to adopt such a munificent line. Neither would it be fair, indeed. Even the most uncompromising complainants have never insisted that the whole loss resulting to the foreign employés from the appreciation of gold should be borne by the Chinese employers. However, the fact may probably be accepted that the currency grievance has received recognition. We shall know the details by and by. Meanwhile it is perhaps permissible to regard this incident as one of the first results of the very prudent stipulation recently made by Her Majesty's Government about the permanent direction of the Customs Service by a British subject so long as British commercial interests preponderate in China. Such a stipulation means a great more than the mere retention of the post of Inspector-General for a British subject. It means the continued organization of the service on a solid basis, and, with that assurance to strengthen him, Sir Robert Hart doubtless felt warranted in pressing for an act of justice which he would have insisted on long ago had not he apprehended that importunity might prove injurious to the general interests of the service. The Japanese Government has been fortunate in escaping this troublesome problem. Its attitude towards all interference in such matters is very different, we are aware, from that of the Chinese Authorities. It would never think of pledging itself to any permanent procedure in the case of its foreign employés. But there is no concealing the fact that the foreign employés of this country have suffered keenly from the appreciation of gold. There are men now in Japan's employ who, after 15 or 20 years' zealous service, find themselves receiving about one half of the salary—measured in gold—that they received when they first came to the East. Their ability to save money for returning to their own country is proportionately reduced, and since it is too late to think of striking out a new line, the vista before them must wear a dreary aspect. We presume that the same may be said in a less marked degree of foreigners who have adopted Far-Eastern commerce as a profession. Twenty years ago, the pay of a young clerk in a Yokohama merchant's office was something like £400 a year. To-day the same salary of 150 yen monthly represents only £185. However, in Japan's case the era of speculation and complaint is passed. Every one knows now exactly what the sterling value of his stipend will be next year or ten years hence. Things can not become worse. There is some comfort in the reflection.

DEMOCRATIC IDEAS.

We have always been accustomed to regard the Jiji Shimpo as the representative of Japanese "common sense." It habitually looks at every question from an unemotional, moderate point of view, and avoids extremes of theory as carefully as it eschews excesses of criticism. Of course its writings do not invariably suggest the perfection of moral equipoise, but the best of us has his moods, and on the whole if the columns of the Jiji reflect the mind of educated Japan, the nation's thoughts and impulses are remarkably sound, if we may venture to say so without seeming to arrogate any superiority of judgment. Is it then to be inferred that the curiously democratic doctrines now propounded by our contemporary represent a veritable tendency of public thought, or must we regard them merely as an idiosyncracy of the Jiji's editor? It has hitherto been a general belief that the instinct of aristocracy is firmly rooted in the morale of the Japanese people. Rank certainly claimed and received profound respect through all the eras of the Fujiwara, the Taira, the Minamoto, the Ashikaga, and the Tokugawa. It once fell to our lot to compile a list of the various official titles in the departments constituting the Bakufu Administration, and the result was 31 pages of foolscap, or about 930 names of offices. Every one of the occupants of these posts, whether he was a Haku, a Tayu, a Daisuke, a Dainagon, a Chunagon, a Shonagon, a Daigeki, or what not, had a tolerably emphatic conception of the respect due to him by the non-official classes, and had also a tolerably emphatic way of exacting that respect. Never was there a country where rank lived in a loftier atmosphere of self-esteem, or where deeper obeisance was paid to every mark of governmental authority. In no other country, too, has the distinction between patrician and plebeian impressed itself so strongly upon the language. Very careful study and most circumspect practice are necessary if a foreigner desires to avoid shocking rudenesses in speaking Japanese; above all if he desires to observe the various nice distinctions of phraseology applicable to the sayings and doings of personages in high places; and, as for the language used in official documents, it has as fine a flavour of de haut en bas as the proudest palate could desire. What could be more natural than that titles of nobility should exist in such a country? It has been sometimes stated that they did not exist in old times. But surely that is a complete misconception? Every feudal chieftain had his title of Kami, and though only one order of nobility was represented in official terminology, there was as wide a gulf between the titled and the non-titled sections of the nation as ever separated lords and commons in any Western society. Many of our readers doubtless remember the embarrassing interregnum between the fall of feudalism and the creation of new titles of nobility eighteen years afterwards. During that interval no means existed of verbally distinguishing a some-time Daimyo from an insignificant upstart. All the old landmarks had been swept away, and it seemed as though the most genuine sangre azur in the world was about to be washed white by a tide of radical innovations. The public were honestly pleased, we think, when Marquis Ito and his fellow-thinkers averted that catastrophe by advising the Emperor to create the "Five Orders" (Ko-ko-haku-shi-dan), and when the "immemorial" aristocrats, every one of whom had imperial blood in his veins, were once again lifted above the general level, their ranks being at the same time recruited and their place in public esteem elevated by a draft from the ablest men whom the vicissitudes of the Restoration had thrown to the surface. It is against these titles that the Jiji Shimpo, the well-balanced, sober-minded Jiji Shimpo, has been recording its protest for some time, and now records it with renewed vehemence. When the Emperor conferred the title of Count upon Mr. Itagaki Taisuke, the leader of the Liberal Party—it was just eleven years ago, if we remember rightly—the latter made a strenuous effort to decline the honour, and finally accepted it with a considerable show of genuine reluctance. The Jiji opines that he regards the title now very much as he would regard a dilapidated pair of boots! However, he can scarcely hope to get rid of it, and Count Okuma is in the same predicament. Surely these are strange sentiments to hear publicly enunciated in Japan? It is possible that the Jiji's objections do not extend to titles in general but only to titles granted in recognition of administrative or diplomatic ability. That distinction is not clearly set up, however, and indeed such a contention would be far more irrational than the condemnation of titles in toto. Besides the Jiji's ground seems to be that everything calculated to create barriers of rank between man and man is an abuse. The Jiji presses unbounded satisfaction at the fact that Japan has at length a Cabinet the members of which may be said to be without titles, and it urges that another step of reform should be taken by abolishing the names of offices as they now exist, and substituting the terminology of every-day business organizations. An example of the ideal method is furnished by the United States. The head of the Government in America is called "President," and so is the officer that supervises the affairs of a bank, or a railway, or any commercial or industrial enterprise. Instead, therefore, of using the terms Daijin (Minister), Jikan (Vice-Minister) and so on, the Jiji would use Tori-shimari-yaku, or Shihai-nin, or some other of the names commonly found in the vocabulary of business corporations. We gather that our contemporary's dominant object is to introduce a state of affairs in which officials shall recognise that they are servants of the public, instead of regarding themselves as a race of superior beings who may have condescensions towards laymen, but need not be tormented by any sense of duty. That condition has been realized in England, a country where special official titles are conspicuously absent, though their absence has nothing whatever to do with the spirit that animates officialdom. Perhaps one of the measures most conducive to such a desirable result in Japan would be to do as the Jiji suggests, so far as the names of officers are concernd. That is a point upon which we have no qualifications for expressing an opinion. But why abolish titles of nobility? Does our contemporary want Japan to be more democratic than England, where titles of nobility exist and are highly valued, or does it desire that Japanese officials should have a stronger sense of their duties towards the public than British officials have, or be more courteous in their dealings with laymen than British officials are? It appears to us that the general excellence of our contemporary's contention is somewhat spoiled by its sentimental radicalism in the matter of the nobility. However, the fact that such writing finds a prominent place in issue after issue of the leading Japanese journal is a very interesting sign of the times.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

"JAPANESE ART FOLIO."

The celebrated photographic artist, Mr. Ogawa, has published another of the beautiful pictorial albums which have contributed so much to his reputation. The new publication is called a "Japanese Art Folio." Mr. Shugio, the well known connoisseur is the editor, and the brief preface informs us that the object of the book is "to facilitate the study of Japanese art and to satisfy, in a modest way, the desire of many who can not enjoy the privilege of seeing the originals." Such an unpretentious description disarms criticism, and, indeed, we should not feel disposed under any circumstances to speak harshly of a work conceived so wisely. There is undoubtedly plenty of room for a book which will enable the general public to form a really intelligent conception of Japanese pictorial art. Picture galleries are happily unknown in this country—happily because Japanese pictures, in every age, have been printed as parts of a scheme of religious splendour or domestic decoration. To bring them together into a gallery would be to do violence to the large artistic sense that presided at their creation. But if the pictures are to be congratulated upon that fact, it does not operate so happily for the general public, since they are deprived of an opportunity offering in all Western capitals, the opportunity of examining master-pieces by great artists of the present and the past. If one calculates thoughtfully the number of persons among the foreign residents of Japan that have seen a genuine drawing by one of the art celebrities of this country, the resulting figure is startlingly small. That is probably the chief reason why such extremely divergent estimates exist as to the quality of Japanese pictorial art. The average individual speaks of it with contempt; the student finds in its features that elicit his enthusiastic admiration. If Messrs. Ogawa and Shugio, by reproducing a number of the really admirable pictures that lie hidden in temples, storehouses, and private collections, can provide materials which will help the average individual to make the acquaintance of real Japanese art, they will do something that deserves to be remembered. On the other hand, we can not congratulate them unreservedly upon the selections they have made for the first part of the "Art Folio." The volume opens with a chromo-xylograph from a picture by Shunsho. It is a very mediocre example of the Popular School's work, and even if it stood much higher in its class, the drawing of the extraordinary dog sitting in a begging posture at the lady's feet would mar the painting. We have, next, a somewhat trivial specimen from the great Sesshiu's brush—a specimen that scarcely recalls the magnificent achievements of the Classical School at the period of the second great Chinese renaisoance. Still this picture is better in its limited way than No. 3, which is introduced as "one of Motonobu's master-pieces." It does not deserve to be thus described, for, though forceful and broad in treatment, it shows some of the worst mannerisms of the Chinese School,—painfully accentuated outlines, entirely untrue to nature, and water flowing in two directions at the same time. It has, indeed, the redeeming feature of being full of poetry, but justice is not done to the great Kano master when we are asked to judge him by this work. Korin's "Daruma" (Plate IV.) deserves the prominence given to it, if the object is to display the class of painting in which this most original and daring master least distinguished himself. Were our judgment of Korin based on the extravagant puppets that he gravely offered to the people of his time as lofty conceptions of mythological beings, we should merely have to lament that such power of line as even these burlesques display were prostituted to such purposes. But when we come to No. V., an exquisite example of the delicate, refined, and harmonious work of Hoitsu, the founder of the revived Korin academy, we remember what that academy really was. Scarcely less beautiful is No. VI., from the brush of Kiitsu, a worthy follower of Hoitsu. We sincerely welcome the appearance of this Folio, and look forward with much pleasure to its successors. Mr. Ogawa's part of the work is beyond praise, and we may be permitted to hope that since he has embarked upon this most serviceable enterprise, he will endeavour to choose really representative pictures, for the series of volumes will certainly have a large influence in forming the public's estimate of Japanese pictorial art.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE CABINET.

June 24th.

RUMOURS of a change of Ministry are current. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun is most circumstantial in its assertions on the subject. It describes visits paid by Count INOUYE, Viscount KATSURA, Baron SUYEMATSU, and Baron ITO to Marquis YAMAGATA, and speaks of a conference lasting eight or nine hours at the Palace, when Marquis YAMAGATA and Count INOUYE were questioned by HIS MAJESTY about the political situation. Other movements and discussions are reported to have taken place, but we need not speak of them in detail. They may be summed up in the brief statement that the Choshiu statesmen (Marquis YAMAGATA, Count INOUYE, and Viscount KATSURA), together with Barons SUYEMATSU and ITO, are chiefly devoting themselves to dealing with the present crisis. According to the Nichi Nichi, Marquis ITO'S first idea was to form a political party in opposition to the Kensei-to, but he experienced difficulties which led him to conclude that only by resigning his office and titles could he hope for success in such an undertaking. The question then arose—indeed our contemporary hints that it presented itself vividly to Marquis ITO from the outset—whether the EMPEROR should not be advised to entrust Counts OKUMA and ITAGAKI with the task of forming a new Cabinet. That course, however, was not universally approved, and it was suggested as more advisable that Marquis YAMAGATA should form a ministry. Everything must depend, however, upon the views taken by the EMPEROR himself, and, despite the long conferences that have taken place, nothing has yet transpired as to HIS MAJESTY'S ultimate opinion. Meanwhile, the Nichi Nichi alleges that Marquis ITO has tendered his resignation, not merely of his office as Prime Minister, but also of his titles and Grand Order of Merit. Our contemporary publishes the text of the resignation :—

> With profound reverence Your Majesty's servant Ito Hirobumi ventures to submit that, having been the recipient of the Imperial favour, and having been graciously entrusted again and again with important offices, he has endeavoured zealously to discharge these duties; but he now finds, to his profound humiliation, that, owing to his defective abilities, he has failed to carry out his intention. To cling to empty power and thus constitute an impediment to the Imperial purpose would be to obstruct Your Majesty's views. Most humbly, therefore, Your Majesty's servant tenders his resignation of office, and further prays to be permitted to resign his Order of Merit and title of Marquis. He earnestly entreats that Your Majesty will graciously condescend to grant his prayer and accept his resignation. With the deepest obeisance, etc. (Dated) June 25th, 1898.

There is no reason to doubt the substantial accuracy of the above facts, so far, at any rate, as they refer to Marquis ITO'S resignation and to the uncertainty between an OKUMA-ITAGAKI Cabinet and YAMAGATA Ministry. In short, the main problem now awaiting solution is whether the SOVEREIGN will at once endorse the principle of party cabinets, or whether another attempt will be made to work on the basis of an independent ministry. Marquis ITO is understood to have definitely made up his mind that the time for party cabinets has come, and that to endeavour to ignore the fact would merely create needless friction between the Administration and the Legislature, and impede national progress. His Excellency has advised the EMPEROR in that sense, and, as an inevitable corollary, has laid before HIS MAJESTY the desirability of entrusting to Count OKUMA and Count ITAGAKI the task of forming a Cabinet. It would appear, however, that the EMPEROR has not pronounced any final decision. HIS MAJESTY probably wishes to be informed as to the ability and willingness of the two Counts to undertake the responsibility. The newly-organized Constitutional Party is a powerful body, and that it will command an over-whelming majority in the next House of Representatives can not be questioned. But, however rich it may be in politicians, it is eminently poor in men of administrative experience. If Count OKUMA and Count ITAGAKI be excepted, the Party does not possess any member who has ever held a portfolio. We have often said that an essential preliminary to the inauguration of party cabinets would be a split in the camp of the Meiji Statesman, and the affiliation of one section of its occupants to each of the political parties. The reason for entertaining such a view was that since the duties of the Administration had been discharged solely by the Meiji Statesmen and their followers during the past thirty years, they possessed a monopoly of the executive experience without which the government of a country can not be conducted. That such a view was correct, the facts of the present situation demonstrate. Counts ITAGAKI and OKUMA would unhesitatingly accept the task of forming a Ministry if they could command the assistance of experienced administrators to preside over the various Departments of State. In short, they are obliged to appeal to the Meiji statesmen, and the latter, in turn, know that to entertain the appeal is to acknowledge the principle of party Cabinets. How many of them are prepared to accept that principle and how many are determined to reject it? This is a question of the most profound interest. The incidents of the keen struggle between party politicians and the so-called "Clan Statesmen" have not for an instant obscured the broad fact that Japan has been splendidly governed during the Meiji era; that her destinies have been directed by a group of brilliant administrators to whom she owes not merely her independence but also one of the most substantial national and international successes ever achieved by any country under cognate circumstances; and that, if judged by their administrative record only, the Meiji statesmen deserve, not to be driven from office by a mob of untried agitators, but to be confirmed in the life-long tenure of power. The struggle, however, does not rage about records or achievements. It is a fight for a principle. From the moment when the Parliamentary system was introduced in Japan, party cabinets became an inevitable result, and the immense credit that would otherwise have accrued to the Meiji statesmen has been marred by the spectacle of their apparent opposition to an issue which their own act had rendered unavoidable. In foreign eyes no greater misfortune could overtake Japan than the annihilation of the Meiji statesmen by this wave of political progress. The country can not possibly do without them. Marquis Ito, as we have said, fully recognises that the time has come for party Cabinets, Will he, then, cooperate with Count OKUMA and ITAGAKI to render the principle a practical possibility? It would seem to be his duty to do so, and at this moment of writing things tend in that direction. Counts OKUMA and ITAGAKI know that they can not hope to form a successful Cabinet without the cooperation of some of the Meiji statesmen, and it is understood that they have asked Marquis ITO to assist them. Should that arrangement be effected, the office of Premier would be taken by Count ITAGAKI, that of Finance by Count OKUMA, and that of Foreign Affairs by Marquis ITO. On the other hand, should Marquis ITO find it impossible to agree with the two Counts, the latter will probably have recourse to Count MATSUKATA, who is now on his way to Tokyo, and the result would be Count ITAGAKI Premier, Count MATSUKATA Finance, and Count OKUMA Foreign Affairs. Meanwhile, a tolerably strong group of officials advocate another attempt to maintain the principle of Imperial cabinets, their programme being that Marquis YAMAGATA should become Premier. As to the probable portfolio-holders in the event of the adoption of the latter plan, we are not in a position to speak. Nor does it seem necessary to discuss the contingency, for at present everything points to the triumph of the party-cabinet principle. Count INOUYE'S proclivities would be of great importance were he disposed to take an active line, but we believe that he will return to the life of political seclusion which he was with difficulty induced to abandon a few months ago in deference to the wishes and needs of his old friend, Marquis ITO. It remains to add that if Marquis ITO does not lend his assistance to Counts OKUMA and ITAGAKI, there is confident talk of his resigning his title and devoting himself to the organization and education of a political party. We do not anticipate that result.

There can not be much room for doubt as to the issue most conducive to the nation's interests. A Cabinet including Marquis ITO, Count OKUMA, and Count

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

ITAGAKI, and supported by the Liberals and Progressists in combination, would mean not merely the end of the political struggles now dissipating the nation's energies, but also the establishment of the first really solid ministry enjoyed by the country since the opening of the Diet in 1890. Japan has no time to waste over these dissensions. They check her progress and lead the Powers to form a contemptuous estimate of her condition. She can not possibly get on without foreign capital; she can not procure foreign capital until she adopts some definite line of financial policy; and she can not adopt any definite line of financial policy until the Cabinet has the support of a majority in the House of Representatives. In the field of foreign affairs, too, Marquis ITO'S assumption of the portfolio suggested for him in the OKUMA-ITAGAKI cabinet would be a most happy event. Japan has no statesman better qualified than Marquis ITO to manage the various complicated issues connected with the operation of the Revised Treaties. He would command the entire confidence not only of the Foreign Powers but also of the foreign residents.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

June 26th.

IT will be readily conjectured that all kinds of rumours are circulated with regard to the political situation. Every incident, however insignificant, is recounted sententiously and made the basis of surmise or prediction, and every movement of the statesmen in office or the leading politicians in opposition furnishes food for inference. The National Unionists and their most prominent figure, Viscount TAKASHIMA, are much en evidence; not because they show any signs of special activity, or because they are strong enough to be important, but because the public regards them as the garrison of the last citadel occupied by the so-called "clan statesmen," and concludes that if the principle of independent Cabinets has any remaining vitality, they alone can contrive its effective revival. We could easily fill one or two columns with stories from vernacular journals or news-agencies, but we presume that what our readers desire to hear is the issue of all these complications, not the details of their progress. Thus far, then, the decision arrived at is, we believe, that Marquis ITO will not take any post in the new Cabinet; that Count OKUMA will be Premier and Count ITAGAKI Minister of State for Home Affairs; that Marquis SAIGO will retain the portfolio of the Navy, and Viscount KATSURA that of War, and that, with these two exceptions, all the members of the present Cabinet will retire. Comment has already been made in these columns on the chief difficulty that besets the party politicians in their attempts to form a Cabinet. They may find among their own leaders men willing to try the experiment of presiding over Departments of State, but they have no assurance of finding the staffs of the Departments willing to work with the new presidents. The champions of party cabinets, in their anxiety to prove that without the practical recognition of the principle they advocate the smooth conduct of State affairs is impossible, have spoken and written in a manner reflecting very injuriously on the reputation of the whole body of officialdom, and their words could not fail to rouse more or less resentment among the men that constitute the vertebra of the Administration, namely, the Vice-Ministers, the Heads of Bureaux, and the Secretariat in general. All that large class of able officials, specially trained for their various functions and taught by invaluable experience, can not but feel strongly attached to the leaders under whom they have served for years—men whom they have learned to respect and trust—and can not but be indignant that the really remarkable achievements of Japanese officialdom during the Meiji era should now be disparaged and even sneered at by politicians who have no apparent qualifications to be critical. The necessity of placating these natural sentiments is probably most imperative in the cases of the Military, Naval, and Financial Departments, where the duties devolving on the Heads of Bureaux and their principal assistants are of such a nature that they could not be undertaken by untrained persons. Unless, therefore, the portfolios of these Departments can be excluded from the operation of the "party system," or held by men retaining their touch with the Meiji statesmen, it becomes exceedingly difficult for the leaders of the Constitutional Party to form a Cabinet. The problem would be solved, of course, if Marquis ITO remained a member of the Cabinet, for his presence ensures the allegiance of all the junior officials. That solution not being attainable, however, recourse has been had to the alternative of leaving the port folios of War and the Navy in the hands of their present holders, with the understanding that these two Departments shall be considered to be beyond the range of party politics. As for the Department of Finance, unless it be taken by Count OKUMA, in conjunction with the post of Premier, no prospect of finding a satisfactory successor to Count INOUYE is yet in sight. We explained in our last that in the event of Marquis ITO'S continuing in the Cabinet, Count OKUMA would probably go to the Finance Department, Count ITAGAKI becoming Premier; and that the alternative was Count OKUMA at the Foreign Office and Count MATSUKATA at the Finance Department. But our latest information is that Count MATSUKATA will not be in the Ministry. Probably, therefore, Count OKUMA will combine the control of Finance with the duties of Premier. There remains one other Department of the highest importance—the Foreign Office. No arrangement could be more appropriate than Marquis ITO'S presence there at this juncture, when so many intricate and novel matters have to be arranged in connexion with Treaty Revision. But since that is no longer to be hoped for, people turn to Baron ITO MIYOJI as the most probable candidate. Count ITAGAKI and the Liberals in general would certainly approve warmly of Baron ITO'S appointment, nor would any objection be raised by Count OKUMA, we imagine. But Baron ITO is not a favorite with the old Shimpo-to, and their opposition may mar his chances. There is talk even of Mr. MATSUDA MASAHISA as a more suitable candidate. The Foreign Powers would be much surprised, however, were a totally untried and inexperienced politician put into such a position, and we may be allowed to hope that nothing so rash will be attempted. Reference may be made in conclusion to a supposition which seems to be generally entertained, namely, that, pending the organization of the new Cabinet, Count KURODA will be appointed Premier pro tem. No such arrangement is now in contemplation, we understand. The question of the Army and the Navy having been solved, there will probably be very little delay in transferring the administration to Counts OKUMA and ITAGAKI.

NEW FORMOSAN ADMINISTRATION.

MERE perusal of the law just issued for reorganizing the Formosan administration will probably fail to convey to our readers any clear idea of the new system and of its departures from the old. A word of explanation may, therefore, be useful.

Ordinary maps convey the impression that the island of Formosa is divided into approximately equal halves by ranges of mountains running from north to south. That is a very inadequate conception. The fact is that nearly five-sixths of the whole island are mountainous. The hill districts occupy the eastern section. They have been little explored and are inhabited by autochthonous tribes, commonly spoken of as "savages," but in reality people to whom such an epithet is not properly applicable. Westward of the hills,—that is to say, between the hills and the Gulf of Formosa—lies a strip of country, varying in width from 25 miles to 2 or 3, which is virtually free from mountains, especially along the coast. The whole of this western strip is peopled by Chinese immigrants. But in order to understand the administrative problem it is necessary to note another feature; namely, that between the mountainous district and the coastward plains there is a central belt of country, more or less hilly, inhabited by so-called "rebels"; that is to say, Chinese immigrants who live by marauding and refuse to ackowledge the control of any laws. The aborigines are not "rebels." They appear to be quiet inoffensive folk. But they consider themselves the just owners of the districts they inhabit, and they resent anything like high-handed encroachment. Thus it happens that whereas, in the southern part of the island, where nothing has yet tempted industrial or agricultural incursions into the highlands, the aborigines create no disturbance nor give any trouble whatever, in the northern part the process of exploiting the camphor forests has led the Chinese immigrants to trespass upon the territory of the aborigines, and the latter have learned to retaliate by organizing the now notorious head-hunting raids. The immigrants in the western plains and the autocthons in the eastern mountains have absolutely nothing in common. Any attempt to govern them by the same laws or to bring them under the same administrative control must end in signal failure. When China ruled the island, it was her habit to leave the aborigines severely alone. A cordon of military posts was established throughout the belt of country lying at the base of the hills, and beyond that cordon the eastern tribes were not allowed to penetrate westward. The Japanese pursued a different method. They abolished the outposts, and adopted, theoretically at any rate, the principle that the aborgines need not be imprisoned or kept at arms' lengths. But they did not recognise and apparently have not yet recognised, the importance of completely differentiating the administrative systems applied to the autocthons of the hills and the immigrants of the plains, respectively. Their first plan was to divide the whole of the lowlands into six "prefectures" (ken) and the highlands into two "administrations" (cho), the Pescadores forming a third administration. Subordinate to the prefectural governments were 78 executive offices (bemmu-sho), four of which were in the Pescadores, and immediately subordinate to the administrations were 12 "colonization offices" (bukon-sho). The administrations in turn being responsible to the prefectures, it will be seen that no genuine division existed between the system applied to the autocthons and that applied to the immigrants. Still, considerable freedem of action, and even of initiative, seems to have been left to the colonisation offices, and, on the whole, the methods were successful. As for the belt of territory inhabited by the Chinese rebels, its administration was conducted similarly to that of the lowlands, the only difference being that, as a matter of course, considerable numbers of soldiers, police, and gendarmes were stationed in the former.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The principal change effected by the new organization is a reduction of the number of prefectures from six to three, and of the number of executive offices from 78 to probably 40. We say "probably," for the exact figure does not appear to be yet fixed. It is to be determined by the Governor-General, though, strange to say, the total establishment of officials for service in these offices is limited to 307. In short, the Governor-General is invested with power to determine how many executive offices there shall be, but has only a certain complement of officials to distribute among them. The "administrations" (cho) remain as before—one in the Pescadores and two in the highlands of the main island. But the highland administrations cease to be responsible to the prefectures, and pass under the direct control of the Civil Department in the Governor-General's Office. We find no trace of the colonization offices (bukon-sho) in the new system. Yet it is scarcely conceivable that they should have been abolished altogether. We infer, rather, that they remain as before, and are subordinate to the "administrations." In view of the fact that the latter are now removed from the purview of the prefectural governors, and brought into direct relation with the Civil Department, it would seem that there has been some idea of radically differentiating the governments of the autocthons and the immigrants. But it is the opinion, we believe, of publicists most intimately acquainted with the island's condition, that an entirely separate department ought to be instituted for managing business connected with the autocthons and with forestry. The importance of establishing good relations with the former is paramount. Until they are brought within the pale of civilized law and order, Japan can not claim to be administering Formosa, though she governs it. As for the forests, they are one of the chief sources of Formosa's apparent wealth. In the production of tea and sugar the country has powerful rivals, but as a camphor-producing district it is preeminent. At present no attempt is made to protect the industry, still less develop it. The cutting of camphor trees is not supervised, nor is any provision made for their replanting. It would seem to be a matter of obvious expediency that the direction of business connected with the highlands should be entrusted to a separate department in the Governor-General's Office. Certainly the task is large enough to engross the attention and occupy the energies of a whole department, and far too large to be abandoned to the control of officials already charged with the supervision of prefectural and executive business. The diminution in the numbers of prefectures and offices is an excellent reform; but it would appear to outsiders that the drafters of the new scheme, bent solely upon effecting reductions, overlooked an increase which would have been eminently useful.

Passing from these general features of the new organization, we find several points that invite comment. A very wise change has been effected in putting the civil police under the direct control of the executive offices, but we observe with surprise that no reference is made to special qualifications for policemen. Nothing, surely, could be more essential than that Japanese police serving in Formosa should acquire the language of the country with all possible expedition. It is known that many, perhaps a majority, of the executive mistakes hitherto committed in Formosa by the Japanese have been due to the difficulty of communicating with the people. If the task devolving upon Japan in Formosa had to be undertaken by England, the first regulation issued would be one requiring every British policeman and every British official serving in the island to acquire a working knowledge of the language. The new system provides that, after two years' service, civil officials shall receive an increase of salary amounting to 5 per cent., and the police an increase of 8½ per cent. Apparently that is unconditional. We should have expected that it would be conditional on passing an examination in the language. Further, the whole arrangement as to salaries seems to us unwise. Apparently the British system of extra pay for foreign service has been followed. Thus, while the regular salary of a civil official remains the same as it is in Japan proper, he receive a special allowance amounting to 30 per cent. We venture to think that the addition should be made to the salary itself, and that it ought to be much larger, so as to attract really competent men by rendering the Formosan service popular not merely for the sake of the emoluments it offers to active officials, but also for the sake of the pensions attached, which depend, of course, upon the nominal salary and are not affected by the extra allowances. And in connexion with finance it is to be noted that the Chief Treasurer, instead of being the independent head of a department, as heretofore, is now made subordinate to the Head of the Civil Department in the Governor-General's Office. A corresponding arrangement in a British colony would be the subordination of the Auditor-General to the Colonial Secretary, and the consequent disappearance of the wholesome check which the former official, in his independent position, is expected to exercise upon administrative expenditures. Altogether there is, in our opinion, an evident failure to appreciate the importance of getting really good men to serve in Formosa, and setting a higher standard of responsibility. The Councillor-in-Chief, for example, if he is to be of any genuine use in such a post, and if his advice is to carry any weight, should be an official of rank and competence with colonial experience. The present holder of the position does not appear to satisfy those conditions. His practical knowledge seems to have been acquired entirely in the Legislative Bureau, and we imagine that he has never visited a colony in his life.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

On the whole, imposing as this new system looks upon paper, we see little hope that it will bear much fruit in practice. The reduction of the number of prefectures and executive offices, and the placing of the civil police under the control of the latter, are useful reforms, but they stand in an insignificant ratio to the two great desiderata which no attempt has been made to secure, namely, the organization of a really competent civil service, and the satisfactory management of the affairs of forestry and the aborigines.

THE SPANISH FIASCO.

THE latest incident in the Hispano-American war is a veritable fiasco. Admiral CAMARA'S squadron lies at Port Said, unable to proceed because the Egyptian Government has refused permission for the ship to coal there. Did any one ever suppose that the Egyptian Government would grant such permission? The possibility of so much complaisance never presented itself to us. In common, we imagine, with all onlookers at this end, we conceived that the transports accompanying the squadron were laden with coal, so that Admiral CAMARA would be entirely independent of local coal supplies throughout his trip eastward. The question whether coal can be considered as contraband of war admits of no general answer. Coal belongs to the class of articles which are of indiscriminate use in peace and in war, and its contraband or non-contraband character must depend on the circumstances of the moment. But surely when a State has declared strict neutrality, it can not possibly permit a belligerent squadron to enter its ports and obtain coal there for the definite purpose of proceeding to attack the fleet of the other belligerent? It appears to us—and it must so appear to every one, we imagine—that had Admiral CAMARA been allowed to coal at Port Said, he might just as well have been allowed to take in arms and ammunition, if he found it convenient to do so. That part of the affair seems plain beyond all possibility of discussion. The perplexing feature is the action of the Spanish Authorities. They evidently proceeded upon the assumption that England would be so unmindful of her duties of neutrality as to materially assist the progress of CAMARA'S squadron eastward. It can not be imagined for an instant that the coal problem did not present itself to the mind of the Government in Madrid. It presented itself to the mind of the veriest outsider. If the responsible Spanish statesmen did not think of it, they must have been in a condition bordering upon dementia; and if, duly thinking of it, they nevertheless sent CAMARA'S squadron to Port Said on the off chance that he might receive more than benevolently neutral treatment at the hands of the British Government, they behaved with very singular recklessness. There will be a great many harsh criticisms of Spain's procedure in this instance. We foresee that even the sincerity of her purpose in dispatching CAMARA'S squadron will be doubted. There is, of course, no room for any scepticism of that kind. We shall probably be nearer the truth if we say that the Spanish Government has acted either with childish improvidence and limitless folly or with mature deliberation and profound sagacity. Spain's position is quite hopeless. Admiral CERVERA'S squadron might as well be non-existent: it is hermetically sealed in Santiago. Admiral CAMARA'S squadron, even though it succeeded in reaching the scene of operations in the Pacific, could not hope to hold its own against the fleet of thirteen American ships which it would find awaiting it at Manila. Cuba lies at America's mercy. The Philippines are virtually lost. What remains then for Spain except to surrender? One thing remains, and that is to enlist the active sympathies of the European continental Powers in her favour. She has their passive sympathies. There can be no doubt that Russia, France and Germany are with her, and would most gladly intervene in her behalf if some practicable opportunity of doing so presented itself. It is conceivable that she looks to furnish such an opportunity by means of the Port Said incident. A theory exists in Europe that the Suez Canal should be regarded as an ocean highway, open to all the ships of the world under all circumstances. When we speak of an open highway, we mean a road where people can pass at all times unobstructed, with freedom to obtain shelter, provisions, and other necessaries of travel. If one of the ordinary means of locomotion on such a road were steam trams, it would certainly be considered a part of the programme that supplies of coal should be obtainable en route. By parity of reasoning, if the Suez Canal and the territory forming its banks were absolutely neutral—that is to say, if their neutrality did not depend upon the policy of any one Power but was guaranteed by all alike—there might be some ground to maintain that the ships of a belligerent have just as much right to obtain supplies of coal during their passage of the Canal as the ships of a non-belligerent. Of course England would never agree to such a doctrine. She is mistress of Egypt—for the present at all events—and her control of the Suez Canal gives her an enormous advantage which she is not so infatuated as to surrender. But England is the only European Power that entertains English views on that subject, and this Port Said incident constitutes an object lesson which will bring the difference of opinion into startling prominence. Russia, Germany and France are now assured that if they went to war with either China or Japan, England standing neutral, they would be unable to send reinforcements, either naval or military, through the Suez Canal, unless they sent, at the same time, a special fleet of colliers, and would have to fall back upon the interminable route viâ the Cape of Good Hope. Will Russia, Germany and France be content that Great Britain's occupation of Egypt should involve such a result, or will they refuse to accept the situation? If Spain, by despatching CAMARA to Port Said, succeeds in dragging that question into the realm of active politics, she may presently find herself supported by powerful allies. Perhaps the destination of the Cadiz Squadron is not belligerent, but diplomatic.

Of course this action on England's part will be bitterly resented by Spain and correspondingly applauded by the United States. From a purely strategical point of view it is a procedure not more injurious to the former Power than helpful to the latter; for since Spain's only chance of temporarily retrieving her shattered fortunes lay in getting CAMARA'S squadron to Manila before DEWEY could be reinforced from the Pacific coast, the detention of CAMARA at Port Said may be said to inflict a final blow on the Spanish cause. We can not pretend to regret the fact since our sympathies are entirely with America, much as we admire Spain's indomitable gallantry and tenacity of purpose. But it will not be right to construe the incident as in any sense a departure from the strict duties of neutrality. Assuming the Suez Canal to be under British control—an assumption which England will not suffer to be questioned—, it is plain that to allow CAMARA'S squadron to coal at Port Said would have been a distinct evidence of partiality, and as such, would have justly invited protest from America's side.

N.Y.K. STEAMER WRECKED.

A despatch dated the 26th ult., from Hakodate, reports that the N.Y.K.'s steamer Nagoya Maru ran on an unseen rock near Hachinohe, Awomori Prefecture. A heavy fog prevailed at the time. The steamer was nearly filled with water, terrible damage was done, and the ship must become a total wreck. The crew was safely landed. The ship struck about 7 p.m. on Saturday. A large hole was made in her and water poured in so rapidly that all hope of saving her had to be abandoned. The Nagoya Maru was a steamer of 2,836 tons, and was under the command of Captain P. Cottier.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MR. FREDERIC YATES' PORTRAITS.

Mr. Frederic Yates, who has been in Yokohama for some months and has evidently worked with remarkable assiduity, gave an exhibition of his portraits in the Masonic Hall on the 29th ultimo. All the pictures are capital likenesses, and some present artistic features of a very high order. Perhaps the best are those of Mr. Justice Wilkinson, Mr. N. P. Kingdon, and Miss Mabel Sharp, but there is not much interval between these really admirable achievements and the portraits of Dr. Eldridge, Mrs. Eldridge, Miss Eldridge, Miss F. Eldridge, Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Hellyer, Miss Wheeler, and Miss Alice Walter. A profile picture of Mrs. Read is very beautiful as a picture, but does not strike us as a perfect likeness. The point of view, however, may be responsible. Mr. Yates has been so manifestly happy in other cases that one hesitates to question the fidelity of his work in any instance. He is faithful before everything, his first care being to fix the likeness. Even in painting ladies he makes no sacrifices for the sake of idealization—rare courage on the part of a portrait-painter. We note with some surprise that the Japanese have not taken advantage of such an unique opportunity as his presence offers. There are no pictures of the statesmen and other celebrities of the Meiji era, and as Mr. Yates is the only really competent painter of portraits that has visited Japan, it is surely a pity that his services are not enlisted.

JAPANESE FACTS AND COMMENTS.

The Yorozu, discussing the amalgamation of the Liberals and Progressists, says this virtually necessitates the combination of the Satsuma with the Choshiu coterie, inasmuch as the life of these cliques is now seriously threatened. A scheme is under contemplation by the government officials with a view to attaining that end, and Counts Matsukata and Kabayama are reported to have determined to return to Tokyo to negotiate the matter.

According to the Tokyo Shimbun a party of politicians attached to the Liberals and Progressists held a meeting on the 20th instant ■ the Kaikwatei Restaurant at Sakana-machi, Tokyo, with a view to organise a social club. A committee of five was elected to draft the regulations, and these were submitted to another conference held on the 23rd. It was decided that members of the Club should be limited to non-members of Parliament. Among the Directors are Messrs. Yamada Itaro, Yenjoji Kiyoshi, Watanabe Kanjuro, Morimoto Shun, Kawamura Akira, and Sase Tetsuyu. A motion was adopted that a representation be forwarded to the Head Office of the Constitutional Party in egard ■ the question of increased taxation.

The Yorozu claims to have interviewed Prince Konoye, and represents him as saying at the recent union of political parties s worthy of admiration. The amalgamaon, however, was so wonderfully easy that it wakens in him anxiety as ■ the possibility of n equally easy dissolution. Though he sincerely approves the measure his present situaon does not allow him to enlist himself as a ember and he would in any circumstances ithhold himself from recklessly joining until a new Party takes a little more definite ape. He thinks the clan system of Governent is losing strength, and may be expected annihilate itself naturally before long. A tle perseverance on the part of the popular rties will secure to them the reins of government without recourse to any serious agitation. Without the genius of Bismarck, even Marquis Ito and Count Inouye will be unable to preserve the "Isolation" Cabinet for any considerable time. Forbearance ■ this juncture should be the motto of every popular party.

One of the Shogyo's staff who lately returned from Hokkaido makes the following remarks:—The misery in the North is beyond discription. Last year's failure in fishing was followed by another still worse this year. The output of herrings for the current year, though not precisely ascertained, is estimated not to exceed 500,000 koku, or about half the amount realized in ordinary years. About 300,000 koku out of this amount are manufactured into fertilizers. The appreciation of rice and the stringency of the money market has almost crippled the industry, in which most of the northern inhabitants are engaged. Fishermen are thus on the verge of bankruptcy "The legal advocates and bailiffs," naively adds the Shogyo, "alone are reported to enjoy the utmost prosperity."

The naval armament expansion scheme has entered upon its third stage remarks the Hochi. Some of the new vessels are already on their way to Japan, while others are in process of construction. A few, however, remain for which the period of completion is not yet determined. The vessels constructed in the second term of the original programme numbered 20, inclusive of 3 first class torpedo boats. Those now in course of construction are 12 in number, and may be tabulated as follows:—

Name of Vessel.	Classification.	Displacement Tons.	Speed Nautical Miles.
Asama	1st class cruiser	9,855	22
Takasago	2nd class "	4,227	23
Kasagi	" "	4,978	23
Asahi	1st class battleship	15,443	18
Hatsuse	" "	15,240	18
Shikishima	" "	15,008	18
Tokiwa	" "	9,855	22
Yakumo	" "	9,800	22
Asuma	" "	9,456	22
Chihaya	Despatch vessel	1,250	21
Izumo	1st class cruiser	9,906	22
Chitose	2nd "	4,336	23

The following comparative table shows the result of investigations in May this year and in December last, as to deposits received, and loans issued, by various leading banks:—

	December, 1897. Yen.	May, 1898 Yen.	Increase or decrease. Yen.
1st National Bank—
Deposits ...	4,389,308	4,482,665	+ 23,357
Loans	5,534,452	6,029,799	+495,347
3rd National Bank—
Deposits ...	4,100,471	4,881,362	+780,891
Loans	5,580,520	5,546,059	— 40,463
15th National Bank—
Deposits ...	3,825,556	4,677,005	+851,446
Loans	6,274,056	6,340,080	—433,976
27th National Bank—
Deposits ...	975,228	942,193	— 33,046
Loans	1,631,485	1,593,139	— 38,346
100th National Bank—
Deposits ...	3,575,599	3,244,262	—331,337
Loans	3,527,255	3,010,807	—516,448
Mitsui Bank—
Deposits ...	10,539,262	10,655,698	+116,436
Loans	6,105,457	5,233,643	—871,814
Mitsubishi Bank—
Deposits ...	5,270,956	6,034,829	+762,873
Loans	4,926,908	5,027,524	+100,616
Yasuda Bank—
Deposits ...	4,778,741	4,899,662	+120,921
Loans	3,971,556	4,728,660	+757,104
Imperial Bank—
Deposits ...	4,509,050	5,060,320	+551,270
Loans	6,099,441	7,576,611	+147,717
Tokai Bank—
Deposits ...	1,658,161	2,492,222	—165,939
Loans	2,275,040	2,354,736	+ 79,696

The figures on the whole show a tendency to increase on the side of loans, the deposits hardly coming up to the amount estimated. The Tokyo Allied Banks' reports indicates the gross amount of deposits last December to have been 56,404,036 yen, as against 58,413,540 yen for May this year, an increase of over two millions yen. Enhanced interest, however, has failed to achieve the result anticipated, the fact being simply attributed to scarcity of funds among the people.

An Imperial Ordinance for Formosa, issued on the 20th instant, refers ■ the establishment of a Medical Department in the Governor-General's Office. The personnel of this Department consists of a Director, a Chief Medical Adviser, Physicians, a Chief Pharmacist, Clerks, and others, who are to be engaged in the treatment of patients and in the preparation of medicine. Another ordinance relates to the organisation of a Training Institute for the benefit of police and prison officers. The object of this institution is to impart practical instruction necessary for the discharge of the functions of police inspectors, constables, prison clerks and jailers. The instructors are to be seven in number, two of them being of sonin and five of hannin rank. A third ordinance embodies the revised rates of salaries for Formosan officials. According to the reformed schedule, the Governor-General of Formosa is to receive an annual salary of 6,000 yen, the President of the Civil Administration from 4,000 to 4,500 yen, a Chief Councillor and a chokunin Commissioner from 3,000 to 3,500 yen. The annual allowances for local Governors are fixed at from 3,000 to 4,000 yen, and those for the Superintendents of local offices and Prefectural Secretaries and Chief Police Inspectors from 1,000 to 1,800 yen. The Directors of Police Offices are paid at rates varying from 800 to 1,800 yen.

THE CONSTITUTIONALISTS' MANIFESTO.

We published in our last issue a translation of the new Constitutional Party Platform (Kōrei), but erroneously called it the Party's Manifesto (Sengen). The latter runs as follows:—

Nearly ten years have elapsed since the promulgation of the Constitution and the opening of the Diet, and during that time there have been five dissolutions of the House of Representatives. The reality of constitutional government has not been attained, neither has the influence of political parties been extended. Thus the abuses of clan cabinets are confirmed, with the result that harmony between the Government and the people is impaired and the business of State is impeded, to the profound regret of all patriotic persons. Considering the state of affairs at home and abroad, we have determined to dissolve our two parties, the Liberals and the Progressists, to the end that, by uniting all those that entertain similar views, we may form one great party, and make a new effort to carry the principle of constitutional government into perfect practice.

PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE.

The following items will be of interest to our readers:—

Lieutenant Niblack's successor at the United States Legation, Germany, is Commander Barber, late naval attaché in Tokyo, who was lately placed on the retired list for reasons of health, and has since been residing in Europe. Commander Barber, who is expected to arrive in Berlin in a few days, is a particularly good man for the place, his knowledge of torpedoes and of ordnance in general being particularly thorough.

ADMIRAL DEWEY'S GENEALOGY.

Thomas Dewey, born in Sandwich, Kent county, England; came to America in 1663; first settler, Windsor, Conn., and locally known as "The Settler."

Jeremiah Dewey, born in Windsor, Conn., 1704, served in Continental army throughout Revolution; moved to Hanover, N. H.

Jeremiah Dewey, born in Hanover, N. H., about 1733.

Simeon Dewey, born near Hanover, N. H., 1769, farmer; moved to Montpelier, Vt.

Julius Y. Dewey, M. D., born in Montpelier, Vt., 1801, farm-boy, physician; starts National Life Insurance Company.

George Dewey, born in Montpelier, Vt., in 1837, cadet, midshipman, lieutenant-commander; in command of Asiatic squadron, 1898; made rear-admiral for victory over Spanish forces at Manila, May 1, 1898.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

FAREWELL DINNER TO WOR. BRO. ANDREW PATTERSON.

A very notable function took place at the Oriental Hotel, Yokohama, on Thursday evening, the occasion being the tendering of a farewell dinner to Wor. Bro. Andrew Patterson (32° S. R.), who is leaving Japan for Scotland in the course of next week. Never before in Yokohama have so many Masons gathered together under one roof, over one hundred being the number present last evening. The list of subscribers included Bros. L. H. Abel, H. A. Ahrens, B. W. Anderson, J. Barr, W. Barrie, T. E. Beatty, W. R. Bennett, C. T. Benney, H. Bethell, H. M. Bevis, F. Bielfeld, George Booth, V. R. Bowden, T. L. Brower, A. B. Brown, G. C. Charlesworth, H. Clare, A. R. G. Clark, C. B. Clausen, J. G. Cleveland, J. W. Copmann, J. B. Coulson, W. A. Crane, J. H. Curtis, J. Delbourgo, A. M. Delf, L. Dewette, J. G. Doering, E. Eagling, J. J. Efford, Stuart Eldridge, M.D., F. L. Elliott, W. H. Forbes, E. C. Fox, F. Gil, W. Gordon, J. F. Gowey, F. M. Gowey, I. T. Griffin, L. J. Grimmesey, B. Guggenheim, Jno. W. Hall, W. Silver Hall, A. J. Hare, H. B. Haskell, George Hay, Robert Hay, H. Heckert, J. Helm, F. Herb, T. Herlihy, G. Hodges, Rev. E. C. Irwine, E. L. James, J. Johnstone, O. Keil, E. F. Kilby, E. E. Kildoyle, S. Komor, A. Kuhn, T. M. Laffin, A. Langfeldt, P. Launay, H. W. Lea, F. J. Lias, A. F. MacNab, B. Martinolich, R. McCance, W. H. McGowan, T. W. McIlraith, E. Mendelson, C. D. Moss, H. Moss, N. G. Munro, M.D., H. J. Owen, E. P. Pallister, C. A. Peterson, H. Pollak, C. F. Pope, A. H. Potts, F. Reis, C. F. Rhine, R. D. Robison, Th. Ruhen, H. J. Sharp, Dr. A. G. Smith, Henry Smith, Rev. J. O. Spencer, W. H. Stone, W. S. Stone, L. Stornebrink, F. W. Thomas, J. A. Thomas, C. Thwaites, J. L. Tornöe, T. H. Tripler, M.D., W. Tucker, S. E. Unite, L. Ph. von Hemert, G. N. Weed, Rev. W. J. White, A. Woolley, and Rev. W. S. Worden.

There were not half a dozen absentees and the magnificent dining hall of the Oriental Hotel presented a most animated appearance when Wor. Bro. O. Keil, District Grand Secretary, took the Chair at 8.15 o'clock. Wor. Bro. Patterson had the seat of honour, and supporting the chair at the head table were Wor. Bro. Alf. Woolley, Wor. Bro. Dr. Cleveland, Wor. Bro. Clarke, Wor. Bro. the Rev. E. C. Irwine, Wor. Bro. S. E. Unite, Wor. Bro. Stuart Eldridge, Wor. Bro. Barrie, Wor. Bro. J. F. Gowey, Wor. Bro. E. Flint Kilby, Wor. Bro. A. Bellamy Brown, Wor. Bro. H. W. Lea, etc. Wor. Bros. Sharp and Griffin took the vice-chairs. In all thirty-four past masters were present. After the splendid dinner had been done full justice to, Wor. Bro. Alfred Woolley, D.S.G.W., proposed "Our Ancient and Honourable Fraternity," in well chosen words. Wor. Bro. J. F. Gowey, in an eloquent speech, proposed the toast of "The rulers of our respective countries," and was loudly applauded. Then the Chairman gave "Our Guest." He referred to Bro. Patterson's long connection with Masonry in Yokohama and to the honours that his Brethren had bestowed upon him. Four times had he been elected Master of the Lodge Star in the East, 640, S.C., beside filling numerous other offices. Allusion was made to the work that Bro. Patterson had done in all the Lodges of Yokohama and Tokyo and to the high esteem in which he was held by the Brethren in Japan. In conclusion the Chairman voiced the sentiments of the gathering in wishing their guest a safe and speedy voyage, with prosperity, happiness and a long life of usefulness in the old country. The toast was drunk with musical honours.

Bro. Patterson on rising to response was greeted with loud and long-continued applause. In feeling terms he returned thanks for the honour paid him that evening—an honour that he thought quite undeserved, for he had always had a very poor opinion of his own merits. He then alluded to the duties that devolved upon Masons, impressing upon his hearers the truth of the tenets that the system inculcated, and the necessity for all to bear in mind that the world judged the character of the Brotherhood by the conduct of each individual member of the Craft. In conclusion he referred to the charities of the Order and expressed a hope that they would ever be nobly supported. The next toast, "Our Charities" was given by Wor. Bro. S. E. Unite, Wor. Bro. H. J. Sharp responding. The last toast was "The mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters of Masons," given in a most eloquent fashion by Wor. Bro. A. R. G. Clark, and responded to by the Last Initiate (Bro. E. Mendelson). Songs were given during the evening by Wor. Bros. H. J. Owen, Sharp, Unite, Clark, Delf, and Bro. Launay, Wor. Bro. Griffin acting as accompanist. The gathering dispersed about midnight.

WU MOW-TING.

We don't suppose that the above name will encourage many readers to peruse this paragraph. Yet no little interest attaches to it, for Mr. Wu has just been appointed Managing Director of the North-China Railways, and unless all indications are defective, the railways of Northern China are destined to attract a considerable share of public observation within the next few years, or, perhaps, the next few months. Several years—fifteen, if we remember rightly—have passed since the attention of the Chinese Government was first drawn to the paramount importance of establishing railway communications with Mongolia and Manchuria. Astute foreign observers saw plainly enough what must be the ultimate position of an Oriental country which allowed its borders to be steadily approached by an Occidental State possessing great military potentialities, and took no steps to bring the threatened regions within the sphere of its own strategical competence. That is a simple description of what China was doing. Russia, in whatever light she might be regarded by the Chinese, was steadily drawing near to positions of vantage from which she would have China at her mercy, and the only way for the latter to secure herself was, in the first place, to provide means of concentrating a military force on the threatened frontier, and, in the second, to provide the military force. England is now seeking to bring about the organization of an efficient army and navy for China, and China seems disposed to carry her railways eastward to the neighbourhood of Liaotung. If she adheres to her present purpose in the latter respect, we may understand that she entertains—for the moment, at all events—a resolute idea of opposing the territorial expansion of the great northern Power. Mr. Wu's appointment to be Managing Director of the North-China system of railways is thus a very interesting fact, for Mr. Wu not only is a man of sterling qualities, as he proved when he had charge of the railway administration some years ago, but also has a strong pro-English bias. On his retirement from that post—retirement resulting from intrigues against his inconvenient integrity—he was the recipient of an address from Mr. Kinder and the other foreign employés of the railway, bearing high testimony to his official capacity.

CHANGES OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNORS.

Some changes of Prefectural Governors are gazetted, in consequence of two of the present occupants of that position being placed on the Retired List, namely, Mr. Sugimoto, Governor of Oita, and Mr. Takenouchi, Governor of Saga. The resulting changes are:—

Mr. Ohikawa from Yamagata to Oita.
Mr. Sone to Yamagata.
Mr. Hirayama to Saga.
Count Kyozumi from Yamanashi to Ibaraki.

MARQUIS ITO'S RETIREMENT.

The Mainichi makes the following remarks in regard to Marquis Ito's resignation:—When the fact of Marquis Ito's retirement from office was first known, all officials, especially the younger ones connected with him, were struck with surprise, and made every effort to dissuade him. The Marquis, however, refused their entreaties on the ground that any attempt at a political conflict on his part would be extremely injurious to the development of the State, and that there was no alternative but to yield to popular sentiment. His resolution was the result of a conference with his oldest colleagues. He chose to retire from the field of politics, and to pass his declining years in seclusion. "At all events," said he, "I am determined not to participate in political affairs. So long as I am not out of the world I am liable to be moved by my environment to action in the field of politics. My presence in the political arena can scarcely fail to create disturbance and turmoil more serious than have hitherto been experienced." The Marquis even entreated his young adherents to imagine that he was dead to the political world. These views he repeated to Counts Okuma and Itagaki, whom he requested to accept the Imperial mandate for the reorganization of a new Ministry. He definitely announced his intention of leading a retired life, adding that he would in no circumstances consent to have a voice in political counsels even if his opinions were sought by the two Counts.

An article in the Mainichi refers to the responsibility of the Constitutional Party in organising a new Ministry on the basis of party principles. In the first place it is remarked that Marquis Ito's resignation and his immediate recommendation of the two Counts—Okuma and Itagaki—to the Imperial sanction for the formation of a new Cabinet is a repetition of former events, but involves an entirely different spirit. When Count Itagaki entered the Cabinet before as Minister for Home Affairs, he simply joined Marquis Ito as one of the oldest statesmen of the Restoration. So it was with Count Okuma when he entered the Matsukata Cabinet as Minister for Foreign Affairs. The responsibilities of these two Counts, though they were the leaders of their respective parties, were not shared by the Progressists and Liberals as a whole. Things present a different aspect at the present juncture. The new constitutional Party was formed with a view to command a majority in the Diet, and, its leaders having now been taken into the Cabinet in this spirit, their political position differs entirely from that which they formerly held. They are now called upon to bear full responsibility for the new Cabinet, and, while enjoying the honour of formulating for the first time a party Cabinet, must surely be conscious of the gravity of the functions with which they are entrusted. The development of parties has hitherto been aimed at; efforts must now be made to show the benefits of a party Ministry. The party cabinet which is about to be organised is evidently on its trial. Its success or failure has a vital influence upon the destiny of party administration or responsible cabinets. Public spirit is absolutely indispensable to the consummation of a constitutional system, and the energy directed to the overthrow of a clan government must be turned to the suppression of "clannism" which seems to exist even among the members of the party.

FOURTH OF JULY BASEBALL.

The following will compose the teams for this match on Monday, July 4th:—Messrs. Reed, Bain, Burnett, Onderdonk, Smith (Captain), Morse, Dyer, Woolsey, and Abel; versus Messrs. Merriman, Gowey, Blake (Captain), Jolme, McCheaney, Edwards, Howard, Stone, and Curtis. The game will begin promptly at 9 o'clock, and players are requested to be punctual.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

JAPAN'S INDUSTRIAL FUTURE.

The Shogyo writes at some length in regard to the foreign competition which the domestic industry of Japan is likely to experience after the operation of the revised tariff. It says the cheapness of Japanese products in general can hardly fail to increase foreign demand for them, while the augmentation in output tends to decrease the expenses of manufacture. There is no doubt about the wisdom of importing such articles which it is more expensive to produce at home. According to official investigations articles of this nature are:—Wool, glass panes, tortoise shells, tea lead, quinine, silk pongees, odourless wax, packing mats, oil paintings, elephant's ivory, aniline, and other dyes. Among the commodities which may be produced in Japan, but in regard to which no prospects exist as to the possibility of reduction in import, the following may be enumerated:—Peas and beans; cotton, raw, spun, and old; hemp and flax; flour, indigo, India rubber wares; photographic and surveying instruments; kerosene oil; lead pipes, mercury, microscopes, molasses and syrups; oil; nets, ropes and rigging; brown and white sugars; tin, umbrella frames, wine; anchors and chains; iron, bar, rod, lump, sheet, and plate; roofing iron; iron nails; cylinders, pipes, and wires; sheet lead; railway locomotives; electric batteries; machinery for mining, iron works, tailoring, and spinning; steel and iron rails; telegraph wires; gauzes; carbolic and salicylic acids; subnitrate of bismuth; extract of logwood; amorphous phosphorus.

The staples of import which may be produced by domestic industry with prospects of success may be set down as follow:—Alcohol, flaxen canvas, watches and clocks, rigging (hemp), handkerchiefs and napkins, cotton yarns, caps and hats, leather (all kinds), muslin de laine, railway cars, silk and cotton satins, figured shirtings, caustic soda, cut tobacco, woollen cloth, brass piping, cotton satins, blankets, chintzes, coal, corks, flaxen yarns, raw cow-hides, flaxen stuff, cement, rice, sel, vages, bleached shirtings, boilers and engines, turkey reds, woollen and cotton cloth, copper piping, sheet copper, butter, cigarettes, cheese, Unsai (cotton stuff), cotton thread, shooting guns and accessories, lacquer, liquid gold, printing paper, salt, coloured shirtings, bicarbonate of soda, T-cloths, cinnabar, worsted, iron screws and nails, sheet zinc, candles, chlorate of potash, copper wire, cotton canvas, cotton velvet, leather soles, coloured oil, pumps, satin, grey shirtings, timber and boards, wheat, flannel, and cigars.

RAILWAY ASSOCIATION.

The Jiji reports the inauguration of a Railway Association under the auspices of Messrs. Matsumoto Shoichiso, Watanabe Koki, and Mori Jinsuke. Its head office is to be in Tokyo, and its main object is to assist in the development of railway enterprises. The Association will begin by making various investigations in regard to railways, and securing an interchange of information and the cultivation of intimacy among its members. The latter are of four classes, of which those who are actually holding a prominent position in railway enterprises, or who have occupied such positions for more than three years, or are possessed of knowledge and experience connected with railways are to be enlisted as the legitimate members of the Association. Contributors of over 100 yen are to be admitted as honorary members. As to the officials of the Association, it is stated that a President and Vice-President together with 40 Councillors, are to be elected from among the legitimate members, the term of their service being two years. The gist of important reports from the Council and of useful statements in the various magazines is to be published in pamphlet form for distribution among members.

JAPANESE TRADE WITH INDIA.

The Japanese Consul at Bombay, who lately returned to Japan, is reported to have told the Jiji's representative that the famine in the interior of India has had the effect of considerably decreasing the area of cotton farms, as greater profit attaches to the cultivation of corn. But as the climate this year has been exceptionally favourable, the total output of cotton is expected, despite the above fact, to exceed the usual amount. As to imports from Japan, the Consul remarked that the staples most popular at Bombay consist of matches, silk textiles, umbrellas, camphor, peppermint, &c., together with lacquer wares, fancy matting, bamboo screens, and other miscellaneous articles. Amongst these commodities, however, matches present the most hopeful prospect. Prior to the war between Japan and China, matches were chiefly imported from Switzerland, the Japanese manufactures imported amounting in value to only 100,000 rupees. The export of matches from Japan after the war has rapidly increased, the figures now aggregating about a million rupees, and Swiss manufactures have been virtually driven out of the market. Piece goods are also in great demand, being chiefly used for ladies' costumes. The number of umbrellas imported every year does not fall short of 200,000, the retail price of each being 1½ rupees; but the reputation of this commodity has been considerably impaired by coarse manufacture, and imports from London are gradually replacing the Japanese manufactures, on account of their stability, though the price is much higher. Japanese umbrellas are better than those from London in regard to the stuff used for them, but in all other respects are far inferior. It is worth while for manufacturers to direct attention to this point.

THE EX JUDGE OF FORMOSA.

Mr. Takano, ex-chief Justice of Formosa, who regarded the Cabinet's order placing him on the retired list as an unconstitutional proceeding, and who insists that he is still Chief Justice, is reported by the Osaka Asahi to have resolved upon making a tour to Europe and America in July or August. He would undertake the journey with the title of Chief Justice, in order to receive treatment due to his exalted position. But Japanese Consuls or Ministers in any country where he might happen to travel might object to such proceedings. A dispute similar in nature to that which disturbed the country some time ago would revive abroad, and Mr. Takano might find himself liable to be arrested on a charge of fraudulent assumption of official titles. The journals of various nations would probably discuss the incident, and the Japanese Government would then find itself "advertised" in an unpleasant manner. It is said that at the time of his leaving Formosa, Mr. Takano received the hearty sympathy of the English and Americans, some of whom appear to have entreated him to go over to Europe or America and appeal to the opinion of the world on his case. We (Japan Mail) can only observe that any one giving such advice was running counter to the views of all the jurisconsults whose opinions have been expressed on the subject. Formosa is not within the pale of the constitution and never was.

DEPARTURE OF MR. AND MRS. VON TREUTLER.

On the 28th instant the Secretary of the Imperial German Legation and Mrs. Von Treutler left Tokyo by the 9 a.m. train for Yokohama, where they embarked in the Gaelic for San Francisco. A great concourse of people, foreign and Japanese, assembled at Shimbashi to say farewell. Among them were representatives of the Imperial Court; the Ministers of Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Brazil, and Portugal; Vice-Admiral Viscount Ito; Messrs. Makaka, Nabeshima, and Mitsuhashi, of the Foreign Office; Mr. Y. Ito, on behalf of the Minister-President; Viscount, Viscountess, and Miss Aoki; Count Pourtales; Viscount and Viscountess du Dresnay; various members of the Legation staffs, and many of the sincere friends that the departing couple have won in Japan during their three years' residence.

MR. GLADSTONE.

The sentiment of profound grief aroused throughout the whole civilized world by the death of Mr. Gladstone is a splendid tribute to the memory of the great Englishman. In Paris, in Berlin, in St. Petersburg, in Vienna, in Rome, in New York, in Madrid, in Athens, in Brussels, everywhere in short, there was an unanimous outburst of admiration for the man and of regret for his death. The only note of discord came from the Osservatore Romano, the official mouthpiece of the Vatican: even death does not silence the odium theologicum. If space permitted, we should gladly reproduce some of the touching and brilliantly discerning comments of the French and German press. But it would be difficult to make any selection: they must be read in their entirety. We shall quote, however, the words of the Journal de St. Petersbourg, for reasons which need not be set forth:—

"England has just lost one of her greatest statesmen. . . . A life so long and so profoundly worthy of respect leaves ineffacable traces in the memory of mankind, and the tributes to his memory which are forthcoming from every quarter bear witness that the human race still places in the first rank those statesmen who are inspired by the broadest and most generous ideas. England may be proud of her just claim to have given birth to men whose political action has manifested itself in favour of a cause which concerned the interest of the many. The name of Gladstone will remain in that noble constellation which makes the greatness of a country and does honour to humanity."

In England, of course, the eulogies were universal. The Times devoted thirteen columns to a review of his career, and every journal, whatever its political complexion, added its voice to the nation's expression of sorrow, of reverence and of esteem. The speeches in the two Houses, when the Prime Minister in one and the leader in the other introduced motions for a public funeral and tomb in Westminister Abbey, were remarkable specimens of appreciative eloquence. Lord Rosebery seems to us to have been most happy in his treatment of the sad subject, but it is to the speeches of the great statesman's political opponents that we turn with liveliest interest. Lord Salisbury's words were comparatively few, but they presented a remarkable aspect, doubtless the most remarkable aspect, of Mr. Gladstone's character:—

My lords, very few words, I imagine, are necessary, or would be fitting, to commend this motion to your acceptance, nor is it necessary to dwell upon the career which closed yesterday. His history, his merits, his wonderful authority, have been dwelt upon by many tongues and many pens. I need not repeat them now. But the point which seems to me remarkable, and which, I think, will attract the attention of foreign nations more than any other, is the universal assent of all persons, of all classes, and of all schools of thought in doing honour on this sorrowful occasion to a man who has been more mixed up in political conflict than probably any man of his generation. The controversies of the past are so far forgotten that there is no difference of feeling or of opinion in the honour which we may pay to the great statesman, or in our desire that that honour shold be duly displayed before the eyes of the world. What is the cause of this unanimous feeling? Of course, he had qualities which distinguished him from all other men; and you may say that it was his transcendent intellect, his astonishing power of attaching men to him, the great influence which he was able to exert on the convictions and thought of his contemporaries. But these things, which explain the attachment and the admiration of those whose ideas he represented, would not explain why it is that sentiments almost as fervent are felt and expressed by those whose ideas were not expressed by his policy. I do not think the reason is to be found in anything so far removed from the common feelings of mankind as the abstruse and controverted questions of the policy of the day. They have nothing to do with it. Whether he was right or whether he was wrong in all the measures or in most of the measures which he proposed, those are matters of which the discussion has passed by and would certainly be singularly inappropriate here, but which are really remitted to the judgment of future generations, who will securely judge by experience what we can only decide by conjecture. But it was more on account of considerations common to the mass of human beings, to the general working of the human mind that any controverted questions of policy, that men recognized in him a man guided—whether under mistaken impressions or not, it matters not—but guided in all the steps he took, in all efforts he made, by a high moral ideal. What he sought were the achievements of great ideals, and whether they were based on sound convictions or not they could have issued from nothing but the greatest and the purest moral aspirations; and he is honoured by his countrymen because through so many years, across so many vicissitudes and conflicts, they recognized this one characteristic of his action which has never ceased to be felt. He will leave behind him, especially to those who have followed with deep interest the history of his later years—I might almost say the later months of his life—the memory of a great Christian statesman set up necessarily on high, whose character, motives, and intentions could not fail to strike all the world. He will leave a deep and most salutary influence on the political and social thought of the generation in which he lived, and he will be long remembered, not so much for the causes in which he was engaged, or the political projects which he favoured, but as a great example of which history hardly furnishes a parallel—of a great Christian man.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

From Mr. Balfour's speech we make two extracts embodying a weighty verdict as to Mr. Gladstone's parliamentary record :—

If I venture to say anything to the House it is rather of Mr. Gladstone as the greatest member of the greatest deliberative Assembly that so far the world has seen. Sir, I think it is the language of sober and of unexaggerated truth of say that there is no gift which would enable one to move, to influence, to adorn an Assembly like this that Mr. Gladstone did not possess in a supereminent degree. Debaters as ready, orators as finished, there may have been. It may have been given to others to sway as skilfully this critical Assembly, or to appeal with as much directness and force to the simpler instincts of great masses of our countrymen, but it has been given to no man to combine all those great gifts as they were combined in the person of Mr. Gladstone. From the conversational discussion appropriate to our work in Committee to the most sustained eloquence fitting some high argument and some great historical occasion, every weapon of Parliamentary warfare was wielded by him with the sureness and the ease of a perfect, absolute and complete mastery. I would not venture myself to pronounce an opinion as to whether he was most excellent in the exposition of some complicated Budget of finance, or of legislation, or whether he shone most in the heat of extemporary debate. At least this we may say, that from the humbler arts of ridicule or invective to the subtlest dialectic, the most persuasive eloquence, the most cogent appeals to everything that was highest and best in the audience he was addressing—every instrument which could find a place in the armoury of a member of this House he had at his command without premeditation, without forethought at a moment and in the form best suited to carry out its purpose. . . . One service he did, in my opinion incalculable, which is altogether apart from the judgment that we may be disposed to pass upon particular opinions, particular views, or particular lines of policy which Mr. Gladstone may from time to time have advocated, Sir, he added a dignity and he added a weight to the deliberations of this House by his genius, which I think it is impossible adequately to replace. It is not enough, at least in my opinion, for us to keep up simply a level, though it be a high level, of probity and patriotism. The mere average of civic virtue is not sufficient to preserve this assembly from the fate which has overcome so many other assemblies, the products of democratic forces. More than this is required, more than this was given to us by Mr. Gladstone. He brought to our debate a genius which compelled attention, he raised in the public estimation the whole level of our proceedings and they will be most ready to admit the infinite value of this service who realize how much the public prosperity is involved in the maintenance of the worth of public life and how perilously difficult most democracies apparently feel it to be to avoid the opposite dangers into which so many of them have fallen.

The Times' gives the following description of the last hours of Mr. Gladstone :—Mr. Gladstone had lain for many hours in a state of unconsciousness, he could take no nourishment, his lips could merely be moistened with diluted spirits, and it became only a question of endurance. When would the end come? was asked with anxiety of the medical men. Was it possible there would still be another of those wonderful rallies which had time after time astonished all in attendance? But the breathing and the pulse both indicated that the end could not long be delayed. At midnight all the members of the family gathered for the parting. Mrs. Gladstone, stricken with grief, and having passed the previous night wholly in the sick-room, sat at Mr. Gladstone's bedside, grasping his hand occasionally pressing and kissing it. The Rev. Stephen Gladstone at intervals read a prayer. It was a little before 5 when the medical men saw that death was to be a matter of moments. Mr. Gladstone's breathing had become more laboured. There was nothing of a struggle, but rather a kind of panting as of a person walking up a hill. Then, as 5 o'clock struck, there were two slight gasps, and Mr. Gladstone had passed away. The end came so peacefully that the fact had to be announced to the distressed members of the family by the medical attendants. It was, as our informant observed, a passing from the sleep of life to that of death, so gentle was it.

This is The Times' estimate of Mr. Gladstone as an orator :—The great instrument by which Mr. Gladstone has moved Parliament and the people has been his oratory. Of his oratory in general it may be said that its most salient characteristic—the one we mean which, after listening to him for many years, remained uppermost in his hearers' minds—was its fluency. He avoided rhetoric in its highest flights and its most artistic form. He was not witty. He had not Mr. Bright's command of nervous English or simple directness and pathos. He had not peculiar force which belonged to the speeches of Lord Derby. But he had what neither Lord Derby, the Prime Minister, nor his distinguished son, neither Lord Beaconsfield nor Lord Palmerston, nor any of their successors, ever had—the torrens dicendi, the power of sustaining an unbroken stream of limpid utterance for hours, and of interspersing it with metaphorical terms which served only to illustrate his meaning and attracted no attention for their own sake. With this, which we conceive to be a very high merit in an orator, Mr. Gladstone was endowed very largely. He had likewise during the greater part of his career the art of persuading his hearers as he went along that he was thoroughly in earnest. No doubt this oratorical art can never be entirely dissociated from the moral character and general reputation of the speaker, and Mr. Gladstone's general reputation for earnestness always reinforced the particular facility in question. But still he possessed it in a very remarkable degree. His voice, at once sonorous and flexible without being too musical, his action, which, though rather mechanical, always seemed to be spontaneous, his flashing and commanding glance, and the expression of his countenance, which, though occasionally harsh or even peevish, was always serious and concentrated, combined to impress upon his hearers the belief that every word he uttered was the dictate of profound conviction.

JAPANESE LEGAL DECISIONS.

The Daishin Hanketsuroku is a record of the civil and criminal cases of the Supreme Court of Japan, compiled by the officials of the court. Since the charge of its publication was entrusted to the Tokyo Hogaku-in (Law Institution), a few years ago, a great improvement has been made in it; and it is now published monthly. Book 4, vol. 3, published in May, contains the decisions of cases heard during March, 1898, many of which are very important. We translate here some which may interest our readers :—

Case No. 70 of the 30th year of Meiji, decided on 30th March, 1898.—This was an application for the removal of an obstruction in a public thoroughfare. The Appeal Court held that no right on the part of an individual to demand the removal of an obstruction in a public thoroughfare exists, because the right of passing is not a private right, and no civil action can be instituted even if obstruction was caused to the appellant by any act of the respondent. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for the following reasons: Every man has a right to use a public road, this being essential to his being and to his enjoyment of other privileges; and the right should be protected by private law even though it is already provided for by public law. Any obstruction in a public way is not only a public nuisance, but at the same time may infringe the privileges of a private person. This infringement is a tort to be sued for in a court of law, and he who commits such a wrong renders himself liable to an action for damages or for removal of the obstruction.

Case No. 149 of the 31st year of Meiji, decided March 1st, 1898.—The first paragraph of Article 51 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that a complaint (kokuso) shall be made by a signed and sealed statement in writing by the complainant. In the present case, it was decided that, a "boin" (a mark made by the nail to a document as a seal), which is even now commonly used in Japan, both inside and outside of the courts of law, by persons having no seals, is as effective as an ordinary seal, and the objection raised against the present complaint, in which a "boin" was used instead of a seal, was rejected. The reasons given were that the "boin" (or tsumeiu) is a kind of seal which has been used from time immemorial in Japan, and that affixing it to a document is equal to affixing a proper seal.

Case No. 169, 31st of Meiji (decided on 3rd March, 1898.—A purchaser of paper gave the seller a 10 yen note in mistake for a 5 yen note, and the seller retained it, changing it subsequently for 2 five yen notes. The question raised was whether the act constituted an unlawful appropriation of deposited money under Art. 395 of the Penal Code. The public procurator argued that the buyer's intention to treat the overpaid sum as a deposit and the intention of the accused to receive it as a deposit, should be tacitly presumed. The Supreme Court, however, held that as the buyer had no intention to deposit, and even had no intention to pay the amount in excess of what was due, no such presumption could be permitted. The act did not constitute an offence under the article, nor was there any other law in Japan which makes such an act guilty.

Case No. 1208, the 30th year of Meiji (decided March 25th, 1898). — Article 49 of the Law of Constitution of the Courts of Justice provides that "when a division of the Supreme Court, after hearing an appeal, forms an opinion contrary to a former decision of one or more divisions of the court upon the same point of law, such division shall report the same to the President of the Court, who shall, upon receipt of such report, order all the civil or all the criminal divisions, or all the civil and criminal divisions, of the court, according to the nature of the appeal, to sit together, and re-try and decide the appeal." The present decision was given by all the criminal divisions of the Supreme Court assembled together in accordance with the above article. It has hitherto been considered right that the members of the "judicial police" (Shiho-Keisatsu-Kwan), that is to say, police inspectors, sergeants, officials and non commissioned officials of the Gendarmie, and others, shall, in a case flagrant delict, examine the accused, and put the examination in writing, without attending the place where the offence was committed, and such examination in writing may be used in evidence against the accused. The evidence thus taken by the officials, who are scattered all over Japan, constitutes a large part of judicial evidence. Former decisions of the Supreme Court have held such proceedings and evidence as legal; but it is now decided that members of the judicial police have no such right, that they are not at liberty to examine the accused without attending the place where the offence was committed, and that evidence in writing taken by them at any other place shall be null and void. The reason given is that according to the Code of Criminal Procedure the right of the members of the judicial police relating to preliminary examination of the accused is only that mentioned in Art. 144, (by virtue of Article 147 of the same Code), which clearly points out that such right is to be used only in cases where the police attend the actual place of offence. The new decision seems to interpret the Article according to its literal sense, not permitting the wide and rather loose interpretation given to it in former decisions.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

NOTICES TO MARINERS.

The following notices to mariners are issued by Mr. W. Ferd. Tyler, Acting Coast Inspector of the Imp. Mar. Customs: No. 321:—(Tientsin District.) Change in position of Lightship Taku.—Notice is hereby given that in consequence of the Bar having extended further seaward, the Lightship Taku has been moved 9¼ cables E. by S. ½ S., magnetic, from her old position, and that she is now moored in 19 feet at low water spring tides.

Approximate position:—
Latitude..... 38° 54′ 36″ N.
Longitude..... 117° 51′ 46″ E.

No. 322:—Yangtze River (Chinkiang District). Bethune Point Beacon Light.—Notice is hereby given that the Bethune Point Beacon Light has been shifted 200 yards N. 84° E. from its last position, in consequence of the washing away of the land on which it stood.

No. 323:—Yangtze River (Kiukiang District.) Point Haines Beacon Light.—Notice is hereby given that the Point Haines Beacon Light has been shifted 90 yards S. 46 E. from its last position, in consequence of the washing away of the river bank.

No. 324:—(Swatow District.) Mud Flat Buoy Discontinued.—Notice is hereby given that the Mud Flat Buoy, No. 2 in the published List for 1898, has been removed, and that mooring dolphins have been erected 70 feet outside of the position it occupied.

KOREAN ITEMS.

Intelligence from Korea, dated the 13th inst., and published in the Yorosu, is to the effect that the dignitaries who accompanied the Emperor on the 5th inst. on his tour of inspection through the various imperial mausoleums, but who on their return journey fled in various directions, leaving the Emperor alone by the roadside, in consequence of a sudden downpour of rain, have been sentenced to a forfeiture of one month's salary. They were, however, afterwards absolved from this punishment, after severe reproaches. The officials numbered 41 in all.

The Minister of Justice was recently removed from his post on account of the gross iniquity of his judgments. The judicial plunder of a private individual's dwelling house made him especially notorious. His vacancy was supplied by Cho Pyong-chick, formerly Minister of Education.

The Russians, having experienced considerable inconvenience in the retention of marines for the protection of their Legation in Söul, have determined to replace them by land troops, which arrived in Inchhon on the 12th instant. They are all Cossacks, numbering 20, with an officer attached.

The charges for telegrams have been hitherto 1 sen for every Korean character, and 3 sen for every Chinese. The rates are now raised to 2 and 5 sen respectively.

A scheme for the establishment of a Commercial Samples Museum at Chemulpho seems to have taken ground. The project having secured the approval of the Settlement, premises have been leased free of rent, the Japanese Consulate, agreeing to contribute a certain amount of encouragement money for the time being.

The Korean Monarch has rearranged his working hours and now announces that he will receive Ministers in routine as in the table given below:—

Sunday—Rest.
Monday—Prime Minister and the Minister of Home Department.
Tuesday—Ministers of the Foreign and Finance Departments.
Wednesday—Prime Minister and the Minister of War.
Thursday—Ministers of Law and of Justice.
Friday—Minister of Agriculture and a Councillor of State.
Saturday—A regular meeting.

We expect to find funny things in the Independent. The file of the 11th ult., is not disappointing, as witness the following paragraph under the heading "Local Items:"—The editor went into the country last Tuesday morning to attend the 61st birthday celebration of one of his relatives. He left "a man in charge" of the office. As this man does not read the "character," the readers will be obliged to forego the luxury of knowing who the latest appointees as "imperial gravekeepers" or "chusa" in the several departments of the government are. For the same sufficient reason the kaleidoscopic view of the working of the Government as exhibited in "Departmental News" will have to go over to the next issue.

The Korean Council of State recently went into Committee of Supply, and before it rose the following items of expenditure were passed:—

To pay out of the Reserve Fund, $2,476 for making cakes, etc. of sacrificial offerings at the mausoleum of the late Empress; and $788 for repairing the road, and bridges for the last procession:—

Various expenses in connection with the the late Imperial procession	$3,403 92
Additional expenses for the renewed stone works at the Mausoleum of the late Empress	$700 00
Trees to be planted around the Mausoleum	$2,159 32
For airing and sunning the books in the four Imperial Libraries	$80.00
Deficit in the Salaries of the Home Dep't Supplied.....	$510.00
Deficit in the Salaries of the Education Dep't Supplied	$883.33
For engraving seals for Police Dep't and its branch Stations	$18.40
For Medical treatment of the wounded in Chemulpo.....	$177.20

The Finance Department was further authorized to add $100,000 to the Reserve Fund.

CHINESE NEWS.

A Chinese Imperial edict of the 18th instant appoints Hsu Shuming, President of the Court of Censors, to be acting President of the Board of Revenue vice Wêng T'ung-ho, dismissed from office.

M. de Giers, son of the former Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, and himself formerly Chargé d'Affaires at Paris, and Russian Minister at Rio de Janeiro, has been appointed Russian Minister to Peking.

At his second audience with the Emperor of China, H.R.H. Prince Henry of Prussia presented the Emperor with the insignia of the Order of the Black Eagle, conferred on the Emperor of China by the German Emperor.

Mr. August Edeter, of the firm of Messrs. Arnhold, Karberg & Co., died at the Shanghai General Hospital from typhoid fever on 20th June.

It is a curious coincidence, says the N.-C. Daily News, that the three Foreign Ministers last appointed to Peking, Mr. Conger, the U.S. Minister, M. Pichon, the French Minister, and M. de Giers, the Russian Minister, were all recently colleagues at Rio de Janeiro.

A Foochow dispatch to a Shanghai paper reports that the Imperial Chinese Government has courteously acceded to the request of the British Admiral and has permitted British men-of-war to use the Foochow Naval deckyard at Pagoda Anchorage for repairs, etc., whenever needed.

The Shên Pao says it has been arranged between the Tsung li Yamên and the Inspector-General of Customs that the officials in Hupeh will apportion an amount of money from the salt revenue and hand it to the Commissioner of Customs at fixed periods for the payment of the Foreign Loan, but the management of the salt business will be retained by the Chinese officials.

The Foochow Echo of the 11th inst. says:—An important item of local social news is that Rory has joined the majority, for Rory was quite a celebrity, in his way. He was the "fightingest" dog ever known in Foochow. The Bank will never be so well protected. He was cleverer than any dog ever written about in the Spectator. He considered himself a member of the Club and whenever he wanted a little light refection between meals he toddled up to the Club-house and munched biscuits. A history of his career would have eclipsed that of Rab and his Friends, but our contributors are too busy in their tea-rooms just now to compile it. Had it been written, it would have been lengthy and sensational.

Wên Ting-shih, an ex-Censor, at one time a great favourite of the Emperor, but who was degraded and dismissed from office about three years ago for being too straightforward in his denunciations of the Empress Dowager's intermeddling with the prerogatives of the Throne, recently sent to the Emperor a memorial strongly advising his majesty to throw himself and the country upon the protection of Great Britain. The memorialist, says the N.-C. Daily News, derides the pretended friendship of Russia, and gives a plain sketch of the whole story of the retrocession of Liaotung by Japan, bewails the sad fact that every one in China was misled by the pretensions of Russia, and winds up by saying that in the friendship of Great Britain alone lies the salvation of China.

An Imperial Chinese edict of the 20th June, in answer to a memorial from a Censor named Tsêng Ch'ung yen suggesting the importance of establishing western mining schools at Tientsin and Nanking, commands the Tsung-li Yamên to report on the scheme, and, if favourable, to make the necessary arrangements for establishing first-class mining schools at the ports named, and then to extend the scheme to other provinces where mines of all sorts abound, which, owing to the lack of competent Chinese mining engineers, have never been exploited.

Permission to open the following valuable mines in Hunan has been given by H.E. Ch'ên Pao-chên, Governor of the province. An antimony deposit in the district of Liling, at a place called Tungyuankang; an antimony deposit in Hsiu-hua district, at a place called Lienpeichi; a quicksilver deposit in the sub-prefecture of Chienchou, at a hill called Saddle hill (Maanshan), alleged to be very rich; and a galena mine in Hsinning district at a place called Sankouiung. All the above are to be exploited by syndicates headed by the local gentry and notables of the above places.—Daily China Progress.

Says the N.-C. Daily News:—After a water supply of the most distressing and precarious kind, which has obtained for several hundred years, the native city of Shanghai is now to be provided with an adequate and pure service, which will embrace the latest improvements in water engineering. The contract, the amount of which has not been made public, has been let to Messrs. Arnhold, Karberg & Co., who have secured the services of Messrs. Atkinson and Dallas to do the preliminary surveying forthwith. The works we understand, will be proceeded with without delay. When it is taken into consideration what horrible and indescribable abuses of the commonest laws of sanitation have prevailed in the city for so many years, the task of opening up the soil for the purpose of laying the mains may be better imagined than described.

According to the Avenir du Tonkin, as quoted by the Echo de Chine, Kuangchou Bay in Kuangtung, which has been leased by France, is by no means an ideal acquisition. The entrance is difficult and often obstructed by sandbanks, and the Avenir declares that the cruiser Duguay Trouin got in on a high tide, and has been sounding and sounding again ever since and cannot get out. The population hate the French; the French flag has been several times removed, and a buoy stolen. There is only a second class military mandarin there, who refuses to do anything except under orders from the Taotai at Linchou, and this official remains quietly in his Yamên, relying on the force of inaction, in the use of which the Chinese are so proficient. The Governor-General of French

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Indo China, M. Doumer, being unable to get any mandarin to visit him, sent word on shore that he would visit the local official at his Yamên. He went at the time named and found nobody there, and had to come away, leaving the Duguay Trouin to continue sounding. While quoting the Avenir's article, the Echo de Chine says that it is informed by a French naval officer that Kuangchou Bay is regarded by many sailors as a port of the first rank.

In regard to the foundering of the Chinese cruiser Fooching off Port Arthur, it is alleged in a Tientsin official dispatch that the unfortunate vessel arrived late in the day at the entrance to Port Arthur, but owing to the presence of the Russians she could not enter before getting permission to do so. It so happened that the port officer was inside one of the forts at the time and no one at the port office would take the responsibility of giving the permission, so although it was blowing a gale the unlucky Fooching had no alternative but to lay-to under steam until the morning. Unfortunately the Engineer in charge had too little steam on, and when later in the night the gale increased in fury the vessel could make no headway and so foundered. This story is scarcely credible, for according to the terms of the lease of Port Arthur, Chinese men-of-war are entitled to use the harbour at all times.

Shanghai has been growing rapidly these past few years, and in consequence its populations, foreign and Chinese, have over-flowed the limits of the settlements originally mapped out and set aside by Treaty. The evil-smelling districts of ill-built houses and work-shops that have sprung up outside the settlements are of course without the pale of the Municipal Council's jurisdiction, and hence have long been a source of danger to the health of the community, besides causing annoyances of a description we need not particularise. The Council and the Board of Consuls on various occasions have memorialized the Taotai for permission to extend the settlement in order to take over the new suburban districts, but these appeals have all been useless. As one speaker at a recent meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held in Shanghai to discuss the position of affairs pithily put it, local negotiations have broken down, having come up against a brick wall. The meeting just referred to resolved to petition direct to Peking and passed several resolutions in which were set forth the reasons for the measures suggested and the dangers that loom ahead if the present state of insanitary arrangements and general lawlessness continue. Commenting on the debate, the N.-C. Daily News says:—It is somewhat remarkable that none of the speakers on Friday brought up, as an argument for the recognition of our right to have the Settlement extended, what occurred here in the early sixties. The native authorities here then were only too anxious to get the foreigners to assume jurisdiction not only over the small area that we propose now to add to the Settlement, but an area of some 2,800 square miles, that is, an area with a radius of thirty miles, Shanghai being the centre. The English and French spent freely of their blood and money to clear this area of Taiping rebels, and Colonel Gordon, the hero of Khartoum, made the definite offer to Mr. Edward Webb, who was then Chairman of the Municipal Council, to clear this area permanently and maintain order and peace in it, if the Council would take over its administration. Shanghai would have been a free city with an area of rich land sufficient for its support. The Council did not feel strong enough in those days to accept the offer. We are only asking now for a little bit of what the Chinese would have too gladly given us then, and this fact undoubtedly strengthens our claim to have our boundaries extended.

Eleven cases of cholera have appeared in Yokohama this spring. Three of the persons attacked died, and one is under medical treatment. The other seven have recovered.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A New York despatch, dated the 26th inst., says the enforcement of the Tea Duty in Canada has been postponed until January next year.

On the 14th inst., the captain of the British sailing vessel Creedmoor that arrived at Nagasaki from Cardiff on the afternoon of the 8th inst., was fined 60 yen for having neglected to enter his vessel at the Customs within the limit of time specified by treaty.

Dysentery is now prevailing at Yoshihama village, near Atami. Three temporary hospitals have been established. A kind of fever has been prevalent for some weeks in Tobe jail, Yokohama. Twenty cases have already appeared but the cause is not yet known.

The arrival of the Grand Duke Cyril, who is about to visit Japan, will, it is anticipated, take place on 7th proximo. The Shiba detached palace, says the Asahi Shimbun, will be prepared for his accommodation. The officials of the Ceremonial Bureau are busily engaging in preparations for welcoming the Prince.

The Agent of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company is informed by a Yokohama firm that letters posted here on the 14th April by the Empress of China were delivered in Copenhagen on May 9th. The Empress of China sailed on the 15th April at noon, and the actual time in transit was, therefore, only 24 days.

Further details of the floods are reported. In Toyama Prefecture, the rivers Sho, Koyabe, Shintsu, Gwanjoji, Kurobe, Shakuhaya, Katakai, and others overflowed, and banks were broken and the public roads near by flooded. Many bridges were destroyed and 374 houses were submerged. In Aichi Prefecture, the rivers Kiso and Shonai were in flood, and a part of the bank of the latter was destroyed. Much damage was done to houses and rice fields.

A man and wife, aged 55 and 39 respectively, living in Mishima district, Osaka, were arrested on Saturday on a charge of infanticide, says the Chronicle. They are alleged to have received about twenty babies with money for their maintenance, and to have either thrown them into the river alive or poisoned them. Their "infernal action," as an Osaka paper describes it, was discovered by the authorities and both the man and his wife were arrested.

The Russian Government lately resolved to enlarge considerably its trading vessels engaged in the Baltic, and also in the Black Sea trade, and at the same time to found several steamship companies. Her action is in perfect harmony with her usual tradal methods. She has declared that from and after January 1st, 1900, no vessels flying a foreign flag shall be admitted to take part in Russian home and inland trade. These measures will strike a very heavy blow at the immense amount of freights at the present moment carried in Danish vessels to and from, and also between, various Russian ports.

Discussing the bombardment of Puerto Rico by the Americans, The Times expert says it is clear that, either on account of bad armaments or want of skill, the Spanish gunners made miserable practice. Admiral Sampson gave his total loss as one killed and seven slightly wounded, adding that no serious damage was inflicted on any of the American ships. Considering that on July 11th, 1882, the totally unskilled Egyptians succeeded in hulling the British ships about 75 times, although they had no range-finders and their smoothbore guns had no sights, the apparent failure of the Spaniards is at least remarkable. Such a battleship as the Iowa presents an enormous target, of which only a fraction is armoured, and any shell bursting between decks would have done much execution. The bombardment seems to have been carried out at somewhat long range, which should confer advantage upon the shore batteries.

Manila, as most people know, was captured by the British in 1762. The force employed consisted of some 2,700 of all ranks, including bluejackets and marines, under Brigadier-General, afterwards Sir William, Draper, the naval part of the expedition consisting of eight ships of the line and three frigates under Vice-Admiral Cornish, an able and experienced officer. The squadron arrived at Manila on 23rd September, a landing was effected the same evening, and on the 6th October the place was stormed and captured. The British total loss in the siege was 150 of all ranks killed and wounded. The British remained in possession till the end of March, 1764, when news of the treaty of peace arrived, and England lost by the pen what she had gained by the sword.

About half-past five o'clock on Monday morning, as the P. & O. Co.'s steamer Shanghai was trying to take up her berth on the east side of Kobe Pier, she collided with the structure and caused considerable damage. About a third of the way in from the end of the pier, and close to one of the traversing tables, the eastern fore and aft beam is badly damaged, and two or three of the vertical piles are bent, if not broken, as well as several of the cast-iron caps and wrought-iron ties and braces connected with them. The rails are also displaced and a considerable part of the woodwork carried away, with other damaged material. The injury to the ship is slight, if she has sustained any at all. We believe this is the second time the Shanghai has been so unfortunate as to collide with the pier, but this is Captain Peter's first experience.—Kobe Chronicle.

The following paragraph, taken from the Singapore Free Press of the 10th inst., refers to former Yokohama residents:—As Mr. and Mrs. Whitefield were driving down to the Town Hall for the concert last night, from their residence at Mount Pleasant, they met with an awkward accident at the corner of Kampong Java-road, close to the narrow bridge leading to the race-course. It was very dark, and a native, clad in white, suddenly came round the corner into the light of the lamps. The pony shied, and upset the carriage into the ditch on the right side. Mr. and Mrs. Whitefield were thrown out, but happily not injured, although the latter was severely shaken, and had to be taken back to Mount Pleasant. The pony was with difficulty at last extricated from the ditch, which is very deep, but it was by that time impossible for Mr. Whitefield to come on to the Town Hall, where his non-arrival as the accompanist to the choir caused considerable anxiety. These duties had therefore to be discharged, at a moment's notice, principally by Miss Reutens, Mr. Ruchwaldy also assisting.

The Commission which has been sitting lately in St. Petersburg to examine the plans for the construction of the new iron bridge over the Amu Daria river on the Central Asian Railway and 130 miles north-east of Merv, has issued its decision in the matter. The projected bridge will replace the wooden one at present in use, which was erected when the Trans-Caspian railway was built, and it will be 2 miles 1,173 yards in length, as the river overflows its banks far and wide in spring. The spans of the new bridge will be 72 feet above the normal level of the water, and this height has been fixed upon in order to keep the bridge clear of the huge masses of driftwood and uprooted trees which are brought down by the swollen river. The cost of this gigantic bridge is estimated at £500,000, and the iron parts to be used in its construction have already been ordered in a Russia iron foundry. Steps will be taken to begin the building of the bridge at once. The administration of the Trans-Caspian Railway has been transfetred from the Department of the Ministry of War into that of the Ministry of Ways and Communications.

At the half-yearly meeting of the P. and O. Steam Navigation Company, held on the 14th of June, the directors recommended a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on preferred stock, and an interim dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on the deferred stock of the company.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE GOVERNMENT OF FORMOSA.

The Official Gazette publishes the revisions made in the official organisation of Formosa as follows:—

Art. XIV.—In the Governor-General's Office shall be established a Cabinet, where confidential affairs shall be transacted under the management of two Adjutants and two Private Secretaries exclusively devoted to the work. The Adjutants shall be chosen from among field or company officers; the Private Secretaries shall be of sonin rank.

Art. XV.—In the Governor-General's Office shall also be established a Section of Civil Administration, and Military and Naval Staffs. The regulations for these Staffs shall be especially determined.

Art. XVI.—The Section of Civil Administration shall superintend all affairs relating to civil and judicial administration.

Art. XVIII.—The following officials shall be appointed for the Governor-General's Office:—President of Civil Administration, Chief Councillor, Commissioners, Councillors, Engineers, Clerks, Assistant Engineers, and Interpreters.

Art. XIX.—The President of Civil Administration shall be of chokunin grade, and superintend the affairs of the Section under the direction of the Governor General.

Art. XX.—The Chief Councillor shall also be of chokunin rank, the two Councillors being of sonin grade.

Art. XXI.—The Commissioners, 15 in number, shall be either of chokunin or sonin grade, and shall preside over the affairs of the various Bureaux or Sections, with instructions from the Governor General or the President of Civil Administration.

Art. XXII.—The Engineers shall be 15 in number, of sonin grade, and shall, subject to the orders of their superior officials, supervise matters connected with engineering in general.

Art. XXI.—Clerks, Assistant Engineers, and Interpreters shall number 200 in all; and be of hannin rank.

Art.—XXIV and XXV shall be cancelled.

APPENDIX.

The above Regulations shall be enforced from June 20th of the 31st year of Meiji.

Imperial Ordinance No. 107 embodies the revised regulations for the Council established in the Governor General's Office. The Council is to consist of the following members:—Governor General, President of Civil Administration, Chiefs of the Military and Naval Staffs, Chief Councillor, Commissioners (less than five in number), and Councillors holding no additional office. The Chiefs of the Military and Naval Staffs can participate in debate only when matters of warfare are involved.

The Governor General reserves to himself the right of directing other civil and military officers to attend the Council whenever he deems it necessary to do so, provided that they shall not have a voice in the decisions. The Commissioners who are entitled to attend the Council must submit to the regulations established by the Governor-General of Formosa. The Council in fact is required to deliberate on and decide the ordinances embodied in Law No. 63 of the 29th of Meiji. These provisions are also to be put into operation from the same date as was fixed by the preceding regulations.

There are still other regulations promulgated by Imperial Ordinance No. 108, involving alterations in the organisation of local governments in Formosa. The most prominent may be given as follows:—

Art. I.—In Formosa there shall be established prefectural offices for Taipeh, Taichang, and Tainan, and administrations for Ilan, Taitung, and the Pescadores. The location and jurisdiction of these offices and administrations shall be determined by the Governor-General.

Art. II.—Each prefecture shall have the following officials:—Governor, Secretary, Chief Police Inspector, Taxation Commissioner, Engineer, Prison Superintendent, Clerks, Assistant Engineers, Police Inspectors, Chief Jailers, Prison Clerks, and Interpreters.

Art. III.—In each administration the following officials shall be appointed (except that no Secretary, Engineer, Chief Jailer, or Prison Clerks shall be appointed in Taitung, and no Secretary or Engineer in the Pescadores):—President, Secretary, Chief Police Inspector, Engineers, Clerks, Assistant Engineers, Police Inspectors, Chief Jailers, Prison Clerks, and Interpreters.

Art. VIII.—The Clerks, Assistant Engineers, Police Inspectors, Chief Jailers, Prison Clerks, and Interpreters in prefectural and administrative offices shall be 720 in all, and of hannin rank.

Art. X.—The Governor or President of a prefectural or administrative office may, by virtue of his own authority or special commission vested in him, issue an ordinance within the whole or part of his jurisdiction, involving a provision for imprisonment for a period of not more than 25 days, or for the infliction of fines not exceeding 25 yen.

Art. XI.—The Governor or President of a prefectural or administrative office may, if he deems the procedure adopted or regulations issued by the Directors of the Police Offices prejudicial to public interests, or in excess of their authority, suspend such procedure or regulations.

Art. XII.—A Governor or President may apply to the Governor General for military force in case it is needed for the preservation of peace in his jurisdiction. In cases of emergency, however, application may be directly made to the Commandant of Brigade or Garrison in the nearest place, so that troops may be immediately despatched.

Art. XXVIII.—A Governor or President may, if he deems it necessary, establish a branch prison with the sanction of the Governor-General.

TAX COLLECTION IN FORMOSA.

Notification is given that regulations for dealing with inhabitants in Formosa whose taxes are in arrear, have been established by the Formosan Government and sanctioned by the Emperor. The text of the regulations is as follows:—

LAW NO. 5 OF THE FORMOSAN GOVERNMENT OFFICE.

REGULATIONS FOR DEALING WITH TAXES IN ARREARS.

Art. I.—If any person fails to pay his taxes (customs duties excepted) on the expiration of the period of payment, distress shall be levied on his property, and taxes collected out of the proceeds of the sale thereof. Should no buyer be found, the property shall be bought by the Government, and its value appropriated for the payment of taxes in arrear. If, however, it is deemed in the cases mentioned above that the proceeds of the sale will not be sufficient to cover the taxes in arrear, the process of distraint may be withheld.

Art. II.—If the person failing to pay the tax or any third person, shall complete the payment before his property under distrain is sold, the process enforced for distraint shall be withdrawn.

Art. III.—The obligation of persons whose taxes are in arrear shall end with the conclusion of the procedure prescribed by these Regulations. This provision shall also apply to cases when distraint is withheld in accordance with the 2nd clause of Article I.

Art. IV.—In carrying out the procedure with regard to taxes in arrear, any money shortly falling due for taxes shall be collected, together with the taxes in arrear.

(NOTE.—Such money, however, shall be limited to the amount payable in the next period of collection.)

Art. V.—Taxes in arrear shall take precedence of all other liabilities. This provision is equally applicable in the case of taxes for which the period of payment has not yet arrived, but where the taxpayer has had execution at law or a declaration of bankruptcy in consequence of his other liabilities, or has become liable to be dealt with by these Regulations.

Art. VI.—When officers concerned enter the dwellings, godowns, or other buildings owned by persons whose taxes remain unpaid, for the purpose of distraint, they shall present certificates from a local Governor showing their official capacity.

Art. VII.—Any debtor, who has received notice of distraint is under obligation to pay his debts to the officers, and any procedure carried against him before such obligation is fulfilled shall have no legal effect.

Art. VIII.—Any person who is entrusted with the protection of the property under distraint shall not resist distraint, but the expenses for protection shall be borne by the person who failed to pay the taxes.

Art. IX.—If, in distraining property owned by persons whose taxes are in arrear, any goods are found to have been previously pawned or mortgaged, the same must be delivered by the mortgagees to the officers concerned.

Art. X.—The procedure in regard to taxes in arrear is not to be interfered with by any temporary stoppage carried out by a law court.

Art. XI.—The following articles shall be exempted from distraint:—(1) Clothing, bedding, furniture, and kitchen utensils, which are absolutely indispensable for sustenance of the defaults and his family. (2) Food and fuel for one month, necessary for consumption by the above. (3) Personal seals and things necessary to professional occupation. (4) Stone tablets, burial grounds, and articles for use in worship or religious service. (5) Genealogical chronicles, diaries, and other documents indispensable to the family. (6) Uniforms, religious costumes, and judicial robes necessary for personal position or profession. (7) Decorations and other marks of honour. (8) Books and instruments necessary for the education of any member of the family. (9) Inventions or literary works not yet made public.

Art. XII.—Any person who, in view of distraint, conceals or withdraws his property, or enters upon a false contract, shall be sentenced to major imprisonment for a term of not less than 1 month and not more than 2 years, or to a fine of from 30 yen to 500 yen. This provision shall also apply to the overseer of property who concealed, withdrew, or purposely injured the same. Any person who knowingly assisted or consents to enter into a false contract of the kind indicated in the preceding clause shall be punished.

APPENDIX.

Art. XIII.—These Regulations shall also be applied, for the time being, to all Government taxes.

Art. XIV.—The penalties embodied in Law No. 10 of the 28th year of Meiji shall be abolished from the date of the operation of these Regulations.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. HATOYAMA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—In the issue of the Mail of to-day the speech of Mr. Hatoyama, made to the members of the Constitutional Party on the 22nd instant, is summarised. In your stricture upon the speech you say "that to call the makers of modern Japan useless and talentless must impart an element of extreme absurdity to the whole of the meeting's proceedings."

There was in the speech of Mr. Hatoyama, as given in the Mail, more than an element of absurdity. An element which must give to every foreign who reads it grim reflections that can but modify what faith he may have entertained relative to the progress made by the Japanese in civilization. That Mr. Hatoyama thought it nesessary to advise his hearers that "there must be no violence; no assassination" in their methods of antagonizing the Government would indicate that he thought it timely to do so. When it is taken into consideration that Mr. Hatoyama was not addressing a mixed crowd of irresponsible fellows but that he was advising with the better class of his countrymen; responsible members of the communities they represented; men who assume that they are competent to guide the political future of the Empire: who assume to be better than the members of the present Cabinet in politics and political honesty; the caution given them not to resort to violence or assassination has a deep significance. Would any member of any respectable party in England or in the United States of America, were he in antagonism with the Government, think it of importance that he should counsel the members of his party not to resort to assassination to overthrow the Ministry? It speaks well for Mr. Hatoyama that he disapproves of the crime of assassination, the most cowardly of all crimes, but in what light does it place his hearers? It must be supposed that he knew his company and that he feared some of them would resort to assassination if not restrained. Consorting with men who have to be reminded that they must not resort to assassination to obtain political supremacy should be repugnant to every lover of his good name. It is to be hoped that the advice of Mr. Hatoyama will be heeded by his compatriots.

Yours, X.

SUICIDE IN YOKOHAMA.

On Thursday morning, about 3.30, a woman named Yoko, 83 years old, mother of a man named Shimoda Mimekichi, living at No. 53, Ishikawa, 7-chome, Yokohama, committed suicide by jumping into a well. Deceased, who is supposed to have been insane, has been suffering for five years.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

GIRLS' HIGH SCHOOL.

An interesting ceremony took place on Thursday at the Girls' High School, 48 Bluff, the presentation of prizes to successful scholars being made by the Rev. E. Champneys Irwine. A good many parents put in an appearance, and the scholars and their little friends, boys and girls, in pretty summer costumes, made a verry happy party. The formal procedings were of a very simple character. Mrs. Cahusac prefaced the presentation of the prizes with a few remarks on the progress and work of the school. She said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—I should like to say a few words first to explain the awarding of the prizes. They have been given strictly according to the marks obtained. The conduct prize is given for marks for good conduct, and includes, besides general good conduct, good behaviour during prayers and Scripture reading; punctuality, and neatness. The class prize is given for marks obtained in class since Christmas, and for the late examinations, and here I wish to thank the teachers past and present, both on my own behalf, and that of the girls, for so kindly giving prizes for various subjects, and thus much increasing each girl's chance of winning one; of course, as we go strictly by marks, absence from any cause, is much regretted. Una Brockelbank and Muriel Harington have both unfortunately been ill; Lily Preston too lost a week this term. As to the work of the school I will say very little, as it must be judged by results. We have gone on quietly and steadily, and I think on the whole good work has been done, and progress made by the girls. Annie Bunting, who is top of the school, has done very well; all her papers are good and thorough; Lily Preston too, who is 2nd, deserves mention, being a good steady worker, and for having made very good progress since she came here. Alice and Edna Mendelson and Elsie Esdale, who are 1st in the II., III., and IV. classes respectively, will be moved up to a higher class, and I think in some cases the next one will have to be moved up too. I take this opportunity of thanking my teachers, and particularly Miss Leach, for their able assistance. I am sorry to have to record the loss of Miss Lucy Wilkin and Miss Annie Moss as teachers in the School; but am also glad to say their places are well filled with such capable teachers as I have found in Miss Ross, and Miss Mary Wilson, and Miss Carst. Miss Griffin has been absent the last two months owing to the illness of her sister, but we hope, and not only selfishly, to see her among us again soon. I heartily thank you all for coming to-day. A little outside interest is a great help and encouragement to teachers and children alike, and to the parents of my girls I should like to say that I hope you all look on me as not only the teacher but also the friend of your children, and that you will at all times come freely to me about any little matter concerning their welfare in the school.

The Rev. E. Champneys Irwine then, after a happy and appropriate little speech, handed the prizes to the following:—

CONDUCT PRIZES.—Class I. Annie Bunting; Class II. Alice Mendelson; Class III. Edna Mendelson; Class IV., 1 Elsie Esdale, 2 Marion Watson and Iris Irwine. Certificates—Florence Wales, Edith Wilson and Edith Bunting.

CLASS PRIZES.—Class I., 1 Annie Bunting, 2 Lily Preston; Class II. Alice Mendelson; Class III. (a) Edna Mendelson; Class III. (b) Bertie Cahusac; Class IV. Elsie Esdale. Certificates—Vera Irwine, and Edith Bunting.

FRENCH PRIZES (Presented by Miss E. B. Leach—Div. I. Annie Bunting; Div. II. Alice Mendelson; Div. III. Gerald Irwine; Div. IV. Pauline Cleveland. Certificates—Florence Wales, Lily Preston, Edna Mendelson, and Elsie Esdale.

GERMAN PRIZES.—Div. I. Ettie Kuhn; Div. II. Lily Preston.

DRAWING PRIZES (Presented by Miss A. Moss).—Div. I. Ettie Kuhn; Div. II. Edith Bunting; Div. III. Bertie Cahusac. Certificates.—Lily Preston, Annie Bunting, Gerald Irwine, and Iris Irwine.

SINGING PRIZES (Presented by Miss E. B. Leach).—Div. I. Bessie Burns; Div. II. Gerald Irwine; Div. III. Iris Irwine. Certificates.—Lily Preston, Edna Mendelson, and Leslie McWilliams.

NEEDLEWORK PRIZES (Presented by Miss L. Wilkin).—Edith Wilson.

PRIZE for Improvement in Music.—Florence Wales.

At the close of the distribution cheers were raised for the Principal, and the rest of the evening was spent in games which the youngsters entered into with a vigour that cared nothing for eighty odd Fahrenheit.

THE "PATROCLUS"-"MELPOMENE" CASE.

In H.B.M.'s Court for Japan on Wednesday afternoon, His Honour Judge Wilkinson heard arguments of counsel in the case of the owners and Captain of the Austrian Lloyds steamer Melpomene and the owners of the British steamer Patroclus. The case had been referred to the Registrar to assess damages, and both parties now appeal from the Registrar's decision.

Mr. F. J. Lowder appeared for the plaintiffs, and Mr. A. B. Walford was for the defendants.

The Judge said he would take the objections of the plaintiffs first.

Mr. Lowder—I have received notice from the other side of the intention of the defendants to ask for special leave to use certain evidence, and it seems to me that it would be more convenient if that were disposed of first.

Mr. Walford—There is another question. It will be difficult to argue this case unless we know what evidence can be used. I have taken objection against some evidence taken before the Registrar. There are therefore two questions of evidence.

The Judge—I will hear you first as to the evidence you wish to introduce. You wish to introduce the evidence of Antonio Auguste Martinolich, who is one of the plaintiffs in this action?

Mr. Walford—Yes, and I wish to use his evidence as admissions which are to some extent inconsistent with the portion of the claim which is the subject of the enquiry. That evidence I endeavoured to get in before the Registrar, but he ruled that it was inadmissible.

Mr. Lowder objected to this. He submitted that it would be regular for the application to be supported by affidavit and not merely by a statement of counsel as to his remembrance of what might have occurred.

The Judge, however, said that he had made it a rule to discard affidavits except when they were quite necessary. In some cases of course it was imperative that they should be filed, but when it was a matter that rested on the recollection of counsel, and there was not likely to be any dispute as to fact, he thought it desirable that they should be allowed to make a statement—subject of course to the right of correction on the other side.

Mr. Lowder—It is possible that the recollections of counsel may not be the same, and it is also possible that the recollection of the Registrar may not be the same.

The Judge—I have the Registrar's own notes of the evidence. I think affidavits should be resorted to as little as possible. The rule of the English Courts has been to object to Registrars making affidavits; their feeling is that the Registrar's word is good enough. It is the same sentiment that I feel.

Mr. Walford then proceeded with his application, observing that he had made an application to the Registrar for the admission of this evidence and it had been refused. The matter first arose during the plaintiff's case, and the Registrar was then so strongly against him (Mr. Walford) that when his own case came on he hesitated to go to the expense of having the copy of the evidence certified. He contended that the matter came under Order 33 Rule 25 of the Supreme Court Rules, which stated that all evidence taken at the hearing or trial of any cause or matter may be used in any subsequent proceeding in the same cause or matter. He urged that these rules applied in England to the Court of Admiralty as to the other Courts, the Supreme Court of Justice including the Admiralty Division. The grounds on which the Registrar ruled that this was inadmissible was that in Rule 56 there was no reference to any such evidence being admitted, Rule 56 referring to Admiralty alone.

The Judge—Just read me any case you have.

Mr. Walford—I have no case to adduce—only the common practice in Chancery. But this is not the only ground. If the decision of the Registrar be supported on that particular ground, there is another ground for introducing this. According to the same Rule 56, the rules which apply to ordinary appeals apply here.

The Judge—This is an application to admit this evidence on special grounds. Granting for the moment that the Registrar was right in his refusal there are other grounds which you would put forward that it may be admitted?

Mr. Walford—For this reason, that it is a matter of natural justice. I say that the claim now made by the plaintiff is inconsistent with the statement made by him at a previous period, and therefore I ask him now to reproduce this statement. The admissions of the plaintiff, whether they were made in the street, or on the ship, or anywhere, were relevant to the enquiry, and were admissible as evidence.

The Judge—He is one of the plaintiffs, and not a witness?

Mr. Walford—No, if it had been a witness my case would not have been so strong. I should not have been able to apply on the second ground.

Mr. Lowder, in replying, enumerated the rules which affected the case, and argued that the rules Mr. Walford had quoted had no application to Admiralty cases.

The Judge—Can you refer me to any particular case in which this has been decided with regard to Admiralty?

Mr. Lowder—I don't know whether the matter has arisen except in two cases with regard to the question of costs.

Mr. Lowder further argued that the reference to the Registrar was not "the same cause or matter" as the action, and did not therefore come under the rule quoted by Mr. Walford; and he further took the objection that there was not the usual two days' notice at the hearing before the Registrar of defendants' intention to call for this evidence.

The Judge agreed that there should have been notice.

Mr. Lowder then quoted the rules of the Japan Court, and particularly referred to Rule 246, which dealt with cases of witnesses who were dead, or insane, or unavoidably absent (which was the case with the present witness), and which stated that the Court may receive "proof" of any evidence given in any former judicial proceedings. That proof might be given by affidavit, viva voce, or by admission. He submitted that it was a fact which wanted legal proof like any other fact; and the only means to prove it was to bring a witness as to what took place or file an affidavit. The Judge's notes were the private property of the Court of Appeal and counsel could not of right claim access to them.

The Judge said he might point out the difference between notes taken in that Court and notes taken in other Courts. Where there were any other provisions made they were the private property of the Judge and they might be burnt or destroyed; they had no place in the records of the court. But by the order referring to courts like the one of Japan they were ordered to be kept, and to form part of the records of the Court.

Mr. Lowder—I think the same distinction is made at home between the High Court and the County Courts. He submitted that defendants had no right to inspect the notes without an order.

Mr. Lowder was proceeding with the argument as to the admissibility of further evidence when the Judge intervened, and said that the inclination of his own mind was to admit any evidence that should be admitted. Whatever might have been the mistaken view of counsel in making his application if they could lay aside technicalities and admit the evidence that ought to be admitted he thought they should do so. He thought it was only right and proper in the interests of both parties. He did not agree with the Registrar in his refusal to accept the evidence, but he agreed that he had good grounds for doing so at the time he refused it.

Mr. Lowder said in that case he must ask for the usual notice to be given him and for the costs of that argument.

The Judge said he should reserve the question of costs.

Mr. Walford, with reference to the question of notice to which his Honour had alluded, said there was nothing in the procedure to state that notice was necessary in a case of this kind.

The Judge—Then I decide that notice must be given. It is in the very nature of things that you must give notice. As to the question of costs I will not go into it now. You have succeeded in your application so far. I order that Mr. Martinolich's evidence be admitted.

Mr. Walford then proceeded with his objections to the evidence of Mr. Wilson and Captain Efford, whose evidence had been taken before the Registrar.

The Judge—I think I may say there are two questions—the question of its admissibility and that of its weight. I will say that you have a good deal to contend against if you say it is not admissible at all.

Mr. Walford considered the evidence quite inadmissible.

His Honour—I may say I take as much notice of the evidence of Captain Efford as if any one had said in cross-examination that he considered the plaintiff was entirely right and the defendant was entirely wrong. He thought his evidence was admissible, but that it had no weight whatever. A general statement unaccompanied with grounds was of very little account against evidence given as to details. He also thought Mr. Wilson's evidence was of no more value than his (the Judge's) would be.

Digitized by Google
Digitized from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Mr. Walford—Of course they acted quite bonâ fide.

The Judge—Of course, we are all sure of that.

Mr. Walford thereupon withdrew his objections, and the case was adjourned to next Wednesday at 10 30.

LATEST TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

THE WAR.

INSURGENTS STILL FIGHTING.

AMERICAN TROOPS EXPECTED DAILY.

THE GERMAN FLEET.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Manila, June 23 (via Shanghai, June 27).

The Insurgents are still fighting in the districts around Manila. The American troops are expected daily. The U.S.S. Boston has left to meet them, with provisions, at Bolinao. The presence of five German cruisers here is exciting much comment. The British Admiral is sending the Bonaventure, Narcissus, and Iphigenia.

ARRIVAL OF H.M.S. "BONAVENTURE."

BRITISH PROTECTING CHINESE.

Later.

H.M.S. Bonaventure has arrived. Mr. Vice-Consul Ramsden, accompanied by Mr. Cunningham, arrived here this morning from Malabon, where the Consul had gone to rescue fifty Chinese families from the clutches of the insurgents.

(FROM THE "JAPAN TIMES.")

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT AT HONGKONG.

London, June 25.

Mr. Chamberlain, in the House of Commons, stated that the Government has decided to sanction the re-enactment of the Hongkong Contagious Diseases Act.

AMERICANS ADVANCING.

The Americans have advanced inland in Cuba and are occupying the country to the extent of six miles. Admiral Sampson is landing big guns and camp paraphernalia.

SPANISH PHILIPPINE EXPEDITION.

In the Cortes, the Minister of Marine announced that Admiral Camara's Squadron is going to the Philippines.

SPANISH SQUADRON IN SIGHT AT LAST.

London, June 27.

The Spanish Fleet has been sighted at Port Said.

SHARP FIGHTING:—BOTH SIDES CLAIM VICTORY.

AMERICANS STILL ADVANCING.

A force of one thousand dismounted American cavalry attacked two thousand Spaniards in the bush five miles from Santiago and drove the Spaniards to the city. The American losses were thirteen killed and fifty wounded, including six officers. The Americans are constantly advancing, although the troops are greatly fatigued with the heat and forced marches. They are now eight miles from Santiago.

The Spanish official despatch says that the Americans attacked the Spanish camp, but were repulsed. It adds that the Spanish losses were seven killed and twenty-seven wounded, including three officers.

MADRID EXCITED.

TURBULENT CORTES SUMMARILY CLOSED.

The news of the American landing has excited intense agitation at Madrid. Senor Sagasta has prorogued the Cortes owing to heated and futile debates.

STRENGTH OF SPANISH SQUADRON.

CAMARA COAL-STARVED AT PORT SAID.

London, June 28.

Admiral Camara's squadron consists of two ironclads, two cruisers, three torpedo boats, and five transports, carrying 4,000 troops. The Egyptian Government has refused to allow the squadron to coal at Port Said. Pending further orders the ships remain there.

SPANISH PORTS TO BE BOMBARDED AND CAMARA PURSUED.

The New York Herald states that the Government is sending a fleet under Admiral Schley to bombard Spanish ports and pursue Camara. The Spanish are actively preparing for defence.

FOUR THOUSAND AMERICANS SAIL FOR MANILA.

CAMARA ORDERED TO SUEZ.

London, June 29.

Four transports conveying the third expedition, consisting of four thousand men, have left San Francisco for Manila. Admiral Camara has been ordered to proceed to Suez. It is reported that arrangements have been made for colliers to meet the squadron in the Red Sea or elsewhere.

OFF TO THE SPANISH MAIN.

Commodore Watson has been appointed in command of the squadron bound for Spain, which consists of three ironclads, four cruisers, and three colliers.

SANTIAGO TO BE STARVED OF WATER.

MERRITT LEAVES SAN FRANCISCO.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT FOR MANILA.

London, June 30.

It is reported from New York that the Americans have cut the watermains supplying Santiago. General Merritt left San Francisco yesterday. He is to hurry to Manila and on arrival is ordered to issue a proclamation announcing the establishment of a Provisional Government.

BLOCKADE ALL ALONG THE LINE.

President McKinley has proclaimed an extensive blockade of the whole of the southern coast of Cuba, also San Juan de Puerto Rico.

THE FRENCH MINISTERIAL CRISIS.

ANOTHER FAILURE AT CABINET-MAKING.

London, June 27.

M. Peytral has failed to form a Ministry. President Faure has summoned M. Brisson.

FRENCH MINISTRY FORMED.

London, June 29.

M. Brisson has completed a Cabinet. M. Brisson takes the Premiership and the portfolio of the Interior, M. Cavaignac becomes Minister of War, M. Delcasse of Foreign Affairs, and M. Geycal of Finance.

CHINA'S INLAND WATERWAYS.

ENGLAND INSISTS ON ADEQUATE ARRANGEMENTS.

London, June 30.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Curzon stated that the Government would insist on the Chinese Government revising the regulations for inland navigation in a satisfactory sense.

(Received by the Fiji)

OFFICIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Peking, June 24.

Wang Wên-shao has been appointed Minister of War, in place of Wang Tung-hwo, who has been relieved of his office; and Yung Luh has been promoted Minister of the North Sea and Viceroy of Chihli (the offices formerly held by Wang Wên-shao).

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

Peking, June 25.

The Chinese Government has announced amendments in the regulations relating to civil service examinations.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CHINESE NAVY.

Peking, June 27.

It is a fact that negotiations between England and China concerning improvements in the Chinese Navy have made fair progress, but no similar negotiation with respect to the army yet exists.

(FROM THE "SHANGHAI MERCURY'S" CORRESPONDENT.)

Manila, 17th June:—Hongkong, 20th June.

NATIVE TROOPS MURDER THEIR OFFICERS.

The Carbineros, Customs Native Troops, who were thought to be loyal, have murdered their Spanish officers and in a body joined the Insurgents.

MANILA SURROUNDED.

CALOCAN CAPTURED.

The insurgents now completely surround Manila, having succeeded in capturing Calocan and all the suburbs.

SPANISH EXPECTED TO SURRENDER.

It is believed here that the Spanish will surrender on the arrival of troops from the United States. Food of all kinds is very scarce. Buffalo meat is selling at eighty cents per pound.

BRITISH CONSUL OFFERS TO RESCUE WIFE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The British Consul has offered to rescue the wife and the family of General Augustin, the Governor-General, who have been made prisoners, and other Spanish ladies of the Province of Pampanga. British Vice-Consul Ramsden, accompanied by myself, volunteered personally to perform this mission, to which General Augustin consented, but Aguinaldo, the Insurgent Chief, was unable to give us a permit to do so, as the Province was not in his entire possession.

MAIL STEAMERS.

THE NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Tacoma, Wash...	N. P. Co.	Victoria 1	Sa. July 2
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co	Em. of Japan 2	M. July 4
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rosetta 3	M. July 4
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Hohenzollern 4	M. July 4
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Aztec	W. July 6
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of India	Th. July 7
America	O. & O. Co.	Belgic 5	Th. July 7
Hongkong	M. M. Co.	—	W. July 13
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Doric	Th. July 14
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Tacoma	Th. July 14

1 Left Victoria on the 27th inst.
2 Left Vancouver on the 21st June.
3 Left Hongkong on the 26th inst.
4 Left Hongkong on the 29th June
5 Left San Francisco on the 28th June

THE NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Victoria	Su. July 3
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	M. July 4
Europe, via S'hai.	M. M. Co.	Oceanien	W. July 6
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Saikio Maru	W. July 6
America	P. M. Co.	Aztec	Th. July 7
Hongkong	N. D. L.	Hohenzollern	F. July 8
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of India	F. July 8
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Belgic	F. July 8
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rosetta	W. July 13
Tacoma, Wash...	N. P. Co.	Tacoma	F. July 15
America	O. & O. Co.	Doric	Sa July 16

Digitized by Google
Digitized from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHESS.

All Communications to be addressed to the CHESS EDITOR.

The Yokohama and the Tokyo Chess Clubs are closed during the summer months.

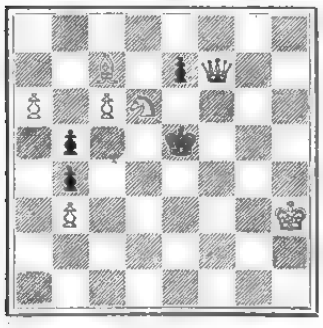
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 373.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1—Q to Q 8	1—B to Q 2 or Kt 2
2—P to B 8=Q or R mate
	1—P to R 4
2—Kt to Q 4, mate
	1—P to K 3
2—Q to Q 6, mate
	1—K to B 3
2—Kt to R 5, mate
	1—R to Kt sq
2—P takes R=Kt, mate
	1—Kt moves
2—P to R 5 mate

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., D.D., Macco, and Miss S.

PROBLEM No. 377.
By Dr. A. MUSIL.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White mates in three moves.

GAME No. 403
THE UNITED STATES CHAMPION MATCH.
NINTH GAME.

White—Pillsbury. Black—Showalter.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P Q4	P Q4	25 BxQKtP	R R2
2 P QB4	P K3	26 KtxKt	QxKt
3 Kt QB3	Kt KB3	27 B K4	R(R2) Q2
4 B Kt5	B K2	28 P R3	QxQ
5 P K3	QKt Q2	29 PxQ	R Q8(f)
6 Kt B3	Castles	30 RxR	RxRch
7 B Q3(a)	PxP(b)	31 K R2	P B4(g)
8 BxP	P B4	32 B Kt7	K B3(h)
9 QR Bsq	P QR3	33 P QB4	R QB8
10 P QR4	Kt Kt3	34 RxB(i)	PxR
11 B R2	PxP	35 PxP	R QR8(k)
12 PxP	Kt(B3) Q4	36 P R6	K K2
13 BxB	QxB	37 P Kt6	K Q3
14 P R5	KtxKt	38 P R7	K B4
15 RxKt	Kt Q4	39 P R8(Q)	RxQ
16 R B5	B Q2	40 BxR	KxP
17 Castles	B Kt4(c)	41 K Kt3	P K4
18 R K-q	Kt Kt5	42 B Q5	P R3
19 B Ksq	KR Q q	43 B B7	P Kt4
20 Q Kt3	Kt B3	44 B K6	P B5ch
21 Q B2	P KKt3	45 K B3	K B4
22 Q B3	Q B3(d)	46 K K4	K Q3
23 B K4	KtxP(e)	47 B B5	P R4
24 K R-q	K K2	48 B Kt6(l)	Resigns

Notes (abridged) by Emil Remeny in The Ledger, Philadelphia.

(a) In the fifth game of the match Pillsbury played P takes P, followed B to Q 3. The play is quite ingenious, but it has the disadvantage of giving the Black Q B a quick development. R to Q B sq or B to Q 3, as played in the present game, seems, preferable.

(b) Identically the same moves were played in the cable match between Burn and Showalter.

(c) Black's game is not endangered, yet the defence is not an easy one. Better, perhaps, was Q R to B sq, followed by exchange of Rooks.

(d) Better, perhaps, was Q to Q 3. The move selected has the disadvantage of preventing Black from moving the Kt after Kt takes P has been played.

(e) Much better was ■ takes Kt. Black then could double Rooks on the Queen's file.

(f) Black's game looks satisfactory, yet there is some danger.

(g) ■ to Q 3, followed by B to Q 2, K B 3 and K to K 2, would have given Black a pretty safe game, and there was hardly any chance for White to break through.

(h) Black still had the R to Q 3, followed eventually by B to Q 2 and K to B 3 continuation on hand. He also could have played R to Q B8, and his game was not endangered. The text play is a grave oversight.

(i) The sacrifice is sound and forces a win for White.

(k) R to Kt 8 or R to ■ 4 was hardly any better. White's answer would have been P to R 6, R to R 7, and Queening of the Pawn.

(l) Which causes Black to surrender. If P to R 5, then K B 5 and K takes Kt P, otherwise B takes P and B to Kt 4 brings about a similar result.

GAME No. 404.

Vienna has proved victorious in an Evan Gambit—one of the two games carried on by correspondence with St. Petersburg. The moves are given below.

White—St. Petersburg. Black—Vienna.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	18 Q B q	KtxP
2 KKt B3	QKt B3	19 KtxKt	B Q4
3 B B4	B B4	20 K Kt3	P KB4
4 P QKt4	BxQKtP	21 QKt Q2	P B5ch
5 P B3	B R4	22 K Kt2	Q R4ch
6 Castles	P Q3	23 K R-q	Q R4
7 P Q4	B Kt3	24 Q B3	BxP
8 P QR4	Kt B3	25 Q Q3	BxR
9 B QKt5	P QR3	26 RxB	QxKP
10 BxKtch	PxB	27 R KKt-q	QR Kt-q
11 P R5	B R2	28 R Kt2	Q R4
12 Q R4	PxP	29 K Ksq	BxKt
13 PxP	B Q2	30 KtxB	Q Q4
14 P K5	Kt Q4	31 Q B3	R Kt8ch
15 B R3	Castles	32 Kt K-q	Q Q5
16 Q B4	Kt B5	33 ■ Kt2	P B4
17 K R-q	B K3	Resigns

NOTES.

Information has reached London, says the Literary Digest, that Pillsbury will attend the Vienna Tournament. If so, then we may expect the American to be on top at the end. A very interesting proposal has been put forward by American chess players for the consideration of the committee of the Vienna International Tournament. It is to the effect that advantage should be taken of the presence of players from all countries, in order to fix upon an international chess code. The idea deserves to be taken up, as universal chess laws are badly wanted, and any laws which, after due discussion, would be accepted by the competitors at the Vienna Tournament would also be satisfactory to the chess world at large.

"King's Pawn" tells the following strange story in the Straits Times:—

Of all the queer characters I have met over the chess board, there is not one to compare with "Amara Couta." He was a man between forty and fifty, with a shaggy beard and rugged features, and the most astonishing thing about him was that he had a very pretty wife who was barely seventeen. She was a Filipino, and he had wedded her in Manila. It appeared that they were on their way to Armenia, the birthplace of "Amara Couta." The queerest thing about this man was that he worked himself into a great state of excitement whenever one of his Knights was threatened, and the surest step to defeat him was to exchange them early in the game. The way he fondled his Knights was a sight to see. One day the man fairly lost his temper when I took both his Knights; his eyes gleamed and, while he was swearing in Armenian, I thought he looked like a person suffering from hydrophobia. Up to this moment I do not know his name, but we all called him "Amara Couta," which was a favourite expression of his own and which means "my horse." I am told that both "Amara Couta," and his wife came to a tragic end in Armenia.

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Almond Branch, British steamer, 2,191, Anderson, 25th June,—Rangoon via Kobe, 23rd June, Rice.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Irene, German steamer, 2,145, Schüler, 25th June, —Hamburg via ports, Hongkong, 18th June, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Rockhurst, British barque, 1,400, Thomas, 25th June,—Beaufort, S.C., 2nd Jan., Phosphate Rock.—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Gaelic, British steamer, 2,690, Wm. Finch, 25th June,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 24th June, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Celtic Monarch, British ship, 1,982, George Morrison, 26th June,—Middlesborough, 5th Feb., Coke and Pig Iron.—Captain.

Glenmark, British barque, 1,257, Johnson, 26th June,—Antwerp, 6th Jan., Coke and Pig Iron. —Captain.

Ural, Norwegian steamer, 1,968, Hansen, 26th June,—Kobe, 24th June, General.—Shewan Tomes & Co.

Yamaguchi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,910, P. H. Going, 27th June,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 25th June, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hector, British steamer, 3,005, John Barr, 29th June,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe, 28th June, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Oceanien, French steamer, 2,080, R. Schmitz, 29th June,—Marseilles via ports, Kobe, 27th June, Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Argyll, British steamer, 1,886, W. Ward, 30th June,—Portland, Oregon, 12th June, Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Barfleur (14), British Battleship, 10,500, Capt. R. N. Custance, 30th June,—Hakodate via Sendai Bay, 26th June.

Grafton (12), British Cruiser, 7,350, Capt. E. P. Jones, 30th June,—Hakodate via Sendai Bay, 26th June.

Undaunted (12), British Cruiser, 5,600, Capt. A. C. Clarke, 30th June,—Hakodate via Sendai Bay, 26th June.

Fame (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 280, Lt. H. A. Gillett, 30th June,—Hakodate via Sendai Bay, 26th June.

Hart (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 260, Lt. and Com. H. F. Shakespear, 30th June,—Hakodate via Sendai Bay, 26th June.

Shanghai, British steamer, 2,163, Peters, 30th June,—London via ports, Kobe, 29th June, General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.

Duntrune, British ship, 1,456, Winterton, 30th June,—Hamburg, Salt.—Otto Reimers & Co.

Paclolus, American barque, 1,585, S. Watts, 30th June,—New York, 11th Feb., Kerosene Oil.—Standard Oil Co.

Aggi, Norwegian steamer, 2,129, H. Hatteberg, 1st July,—New York via Suez Canal and way ports, Kobe, 29th June, General.—China and Japan Trading Co.

Palladon Hall, British steamer, 2,206, Jeffells, 1st July,—New York via Suez Canal and way ports, Kobe, 29th June, General.—Frazar & Co.

Tantalus, British steamer, 2,299, Hannah, 1st July,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe, 30th June, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Saikio Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,652, G. W. Conner, 1st July,—Shanghai viâ ports, 25th June, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Moyune, British steamer 3,016, R. Couradi, 1st July,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe, 30th June, General.—Strachan & Co.

Victoria, British steamer, 1,991, J. Trenbridge, 2nd July—Tacoma, Wash., and Victoria, B.C., 17th June, Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlil & Co.

DEPARTURES.

Sanuki Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,682, W. Townsend, 25th June,—Marseilles, London and Antwerp via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Powerful (14), British Cruiser, 14,200, Capt. Hon. Hedworth Lambton, 25th June,—Hongkong.

Rikun Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,010, A. E. Moses, 27th June,—Hongkong via ports, General—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Queen Adelaide, British steamer, 1,835, McNair, 28th June,—Moji via Kobe, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Gaelic, British steamer, 2,690, Wm. Finch, 28th June—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Miike Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,053, S. Kawamura, 28th June,—Bombay via ports, General. —Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Rohilla, British steamer, 2,216, L. de B. Luckyer, 29th June,—Hongkong via Kobe and Nagasaki, Mails & General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.

Yamaguchi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,910, P. H. Going, 29th June,—Seattle, Washington, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Satsuma Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,157, G. Shimazu, 29th June,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ural, Norwegian steamer, 1,968, Hansen, 29th June,—San Francisco, General. —Shewan Tomes & Co.

Banjo Kan (4), Japanese Gunboat, 667, Lieut.-Capt. I. Takakuwa, 29th June,—Yokosuka.

Windsbrant, German barque, 1,253, H. Haase, 29th June,—Portland, Oregon, Ballast.—T. M. Laffin.

Irene, German steamer, 5,145, Schüler, 1st July, —Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.— C. Illies & Co.

Labuan, British steamer, 2,293, J. S. Gardner, 1st July,—Moji, Ballast.—Jardine Matheson & Co.

Fortuna, Norwegian steamer, 1,921, Christopherson, 1st July,—Kobe, General.—Frazar & Co.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Almond Branch, British steamer, 2,191, Anderson, 1st July,—Kuchinoshu, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Alton, British steamer, 1,169, Wm. Nicholson, 1st July,—Kobe, Rails.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Argyll, British steamer, 1,886, W. Ward, 2nd July,—Hongkong via ports, General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Gaelic, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. H. Barrett, Mrs. P. Brady, Mr. E. C. Dalton, Dr. Hardie, Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Geisenberg, Mr. C. F. Kupfer, Mr. F. W. Koch, Mrs. A. Clark, Mr. McMahon, Mr. Schwarz, Mrs. Geisenberg, Miss H. Stone, Mr. A. Bannerman, Mr. F. Pocklington, Mrs. McMahon, Mr. Jensen, Capt. T. A. Christensen, and Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Lewis and 3 children, in cabin. For Honolulu:—Mr. Ah Wong, Mrs. Fedosief, and Mrs. Chun Shee, in cabin. For San Francisco:—Mr. G. R. Rottger, Mr. J. A. Selby, Mrs. Kwan Yug, Mrs. Lau, Mrs. Fam Sing, Mrs. Leung Hong Wa, Mr. G. S. Northcote, Mrs. E. C. Dalton, Mr. Jay Mon Tong, Mrs. E. T. Williams and child; Mr. and Mrs. W. Hayward and 2 children, Mrs. A. E. Flagg, Miss Daisy Flagg, Miss Ruby Flagg, Master G. Flagg, Mr. Chas. Brenner, Mrs. Hatton, Mr. J. K. Boyd, and Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Towson and 3 children, in cabin.

Per French steamer Oceanien, from Marseilles via ports:—Mr. Y. A. Brandenburg, Mr. M. Suzuki, Mr. Mizuno, Mr. Komii, Mr. Suzuki, Mr. Murata, Mr. Terada, Mr. E. Hohl, Mr. G. M. Saltarel, Mr. R. Kuronekina, Mr. O. Sasano, Mr. A. G. Dufitse, Mr. Y. Bell, Mr. Gomès, Mdme. C. Gaillard, two children and servant, Mr. C. Yungheou, Mr. S. Takahashi, Mr. H. Hemmauvitz, Mdme. Masiloky, Mr. Restsoff, Miss Jones, Mr. A. Yunker, Mr. Abenheim, Mr. Y. Kiene, Mdme. Kiene, and Mr. Pichon, in cabin.

Per British steamer Shanghai, from London via ports:—Mr. Oakes, Mrs. Bauvada, Mr. Sharp, and Assist. Paymaster Moore, R.N., in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Saikio Maru, from Shanghai via ports:—Mr. K. Fujita, Mr. C. Nishiwaki, Mr. K. Kisaki, Mr. K. Takenouchi, Mr. K. Kato, Mr. A. von Bassewitz, Mr. Schmisser, Mrs. Sargent, Miss Sargent, Master Sargent, Mr. F. B. Abenheim, Mr. F. Pooley, and Mr. and Mrs. Yen, in cabin; Mr. S. Muramatsu, Mrs. M. Kondo, Mr. K. Kataoka, Mrs. M. Miye, Mr. Panel Paporukoff, and Mr. H. Malm, in second class; 28 in insteerage.

DEPARTED.

Per Japanese steamer Sanuki Maru, for London via ports:—Commander I. Ishida (I.J.N.), Capt. G. Tanaka (I.J.N.), Chief Engineer S. Yedzuri (I.J.N.), Lieut. R. Hashi (I.J.N.), Mr. J. B. Briggs, Mr. W. W. Brown, and Mr. W. Salmond, in cabin; Mr. G. Iwai, Mr. S. Jacobson, Mr. K. Yagi, and Mr. Koh Boh Ren, in second class; 5 European, and 10 Japanese, in steerage.

Per British steamer Gaelic, for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. K. Ashida, Mr. Ah Wong, Mr. J. N. Boyd, Mr. Chas. Brenner, Mr. J. F. Brown, Mrs. Chun Shee, Miss A. Dyer, Mrs. E. C. Dalton, Mrs. A. E. Flagg, Master G. Flagg, Miss Daisy Flagg, Miss Ruby Flagg, Mr. C. M. Flandran, Mrs. Fedosief, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Griesenbeck, Miss Dorothy Hayward, Mr. R. M. Harrison, Mr. A. B. Hurlbert, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hurlbert, Mrs. E. G. Hurlbert, Miss Hurlbert, Mrs. Hatton, Mr. and Mr. W. Hayward and child, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Hetfield, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Jaisbon, child and servant, Mr. Jay Mon Tong, Mrs. Kwong Yug, Mr. T. Katsumura, Mr. John Henry Livingston, Miss Livingston, Miss A. H. Lee, Miss E. L. Lee, Mrs. Leung Hang Wa, Mrs. Lau I, Mr. A. B. Leslie Melville, Miss Alice Nielson, Mr. G. S. Northcote, Mr. R. G. Rottger, Mr. James A. Selby, Mr. H. E. Snagge, Mr. C. E. Spice, Mr. W. C. Tyler, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. von Treutler, infant and maid, Rev. and Mrs. W. E. Towson and child, Master Hatton Towson, Miss Marie Towson, Mrs. Tam Sim, Mr. Thos. H. Williams, Mr. Harry R. Williams, Mrs. E. T. Williams and infant, Mr. R. H. Walker, Mr. K. S. Walbank, and Mr. Alfred Wenz, in cabin.

Per British steamer Rohilla, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. Thomas Lamb, Mr. F. Coghill Jackson, Mr. Ernest Walker, Miss Danby, Master Wilkinson and European nurse, Miss Johnstone, Mr. O. Voigt, Mr. G. W. Bramhall, Master Osborne Bramhall, Mr. Jensen, Mr. G. Hodges, Miss Toye, and Mr. K. Kitashima, in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Satsuma Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—Mrs. Omstchenks and child, Mr. A. Ishaff, Mr. August Koeri, Mr. Seki, Mr. Thos. Inglis, Mr. Henry Foint, and Capt. Christensen, in cabin; Mr. W. Moore, Mrs. G. Iwami, and Mrs. T. Iwami, in second class; 60 Japanese, 4 Europeans, and 4 Chinese, in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Yamaguchi Maru, for Seattle, Washington:—Mr. J. H. Buxton, Jr., in cabin; 21 Japanese, and 15 Europeans, in steerage.

EXPECTED.

Ex German steamer Bayern per Hohenzollern, from Hongkong:—Mr. Hunter, in cabin.

CARGOES.

Following are the silk shippers per O. & O. steamer Gaelic, for San Francisco, June 28th:—

	Bales.
Bavier & Co.	50
Herbert Dent & Co.	36
Vivanti Bros.	15
O. Reimers & Co.	15
The Doshinsha	59
The Kiito Shokai	25
Total	200

Per British steamer Gaelic, for San Francisco, 28th June:—

TEA.

	SAN FRANCISCO.	NEW YORK.	CHICAGO.	MONTREAL.	PORTLAND.	BOSTON.	OTHER CITIES.	TOTAL.
Shanghai	3,851	834	714	—	87	—	—	5,486
Amoy	581	2,230	438	—	—	1,361	—	4,610
Hiogo	—	—	—	1,3[illegible]6	—	—	—	1,046
Y'hama	3,400	—	—	—	—	—	1,661	5,046
Hongkong	813	—	—	—	—	—	—	843
Total	8,675	3,064	1,152	1,046	87	1,361	1,661	17,046

SILK.

	SAN FRANCISCO.	NEW YORK.	HARTFORD.	TOTAL.
Shanghai	—	71	—	71
Hongkong	—	111	—	111
Yokohama	—	200	—	200
Total	—	382	—	382

Per British steamer Rohilla, for Hongkong via ports:—Raw Silk for Europe, 186 bales; Waste Silk for Europe, 129 bales.

The following are the shipments of tea and silk per N. Y. K.'s steamer Yamaguchi Maru, for Seattle, Wash., 29th June:—

TEA.

FROM.	SAN FRANCISCO.	MONTREAL.	BOSTON.	CANADA.	SEATTLE.	TOTAL.
Shanghai	—	—	—	—	—	—
Hiogo	—	1,085	457	595	—	2,137
Yokohama	—	—	—	—	130	130
Hongkong	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	—	1,085	457	595	130	2,267

SILK.

	SAN FRANCISCO.	NEW YORK.	HARTFORD.	TOTAL.
Shanghai	—	—	—	—
Hongkong	—	—	—	—
Yokohama	—	100	—	100
Total	—	100	—	100

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

The stagnation which has continued so long still shows no sign of giving way. In yarns and grey shirtings, fancy cottons and woollens there is no movement, and immense quantities still remain to be cleared.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

	PER PIECE.
Grey Shirtings—8½ lb, 38½ yds. 30 inches	$2.55 to 2.85
Grey Shirtings—9lb, 38½ yds. 45 inches	2.85 to 3.35
T. Cloth—7lb, 24 yards, 32 inches	1.80 to 2.00
Indigo Shirtings—12 yards, 44 inches	1.75 to 2.60
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches	2.00 to 3.75
Cotton—Italians and Sateens Black, 32 inches	PER YARD. 0.15 to 0.25

WOOLLENS.

	PER YARD.
Flannels	$0.30 to 0.50
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 34 inches best	0.28 to 0.41
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Medium	Nominal
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Common	Nominal
Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 21 yards, 30 inches	0.15 to 0.17
Cloths—Pilots, 51 @ 56 inches	0.35 to 0.50
Cloths—Presidents, 51 @ 56 inches	0.60 to 0.72½
Cloths—Union, 51 @ 56 inches	0.50 to 0.85
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5lb. per lb	0.50 to 0.60
	PER PIECE.
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	7.75 to 9.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 32-3 inches	0.60 to 1.00
Turkey Reds—2.0 to 3.0lb, 24/25 yards, 30 inches	1.25 to 2.20
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 4lb, 24/25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.50

COTTON YARNS.

	PER PICUL.
Nos. 16 24, Singles	$35.50 to 38.50
Nos. 28/32, Singles	39.00 to 41.50
Nos. 38/42, Singles	43.50 to 45.50
Nos. 32, Doubles	42.00 to 43.50
Nos. 42, Doubles	47.00 to 50.50
Nos. 2/60, Plain	61.00 to 63.00
Nos. 2/80, Plain	75.00 to 76.50
Nos. 2/100, Plain	97.00 to 99.00
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	69.50 to 76.50
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	85.00 to 90.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	114.00 to 124.00

RAW COTTON.

	PER PICUL.
American Middling	$19.50 to —
Indian Broach	19.25 —
Chinese	21.00 to 21.50

METALS.

The market, generally speaking, retains its depressed character, and there is at present no prospect of improvement. A few small sales of galvanised wire and wire nails are the only features.

	PER PICUL.
Round and square ¼ inch. and upward	3.85 to 4.10
Iron Plates, assorted	4.00 to 4.40
Sheet Iron	4.90 to 5.10
Galvanized Iron sheets	8.50 to 10.25
Wire Nails, assorted	5.90 to 6.10
Tin Plates, per box	5.70 to 5.90
Pig Iron, No. 1	2.08 to 2.—
Hoop Iron (⅛ to 1¼ inch)	5.00 to 5.25

KEROSENE.

Only a retail business is passing, and the market is quiet. Prices are at last week's level.

American	$2.06 —
Russian	1.93 to 2.05
Langkat	— 1.86

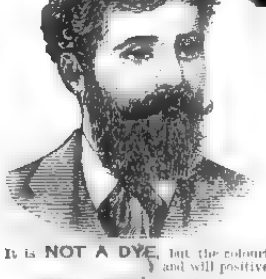
SUGAR.

Prices are about 10 sen lower in Chinas, but Manilas are rather higher. Quotations for Formosas show a decline of 45 sen per picul. In White refined the prices remain at last week's level, and the market is quite quiet.

	PER PICUL.
Brown Takao	$5.60 to 5.70
Brown Manila	5.50 to 6.30
Brown Daitong	4.25 to 4.30
Brown Canton	4.35 to 6.00
White Java and Penang	6.90 to 7.25
White Refined	7.70 to 9.60

EXPORTS.

There has been a moderate enquiry for new silk, and since the market opened a few fairly large purchases have been made. Yen 870 per picul has been given for No. 1 Filatures. It is generally thought the crop will be smaller than last year.



GREY WHISKERS

EYEBROWS, &c.

GEO. COURTICE'S

CONCENTRATED

EXTRACT OF NUT GALLS

Has been thoroughly tested and approved in all parts of the world for over a quarter of a Century.

It is NOT A DYE, but the colouring principle of the Nut Gall in a concentrated form, perfectly harmless, and will positively restore the colour true to nature in two hours.

NOTE.—Thirty years Professor of Hair Specifics to the Honourable Benchers of the Inner Temple.

GEO. COURTICE & CO.,

Laboratory, 8, Bishop's Court, Chancery Lane, London

(Late 234, STRAND).

PRICES: 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s. 6d., £1 1s. per BOTTLE.

This EXTRACT is INVALUABLE to LADIES, as it restores the Colour close to the Skin.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

RAW SILK.

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra 9/10, 10/12 den.....	Nominal
Filatures—Extra 13/15, 14/16 den.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1, 10/13 deniers	$870 to 880
Filatures—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1½, 10/14 deniers.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	880
Filatures—No. 2, 10/15 deniers.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	850
Re-reels—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 2½, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 3, 14/20 deniers.....	Nominal
Kakedas—Extra	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1½	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2½	Nominal

WASTE SILK.

For what transactions are doing, prices remain the same as last week. There is, however, practically no business passing. The stock at present is estimated at 3,490, piculs, 1,490 Noshi, 1,570 Kibiso, 430 sundries. Quotations (nominal) are as under.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filature, Best	$115 to 120
Noshi—Filature, Good	105 to 110
Noshi—Oshu, Best.....	110 to 115
Noshi—Oshu, Good	100 to 103
Noshi—Oshu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Shinshu, Best	70 to 75
Noshi—Shinshu, Good	65 to 67½
Noshi—Bushu, Best	115 to 120
Noshi—Bushu, Good.....	100 to 110
Noshi—Bushu, Medium.....	90 to 95
Noshi—Joshu, Good	60 to 65
Noshi—Joshu, Fair	55 to 57½
Kibiso—Filature, Best	95 to 100
Kibiso—Filature, Seconds	85 to 90
Kibiso—Joshu, Good	25 to 30
Kibiso—Bushu, Fair	20 to 22½

TEA.

The business continues brisk, the effects of the American duty having passed away. The first crop leaf has to all intents and purposes been finished, what has arrived so far of the second picking is of fairly good quality. Prices show a tendency to advance, for fine qualities, to the extent of three to four yen per picul. There is a large quantity still on offer.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	$33 & upwards
Choice	30 to 31
Finest	28 to 29
Fine	26 to 27
Good Medium	24 to 25
Medium	22 to 23
Good Common	20 to 21
Common	18 to 19

EXCHANGE.

Rates continue steady, and no change reported in silver from London.

Sterling—Bank T.T.	2/0½
— — Bills on demand ...	2/0 7/16
— — 4 months' sight	2 0½
— Private 4 months' sight	2 0⅝
— — 6 months' sight	2 0½
On Paris—Bank sight	2 55½
On Paris—Private 4 months' sight ...	2.59
On America—Bank Bills on demand .	49½
— Private 4 months' sight...	50⅛
On Germany—Bank sight	2.06½
— Private 4 months' sight...	2.10½
On Hongkong—Bank sight	5% dis.
— Private 10 days' sight.....	7/8 dis.
On Shanghai—Bank sight	78½
— Private 10 days' sight ...	80
On India—Bank sight	151
— Private 30 days' sight ...	156
Bar Silver (London)	27 1/16

Whispering in Beauty's Ear

The secret of preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, and hair to be found only in CUTICURA SOAP, greatest of skin purifying and beautifying soaps, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath, and nursery. The only preventive of unsightly blemishes, red, rough hands, and falling hair, because the only preventive of inflammation and clogging of the PORES

Sold throughout the world. British depot: FRANCIS NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Proprietors, Boston, U. S. A.

☞ Send to MESSRS. NEWBERY for "The Skin, Scalp, and Hair," a book of 64 pages, fully illustrated, with complete description and treatment, post free.

Trade Mark on WALTER MACFARLANE & C. GLASGOW SARACEN FOUNDRY every Casting.

Macfarlane's Castings,

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"SHARP, CLEAN, AND FULL OF CHARACTER."

ORNAMENTAL CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

VERANDAHS, BALCONIES, BANDSTANDS, ARCADES, KIOSKS, CONSERVATORIES, ROOFS,

RAILWAY STATIONS, BARRACKS, FACTORIES, PUBLIC WORKS, MARKETS, &c.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PILLARS, BRACKETS, AND WIRE WAYS.

NUMEROUS HEIGHTS AND DESIGNS TO SUIT THE DIFFERENT REQUIREMENTS.

MACFARLANE'S GLASS ENAMELLED DRAIN AND SOIL PIPES, A SPECIALITY.

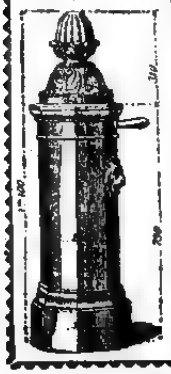
TWO GOLD MEDALS, CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

Illustrated CATALOGUES, Price Lists, and Estimates on application.

WALTER MACFARLANE & Co., Glasgow, Scotland.

December 5, 1896.

369



WATERING APPARATUS

Non-freezing & Ordinary Hydrants and Street Washers.

Garden Watering Boxes and Apparatus.

Gun-Metal, Copper, and Cast-Iron Cocks and Valves.

E. GUESNIER, E.C.P.,

Engineer and Cock Manfr.,

(Successor of ACHILLE CADET)

27, Rue des Taillandiers,

PARIS.

Hydropathic and Massage Apparatus supplied to the Vichy Co. Vapour Baths (Berthe system).

Apply to BOYES & Co., agents for M. OPPENHEIMER & Co., PARIS.

A. SAVY & CO., ENGINEERS.

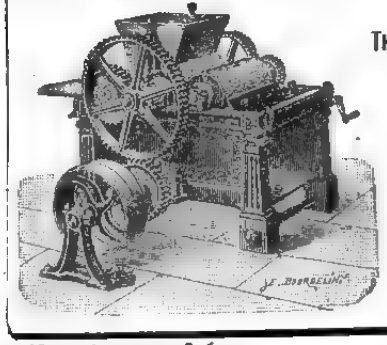
162, Rue de Charenton, Paris.

THE OLD G. HERMANN DEBATISTE WORKS.

ESTABLISHED 1830.

The Oldest and Largest Makers in the World of Chocolate, Cocoa, and Confectionery Plants.

Over 2,500 Chocolate Factories fitted up to January 1st, 1896.



GRINDING MACHINERY for all kinds of dry or wet substances, colours, printing inks, toilet soap, perfumery, and chemicals.

MIXING, BRUSHING, AND PULVERISING MACHINES FOR ALL MATERIALS.

Address Messrs. C. ROHDE & Co., YOKOHAMA.

November 21st, 1896.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LEA & PERRINS'

OBSERVE THAT THE SIGNATURE

Lea & Perrins

IS NOW PRINTED IN BLUE INK DIAGONALLY ACROSS THE OUTSIDE WRAPPER of every Bottle of the

ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

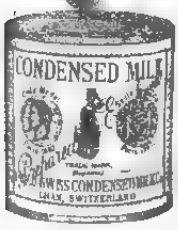
SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale by the Proprietors, Worcester; Crosse & Blackwell, Ltd., London; and Export Oilmen generally.

RETAIL EVERYWHERE.

46ins. May 8th, 1898.

MILKMAID BRAND CONDENSED MILK



The "Milkmaid" Brand is guaranteed to contain all the cream of the original milk. In the process of manufacture nothing but water is removed, nothing but the best refined sugar added.

Avoid low-priced brands from which the cream has been abstracted, and ask for the "Milkmaid" Brand, the best for all purposes.

Cheapest for Beef Tea and Kitchen Use.

LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT.

J. de Liebig

Always look for the BLUE SIGNATURE. There are many imitations which have not the same flavour and are not so carefully manufactured.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

The Universal Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Headache, Heartburn, Indigestion, Sour Eructations, Bilious Affections.

The Physician's Cure for Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Gravel; the safest and most gentle Medicine for Infants, Children, Delicate Females, and the Sickness of Pregnancy.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

Sold Throughout the World.

N.B.—ASK FOR DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

September 19th 1897. 91m.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

THE FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

More Fragrant; More Lasting; and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ATKINSON'S ONLY AND BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Only genuine with "White Rose" Trade Mark.

Of all Dealers & of the Manufacturers—

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

January 1st, 1898. 1y.

THE

GENERAL CATALOGUE AND BUYERS' GUIDE

ISSUED SEMI-ANNUALLY BY

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.

THE GREAT MAIL ORDER HOUSE.

Chicago, U. S. A.

IS THE MOST COMPLETE IN THE WORLD

It has more than 14,000 illustrations, about 40,000 quotations of prices, weighs 3½ pounds, and contains over 800 pages. Everything you wear or use is listed in it; and the prices quoted place you in a position to buy from us in large or small quantities, at wholesale prices. We do not sell this General Catalogue and Buyers' Guide; we give it away. To introduce to you our immense facilities we will send free of charge to you or any other foreign resident our "Buyers' Guide," and our "Hand Book for Foreign Buyers," which gives all information necessary to put you in touch with our methods. Send us your address and we'll do the rest.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

111 to 120 Michigan Ave., Chicago, U. S. A.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF MODERN TIMES

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

PERSONS suffering from weak or debilitated constitutions will discover that by the use of this wonderful medicine there is "Health for all." The blood is the fountain of life, and its purity can be maintained by the use of these Pills

Sir Samuel Baker, in his work entitled "The Nile Tributaries in Abyssinia," says—"I ordered the dragoman Mahomet to inform the Fakir that I was a Doctor, and I had the best medicines at the service of the sick, with advice gratis. In a short time I had many applicants, to whom I served out a quantity of Holloway's Pills. These are most useful to an explorer, as, possessing unmistakable purgative properties, they create an undeniable effect upon the patient, which satisfies them of their value."

SIMPLE, SAFE, AND CERTAIN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

Is a certain remedy for bad legs, bad breasts, and ulcerations of all kinds. It acts miraculously in healing ulcerations, curing skin diseases, and in arresting and subduing all inflammations.

Mr. J. T. Course, in his account of his extraordinary travels in China, published in 1871 says—"I had with me a quantity of Holloway's Ointment. I gave some to the people, and nothing could exceed their gratitude; and, in consequence, milk, fowls, butter, and horse feed poured in upon us, until at last a teaspoonful of Ointment was worth a fowl and any quantity of peas, and the demand became so great that I was obliged to lock up the small remaining "stock."

Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the World. May 21, 4m.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor, at 51, Main Street, Settlement, by Arthur Hellaby Brown, of No. 7-C, Bluff, Yokohama.—Saturday, July 2, 1898.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 2.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, JULY 9TH, 1898. 明治三十一年七月九日發行 VOL. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 25
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 26
Dr. George C. Needham 26
The Fugitive Forger 26
A Merchant Captain's Adventure 26
Counts Okuma and Itagaki 27
Smuggling of Alcohol 27
The Spoils 27
Count Okuma on the Politics of the Hour 27
The Commercial Code 28
Marquis Ito 28
Tobacco 28
Capital in the Form of Goods 28
The Imperialist Party 28
Marquis Yamagata and the Constitution 29
Foreign Capital and the Tenure of Land by Foreigners 29
The Cabinet and the House of Peers 29
Manifesto of the National Unionists 29
Death of Baron Kanda Kohei 29
Chatting the New Ministers 29
Professor Toyama 30
The Tea-Tax Memorial 30
The Revised Treaties and the Tariff 30
Prince Cyril 30
The French Legation 30
The Kobe Swindle 31
Admiral Camara 32
Leading Articles :—
Count Okuma on the Problem of the Day 32
Great Britain and China 33
A Strange Story 33
Notes on News 34
Fire at Kobe 34
The War 34
Official Notices 34
Waste Silk Export 34
Speeches by Counts Okuma and Itagaki 35
Tonic Sol-fa Concert 35
Pickpockets on the Railways 35
New Vice-Ministers 35
Japanese Facts and Comments 36
Monthly Summary of the Religious Press 37
Formosa and the New Treaties 39
The Legislative Work of the Diet in its Twelfth Session 40
Korean Topics 40
Yokohama's Tidal Depression 40
News of the Week 41
Correspondence :—The Romaji Reform 41
The Fourth 42
The "Melpomene"-"Patroclus" Case 43
Latest Telegraphic News 44
Chess 45
Latest Shipping 45
Latest Commercial 46

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"PAISCE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, JULY 9TH, 1898.

DEATH.

At his residence in Tokyo, on the 5th instant, of paralysis, Baron KANDA KOHEI, aged 69.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

MARQUIS ITO left Tokyo on the 1st inst. for his villa at Sorokaku, Oiso.

THE Cabinet may expect opposition in its measures in the House of Peers.

THE recent official changes in Peking are said to herald the return of Li Hung-chang to power.

SPAIN is determined to fight to the bitter end; to fight until not one Spanish soldier is left in Cuba.

A GERMAN sailor was bludgeoned to death in the brothel quarter of Yokohama on Thursday night.

THE weather in Yokohama during the past week has been extremely hot; in Kobe it was tempestuous.

THE Naval Department is contemplating the establishment of observation towers for use in war time off the coasts of Niigata, Naoetzu, and Sado. A coal yard is also to be constructed on Sado island.

IN Saitama prefecture dysentery is prevailing, and in the week ending the 26th ultimo there were 22 cases.

REVOLUTION is expected in Spain, where the populace is arming. The military are very disaffected.

THE plague is said to have died out in Hongkong. It is very prevalent in Amoy and some parts of Formosa.

THE United States cruiser Charleston has hoisted the American flag over the Carolines and the Ladrones.

Messrs. Hellyer & Co.'s tea-firing godown at Kobe was destroyed by fire on Tuesday; damage, yen 56,000.

THE Crown Prince proceeded on the 3rd inst., to the detached palace at Numadzu, and will stay there for some weeks.

THE General Election will probably take place on the 15th August. The exact date will be declared within a few days.

THE Crown Prince on the 1st inst. gave audience at the Akasaka Palace to the members of the Korean Legation.

HIS Honour Judge Wilkinson has generally sustained the Registrar's award of damages in the Melpomene-Patroclus case.

THE American troops have reached Manila Bay and the news of the hoisting of the American flag over the city is hourly expected.

IT is stated that Mr. Taketomi Tokitoshi, a member of the Constitutional party, will be appointed Chief Secretary of the Cabinet.

THE Constitutional Party has decided to issue a magazine called the Tohō as its organ. The first copy will be published on the 15th instant.

THE Empress-Dowager of China has resumed the reins of power, the Emperor being reduced to a nonentity so far as State affairs are concerned.

THE Fourth of July was loyally celebrated in Yokohama on Monday. There were bicycle races, yacht races, a baseball match and fireworks.

THE French Atlantic liner La Bourgogne has been sunk through collision with the British ship Cromartyshire. The loss of life ran into the hundreds.

THE Agricultural and Industrial Bank, Yokohama, will hold a general meeting on the 10th inst. The directors will probably not recommend a dividend.

PRINCE VLADIMER CYRIL arrived in Yokohama on Thursday on a short visit to the Emperor of Japan. He is a lieutenant on the Russian cruiser Rossia.

THE P. & O. steamer Ganges, lying in Bombay harbour, took fire on June 30th, and was completely destroyed. The stewardess was burnt to death in her cabin.

TELEGRAMS from Rome state the General Pelloux has formed a new Cabinet. Admiral Canevaro takes the foreign portfolio and General Sun Marzano that of War.

THE Harbour Construction Association recently promoted in Miyagi Prefecture had its ceremony of inauguration on the 4th inst. Mr. Tomita Tetsunosuke was elected President and Mr. Fujisawa Ikunoshin, Vice-President. The object is to reconstruct Matsushima, Nobiru, and Honami harbours. Engineers will commence surveys at the end of this month.

A STUDENT of the Keiwo-gijiku College, named Fujii Kyumatsu, 25 years of age, was drowned on the 1st inst. in the sea near Kanasugi, Tokyo. The body has not yet been recovered.

A COMMERCIAL firm in Twaitutia, Taipeh, Formosa, has inaugurated a service between Tamsui and Hongkong, Amoy, and the Chinese coast. There will be three voyages a month.

ON the 28th ultimo, the Kanagawa Kencho issued regulations for the control of the milk business, which were enforced from the 1st inst. The principal points are the enforcement of cleanliness in dairies, and punishment for selling milk of poor quality.

ADMIRAL CEVERA while endeavouring to escape from Santiago, was caught by the American fleet and defeated. The Spaniards ran their ships ashore and burnt them. There was a heavy loss on the Spanish side, but the American report only three killed. The Spanish admiral was captured.

THE Mexican emigration scheme promoted by Viscount Enomoto, Messrs. Sakuma, Nemoto, and others, is showing reviving prosperity. The Japan and Mexican Emigrants' Association has purchased land to the value of yen 97,500, to be paid for within 15 years. The emigrants are now principally cultivating coffee.

A MAN named Murata Yasutaro, a native of Hyogo prefecture, has been arrested at Takao, Formosa, on a charge of having embezzled yen 10,000. Defendant, being aware of the fact that a large remittance was being sent to the Anping local government, embarked on the same vessel, and found a chance of stealing the money. After taking it, he sent to his father by parcel post yen 9,500.

AT last a resolute effort is to be made to get godowns cleared of contract goods that have accumulated in Yokohama to such an enormous extent. As a result of a conference between the Yokohama General Chamber of Commerce and the principal Japanese merchants, the following rules of business have been adopted :—1. That delivery of contract goods imported prior to the 20th of April last shall be carried out by the 15th of this month, and that in consideration of further postponement daily interest of 2 sen 5 rin per 100 yen shall be payable after the 15th inst. 2. That delivery of contract goods imported after the 15th of July shall be carried out within 100 days from the date of payment of Customs dues, and in the event of failure to do so daily interest of 2 sen 5 rin per 100 yen shall be chargeable. These are steps that should have been taken a long time ago. Meanwhile business is slack in all branches of imports, except sugar. A good demand from Europe makes prices firm in the silk market, and they close with a upward tendency. Settlements from the 1st to the 5th July were 239 piculs, of which 63 were old and 176 new filatures. The stock on hand in Yokohama is about 1906. Business is very slow in waste silk and the stock carried forward is heavy. The demand has continued steady for tea and prices have ruled very firm, especially for lower grades. The quality of the second crop is good, and compares very favourably with last year's. So far the shipments this year have been 124,621 piculs, against 138,504 last year.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

Never did a Cabinet take over the reins of office amid such a chorus of applause, comment and censure as the new "party ministry's" accession to power has evoked. Its enemies predict a speedy fall from office and a discreditable series of failures for it. Its friends are jubilant that that the people's representatives have at length become the nation's administrators.

* * *

The Jiji is, of course, conspicuously impartial. It dismisses in its characteristic manner the objection urged by the great majority of the Cabinet's critics; the objection that its supporters, instead of being a homogeneous body of politicians, cemented by community of views and by years of friendship, are a motley mob of agitators whose mutual enmities, though subdued for a moment by the strength of destructive purpose, held them hopelessly asunder for many years, and must inevitably blaze out again so soon as they attempt to discharge the duties of constructive statesmanship. The Jiji cannot endorse such a prediction. Stout foes, it says, make fast friends. The bitterest enemies in the empire in olden times were the men of Satsuma and Choshiu. But when they combined to obtain the reins of administration, their friendship proved as constant and faithful as their hostility had been implacable and enduring. Perhaps the story of the newly organized Party may furnish another example of the same principle.

* * *

But the Jiji is not altogether confident in the truth of its own optimism. It evidently fears that the intoxication of a draught which the Liberals and Progressists struggled so long to drink may betray them into suicidal excesses, and it strongly counsels them not to abuse their hardly won power by driving from office the men whose administrative experience is invaluable.

* * *

The fact that the portfolios of War and the Navy had to be left in the hands of the "Clan Statesmen" is severely noticed by several journals, especially the Nichi Nichi and the Chuo (Liberal Unionist organ). The Nichi Nichi, indeed, denies altogether that the Ministry can be called a party Cabinet. It has received the administrative power as a legacy from Marquis Ito. Without his coöperation the party politicians could never have attained their object. Thus they owe their success to the assistance of the principal among the "Clan Statesmen." They are, in fact, the mandatories of the men whom they claim to have ousted. The Chuo advances the same contention, but bases it on different grounds. It alleges that while pretending to have supplanted the "administration of personal influence" and substituted government by the people, this new Cabinet is a flagrant example of the very system it boasts to have destroyed. If it were what it professes to be, the best men in the ranks of the Progressists and Liberals would have received portfolios. But the best men were studiously passed over, and seats in the Cabinet were given to second-rate politicians whose submissive allegiance to Counts Okuma and Itagaki could be confidently anticipated. The old bugbear of personal influence becomes thus once more as conspicuous as ever. Both journals take a similar view with regard to the reservation of the Army and Navy portfolios. These two most important branches of the public service—especially important at the present time—are removed entirely beyond the control of the Prime Minister and his political colleagues. In effect, when it came to the crucial test of taking over the power for which they had so long clamoured, the party politicians proved unequal to the task, and had to rely upon the aid of the men whom it had been their habit to vituperate.

* * *

Count Okuma is the special object of attack by the Chuo, as might have been expected. It says that he has always been a conspicuous failure as a Foreign Minister, and that his diplomatic reputation is radically bad in Europe. By way of proof the National Unionist organ retails an amusing canard. It avers that since the Count became Premier only one Foreign Representative—the Belgian Minister—has called upon him, whereas when Marquis Ito became Premier, he received two or three visits at his hotel from the British Minister in as many days. That, of course, is a pure invention so far as concerns Count Okuma. The Chuo adds another phantasy, namely, that Mr. Kato, Japan's Representative in London, whom it calls Count Okuma's protégé, complains constantly that his efforts are handicapped by the public's knowledge of his relationship to the Count.

* * *

The Tokyo Shimbun, organ of the former Liberal Party, is disposed to offer advice rather than congratulations. It appears to think that there may be much anxiety on the part of the new Ministers to curry favour with the people, instead of resolutely carrying out their own ideas. They should recollect that they are the repositories of the nation's confidence and that the public looks to them for leading rather than for obedience.

* * *

Correspondents of the Kokumin Shimbun sound the first note of discord in the harmony of the new order. Two writers, calling themselves members of the Constitutional Party, address that journal in critical terms. The first notes that Mr. Den, Vice-Minister of Communications, Mr. Soyeda, Chief of the Bureau of Superintendence in the Finance Department, and Mr. Arakawa, Chief of the Bureau of Local Government in the Home Department, have joined the Constitutional Party, because they knew that without taking that step they could not hope to retain office. What is the outlook suggested by such a precedent? Does it really mean that party ties are to be the qualifications for office under the new regime? The second writer complains that in matters of finance Count Okuma out of office and Count Okuma in office are different persons. The former holds negative views and is directly opposed to increased taxation. The latter has positive ideas and pronounces increased taxes inevitable.

* * *

The Yorozu Choho detects danger in the fact that the portfolios have not been more widely distributed. The minor sections of the Constitutional Party—the Sappa, the Kwan-to, and the Tohoku-to—have been left out in the cold. They will probably rebel against such treatment, and the Party will witness a serious secession from its ranks.

* * *

The Tokyo Asahi, from which we should have expected a different strain, thinks that the leaders of the new administration will find themselves without the prestige essential to the the exercise of effective control. It is as though the head of a firm had been suddenly removed, and the direction of affairs entrusted to the clerks and shop-boys, who have never had any experience of such a heavy responsibility. Moreover, the Cabinet, regarded from a party point of view, may be said to be half-paralysed: the Army and the Navy are excluded completely from the purview of the Ministry as a body. After such a sweeping analysis one expects some correspondingly pregnant counsel from the Asahi. But it sees no remedy except in the general elections. Only by "sweeping the country" can the party politicians acquire the necessary prestige and confidence.

* * *

The revised Civil Code goes into force from the 16th instant, and the unrevised Commercial Code went into force on the 1st instant. But the Law of the Registration of Immovables can not yet be enforced. These facts greatly disturb the Shogyo Shimpo. It foresees that the application of the various laws will involve many conflicts and disclose many deficiencies. Our contemporary has written much on this subject, and its writing displays careful research. But the details are too technical for reproduction here.

DR. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

The name of Dr. George C. Needham, which appears in the list of the arrivals by the last Empress steamer from America, will call to the minds of many, one of the most familiar figures in Christian work in America and England of recent years. Perhaps, with the exception of Mr. Moody, no one engaged in evangelistic effort has a wider reputation to-day than Mr. Needham. The occasion of Mr. Needham's present visit to Japan is first the holding of Bible Conferences during the summer months with Christian workers for the deepening of Christian life. This is a work in which he has had peculiar success both in England and America, he being the originator of the idea of holding such meetings some years ago. It is proposed to hold the conferences at Karuizawa, Arima, and other centres where Christian people may gather this summer. In the fall, a series of meetings will be held in different parts of the country for Japanese, and it is hoped that arrangements will be completed for the holding of a series of meetings for foreigners in Yokohama, Kobe, and Tokyo. Mr. Needham's constant aim is the exaltation of the Scriptures. His experience shows that the people will go where they can hear the Scriptures explained if it is well done. That after many years of labour in conjunction with such workers as Spurgeon, Guinness, Moody, and others, as well as with the rich results of his own study and experience, such a man should come to Japan is a matter for congratulation and may prove to be the opening of a new era in the history of Christian work in this country.—(Communicated.)

THE FUGITIVE FORGER.

Oyama Kenichi, the swindler who robbed Messrs. Favre-Brandt and Company of a considerable sum, and then escaped to San Francisco, has just been examined before the Court of First Instance in Osaka, and remanded for trial in the Local Court. Our readers probably recall the case. The foreign firm, having full confidence in Oyama's integrity, signed certain documents represented by him to be of the nature of specifications, but in reality receipts by means of which he was enabled to obtain some eleven thousand yen in the firm's name. When it was found that Oyama had fled to America, application was made in due form for his extradition, as a treaty of extradition exists between Japan and the United States. The charge preferred against him was forgery, and some doubts were entertained as to whether American jurists would consent to regard his offence in that light. They did so, however, and the man, having been brought back to Osaka—the scene of his fraud—was arraigned upon two counts, forgery (shosho giso) and feloniously absconding (kaitai). The latter accusation was declared not-proven, doubtless because the stolen property was not found in Oyama's possession, but on that point we speak from conjecture only. The charge of forgery was amply supported by evidence, and Oyama now lies awaiting trial. Ten persons associated with him in the fraud—including his mother, his two brothers, and his mistress—have also been committed on the charge of receiving stolen goods (sobutsu kiso).

A MERCHANT CAPTAIN'S ADVENTURE.

Captain Young, of the steamer Onsang, from Iloilo to Yokohama, reports that just off Luzon in the early morning of June 29th, he sighted five steamers. The first of them threw a searchlight on his ship and then fired a gun. At this the Onsang stopped and burned a blue light as a signal, but another shot followed, and the warship approached more closely. After a close inspection, however, the searchlight was extinguished, and the Onsang proceeded on her way. The war-vessel was probably the Charleston, convoying troopships to Manila.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

COUNTS OKUMA AND ITAGAKI.

There are naturally a number of people who busy themselves discovering reasons why the members of the new Cabinet should find it impossible to agree. The strongest argument advanced to prove the inevitableness of discord is that Count Itagaki and Count Okuma entertain very different economical views. Shortly before the recent Parliamentary crisis, Count Itagaki stood forth as a strong advocate of the State purchase of all the important private railways in the empire, the money for the purpose to be obtained by means of a foreign loan. But Count Okuma declared himself wholly opposed to such an expedient. It will be remembered that this question acquired great prominence at the time, chiefly owing to the very pronounced attitude assumed by Count Itagaki. It will also be remembered that whereas, at the outset, Count Itagaki spoke explicitly on his own account and not as the representative of his Party, he subsequently claimed the endorsement of the Liberals. Other divergences of view are now catalogued—as, for example, that while Count Itagaki is unreservedly in favour of the introduction of foreign capital, Count Okuma recommends that no attempt of that kind should be adopted until thorough order has been introduced into the finances, and until public securities sell in the markets of Japan at their face value; and, while Count Okuma approves of extending special aid to industrial enterprise though the agency of the Industrial Encouragement Bank, Count Itagaki regards such a measure as more or less futile. We do not ourselves see why these differences of opinion should prove crucial. If the Liberals and Progressists have been able to bury the hatchet so deeply as to join hands after their long years of bitter animosity, it is not likely that financial theories will separate them now. A year ago, who could have ventured to predict that Count Itagaki and Count Okuma would soon be found working together to organise a Cabinet? The Ito Cabinet went out of office in 1897 because Count Itagaki utterly refused to entertain the idea of serving with Count Okuma. If he has been able to abandon that attitude of hostility in 1898, and to identify himself unreservedly with Count Okuma as a party leader, we may be very sure that the two men will take care not to let minor divergences of view wreck their newly cemented union.

SMUGGLING OF ALCOHOL.

Vernacular newspapers allege that large quantities of alcohol are smuggled into Japan at present for the purpose of manufacturing "mixed saké." Thousands of cases are spoken of as coming by each steamer, but that is obviously a gross exaggeration. No hint is given as to how the smuggling is managed; a point about which many people would like to hear something. It is added that the authorities have been advised to resort to the preventive system practised in Europe; namely, to proclaim that one half or one-third of the value of the smuggled goods will be given to any onefurnishing such in formation as shall lea to the detection of the smuggersdl.

THE SPOILS.

We judge from the utterances of newspapers like the Mainichi Shimbun and the Yomiuri—organs of the newly formed Constitutional Party—that a strong inclination to covet the sweets of office has manifested itself among the rank and file of the Party, and is likely to embarrass the leaders not a little. In short, there is danger that the vicious "spoils system" may be introduced simultaneously with the introduction of Party Cabinets. Happily a strong disposition to combat the tendency is exhibited by the newspaper press. It is pointed out that efficiency of the service can not possily be secured if sweeping changes of administrative officials accompany all the political vicissitudes to which a Cabinet is liable, and that since favoritism in selecting the occupants of Departmental posts has been always inveighed against by party politicians as one of the worst abuses to which irresponsible Ministries are liable, the present is a good opportunity to prove that the people's representatives can act up to their professions. This is a point that will be noted with considerable curiosity. It is a pretty hard trial for party politicians. The present heads of bureaux and governors of prefectures are nominees of the so-called "clan Statesmen," and it is natural that a strong desire to drive them out of office should be felt by the politicians who have now succeeded to power after a struggle extending over many years. If the desire can be controlled within reasonable limits, the result will be very creditable. It must be admitted, we think, that changes of Cabinets in Japan have hitherto involved very little administrative disturbance. Heads of bureaux who may be called the non-commissioned officers of the administrative army, so important are their duties, have been left virtually undisturbed whatever fate overtook the Cabinet. In that respect, at all events, the "Clan Statesmen" have a clean record. The most pronounced disposition to provide official prizes for politicians was displayed last year when, under the influence of the Progressists, the Cabinet created the office of Chokunin Councillor, and nominated a number of the Government's political supporters to the new posts. We have never been able to discover that these Councillors were an administrative necessity, or that they furnished any evidence of usefulness during their brief term of office. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the experiment will not be repeated, and it is still more to be hoped that the new Ministry will not make the fatal mistake of dislocating the administrative machinery to gratify personal ambitions. In connexion with this subject we may mention that the United States' system seems to be referred to by one side as justifying a division of the "spoils," and by the other as deterring anything of the kind. As to that we would observe that the United States "system" is not a system at all but an abuse. It is condemned by all the best Americans and would long ago have been effectually reformed were not its practical disadvantages greatly mitigated by the rule of the four-year term. An administrative upheaval which occurs only once in four years may be endured, but the "spoils system," as applied to Japan, might mean a Departmental earthquake every six months. Nothing could possibly be more destructive to the efficient conduct of State business.

COUNT OKUMA ON THE POLITICS OF THE HOUR.

Some remarks made by Count Okuma to a member of the Hochi Shimbun staff are very interesting. He pointed out, in the first place, that there was nothing sudden in the change which has now come over Japanese politics. The celebrated message addressed by the Emperor to the Government and the Diet in 1893, on the occasion of the deadlock brought about by the Lower House's refusal to vote an appropriation for naval ship-building, furnished an indication which no thinking person could misinterpret. His Majesty did not blame the Diet alone; he blamed the Ministry also. He did not exhort one side to bring about "harmonious cöoperation;" he exhorted both sides equally. That was the beginning of what may be called the stage immediately antecedent to party cabinets. The Ito Cabinet allied itself with the Liberals, so that the Ministry and the Diet were able to work together. The Matsukata Cabinet similarly allied itself with the Progressists. The next stage could easily be foreseen. When the leaves fall, we know that frost is coming. When the frost falls, we know that winter is at hand. No open-eyed student of the time can have been surprised by what has just occurred. As for the political issues at stake, they have not yet been of paramount importance; not sufficiently vital in themselves, perhaps, to constitute a line of distinct cleavage. But there will be no lack of questions. They will come by-and-by; come thickly and quickly, and the two camps will have platforms defined clearly enough to satisfy anyone. Referring to the possibility that the Constitutional Party might find Marquis Ito among its opponents, Count Okuma spoke of the Marquis as standing in the very fore-front of progressive politicians (kyokutan no shimpo-shugi). His action in the recent crisis had furnished another illustration of his profound astuteness. The idea of organizing a new party had doubtless occurred to him, but he understood very well that a strong political association, possessing genuinely cohesive qualities, can not be formed in a moment. He saw, too, that what the country needs before everything is peace from these everlasting collisions between the Administration and the Legislature—collisions that fatally check the progress of national business. All that he waited for was the formation of a party sufficiently strong to wield an undoubted majority in the Lower House, and to be trusted with administrative functions. The fusion of the Liberals and Progressists satisfied the necessary conditions. No sooner was that accomplished than Marquis Ito decided that the moment had at length arrived to crown the edifice of constitutional government. His action was prompt, frank, and wise. There was no arrière pensée, as some folks had suggested. The hour had come and the man. Happily a true statesman was there to utilize the occasion for his country's good.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE COMMERCIAL CODE.

The Government has allowed the law to take its course. The remaining portions of the original Commercial Code went into force from the 1st instant. Their operation was originally deferred, as we have already explained, until June 30th, for purposes of revision, and the portions already promulgated were subjected to revision at the same time. But as the dissolution of the Lower House last session took place before the revisions had obtained the consent of the Diet, nothing remained except to suffer the remaining portions to go into effect in their unrevised form. The revised Civil Code will become operative from the 16th instant, and it is inevitable that more or less conflict will occur between its provisions and those of the old Commercial Code. That inconvenience will have to be endured, however. Meanwhile it is worth noting that, after all, Japan has been barely able to carry out in time the preliminaries agreed upon as essential to the operation of the Revised Treaties.

A curious difficulty has occurred in connexion with the "Law of Procedure in Non-contentious Matters," which forms one of the adjuncts of the Civil Code. Article 210 of the Law says that it shall become operative from the day when the Civil Code and the Commercial Code take effect. That provision was inserted with reference to the revised Civil and Commercial Codes. Had they both passed the Diet last session, they would have been enacted simultaneously, and the date of their common operation would have become the date for the operation of the Law of Procedure in Non-contentious Matters. But as the revised Commercial Code failed to receive Parliamentary approval, the unrevised Code became effective from July 1st, that is to say, on the termination of the period of postponement, whereas the revised Civil Code was enacted for July 16th. On what day, then, should the Law of Procedure in Non-contentious Matters go into effect—the 1st of July or the 16th? The point has provoked some discussion, but we can not, for our own part, appreciate the perplexity. After all, there is no going beyond the letter of a law, and when the date of a certain law's operation is explicitly made conditional upon the operation of two other bodies of law, it is difficult to see how the operation of one of the latter can be held to have satisfied the prescribed condition.

MARQUIS ITO.

The Emperor has refused to accept Marquis Ito's resignation of his title of nobility and Order of Merit. His Majesty points out that these honours have no connexion with the office of Premier, but were conferred for meritorious services to the country and with the intention that they should be transmitted to the Marquis' posterity. No one seems to be quite clear why Marquis Ito resigned his title, and if the Japanese do not understand his reasons it is not likely that foreigners will be more discerning. Indeed, from a foreign point of view, the proceeding looked undignified and even petulant. Had the Marquis committed any grave blunder, had his counsels betrayed the Sovereign into some act injurious to the prestige of the throne or prejudicial to the interests of the nation, one could appreciate his unwillingness to remain a prominent figure in society. But Marquis Ito has been an eminently successful statesman. Japan owes him a debt that can never be discharged or forgotten, and we entertain no doubt whatever that the course adopted by him at this crisis of Parliamentary institutions will not be the least of the wise acts placed by historians to his credit. It is true that the transfer of the administrative power from the hands of the elder statesmen to the party politicians was managed through his direct agency, but it is equally true that his tenure of a patent of nobility did not depend upon averting that transfer. A suggestion which obtained pretty general credence at first was that the Marquis had resolved to organise a political party, and that he considered his title likely to prove an impediment to success in that line, especially as it would prevent him from sitting in the Lower House. But if any project of the kind inspired his action, he would have chosen some other method of making the resignation. We fear that the event will not increase his prestige. It is referred to in very sarcastic tones by more than one vernacular journal, and no defence has yet been advanced by any publicist.

TOBACCO.

It is alleged that the Authorities are about to raise the sale rate of leaf tobacco from 84 per cent. to 100 per cent. In other words, instead of charging 184 yen worth of leaf tobacco purchased under the monopoly, they will charge 200 yen. We explained in these columns some time ago that the total annual production of tobacco in Japan is estimated at 90½ millions of lbs., in round numbers, the value of which for purposes of purchase by the Government is put at 12½ millions of yen, or about 13½ sen per lb. The selling price has hitherto been set down as 22½ million yen—we are here using approximations to avoid excessive detail—or 25 sen per lb, which represents a profit of nearly 84 per cent; but it is now proposed to raise it to 27 sen. Assuming expenses of collection to remain unchanged, the additional revenue accruing from this alteration would be a little over 2 million yen. No explanation is given of the reasons underlying the change, but we may fairly assume that the object is to realize the Government's original estimate of income derived from this source of revenue. The gross income was stated in the post-bellum financial programme at 10⅛ million yen, and the working expenses, together with interest on capital (8¼ millions), being a little over 2 millions, there remained a profit of 7,814,509 yen. But it would appear that the actual results have not come up to official expectation—we always predicted that they would not—and that a heavier price has to be charged for the leaf on emerging from the Government storehouses.

There is one interesting question connected with this matter. The price of leaf tobacco according to the increased scale, will average 36.40 yen per picul. Now the customs show that considerable quantities of foreign tobacco are imported at about 18 yen per picul, laid down in Japan, and as the duty under the Tariff will be 35 per cent., the imported leaf will not cost more than 25 yen a picul to wholesale dealers in this country. Of course it is necessary to consider the particular grade of Japanese leaf with which this foreign tobacco would come into competition. We can not express any opinion on that point, but the margin in favour of the foreign leaf is very considerable. Vernacular newspapers assert, however, that the Diet will be asked next session to raise the import duty to 200 per cent.

CAPITAL IN THE FORM OF GOODS.

The insufficiency of the security obtainable by foreign capitalists who would otherwise be willing to invest money in Japan—insecurity owing to the peculiar system of land tenure—is now pretty well appreciated by Japanese merchants and manufacturers. They will probably begin to move in support of the only sound policy, the complete removal of all restrictions differentiating aliens and natives in such matters. Meanwhile the need of money to carry on productive enterprises becomes daily more pressing. We read in the Tokyo Asahi that a device for temporarily evading the difficulty has presented itself, namely, to borrow goods instead of money. There does not appear to be anything very novel about such a plan, but our contemporary treats it as a kind of discovery and attributes it to a Mr. Abe, of Yokohama, who, during the past year, obtained rice on credit from Messrs Samuel Samuel and Company to the extent of a million yen, and made a very good thing out of the arrangement. It has occurred to others that they also, whether as individuals or as firms, may be able to procure rails, engines, raw cotton, and such staples from foreign importers on a system of payments deferred for six months or a year, and they are now discussing the feasibility of such arrangements in conjunction with the banks. We have always understood that the experience garnered by foreigners engaging in such transactions was not calculated to encourage a repetition of the experiment, but it is possible that the times have changed, and are changing, for the better. Credit is the most valuable kind of capital, but unfortunately it has been little available to the Japanese in their modern career of material expansion.

THE IMPERIALIST PARTY.

Baron Suyematsu, formerly Minister of Communications, was spoken of as one of the most zealous organisers of an Imperialist Party to oppose the new Constitutionalists. But he has denied to an interviewer from the staff of the Yomiuri Shimbun that he engaged in any such enterprise. It is the intention and desire of the elder statesmen, he says, to let the party politicians have an undisturbed hand to try their competence for the task they have undertaken. If they commit blunders, they will soon find themselves confronted by a powerful opposition, but for the present they will not be disturbed. Baron Suyematsu virtually confessed to the same interviewer that Marquises Ito and Yamagata had differed very seriously in their views as to the best method of dealing with the recent crisis. Probably much more importance attaches to that difference than people in general suppose.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MARQUIS YAMAGATA AND THE CONSTITUTION.

It was generally stated, at the time of the recent political crisis, that an influential body of officials, headed by Marquis Yamagata, advocated the suspension of the constitution as the only proper exit from the dilemma. The Marquis explicitly denies the statement. He avers that the idea of suspending the operation of the constitution was never hinted. His own action in the matter was limited to opposing the system of party cabinets—a kind of polity which he evidently condemns—and the transfer of administrative power to the leaders of the newly formed party. His interpretation of the constitution is that it makes the Ministers of the Crown responsible to the Sovereign alone. Hence he holds that if the House of Representatives rejects an essential measure—like that for increasing the taxes—not on its merits but merely in the interests of party politics, dissolution after dissolution may be resorted to in strict accord with the constitution. At the same time, he does not endorse the German theory that the Emperor is competent to proceed independently of the Diet under certain circumstances. There is a little vagueness about this last reservation, but at all events the fact emerges quite plainly that Marquis Yamagata did not advance the somewhat arbitrary doctrine attributed to him. It is certain, however, that he found himself diametrically opposed to Marquis Ito in several important respects.

FOREIGN CAPITAL AND THE TENURE OF LAND BY FOREIGNERS.

As a result of the consultations that have taken place between the foreign and Japanese Chambers of Commerce in Kobe, the members of the Japanese Chamber are said to have been convinced that unless the privilege of owning land be granted to foreigners, the latter can never be persuaded to invest money in Japanese enterprises. But since, in order to remove the existing restrictions with regard to land tenure by aliens, special legislation would be necessary, and since the members of the Kobe Chamber do not feel justified in approaching the Authorities for that purpose without seeking wider counsel, they are said to have resolved upon consulting the chambers of commerce throughout the country, with the view of procuring their cōoperation in a joint memorial. We trust that this news may prove correct. There is not the slightest reluctance on the part of Japanese officialdom to extend to aliens the privileges in question. If the Japanese negotiators stipulated for the insertion of a restriction in the Revised Treaties, it was simply in deference to the exceedingly short-sighted and emotional sentiment of conservatism that grew out of the strict-enforcement agitation of 1892-3. There was a season of vertigo during which the country would have rebelled against any treaties securing to aliens the privilege of land ownership, and since the mercantile and manufacturing classes are now beginning to discover that the restriction will inure almost entirely to their own disadvantage, it may be hoped that a wholesomer system will be inaugurated.

THE CABINET AND THE HOUSE OF PEERS.

It is worthy of notice that the new Cabinet—that is to say, the newly appointed section of the Cabinet—includes no member of the House of Peers and can not be said to command any influence there. The point is dwelt on at great length by the Kokumin Shimbun, which gives itself some trouble to demonstrate that, according to the Japanese Constitution, the House of Peers has equal legislative competence with the House of Representatives, and ought, therefore, to be equally considered in the organization of a Cabinet. What is the new Party Cabinet to do if it finds its measures blocked by the Upper House? Will it adopt the expedient said to have been contemplated at one time by Mr. Gladstone, namely, the nomination of members in sufficient number to redress the balance? Its power in that respect is limited. Nominated members must not exceed a certain fixed ratio to elected members. Of course, there is the expedient of creating Marquises who would sit in right of their title, but a batch of new Marquises aggregating twenty, thirty or perhaps more, would be a somewhat extensive order. The Kokumin evidently attaches great importance to this question, but its reasoning is not altogether lucid. The present Cabinet assuredly has not the support of a majority in the House of Peers, and may experience great difficulties in consequence. But would that state of affairs be mended by giving portfolios to two or three members of the Upper House? Certainly it would not. Men like Viscount Tani, Viscount Soga, Prince Konoye and so on, will vote with the Constitutional Party's Cabinet whether they have portfolios or do not have them, and the majority of the Peers, who believe in and have hitherto supported the Meiji Statesmen, will oppose the present Ministry however it treats them. It is not unlikely that there will be much trouble owing to the latter cause, but we do not see that any remedy lay within reach of Counts Okuma and Itagaki when they organized the Ministry.

MANIFESTO OF THE NATIONAL UNIONISTS.

The National Unionists have issued a manifesto, but we refrain from reproducing it in extenso, as our readers must be somewhat weary of politics. The gist of the document is that the national development during the past few years has been so great as to render increased national expenditure inevitable, and that, in refusing to vote the necessary income last session, the Liberals and Progressists sacrificed the interests of the country on the altar of their own selfish ambition. In five years, the foreign trade has doubled, the deposits in the banks have doubled; the postal matter has grown from 300 millions to 5,000 millions; hundreds of miles of railways have been added so that the total length now open to traffic is 3,000 miles; useful products have doubled; land brought newly under cultivation measures two hundred thousand acres; the number of franchise-holders has increased by fifteen thousand. The country must live up to its new standard, and it is the manifest duty of every good subject to assist.

DEATH OF BARON KANDA KOHEI.

Baron Kanda Kohei died of paralysis at his residence in Tokyo on the 5th instant. The deceased was one of the most prominent pioneers of progress in Japan. People were accustomed to associate his name with those of Mr. Fukuzawa and Mr. Nishi Shu as having contributed preeminently to the introduction of Western civilization in this country. He served in various important official positions, including the governorship of Hyogo Prefecture and the Vice-Ministership of the Department of Education. But the public knew him better as an author than as an official, for he edited and published the Meiroku Zasshi, the first magazine that initiated his countrymen into the principles of Occidental political science; and he also translated the Constitution of the Netherlands into Japanese. The latter work is believed to have had an immense influence on the trend of national thought. Baron Kanda was also a jurist of wide reading, and possessed a profound knowledge of archæology, which he employed assiduously to throw light upon some of the antiquarian problems of Japan. His title of Baron was conferred on him by the Emperor the day before his death, in recognition of his eminent services to the State. It is characteristic of modern Japan that in the obituary notices of Baron Kanda published by the vernacular press, his eulogists combine to praise him as a "pioneer of foreign civilization." At the outset of the career which won for him that applause, the liberal and enlightened course he adopted seemed likely to lead to disgrace and ruin. So greatly have the times changed.

CHAFFING THE NEW MINISTERS.

The Japanese love to make a jest of everything. They have dubbed the new Minister of Finance "the lodging-house Minister" (Geshiku Daijin), because it has been his habit to live at an inn when residing in Tokyo, and they are telling each other with much amusement that when the new portfolio-holders—the party politicians—moved into their official residences, their total baggage consisted of a trunk and a bundle. Indeed, the flittings to and from official residences are now regarded as quite interesting events, to be observed with critical eyes by the commonest citizen. It is quaintly noted that the most conspicuous items in Marquis Ito's baggage when he recently vacated the Premier's mansion were two foreign wardrobes, and that Count Inouye's traps were identifiable by the presence of an antique screen and an artistic brazier. Some other snapper up of unconsidered trifles describes how, during the Cabinet crisis, he happened to pass the private residence of a certain Marquis, and overheard the major-domo informing a large squad of workmen that their presence would not be required on the following day. They had been suddenly employed to prepare the place for the return of its owner, and they were as suddenly dismissed when the noble owner discovered that he need not "return" just yet.

It is considered at Washington that Hawaii, in permitting the Charleston to coal at Honolulu, has cast away all semblance of neutrality and thrown in her lot with the United States.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

PROFESSOR TOYAMA.

Professor Toyama, addressing the officials of the Educational Department on the occasion of resigning his portfolio, made some plain and wholesome remarks. He drew attention, in the first place, to the repeated changes that have taken place of late years in the Ministry of Education. His own predecessor had been but sixty odd days in office, and he himself had a still briefer record. He might congratulate himself, however, in having foreseen something of the kind and refrained from moving into the official residence of the Minister. Obviously it was quite impossible that an official liable to be removed from his post after a few weeks or a few months of tenure, could carry out any reform or give effect to any useful idea. His wisest plan was to attempt nothing. He himself did not pretend to have accomplished anything, yet there were two circumstances to which he looked back with satisfaction. The first was that he had made no change whatever in the personnel of the Department. Seventeen years ago, a certain Minister, on obtaining the portfolio of Education, had given posts to a number of ignorant men, his own creatures, and at a later period an equally flagrant instance of favoritism had been witnessed. But he, recognising the value of experienced officials familiar with their duties and skilled in discharging them, had not displaced any one. He was glad to be able to recall the fact now. Another source of satisfaction to him was the line he had taken with regard to the friction in the High Commercial School. It had become the custom to allow students to dictate to those in authority. The lads in some provincial school, ventilating a supposed grievance, would enlist the sympathy of a few local politicians, and at once their views were spoken of with respect as an expression of "public opinion." Nothing could be more subversive of discipline; nothing less conducive to the morale of the students themselves. He had peremptorily declined to allow such student dictatorship at the High Commercial School, and the result of his resolute methods showed how successful they could be.

We heartily applaud the wisdom of Professor Toyama's remarks, but we venture to doubt whether his policy at the Commercial School has succeeded. Rumour says that the new Director is boycotted by the students, who, if they cannot compass his removal, seem determined to reduce him to a nonentity.

THE TEA-TAX MEMORIAL.

The memorial addressed by the tea-producers and tea-merchants of Japan to the President of the United States with reference to the ten-cent.-per-lb. tax recently imposed on tea imported into America is a document of considerable weight. The memorialists do not attempt to protest against the principle that a State is perfectly free to resort to any and every fiscal measure when funds are needed for warlike purposes. They have also abandoned—and wisely abandoned — the plea that Japan is discriminated against in an unfriendly spirit when a heavy impost is placed upon a staple occupying such an important place in her export trade. Their chief argument now is that not only does the new tax confer a special advantage on coffee as against tea, but also that the advantage is accorded at heavy expense to the American Government. The statistics of the past ten years show that each unit of the population consumes from 1¼ to 1½ lbs. of tea annually, whereas the corresponding consumption of coffee is from ■ to 9 lbs. In fact, while the import of tea aggregates only 93 million lbs, that of coffee averages 900 millions. Thus, whereas a tax of 10 cents. a lb. on tea gives a revenue of only 9¾ million dollars, a tax of one quarter of that amount on coffee would give a revenue of 22½ million. Where such a great income is procurable by a comparatively light tax upon coffee, legislation which imposes an almost crippling tax upon tea for the sake of a very much smaller income, can not be regarded as just or impartial, and suggests a deliberate intention to crush the tea trade, especially when it is observed that the legislation comes in the sequel of measures taken to prevent the import of the coarser grades of tea. The memorial amounts, in fact, to a prayer that coffee may be taxed as well as tea.

THE REVISED TREATIES AND THE TARIFF.

According to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, an understanding has been effected with the Austro-Hungarian Government, so that no farther obstacle lies in the way of putting the Revised Treaties into operation. The prescribed notice will therefore be given to the Powers on the 17th inst., and the Treaties will go into force from July 17th, 1899. Our contemporary does not say what is the nature of the agreement with Austria-Hungary. It is evident that the details are still guarded from public knowledge. But the Nichi Nichi does add that the new Tariff will become effective from October 1st. As to that, we believe the Tokyo journal to be in error. The most trustworthy information at present available is to the effect that the Tariff will not go into operation before next year, and we shall not be at all surprised to find that the date ultimately fixed is the commencement of the fiscal year 1899-1900.

With regard to the new Tariff, we observe that doubts are thrown upon our assertion that its operation will probably be delayed until next year, and the old statement is re-iterated that it will go into effect from October 1st. This is not a matter concerning which we should venture to publish any hap-hazard opinion. The facts about the Tariff were fully explained in our columns some time ago; namely, that it could not become operative before September 19th, at the earliest; that the possibility of its going into operation then depended upon the ratifications of the Revised Treaty with Austria-Hungary being exchanged before August 19th; and that, in all probability, the Government, even supposing all obstacles removed, was not likely to enforce it at an earlier date than October 1st. We now say that, according to views attributed to well-informed authorities, the enforcement will not take place before January 1st, if even then.

On Thursday morning the Yomiuri Shimbun states that, the Austrian Diet being still suspended, there is no means of passing the Bill approving the revised treaty between Japan and Austria. It is stated that the Austrian Government will agree to a temporary treaty abolishing the Consular Court, and dealing with the chief points of the old treaty in which revision has been made in the case of the other Powers. This, it is thought, will obviate any trouble in enforcing the new Customs Duties and the treaties with other Powers.

PRINCE CYRIL.

Prince Cyril reached Tokyo on Friday at 11.11 a.m., and proceeded ■ once to the Shiba Detached Palace, which has been prepared for his reception. The programme of his doings in Tokyo is published as follows:—

8th instant.—Luncheon at the Russian Legation at 12.30. Imperial Audience at 6 p.m. and dinner at the Palace with the Emperor and Empress at 6.30 p.m. Fireworks at the Shiba Palace subsequently.

9th instant.—At 10 a.m. the Emperor leaves the Palace or proceeds to Shiba to visit the Prince. During the forenoon the Prince witnesses a display of Japanese painting. Luncheon at Prince Arisugawa's palace. In the afternoon, the Prince visits the Imperial Princes and the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs. Dinner at Prince Fushimi's palace at 7.30 p.m.

10th instant.—In the morning up to 10 a.m., the Prince witnesses an exhibition of jiujutsu, archery, and net-casting at the Shiba Palace. From 10 to 11 a.m., he receives the Ministers of State, the Members of the Privy Council, the Field Marshals, and the Chief of Staff. Luncheon at 1 p.m. in the Russian Legation, the Ministers of State and other guests being present. After luncheon, an exhibition of dancing (kembu). At 2½ p.m., the Prince returns to Shiba; photographs are taken, and there is to be a display of archery. Dinner at the Russian Legation at 8 p.m.

11th instant.—The Prince visits the Foreign Ministers and sends a representative to the Japanese Ministers, the Minister of Foreign Affairs excepted. Luncheon at the Palace of Prince Kanin. Thence to Uyeno Park, where the members of the Naisei-kan give a display of lance, glaive, and gymnel exercises.

12th instant.—The chief priests of the Greek church and the Staff of the Russian Legation lunch with the Prince at the Shiba Palace. The Prince leaves Tokyo by train at 3.25 p.m.

The Russian warship Rossia, with the Grand Duke Vladimir Cyril, the Emperor's Royal visitor, on board, arrived in Yokohama harbour on Thursday afternoon, and fired the usual salute, which was acknowledged by the fort at Kanagawa. The Rossia also fired 13 guns as a salute to the British warships, and the Undaunted replied. The Russian Consul at Yokohama at once proceeded to the warship, accompanied by the Consular Secretary and two military officers. The Rossia is a very fine ship, built on the lines of the British Powerful, whom she resembles almost as one pea resembles another. She was built on the Neva two years ago, and is of 12,130 tons. Her armoured belt is 10 inches thick, and her armament includes 4 8in, 16 6in., and 64 7in. guns. Her engines develop 14,500 horse-power, which allows of a speed of 20 knots. She has over 700 men on board.

THE FRENCH LEGATION.

Count and Countess Pourtales left Tokyo on the afternoon of the 6th instant for Yokohama, whence they will take passage for Europe by the Canadian Mail. In order to avoid the pain of leave-taking, they were careful to hide from their friends the hour of their departure from the capital. Thus they set out on their homeward journey without receiving any special demonstration at Shimbashi, but we may be permitted to say that their loss will be widely felt and regretted in Tokyo. We learn that Viscount de Bondy has been appointed acting First Secretary of the French Legation during the absence of Count Pourtales.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE KOBE SWINDLE.

The affair of the Hyogo Warehousing Company seems to have been a genuine swindle of the meanest type. Mr. Kita Ihei enjoys the honour of having been the principal promoter. He held the post of manager of the company, and in the sequel of various disastrous speculations—which seem to have embarrassed him despite his reported wealth—the idea occurred to him that his position offered opportunities more valuable than a mere salary. He therefore consulted with one Okano Kosaburo, the caretaker of the warehouse, and having secured his cöoperation, he then took into his confidence several fellow merchants, Messrs. Yonezawa, Kusuri, Hashimoto, and Kwanzaki, all, like himself, supposed to be men of substance, but all anxious to recoup themselves for recent losses. The gang then proceeded systematically to remove goods—chiefly rice and fish-manure—which were stored in the warehouse, disposing of them without difficulty and pocketing the money, to the tune of about a million yen, it is said, but probably the real figure will prove to be smaller. They also obtained advances on godown certificates from the banks. Ultimately the volume of these transactions began to attract attention. It was thought strange that a warehouse of comparatively small dimensions could afford accommodation to such large quantities of goods. Inquiry, of course, revealed the truth, but the mischief had been done. The Warehousing Company has a capital of 500,000 yen, of which 200,000 yen is paid up. Its business was very prosperous, the last dividend declared being at the rate of 16 per cent. Vernacular journals, from which we take these details, say that the company enjoyed high credit among Japanese and foreigners alike, and that foreign banks have often advanced money on its receipts. It is believed that the effects of the swindle will be very widely felt, for in addition to the banks directly interested, as detailed in our last issue, several others throughout the Kwansei district are also likely to suffer. It is probable, as we have already said, that these accounts are more or less exaggerated, but even when allowance is made for the embroidery of rumour, there remains enough to suggest serious trouble.

Fuller information shows that there was no actual forging of warehouse certificates in the case of the Kobe frauds. Goods were actually carried to the warehouses and temporarily stored there. The certificates were then lodged with the banks and advances were obtained against them. Then, by the connivance of the warehouse-keeper, the goods were taken out without the certificates. According to the Yushin Nippo of Kobe, as translated by the Kobe Chronicle, the sums advanced by various banks on the security of these valueless certificates were :—

	YEN.
Specie Bank	330,000
First Bank	225,000
Sumitomo Bank	80,000
Mitsubishi Bank	77 000
Mitsui Bank	50,000
Boeki Bank	45,000
Shogyo Bank...	18,000
Total	825,000

Against this sum there will be available 200,000 yen, being the unpaid capital of the Warehousing Company, and 250,000 yen, the value of estates surrendered by Yonezawa, one of the fraudulent merchants.

ADMIRAL CAMARA.

The proceedings of Admiral Camara at Port Said seem difficult to reconcile, at first sight, with the terms of the Suez Canal Convention of 1888. The Convention provides that the Canal shall be open to both neutrals and belligerents, but that its ports shall not be available to the latter for procuring stores or provisions except such as are absolutely necessary; that the ships of a belligerent must not remain in those ports for more than 24 hours at a time, unless urgent repairs are required; and that an interval of 24 hours must separate the departures of the ships of two belligerents from the same port. No mention is made of coal, but it is of course included in "stores." There is some ambiguity, also, in the qualification "absolutely necessary." To interpret it we must fall back upon the provisions of international law as endorsed by the Great Powers in their proclamations of neutrality. There we find that the quantity of coal procurable by the ship of a belligerent in a neutral harbour is no more than the quantity required for steaming to the nearest port of her own country. Minorca answers the description of the nearest home territory in the case we are considering, and since from Mahon to Port Said is about 4½ days' steaming, it would appear that Camara's Squadron was entitled to obtain a supply of coal to that extent in Port Said. Of course the question of destination appears at first sight to be crucial in such incidents. Nothing could be more inconsistent with the obligations of strict neutrality than to supply coal to ships outward bound with the obvious intention of engaging in hostilities, under pretence that the coal is to carry them peacefully homeward. But the inconvenience of attempting any scrutiny into a vessel's destination is evidently considered likely to cause more trouble than the injury done to neutral principles by allowing her to procure coal under false pretences. The difficulty is partially obviated in practice by enacting that a belligerent vessel may not obtain coal in any port of a neutral Power oftener than once in three months. In other words, a Spanish ship having coaled at Colombo, for example, would not be eligible to receive another supply of coal in any British port for the space of three months. The three months' limit is not mentioned, however, in the Suez Canal Convention, and we see nothing to prevent Admiral Camara from filling his bunkers at Port Said for the ostensible purpose of a voyage to the Balearic islands; repeating the performance at Aden, and re-iterating it at all the coaling stations of the different Powers en route to the Far East. Neither Port Said nor Suez would fall under the category of "British Ports." Hence to have taken in coal there would not disqualify the Spanish Admiral to obtain a further supply at Aden, and he might thus make his way to the Dutch Indies, finally reaching the Philippines without serious difficulty. Was that the programme contemplated when the Squadron left Cadiz? Possibly it was. But how are we to account for the action of the Authorities at Port Said in requesting the Admiral to desist from coaling? He had a right, under the Convention, to take in a supply for 4½ days. We must assume that the objection of the Egyptian Government was based, not on the mere fact of his coaling, but on the quantity that he shipped. Reuter's agent could scarcely be expected to make these discriminations, but the apparent explanation is that the Egyptian Authorities considered the spirit of the convention, not its mere letter. Obviously the intention of the document is that the supply of coal obtainable by a ship shall be limited to her actual needs. If she already has in her bunkers a sufficient quantity to carry her to the nearest home port, she is not entitled to receive any more, and since Camara's Squadron, on its arrival at Port Said, must have possessed at least that quantity, the local authorities forbade the shipping of any more. Camara's subsequent action is easily understood. Meeting with an unlooked for obstacle, he desired to seek instructions from Madrid. But he could not lie at at Port Said for more than 24 hours unless his ships were in need of repairs. He therefore fell back upon that pretext, and set about discharging coal and stores in order to give it an appearance of reality. Presently, instructions reached him to push on to Suez, and after lying there for 24 hours, he doubtless entered the Red Sea, steaming at a snail's pace in order to allow colliers from Spain to overtake him. The incidents of his voyage are of the highest interest as furnishing data to determine the application of international law to the problem of coaling. The problem presented itself for practical solution in the case of the celebrated cruiser Alabama. She obtained coal without any difficulty in Australian posts for the purpose of prosecuting her destructive campaign against the merchantmen of the United States, and the delegates of the Washington Government at the Geneva Arbitration endeavoured to fix upon Great Britain responsibility for having permitted the cruiser to ship supplies of the mineral in British harbours. The arbitrators, however, rejected the claim, being guided by the principle that neutrals have rights as well as belligerents, and should not always be forbidden to dispose of their coal to the ships of a state engaged in war. It is probable that the doings of the Spaniards and the Americans in the present war will remove this coal problem beyond the range of all further doubt. What remains to observe is the reason for the Egyptian authorities' refusal to allow coaling at Port Said and the conclusion apparently reached by the Madrid Government that coaling will not be possible for the Squadron at any neutral port en route. Still more obscure is the conduct of the Spanish Ministry in despatching the Squadron without previously ascertaining what coaling facilities would be available for it en route. Some people suggest that there is no real intention of sending the ships eastward. That is scarcely credible. We are disposed to attribute the event either to strange improvidence and incapacity, or to the deliberate design of raising questions that might involve other Powers. We may add here that we attach no credence whatever to the statement that the military force accompanying Admiral Camara is 480 officers and 10,464 men. It is impossible that such a force should be carried by four transports.

The trial of the Portuguese Ozorio for the murder of F. X. da Jesus, at Hongkong on May 9th, concluded on the 24th ult., when the accused was sentenced to death.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

COUNT OKUMA ON THE PROBLEM OF THE DAY.

IN a lecture delivered by Count OKUMA to the Yokohama Technical School (Koyu-kai) a few days ago, His Excellency spoke very plainly about the problem of the day, namely, the increase of the Land Tax. Before reading this lecture, we imagined that although Count OKUMA believed the present time inopportune for any augmentation of the Land Tax, he was not radically opposed to that method of replenishing the coffers of the State. There can no longer be any doubt, however, as to his opinion. He has announced his thorough disapproval of any addition to the Land Tax, not merely now but also in the future. Briefly stated, Count OKUMA'S argument is that Japan must still be regarded as, in the main, an agricultural country, since seven-tenths of her products come from the farm. Hence to tax the farmer heavily is to impair the most prolific source of national wealth. It may be urged, indeed, that the farmer is better off than he was in feudal times, and even that his circumstances have greatly improved during recent years owing to the appreciation of the market price of rice. That estimate is partially true, but the fact remains that the farmer's toil is at once the most severe and the least liberally rewarded of all kinds of bodily labour. One bad harvest plunges him into difficulties and compels him to have recourse to money-lenders. If the interest paid by the agricultural class on account of their debts be added to their disbursements in the shape of national and local taxes, the aggregate is something like 130 or 140 million yen annually. Already contributing very largely to the public revenue, the farmers may justly plead that to call upon them for a larger contribution would be not only an injustice, but also a reversion to the mistaken economy of feudal times, when the tiller of the soil was regarded as the person chiefly liable to taxation. It is an economical axiom that the incidence of taxes should be regulated so as to present the least possible obstacle to productive enterprise. That axiom would be plainly violated if the State laid its hand heavily upon the farmer in Japan, for the farmer is the chief producer. It has further to be noted that in Japan the population has already begun to press upon the limits of sustenance. The country may soon be unable to feed itself, and if the leading nation in the world, the English, find that state of affairs seriously inconvenient, how much worse would it be for a poor country like Japan? Every effort should be made to encourage agricultural development instead of crippling it by increased taxation.

Such were Count OKUMA'S arguments in brief. He combatted also the strange fallacy that the prosperity of the farming classes is responsible for the present disturbance of the balance of trade, but we need not reproduce a self-evident demonstration.

There are several points in His Excellency's contention that seem open to query. It is certainly true that the tiller of the soil has a hard lot, physically speaking. To us, indeed, it seems that the fisherman is even less fortunate, but that comparison has not much value in this context, seeing that the fishing class are not taxed at all in Japan. Is it not misleading, however, to consider the tiller of the soil only? More than one half of the land in Japan belongs to men who do not themselves till it, and certainly if the farmer has to toil hard for a scanty reward, the landowner stands at the other extremity of the scale, for he obtains his income without any labour at all on his own part. To foreign observers it seems that all landowners in Japan are most favourably circumstanced so far as their treatment by the State is concerned. Their contribution to the public exchequer is usually called a tax, but is really a rent. In 1874, all the agricultural land in the empire, the property of the State, was handed over in perpetuity to its then holders, the only condition being that they should pay to the Treasury a rent equal to 3 per cent. of the assessed value of the land; and since the officially assessed value was one-half of the market value, the payment actually required did not exceed 1½ per cent. Apply the same principle to England's case. Suppose that a landlord has an estate lettable for £2 an acre and saleable for £30 an acre—15 years' purchase—, and suppose that he resigns his title in favour of a number of farmers who agree to pay him 9 shillings per acre annually. Would he not be counted an extraordinarily generous person, and would not the farmers be regarded as exceptionally fortunate? That is, in effect, what the Japanese Government did in 1874. The people that came into possession of the land received it without any liability except the duty of paying a so-called "tax," amounting to 1½ per cent. of its value. We do not think that the history of the world contains any instance of a more signal act of liberality. Doubtless much of the land has changed hands since that time. Many of the recipients of the State's gift have converted their titles into ready money, and the purchasers consider that they acquired estates carrying a fixed charge not liable to be raised. But the Government is under no obligation to take such incidents into account. Still less need it concern itself about the "tillers of the soil." To make the tenant farmer an object of prime consideration in levying the land tax appears to us about as rational as it would be to regard the condition of the merchant's clerk as a factor of paramount importance for the purposes of a business tax. The condition of the tenant farmer is determined by the terms upon which he obtains his holding from the landlord: he has little practical concern with the question whether the latter's liability to the State is 2 per cent., 3 per cent., or 4 per cent. If his lot be hard, the responsibility rests entirely with his landlord.

There is another aspect of this problem which seems to receive little attention. All logically assessed taxes are of necessity variable. A trades tax, for example, depends on the volume of a merchant's transactions or the amount of profit he realizes. The larger and more prosperous his business, the greater the sum that he contributes yearly to the Exchequer. An income tax—theoretically the most rational, though practically the most objectionable, of all imposts—varies similarly as the payer's wealth increases or decreases. Why, then, should a tax on land be invariable? On what basis of justice or logic can it be maintained that however violent the fluctuations in the value of a landed estate, its owner's contribution to the public funds should remain unaltered? Such a system is directly at variance with the principle of the "unearned increment"; a principle fully recognised in Japan's modern laws relating to land tenure. Many years must pass probably before the beautiful doctrine of the single tax receives full recognition, but even now very few thinking men will be found to assert that the whole benefits of appreciation resulting from conditions to which the public at large have contributed ought to be monopolized by the individual holder of a plot of land. Yet that is precisely the conclusion involved in denying that land taxes should be raised either now or hereafter. It is admitted that the market value of agricultural land in Japan has increased enormously since 1874—doubled, trebled, or even quadrupled. The appreciation is not due to toil on the part of the farmer or to improvements effected by the landlord. It is due to the building of railways, the construction of roads, the provision of facilities for marine transportation, the general improvement in the condition of the consuming classes. Why, then, should the people whose enterprise has caused this appreciation be excluded from all share in its benefits? We are unable to understand such reasoning, and apart from considerations of economical logic, we regret that any doctrine of the kind should find favour with statesmen in authority, for we do not think that Japan can afford to be sentimental in the matter of the Land Tax. Foreign opinion about the condition of her finances will not be improved by the knowledge that she has pledged herself to eschew one of the principal and most facile sources for obtaining her much-needed increment of revenue.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

GREAT BRITAIN AND CHINA.

WHEN Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said that Great Britain single-handed could not seriously injure Russia by land in the Far East, he made an assertion which is almost a truism, and which certainly does not for one instant justify the extravagant comments that it has evoked. The plain fact is that England and Russia can not easily "come to grips" except at sea. In the event of War between the two Powers, it may be taken for granted—if the issue of the struggle is deducible from strength of armaments—that Russia would be defeated in Far-Eastern waters. Her squadron is this part of the globe does not approach the British squadron in number of ships or general fighting power, and the route for re-inforcing it would be closed to her while remaining open to England. But the question to be decided would be, not the command of the seas washing the continent of Eastern Asia, but the command of the continent itself. To that continent Russia will have free overland access when she completes her Siberian railway and carries it to the Liaotung Peninsula, and to that continent England, in order to meet her face to face, would have to transport troops over-sea from India and the United Kingdom, land them in hostile territory and maintain them there at an immense distance from their base of supplies. England enjoys the inestimable blessing of being able to dispense with conscription. Those that envy her that happiness are wont to ridicule the numerical weakness of her land forces, but the motive of their criticism is transparent. She has no use for huge cohorts, and to maintain them would be mischievous silliness. At the same time, since no happiness is unalloyed, the thorn in her non-conscription rose is that she can not check the continental expansion of a rival Power, or, at any rate, can check it within the scope of maritime operations only. She might possibly spare three corps d'armée for service in the Far East—two from the United Kingdom and one from India—, but to carry a force of a hundred thousand men to Manchuria and maintain them there would be the most stupendous operation of war ever attempted, and even supposing it feasible—which is open to grave doubts—it would be quite inadequate to accomplish anything signal against a Power whose territory is contiguous with the field of battle. It is well to remember, when we note these facts, that if England is not potential against Russia on land, Russia is quite powerless to injure England either on land or at sea. Nothing could be more misleading than to compare England —as the Japan Gazette, interpreting Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S speech, compares her— to "a schoolboy who grossly abuses his fellow, and then refuses to fight because the object of his vituperation is too big." That is simply rhetorical gas. The question is not whether England can fight Russia, but whether England can get at Russia in a particular position. Russia in Manchuria is beyond the effective range of any military weapons that England can bring to bear on her, but as to Russia's being too big for England to fight, the notion is comical. It comes to this, then, that if England is to oppose Russian territorial expansion in the Far East, she must obtain the cōoperation of some Power capable of supplying armies to fight in Manchuria and China proper. May we be permitted to say here that we discuss these contingencies with the greatest reluctance. We are not Russophobes, and we welcome most heartily the distinction now drawn by British statesmen between commercial expansion and territorial expansion. England will not raise a finger to oppose Russian commercial expansion. She demands nothing beyond similar freedom for her own commerce. Neither would she raise a finger against Russian territorial expansion if she had any trustworthy guarantee that its results would not be injurious to her trade. She has no such guarantee. Most unfortunately she can not have it. We do not desire to wound any susceptibilities, but we are compelled to say that after Great Britain's experience in connexion with Batoum, and after her experiences in connexion with Port Arthur, it is impossible for her to rely hereafter on anything except facts. For whatever catastrophes her distrust entails the responsibility rests with the Power that inspired it. Whence, then, can troops be obtained to preserve China against absorption by Russia, for that is what the problem really amounts to? There are two programmes. One is to educate China's capacities for self-defence—if she possesses such capacities—; the other is to form an alliance with Japan. England is endeavouring to adopt the former programme. Telegrams recently received show that Lord SALISBURY has been seeking to demonstrate to the Chinese the necessity of military and naval reorganization on a large scale, and has made certain offers of English technical assistance. Some success seems to have attended his efforts in the field of naval affairs, but he has failed thus far in military matters, and it is very doubtful whether the failure will not be permanent. A few English critics of the Spectator type denounce the notion of Great Britain's undertaking in the Far East a second task of the kind that has already cost her so much in the Near East—the task of bolstering up a moribund empire. These critics seem to be weary of strong efforts. Their advice is that England should fold her hands and resignedly accept bad results, lest resistance should render them worse. Now if England has any characteristic that makes for the permanency of her growth it is her implacable resolution in face of great problems. She has never confessed defeat to herself, and the consequence is that she has never been defeated. Should she unhappily lose that characteristic, the day of her decadence will have dawned. It has cost her much to maintain Turkey, but Turkey has been maintained. Will any one venture to assert that China's latent potentialities for self-defence are inferior to those of Turkey? The natural course is always the safest course. In this case the natural course is to set China on her feet and try to stiffen her back so that she will remain erect. That was the course mapped out by Count OKUMA when he assumed the direction of Japan's foreign affairs in 1897, and it is the course now adopted by Lord SALISBURY. It is interesting to note at how many points the policies of Japan and England touch. It is interesting to note, too, that the people who describe China as moribund, and declare the hopelessness of attempting to galvanise her into military competence, are the very people who point with awe to the potentialities of an army of Manchu Tartars led by Russian officers. Why not an army of Manchu Tartars led by English officers plus an army of Chinese similarly led? The development of China in Chinese hands being the policy of British statesmen, their logical and rational plan of procedure is exactly the procedure adopted by Lord SALISBURY. If that plan succeeds, there will no longer be any ground for the apprehensions suggested by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly England is bound to utilize to the utmost the opportunities naturally presenting themselves, and happily she has some years of leisure to mature her arrangements.

A STRANGE STORY.

A singular and incredible story comes from Korea to one of the Tokyo journals. The German Representative in Söul, we read, applied officially on behalf of one of his countrymen for permission to work a gold mine in one of the provinces. The application came into the hands of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, but he returned it to its sender. Thereafter Mr. Krein invited the Minister to the Legation, and, after an altercation of a violent nature, fell upon him and gave him a good drubbing. The Yomuri Shimbun's Söul correspondent thought it worth while to send this tale across the wires at 5.10 p.m. on the 30th ultimo, and added that the commotion in the Legation developed large proportions. What grain of truth the canard contains it is difficult to conjecture. It seems to us to be made out of whole cloth.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

NOTES ON NEWS.

The Government has appropriated a sum of 25,000 yen for the purpose of setting up a Japanese tea-house in the French Exposition of 1900. We suspect that this will prove one of the most profitable of the exhibits. It is just thirty-one years since the first westward trip of Japanese tea-house maidens. They went in the train of a youthful representative of the Tokugawa family, whom the world, in its happy ignorance, used to call "Mr. Nimbu Tayu," a method of nomenclature which might be paralleled by calling Lord Salisbury "Mr. Foreign Secretary." The occasion in 1867 also was a French exposition, but how different was the Japan of that time from the Japan of to-day!

It appears that the Railway Department is engaged in building a new Imperial carriage. Vernacular newspapers say that a sum of sixty thousand yen was to have been spent on the work, but His Majesty considered such expenditure inappropriate in the present season of financial embarrassment, and desired that it should be reduced by one half. Still the design for the carriage must be tolerably fine, for we read of Kyoto brocade, shibuichi door-handles, and bronze railings chiselled by Suzuki Chokichi. There are very few sovereigns in the world, we imagine, who spend so little upon luxury or display at the Emperor of Japan.

FIRE AT KOBE.

The Kobe Chronicle thus describes the fire that destroyed Messrs. Hellyer & Co.'s tea-firing godown on Tuesday morning:—The first alarm was raised by a Japanese who happened to be passing the buildings, and smoke was then observed issuing from the roof of the machinery godown. The Fire Brigade was soon on the spot, although by the time they had arrived the flames had got a good hold of the building, and it was apparent that all efforts to save it would be useless. There was no wind at the time, and that fact, coupled with the united efforts of the firemen to protect the adjoining buildings, were the means of saving an immense amount of property round the burning structure. Indeed, at one time it was thought that the two houses owned by Mrs. Drummond would be attacked, but fortunately the volumes of water kept the flames under. On the other side of the street, however, where the offices of the firm are situated, the buildings were within an ace of attack, and had there been any breeze they too would have been doomed. Two godowns full of tea, situate on each side of the machinery godown, were saved, and Messrs. Hellyer & Co. state that no tea whatever has been destroyed. The fire raged for several hours, and it was well-nigh eight o'clock before it was got under. The origin of the outbreak is still a mystery, but there is no doubt, judging from the testimony of eye witnesses, that the first indications of smouldering came from the roof of the now gutted building. The loss is, we understand, fully covered by insurance, in two offices.

THE WAR.

REPORTED ANNIHILATION OF THE SPANISH FLEET.

An official telegram is stated to have arrived from Hongkong, dated July 5, to the effect that a fierce engagement took place between the Spanish and American forces in the Bay of Cuba on the 4th inst., the fighting lasting for 3 hours. The Spanish fleet was totally annihilated and about 1,300 officers and men were taken prisoner.

OFFICIAL NOTICES.

The Official Gazette of the 30th June publishes Imperial Ordinance No 132, embodying alterations in the regulations for Japanese students abroad. The 1st clause of Article IV. of the existing regulations, which provides that funds granted to students abroad shall not exceed £180, is now altered to 1,800 yen, and the note to the 2nd clause, which entitles a student to receive extra allowances when he undertakes a tour for the purpose of study or investigation, has been revised and places the amount at 1,500 yen instead of £150 as heretofore. Article V. of the reformed regulations reads as follows:—"Any teacher or professor of a school under the direct control of the Education Department who has received orders to prosecute his study abroad, shall be placed on a list other than that of the prescribed number of teachers or professors of the schools concerned, from the date of his departure from Japan till his return, and no salary shall be paid to him. Under special circumstances, however, one-third of his salary may be granted to him." The revised rules came into operation from July 1st of the 31st year of Meiji (1898).

Another Imperial Ordinance published in the Official Gazette over the signature of the Minister of Communications refers to the certificates for measurement and registry of vessels. The following are the provisions embodied in it:—

Art. I.—The charters or licenses for registered vessels shall be regarded as certificates of measurement and registration of vessels, during the term prescribed by Art. XXIX. of the Regulations for the enforcement of the Commercial Code. Temporary charters for registered vessels shall be regarded as temporary certificates of the registry of vessels, using the term prescribed in the above article.

Art. II.—Certificates concerning the employment of mariners shall be regarded as the list of mariners during the period mentioned in the preceding clause.

Art. III.—The Marine authorities' affairs prescribed in Section I., Chapter IV., Book II., of the Commercial Code shall be conducted in the Shipping Inspection Office or Branches thereof. In places where no such offices are established, the conduct of the business devolves upon a Mayor, or Village Headman, or other public officials of a harbour. In foreign countries the task shall be undertaken in the Imperial consulate or Commercial Commissioner's Office.

Art. IV.—The task of inspecting ships shall be undertaken in Japan at the local government office, and in foreign countries by the Imperial Consulate or Commercial Commissioner's Office.

Art. V.—The above provisions are to be enforced from the date of the operation of the Commercial Code.

The regulations in regard to ships' registry, etc., promulgated by Imperial Ordinance No. 219 of the 23rd year of Meiji shall be abolished from the date of the operation of the above provisions.

Ordinance No. 3 of the Foreign Department embodies alterations in laws for the protection of emigrants, promulgated by Ordinance No. 3 of the same Department in the 29th year of Meiji. To Article VII. the following clause is added:—"In case of the abolition, establishment, or removal of a branch or sub-office in places other than cho (a district having an administrative office), fu (city), or ken (prefecture), where the principal office is established, the fact must be reported to the local Governor (in Tokyo, to the Superintendent-General of Police); Article IX. referring to Emigration Companies has been revised as follows, the italicized words showing the alterations:—"Whenever a member of the Company specially entrusted with the task, or its overseer or agent, is sent to stay in the place of immigration, or is directed to return to Japan, or is released from service, the name and address of such member or agent must be reported to the local Governor of the place where the principal office is maintained, and also to the Imperial Japanese officials abroad having jurisdiction over the place of his domicile." The following clauses have been added:—Whenever a contract between an immigrant and a person who takes charge of emigration business is annulled after official sanction for the contract has been obtained, the fact must be reported to the local Governor of the district (in Tokyo to the Superintendent-General of Police), where immigrants are registered as permanent residents. When a local Governor sanctions a contract for immigration, he must forward a report to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, together with a copy of the contract, stating the date of sanction, the name, age, personal grade, and occupation of the immigrant, and also the number of the contract. Similar notice must be given to the local Governor of the district where the principal office is established, (in Tokyo to the Superintendent-General of Police). The annulment of contract requires the same procedure to be observed. A new 11th article is introduced as below:—"If any persons engaging in business connected with emigration desire to raise emigrants according to written orders from their employers, the orders in question, together with a statement showing the estimated number of emigrants to be raised in different localities, must be presented to the local Governor of the district where the principal office is maintained, (in Tokyo, to the Superintendent General of Police). In case the local Governor shall have received such statements or reports, he shall notify the fact to other Governors concerned."

A notification has been issued by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce in regard to the control of forests throughout the Empire. It simply defines the powers and duties of Inspectors and Overseers.

FORMOSA.

The recently promulgated revision of the Formosan Administration has resulted in extensive reductions of the official establishment. Over a thousand officials of various ranks have been placed on the Retired List, or otherwise dispensed with. These changes commenced on the 13th of May, when 179 junior officials of the Governor-General's Department received their congé, and the final reductions were gazetted on the 20th of June. It is difficult to understand the exact proportions of the dismissals in the various grades, but they seem to stand thus:—

High-class officials of the Governor-General's Department	11
High-class officials of the Local Offices ...	52
Middle-class officials of Taipeh Prefecture.	90
Middle-class officials of Taichiu Prefecture.	140
Middle-class officials of Tainan Prefecture.	149
Middle-class officials of Gilan Prefecture...	14
Middle-class officials of Taitung Prefecture.	35
Middle class officials of Pescadores	28
Judicial Secretaries	23
Junior officials of Local Offices	457
Post and Telegraph officials	170
Total...	1,169

WASTE SILK EXPORT.

Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co., kindly furnish the following report of last season's Waste Silk market:—

ARRIVALS, SALES AND SHIPMENTS SINCE 1ST JULY, 1897 TO 30TH JUNE, 1898.

		Noshito.	Kibiso.	Cocoons.	Sundries.
Arrivals,	Pcls.	14,675	17,700	260	2,925	=35,560
Ventes,	"	13,975	15,840	240	2,800	=32,855
Stock,	"	700	1,860	20	125	= 2,705

SHIPPERS.

Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co.	12,633
Dell 'Oro & Co.	6,870
Bavier & Co.	4,360
C. Eymard	3,255
Siber Bennwald & Co...	2,874
Robison & Co.	2,190
Fraser Farley & Co. ...	423
Others	147
Piculs...	32,752

DESTINATION.

Marseille...	10,938
Bâle ...	6,205
Trieste ...	8,020
Geneva ...	4,400
London ...	2,871
America ...	318
Piculs...	32,752

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPEECHES BY COUNTS OKUMA AND ITAGAKI.

A meeting of the Parliamentary representatives of the Constitutional Party has been held at the chief office of the Party in Tokyo, and speeches have been delivered by Count Itagaki and Count Okuma. The reports of these speeches, as published by vernacular journals, are not altogether uniform, but the difference is one of fullness only. Collating the reports, we obtain the following results :—

Count Itagaki said that they had at last to congratulate themselves on the inauguration of the system of party cabinets. That great result had been attained by their long and zealous exertions and by Marquis Ito's determined loyalty to the nation's best interests, but, of course, their gratitude was primarily due to the gracious condescension of the Sovereign. Party Cabinets meant that the administration of national affairs should be conducted in conformity with public opinion. But it must also be remembered that the statesmen holding the mandate of the country were expected to give effect to their own views, for the confidence reposed in them by the people was based not on the idea of their being mere mouthpieces, but on the principle that they were competent to initiate useful measures. Never should it be forgotten that their long-cherished hope had been realized owing to the union of the two parties, and never should anything be suffered to disturb that union. They ought to derive a most useful object lesson from the union, for if the apparently stupendous difficulties lying in the path to coalition had been successfully overcome, what other difficulty need be considered invincible? One word of exhortation must, however, be addressed to the Party. It had hitherto been their tendency to concentrate their attention on local affairs; to become absorbed in parochial interests and forget the concerns of the country at large. They must correct that mistake and adopt a wider point of view if they hoped to realize the advantages of party government.

Count Okuma prefaced his speech with a warm eulogy of Marquis Ito. The fact that he was able to congratulate them on the consummation of their hopes was attributable to the extraordinary resolution of Marquis Ito. What incidents had occurred pending the formation of that resolution, could not be precisely stated, but the result was certainly due to the Marquis' solicitude for his country and fidelity to his sovereign. It was impossible not to admire the supreme resolve shown by this statesman of a constitutional country (waga kuni no rikken-koku no setjika), this leader of civilization (bummei no sendosha) this founder of the Constitution (Kempo no kisosha). That the spirit of the time had worked in their cause could not be denied, but Marquis Ito had been its powerful agent. Two weeks ago, they were in the thick of the fight. The memory of the House's dissolution was still fresh. There was a widely bruited rumour that Marquis Ito contemplated the organization of a political party to oppose them. But suddenly the horizon cleared. Marquis Ito sent in his resignation and advised the Sovereign to sanction the formation of a party cabinet. On the 27th of June, he (Count Okuma) and Count Itagaki were summoned to the Emperor's presence and received the Imperial mandate to organise a Ministry. In 24 hours they completed the task. Before everything their gratitude was due to the Sovereign. The progress of Parliamentary institutions in other countries presented a remarkably uniform record. The people, by persistent and often sanguinary struggles, had wrested extensions of their privileges from reluctant rulers. Here everything had been quietly and peacefully obtained through the Sovereign's gratious and far-seeing condescension. Their imperative duty was to endeavour by faithful service to repay something of the debt thus incurred and to show themselves worthy of the trust reposed in them. With that object they must try to correct the abuses that had crept into the Administration during the past twenty years. A certain clique (isshu no shuzoku) had long held the high offices of the State. Their personnel had been altered from time to time, but such alterations had not been in any sense a change of the national policy. Not until now had any real political change taken place, the change to party cabinets. It was indeed a grand thing to have been instrumental in effecting such a change, but what they had to remember was that it must be regarded as merely a preparatory step. The inauguration of party cabinets meant simply that machinery was now provided for working out national civilization and administrative progress. Turning from general to special considerations, he felt justified in asserting that the people recognised the inevitable growth of administrative expenditures and were prepared to furnish revenue sufficient for the needs of the State. The last Cabinet had not mistaken the situation, but had failed to give due consideration to the choice of sources of increased revenue. They had fallen by their own errors. A great work now lay before the Party, and it was necessary that a large number of its members should be admitted to the ranks of the Government (seifu bunai ni ōi ni dōshi no shu wo ageru no hōsufo ari). Time, too, was needed. They must have five years to accomplish the task lying before them, and he trusted that their own mistakes or dissensions would not shorten the period.

TONIC SOL-FA CONCERT.

The years have rolled by very quickly, it seems to us, since the day when the Yokohama Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society first came into existence, and already the eighth annual concert has come and gone. The performance of Friday evening will rank easily with its predecessors. True, the once magnificent choir of fifty voices has dwindled very perceptibly, but the spirit that animated its early members still remains as brisk as ever, thanks to the untiring energy of its musical directress, Mrs. E. S. Patton, to whom the rising generation in Yokohama owe so much. The programme was very fully advertised and it would be a matter of supererogation to reproduce it. Miss Clara Schwabe repeated at the piano the triumphs of last year—she is, beyond question, a most gifted child; the powers of expression and execution that she possesses border on the marvellous, while her touch and attack are equally surprising in one so young. What wonder, then, that she was recalled. The vocal numbers were well received, but the smallness of the choir prevented full justice being done in all cases. "Sweet and Low," and the "Dance Moresque"—a tonic sol-fa chorus—were the best. The instrumental selections were of high average merit, but the second half, with its songs and choruses in character and several pretty dances, proved the most popular portion of the programme. Master Apcar, robed in fiery red, with yellow faced wings, covered himself with glory in an eccentric elfin dance and had to repeat it. Miss Clara Schwabe and Miss Adèle Favre-Brandt gave a beautiful skirt dance which was loudly encored, so dainty—and so serious-faced—were the wee danseuses. The vocal duet "Jeanie and Donald," by Miss Carol Merriman and Master Roger Loomis; and the trio "My Gal," by Masters O. & N. Averill and H. Bugbird, were very good and received hearty recognition. After the little lads had responded to the inevitable encore, they ran back to the stage laden with baskets of lovely flowers which they presented, with many odd bows, to Mrs. Patton and Miss Bloxham. The song, chorus, and dance from "Dorothy" was very pretty, Dorothy, Miss Merriman, looking and singing the part most charmingly. But the last item, perhaps, roused the greatest amount of applause, when Master J. P. Mollison, ætat 6, danced a hornpipe in a style that captured everyone. The manner in which the little chap put in the intricate steps of the sailor's dance was a marvel and demonstrated the extreme care that his instructress must have bestowed on his training, beside illustraing his own precocious aptness. He was recalled and concluded the dance this time with the British and American flags entwined. Just before the close of the concert, Mrs. Patton took occasion to make the following remarks, which were most cordially received.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,—Even at the risk of appearing egotistical, I feel I must address a few words to you this evening. It is now nine years since I came to Yokohama quite unknown, bringing only one letter of introduction from the Consul for Japan in Melbourne to a family long since gone from here. During that time I have worked hard for the advancement of musical education amongst the young people of this place, though I cannot bring forward as evidence of the result of that nine years' teaching the performance of the young people whom you have heard to-night, because this community is so shifting that none remain here now of my original pupils. Still this performance will serve to show what may be done with a good system in a period varying from two to six years. I am well aware that the system by which I teach music has its detractors, from remarks that frequently reach my ears (although not intended for them). Besides hearing that tonic sol-fa is "trash," "rubbish," etc., etc., I was even told recently that some wiseacre said it would be utter ruin to a musical child, as if it were some incurable disease which, if contracted early in life, he would carry with him to the grave! In one sense this is true, for a child well grounded in music by tonic sol-fa will often be in a position in after life to lend a helping hand to many a staff-notationist hopelessly floundering amid the intricacies of his own musical notation! But as these dispraging remarks invariably emanate from people who know nothing about it, their opinions are no more worthy of serious attention than are the yelpings of a small dog, who neither knows what he is barking at, nor could explain it if he did, and therefore may be dismissed with silent contempt. I can at any time produce similar evidence to what you have heard to-night, in proof of the educational value of tonic sol-fa, all the musical part of this evening's programme having been taught by me and studied by the performers entirely by that system, and although its founder John Curwen, perhaps never anticipated its being put to such a use, I often find it of the greatest advantage in teaching dancing also. With regard to any personal opponents I may have made through my zealous advocacy of Tonic Solfa, they are far outnumbered by the host of friends and supporters, I see before me to-night, and even those who admire me and my teaching least, must but admit that as a teacher I have always been most earnest and indefatigable in my efforts for my pupils' progress. During my educational career in Yokohama, I have not only seen many schools formed and broken up, but no less than three adult musical societies have been organized, and after a brief period of existence have collapsed, spite in of the well-known amateur musical talent that exists here, while my little unassuming Choral Society has stood its ground notwithstanding the fact that all but two of the original members have either left Yokohama, or have out-grown their youthful qualifications for membership; and I trust that this community will continue to support it as long as I am able to teach tonic sol-fa here. To compare small things with great, I am sure all here remember reading last year of the death of Madame Clara Schumann, at the age of seventy-seven, and that it was stated in her obituary notice that almost up to the time of her death she was actively engaged in teaching. She was a wonderful instance of feminine vitality, for I should have to live and teach for another ten years in order to emulate her, which is hardly probable. Still every time that I see my friends at the annual childrens' concert I am encouraged to fresh exertions, and it gives me hopes that each one may not be the last. To the dear young pupils who have worked so well for me to-night—to the many friends who came here to witness their talented efforts—and to Miss Bloxham and Mr. Beart, whose valuable aid has contributed so much towards this evening's success, I return my most grateful thanks.

PICKPOCKETS ON THE RAILWAYS.

It is alleged that the number of pickpockets frequenting the trains on the Tokaido Railway has greatly increased of late. The police have deemed it expedient to tell off a number of special detectives for service on the road, and the railway authorities have agreed that these men shall be allowed to ride on any of the trains free of charge, a concession which there was hitherto some reluctance to grant. Each section of the line has been assigned to the supervision of the police in the nearest town, and it is hoped that by carefully organized scrutiny the nuisance will soon be mitigated.

NEW VICE-MINISTERS.

Mr. Shiba Shiro has been appointed Vice-Minister for Agriculture and Commerce, and Mr. Suzuki Jubi Vice-Minister for Home Affairs. These gentlemen were both members of the last House of Representatives, and are prominent party politicians.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

JAPANESE FACTS AND COMMENTS.

In view of rumours recently circulated to the effect that the use of coal productive of sparks has frequently been a source of outbreaks of fire in dwellings along the railway lines, special arrangements are to be made to guard against such a calamity. To secure improvement in the means of transport, the railway-telegraph training institute in Kobe has been removed to Tokyo, in order that a number of operatives may be specially instructed; while commissioners from the Departments of War, the Navy, and Foreign Affairs have held a conference as a preliminary step to effecting a complete junction of railways with various ports in the country.

The Department of Communications lately introduced numerous improvements in Government and private railways. According to the Yomiuri, it now contemplates effecting other radical reforms. More facilities are to be provided for the examination of tickets according to classification, in stations where passengers are numerous; stations lamps are to be inscribed with the names of the stations; station names are to be posted up in the middle and at both ends of the platform; the station names are to be written in kira kana with equivalents in Roman characters under them; the lower half of passenger cars will be painted the same colour as the tickets, according to classification; notices of the times and destinations of trains are to be posted up at the booking-offices; and there will be notices in every passenger car, furnishing useful information to passengers.

With regard to the proposal for the formation of a new party at the time of Marquis Ito's resignation, the latter is reported by the Yorozu to have made the following public statement:—"The reason why I adhered so long to the policy of independent cabinets, is that no party existed which could command a majority in the Diet. Now that the Liberals and Progressists have amalgamated, there can be no doubt as to the possibility of their securing an overwhelming majority in the Diet. I therefore persuaded Counts Okuma and Itagaki, as my successors, to form a new Cabinet. I have every reason to suppose that, disregarding personal interests, they will devote their energies to the management of State affairs. To organise a hostile party against them is a step from which I ought to refrain; but should they prove themselves inclined hereafter to promote the sole interests of their clique, I will not hesitate to rise, and, organising a hostile party, enter upon a struggle with them. There is no need to resort to such procedure at present."

The misery in Iwate prefecture, says the Nichi Nichi, is beyond description. The year before last the territory was devastated by tidal waves, and last year it sustained serious injury from noxious insects. No crop was raised during the two years, and this year for about three months the inhabitants of Waka district were compelled to live without grain or rice. They barely sustained their lives by feeding on pine bark. Death upon death occurred from starvation. The village council recently resolved upon relieving the sufferers by the issue of loans to the amount of 2,000 yen, but these funds are hardly sufficient for half a month's sustenance, and as recourse to further loans is impracticable, application was made to the prefectural office for aid. The prefectural office, however, having refused to distribute various stocks of rice which it had previously determined to grant, serious excitement arose among the villagers, who, in companies of several hundreds, are reported to have attacked the Kencho. Thousands of inhabitants are now busily engaged in gathering roots and barks, and even these, the Nichi Nichi adds, are almost exhausted.

A critic, writing on the Tokyo native press, says the Kokumin and the Jiji are the only papers permeated with progressive views. The former bases its views upon glory, and the latter upon profit. The former aims at spiritual progress; the latter at material development. The Kokumin follows the English fashion, directing its attention chiefly to the preservation of character; the Jiji is American in its spirit, and in its opportunism shows the utmost irregularity in its views. The Shogyo, as the name implies, treats things from a financial point of view, fixing its eye not only on the finances of Japan, but also on those of various other nations. It is perfectly conscious of the responsibility of its statements. As for the Nichi Nichi, respect for officialdom is the basis of its arguments; it has recently displayed a slight change in its tone, but still preserves the spirit of officialdom. The Asahi yields to the influence of society instead of endeavouring to direct it. It can hardly claim to be a leader or a guide, its remarks being usually grounded upon popular prejudices. The Nippon is characterized by narrow-mindedness, and the negative views peculiar to the people of the north east. Its opinions are generally one-sided. Other papers, such as the Yomiuri, Mainichi, Tokyo, and Chuo, being organs of various political parties, cannot escape the imputation of being imbued with party spirit.

According to the Shogyo, the remainder of the Osaka Harbour Bonds—1,703,800 yen—has been subscribed by the 3rd National, the Yasuda, the Meiji, the Teikoku Commercial, and the Kitahama Banks, in equal proportion, at the rate of 91.50 yen per 100 yen face value. As for the Nagasaki Harbour Bonds, our contemporary reports that steps are being taken to raise the 3rd instalment, amounting to 600,000 yen, on the following terms:—The sale price to be at least 90 yen per 100 yen face value, with 6 per cent. interest per annum, and the period of subscription to be not later than August 31st this year.

The tea trade of Yokohama, according to the Tokyo Asahi, continues prosperous. Sales during the latter half of last month were brisk, various foreign firms taking large quantities. However, now that the second crop is at hand, quotations are gradually falling with the increase of arrivals from producing districts. The average price has already dropped a dollar, though cheap qualities are in great demand. Business transacted during the second half of last month is as follows:—Arrivals, 1,486,000 catties; sales, 1,808,500 catties; stock, 451,300. The comparative figures for the two years from the beginning of the season to June are:—

	1898. Catties.	1897. Catties.
Arrivals	12,671,900	13,880,800
Sales	12,220,600	13,308,700
Stock	451,300	572,100

Mr. Matsuda, Minister of Finance, has been interviewed by the Jiji, which represents the Minister as stating that no increased taxation of land will be resorted to. The imposition of a heavy tax on saké would be attended with serious difficulties, but the project commended itself, and the Government had almost resolved upon presenting a bill to that effect in the 13th session of the Diet. Should this prove insufficient to meet the financial crisis, then sugar would also be taxed. According to investigations compiled by the Municipal Council of Tokyo, sugar manufactured in Japan and sold at 25 sen per catty, did not realise a profit, whereas imported sugar is offered for sale at 12 or 13 sen only. Levying protective taxes on sugar may be a question which requires special treatment, but regarded as a mere source of revenue, it is most unexceptionable. It is not probable that the demand will suffer by a tax.

At 10 a.m. on the 5th inst. a meeting of local Governors was held at the Home Department, when the Premier and Minister for Home Affairs were present. The former, in addressing the Governors, said that the nature of the present Cabinet required the appointment of some officials holding the same views as the Premier and other Ministers, but, as executive officers differed in character and in responsibility from politicians, no needless changes would be made among [illegible] long as they remained faithful to the execution of orders from the central Government, they would be secure in their positions. It was quite natural that the growth of prefectural organization should require increased expenditure, but simultaneously with the expansion of local administration efforts must be made to dismiss useless officials, and so secure the services of well qualified persons. The development of administrative machinery could be only attained by the recission of all un-necessary forms of procedure. Count Itagaki said the meeting furnished an opportunity for giving instructions with regard to the general election. The last election was characterized by absence of violence, but was marked by extreme corruption. In the coming contest, however, the purest methods must be adhered to. A draft of regulations for this purpose was then submitted for discussion. The Count also urged the strict enforcement of precautionary measures against epidemics.

The marine products of Hokkaido were formerly chiefly exported to China, the output in 1886 amounting to 187,924 koku, valued at 479,207 yen. By 1893 the figures swelled to 275,427 and 1,002,298, respectively, showing an increase of over 50 per cent. in production and 20 per cent. in value. The war with China in 1894, however, greatly diminished commerce between the two countries, and the output of marine products for that year did not exceed 152,409 koku, valued at 268,048 yen,—a reduction of 40 per cent. in comparison with the figures for 1886. A further decrease is noticeable in 1895, the output and the value realized being only 130,606 koku and 316,244 yen, respectively. By 1897, the amount of produce rose to 200,000, but the fluctuations in the Chinese exchange rates consequent upon the adoption of gold monometallism in Japan caused the trade to fall into an unfavourable condition. Quotations have rapidly fallen, and, while the period of gathering the fresh sea weed is at hand, an enormous amount still remains unsold, accumulated in the godowns of Chinese merchants in Yokohama. Some ten years ago a Sea-weed Dealers' Union was organised, and was followed by another corporation designated the Japan Sea-weed Company, with a capital of a million yen. This Company undertook the monopoly of sea weed for export, with a view to prevent coarse manufacture and to prevent arbitrary dealing on the part of Chinese merchants. Unfortunately, however, the project failed, and there remain now only minor companies in different parts of the North, the commercial power being entirely in the hands of the Chinese. Even with the present appreciation of commodities, the value of sea weed is still below the rates attained as early as 1893. The delay in the adoption of remedial measures will surely, the Shogyo remarks, lead to a still more serious decline in this branch of trade.

A speech delivered on the 2nd instant at the Kawakamiza theatre, Tokyo, by Miss Ota Kuni, member of the Japanese Ladies' Moral Improvement Society, is reported by the Jiji as follows:—"The policy of female education adopted in the Orient from time immemorial has been beset with errors and abuses. Extreme humility was the principal aim of instruction, and this led to degradation; women were merely objects to be trifled with by the stronger sex. In this enlightened 19th century their position is almost as low as it was in feudal times. The causes for their degeneracy may be manifold, but the most prominent were want of education and consequent inability to exercise their own discretion in social affairs. Being brought up in seclusion, social intercourse was limited to their nearest relations. Home was to them the world. Obedience to their parents, and to mothers and fathers-in-law, as well as to their husbands, was the one inviolable law for them. Their stock of knowledge did not extend beyond the Onna Daigaku (Maxims of Women) and the Shobai Orai (Manual of Trade), accompanied by sewing lessons and instruction in music. Under these circumstances it is quite natural that they should be down-trodden by men. The dawn of civilization in the Meiji era has tended to break these fetters, but there is one point which is seriously to be deplored—the difference in education between men and women. Women are virtually excluded from all higher instruction. Although it is admitted that their physical limitations prevent their occupying the same sphere as men, it is unjust to deprive them of mental culture.

Digitized by Google UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The Rikugō Zasshi discusses the attitude of Japanese Christians as displayed in the secularisation of Christian schools. The tendency in all quarters, says this organ, seems to be to eliminate from Christian institutions whatever is calculated to give offence to unbelievers. This is the principle that lies at the root of the changes to which Christian schools have been subjected. It is quite plain that the losses attending the carrying out of such a policy will be far greater than the gains. The distinctiveness of mission schools constitutes their chief value. If this distinctiveness can be maintained without retaining the appellation "Christian" why wrangle about a name? say some. The answer to this is that there is no object in getting rid of the name if the quality which causes umbrage in the hearts of unbelievers, the distinctive Christian character of the school is retained, for it is foolish to suppose that the removal of the name, while the reality remains, will in any way pacify the minds of the opponents of Christian schools. The plan recommended by the writer we are quoting is that Christianity should present a bold front, and refuse to consent to compromise of any kind. Only by doing this can it establish its claim to supremacy over men's minds. To render Christianity Japanese in form and to make it financially independent of foreign aid are both very desirable objects, but to prune and trim it in order to make it pleasing to the eyes of outside cavillers is a sure way of robbing it of all influence in the country.

* * *

A lengthy article appears in the Bukkyō entitled Nihon Shugi to Chokugo, which discusses the subject of ethical standards on broad lines. We give a brief epitome of the argument:—The morality of a people cannot be manufactured at will. It must grow out of habits of thought and time-honoured customs. Materialism is undoubtedly liable to subvert morality, and hence the wave of materialistic thought that is now passing over Japan is to be regarded with apprehension. It has been customary to blame Mr. Fukuzawa and what is known as the Mita School of thought for the wide prevalence of the money-worshipping spirit. The Keiōgijuku is denounced in some quarters as the propagator of a pernicious form of materialism. But those who take this view fail to apprehend the true significance of the part Mr. Fukuzawa and his school have played in the education of Japan. In order to break down that contempt for money and for money-making occupations which characterised the leaders of thought in the Tokugawa era and which showed itself in a marked manner at the beginning of the Meiji era, Mr. Fukuzawa adopted various methods of demonstrating that the whole future of Japan, as a country committed to a policy of close intercourse with Western nations, depends on her adoption of Occidental ideas as to the importance of money-making and material progress of every kind. Thanks to the labours of Mr. Fukuzawa and many others, this principle is now fully recognised. Realising this, Mr. Fukuzawa finds it no longer necessary to be always preaching the doctrines he preached many years ago. He knows only too well that men are apt to run to extremes, that from ultra-idealism many Japanese have descended (for descent he takes it to be) to ultra-materialism. At the present moment the Nippon Shugi party are doing much more harm to the cause of moral education than the Mita School of writers has ever done. The narrow views advocated by this party have no redeeming features whatever. The writers who constitute the leaders of this movement have set themselves in opposition to Buddhism, Shintō and Christianity alike and have even ventured to accuse the adherents of these religions of acting in opposition to the Imperial Ordinance on education. These writers can only be regarded as perverters of truth and as flatterers of the nation. As self-constituted champions of the Imperial Ordinance, their assumptions will be repudiated by all right thinking men.

* * *

The following list of articles appearing in Buddhist magazines conveys an idea of the topics of most interest in the Buddhist world at the present time.

"The Use of Art as an Aid to Religious Reform." (Zenshū.)

"The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." The argument of the writer of this article is that the Roman Empire was destroyed by Christianity—an anti-national religion—and that Japan will soon have to face the same danger. (Idem).

"The two thousand eight hundred and fiftieth Anniversary of Shaka's death and its significance." (Shōhōrin.)

"Buddhist Reform," by Dr. Inoue Yenryō Dr. Inoue advocates the abandonment of that policy of retirement from the busy world which has been followed by Buddhists for so many centuries and the adoption of a progressive and aggressive policy. (Meikyō Shinshi.)

"The Government, Education, and Religion.' The Government is recommended to make unsparing use of religious men as school-teachers. (Dentō.)

"The Limits of Religious Liberty," (四明餘霞 Shimei-yoka.)

"The Fashions and Religion of the Upper Classes." The contention of this article is that there is great degeneration in the moral state of the higher strata of society and that the influence which graduates of the chief educational establishments of the land ought to exercise over the higher classes is not felt. (Hansei Zasshi.)

"The True Way and Actual Profit," by Mr. Ouchi Seiran. (Mikuni no Hikari.)

* * *

On April 13th last a temple that dates from 1321, the Sōji-ji, of Noto, was burnt to the ground. This building was the honsan (本山), or Head Temple of the Sō-ō Sect. In addition to the destruction of the temple this sect lately lost a large sum of money deposited in the Kujime bank, prior to its bankruptcy.

* * *

On May 28th the Shinri celebrated the appearance of its hundredth number by the publication of a specially interesting issue, giving a full exposition of the principles of the mission, and by a meeting of the friends and adherents of the German Mission held at the Shingakkō, Shimo-Tobisaka-machi, Koishikawa, Tōkyō From the matter published in the Shinri (May number) the following details are taken:—Mr. T. Maruyama states that the Shinri has been in existence ten years and that its aim is to act as an exponent of Christian theology and philosophy. The Rev. C. Munzinger observes that the Christian faith, like the waters of the Rhine, became polluted when far removed from its source and that the restoration of the purity of the Christian religion which had been effected by the Lutherans was a work of great merit. As a church, the Lutherans in Japan had figured as the champions of Biblical Christianity as distinguished from the Christianity of ecclesiastical dogma. The dogmas of the orthodox party could never satisfy the longings of the Japanese people. There are truths of the everlasting gospel of Christ which Japanese can assimilate without outraging in any way their traditional notions and feelings. The ethical teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is capable of universal application. This opinion the Shinri has done its best to emphasise from month to month. Writing from Germany, the Rev. O. Schmiedel says that the most important of all subjects connected with Biblical study is the character of Christ. Around that character clusters all that is valuable in the Old and New Testaments. To separate the real Christ from the traditions and pious fancies that have grown up around his personality is a work second to none in importance. This can only be done by deciding on what were the chief acts of His life and what were His real utterances.

The Rev. G. Schiller gives an account of the principles of the Fukyū-fukuin-Kyōkwai, or the Allgemeine-evangelische protestantisch Missions Verein. Mr. Schiller refers to Mr. Takahashi Goiō's hostile criticism of the work of the Lutheran Church in the April number of the Far East. In the March and April numbers of the Far East Mr. Takahashi Goiō published two articles entitled "Christianity in Japan." On p. 284 of the April number he thus speaks of the German Mission*:—"But, let me freely speak, the German Evangelical Church here represents the extreme left of German Speculative Thelogy; and such a system it is needless to say, cannot but drive men from Christianity, rather than attract them to it, because it is founded on a multitude of speculative hypotheses, or, in plain terms, it rests on a destructive 'higher criticism' that is ever shifting its grounds. The general impression is that the retarding of the march of Christianity in this country has not a little to thank the counter-movement of that sect. German Missionaries are very learned à l'Allemande, and speak without any opposition, a fact greatly telling on the unbelieving populace, although their influence has gone down considerably of late. A close friend to this (sic) is the Unitarian Church, which has also entered into a defensive as well as aggressive alliance with Buddhism in general, her first and chief preacher now being a well-known (former?) Shinshū priest." Mr. Schiller contends that this is a gross misrepresentation of the principles and the practice of the Lutherans in Japan. The mission has joined no alliances of the kind referred to. We neither sympathise with the Orthodox party nor with the Unitarians, says Mr. Schiller. The former are trying to impose the yoke of Western Christian dogma on the Japanese. The latter argue in favour of religion of any and every type and are not distinctively Christian as we make a point of being. We are in a word preachers of the gospel of Christ, whose one aim it is to make Christ's yoke easy for those who come under it, and never to attempt to saddle Christian Churches here with a burden which they could not possibly bear. Christianity in this country must be allowed to develop on its own lines, as it has done elsewhere. There is a German and an English type of Christianity and there must be a Japanese one also. In reply to the assertion that we have no principles but those that rest on destructive criticism, I may refer to an enunciation of the principles of our Church drawn up in 1887. In preaching the Gospel of Christ in civilised countries, says this document, the following points are to be borne in mind:—(1) "That the Gospel is not founded on the wisdom of men, but on divine revelation. (2) That this revelation is perfect and thorough and not confined to one time or one form. (3) The Gospel we preach is not a new religion but rather a reformer of moral abuses which have sprung up. (4) We therefore do not consider it our province to found sects or parties, but simply to stand forth as witnesses of Christ, the one and only Saviour of the World. (5) We do not depend for success on any elaborate or high class system of doctrines, but on the spirit of God, the only effectual saving power. (6) Our Gospel is not one which lives only in the past, which is merely historical, it is experienced in the hearts and lives of believers day by day." And these are the principles that Mr. Takahashi Goiō describes as of a destructive tendency. Is the removal of the stones that lie across the path of would-be Christians to be denounced as wholesale destruction? If so, we are guilty as a mission. . . . . Notwithstanding all that is said in defence of orthodoxy,

* We quote Mr. Takahashi's unrevised English as it stands in the "Far East."—(Writer of the Summary).

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN
Original from one thing is quite certain, and that is, that the Japanese churches of the future will not be orthodox.

* * *

The subject of the Rev. R. Minami's article in the 100th number of the Magazine is:—"The liberal Christianity which we espouse occupies a special place in Japan." Mr. Minami states that the opinions expressed in his essay are not to be regarded as in every case those of the Mission to which he belongs. He alone is responsible for them. We give a short resumé of his article. Since there are not a few among the Orthodox who maintain that we are not Christians at all, it is incumbent on us to define the position we hold among religious parties with some care. We are not among those who consider that all religions except Christianity are inventions of the Devil, but we maintain that there is no religion that in point of sublimity is equal to Christianity. But by Christianity we do not mean the Christianity of the creeds as represented by the orthodox party. We have been made the object of attack because we contend that traditional and ecclesiastical Christianity is not the essence of the religion of Christ. Dr. Gordon denounced us in The Missionary Herald some months ago and was followed by Mr. Takahashi Goro. Dr. Gordon stated that one of the causes of the degeneration of Christians in Japan was the introduction of German Biblical criticism into this country. Thus we are represented as enemies to the Christian cause, as obstructors in the way of those who come here to preach the Gospel of Christ. This all arises from a misunderstanding of the views we hold and the position we have assumed. We Japanese have a problem to solve in connection with the adoption of Christianity that is of exceptional difficulty. It is well known that the apostle Paul was all things to all men. To the Jews he became a Jew, to the Greeks a Greek. Early Christianity as preached to the Jews and as preached to the Gentiles differed in many important particulars. And in the course of history Christianity has assumed different forms in order to suit the nations which have adopted it. Christianity is comparatively new in Japan. We Protestant Christians of to-day are bound by no traditional teaching having special reference to this country, and hence it is for us to determine what form Christianity shall take among us. In Christianity there are two distinct elements. One is a moving and changeable element; the other a fixed and unchangeable element. The teaching of Christ and the life of devotion he led, terminated by a cruel death, which death showed the sincerity and earnestness of his convictions—this constitutes the foundation of the Christian religion as believed in and practised in all times. This element may be described as the essentially religious element. It rests on undoubted historical fact; and is distinct from all the metaphysical and philosophic theories that are commonly considered to be inseparable from the warp and woof of the Christian religion. The changeable and progressive parts of Christianity have to do with a variety of speculative questions on which the knowledge of mankind in one age is very different from what it is in another. To the questions, what is morality? what is religion? How should the term God be defined? what is the true theory of the Universe? And what position does man occupy in the order of the Universe? various answers have been given in different ages. They are intellectual problems the solution of which is far as attainable depends largely on extensive and labourious investigation. The enlightened Christians of every age in their explanation of the various phenomena of the universe, whether in the region of mind or of matter, are bound to rely on clearly ascertained scientific facts. One of the duties of the divines of every age is to reconcile Christian teaching with scientific teaching. The old basis of the Christian religion, miracles and the inspiration of the Bible, has been shown to be unreliable. The study of other religions has demonstrated that the notion that the Christian religion alone is true and all other religions are false, and the notion that the Christian religion alone is founded on Divine revelation can no longer be entertained. Hence the doctrine of the divinity of Christ, the working of miracles and the inspiration of the Bible have had to be given up. It is because the German liberal Christians recognise this and act on the recognition in their endeavours to supply another basis for Christian teaching that they have excited the hostility of the orthodox party. The supernaturalism of Christianity can no longer be authoritatively taught as the one foundation of the faith. This foundation having been removed by the progress of science and historical study, an adequate substitute has to be found. The question as to what that substitute shall be is the one problem of all others that demands the attention of earnest Christians. For the solution of this problem it is necessary to study history closely; not merely the records of the rise and fall of nations, and the succession of events in the world, but the history of the workings of men's minds in that region of thought and speculation known as the metaphysical world. It is for the religious metaphysician to determine what is the modern Christian conception of the universe. There must be no antagonism between the intellectual side of Christianity and its moral and religious side. The system of doctrine to be preached must be a well-balanced and harmonious whole. If asked whether this new type of Christianity will possess sufficient strength to establish itself in the world, speaking candidly and without reserve, I should say this is doubtful. Mr. Minami's words are Kaku shin keikō (格新向) wo yū suru Kiristukyō wa hatashite seiritsu suru nōryoku ari ya? Gojin (吾人) wo shite habakaru tokoro naku iwashimeba, kore gimon ni soku su. But it is possible to think thus and still be a Christian. I at least so think and I am a follower of Christ. Whether on the basis which I have sketched it is possible to found a Church that will hold together for any length of time is a question still undetermined. We are trying an experiment here that has never been tried before. In Europe and America there has never been any such liberty of belief as we enjoy, and there never can be. Seeing that the Japanese Christians of the liberal school stand alone in the world, their responsibility is very great. One thing is certain, the Japanese are a rational people and in recent times have studied very keenly Western science and philosophy. No form of Christianity that is incapable of being reconciled with advanced science has any chance of being received by educated people in this country. To proclaim as truths theories which science has clearly shown to be untenable and to call these Christian theories, is worse than useless. Our Christianity must in every respect be up to date. We can only accept what appeals to our reason, and can only offer to others what we can show to be thoroughly rational."

* * *

One of the leading characteristics of modern Christianity as practised in Europe and America, says the Kirisuto-Kyō Shimbun, is its adaptation to social wants and circumstances. In the middle ages, Christianity was shut up in monasteries or retreats, or hidden in the hearts of a few devout souls, now it mingles with the affairs of the bustling world. It originates and superintends a number of institutions designed to render life happier and brighter. This element in Christianity, says the organ we quote, needs to be more fully developed in Japan.

* * *

The Fukuin Shimpō criticises an article from the pen of Yamaji Yakichi entitled "A study of nature," in which, according to the Fukuin Shimpō, Mr. Yamaji appears as a pantheist and as a believer in the Pythagorean doctrine of metempsychosis. Not so very long ago, says the Fukuin Shimpō, Mr. Yamaji figured as a defender of orthodoxy and denounced the heresy of Mr. Yokoi Tokio and his party. This volte face is worth calling attention to, as it is getting to be very common among Japanese Christians. Mr. Yamaji, says the Fukuin Shimpō, writes of our connection with nature and of our inseparability from it as though it were something new, but this theory has been advocated by various philosophers ever since men began to study nature.

Mr. Yebina Danjō, says the periodical we are now quoting, in commenting on Mr. Gladstone's connection with Christianity and with the enunciation of the principle of liberty, links his name with that of Ward Beecher in America and Yokoi Shōnan in Japan. Mr. Yebina contends that even in religion, though Mr. Gladstone professed the orthodox faith to the day of his death, this eminent statesman argued in favour of allowing great liberty of belief. He saw good in Unitarianism, while pointing outs its defects. As regards the divinity of Christ, says the Fukuin Shimpō, it is not a doctrine which the world can receive without preparation. Hence it is preferable to begin by dwelling on the superiority of Christ's manhood. When it is proved that Christ was no ordinary man, the mind is somewhat prepared for accepting the belief that he was God as well as man.

Mr. Kataoka Kenkichi, President of the last Diet, is a Christian, and before leaving his official residence, says the Fukuin Shimpō, he held a religious service there. Some 40 Christians and sympathisers were present, including Viscount Yamanouchi. The service was conducted by Mr. Uemura Masahisa. This incident is somewhat remarkable, says the Fukuin Shimpō, as showing the spirit of the times.

* * *

Writing in the Yui-itsu (No. 47), Mr. Shimotagi Tenrui gives a minute account of modern Shintō. He says that there is great ignorance about the real tenets of Shintoists, but a good deal of this is to be attributed to the fact that there are so many different schools of thought within the pale of the Shintō body. Even definitions of what Shintō actually is and of its principal functions differ considerably. According to some it is a system whose chief object is to encourage ancestral worship and loyalty to the living Emperor and his predecessors of royal lineage. According to others it is a great government engine. In Hirata Atsutane's definition of Shintō under five heads there is much that is obscure. There are at present 12 tolerably well-known Shintō sects as follows:—The Shintō honkyoku-ha; (2) The Jingūkyō ha; (3) The Taisha (大社) Kyō ha; (4) The Kurosumi (黒住) Kyō ha; (5) The Shinshū (神習) Kyō-ha; (6) The Taisei (大成) Kyō ha; (7) The Fusō (扶桑) Kyō-ha; (8) The Jikkō (實行) Kyō-ha; (9) The Shūsei (修成) ha; (10) The Mitarai (身禊) ha; (11) The Shinri (神理) Kyō ha; (12) Ontake (御嶽) Kyō-ha. All these sects represent differences of opinion, but most of the sects are agreed in assigning to the Shintō faith a position quite independent of State control. It is correct to affirm, they would say, that Shintō is the instructor of the State rather than that the State is the instructor of Shintō. The Jingūkyō ha alone asserts that Shintō occupies a higher rank and is far more sacred than any existing religion. The adherents of this sect object to the name religion being applied to Shintō. To them the term appears degrading. But this view is narrow and indefensible. With a large class of Shintoists there is liberality of feeling and a readiness to acknowledge the devotion and piety of the adherents of other creeds.

* * *

Dr. Katō discourses in the Shakai Zasshi on that well-worn subject, the decline of morals in the Meiji age. He maintains that Shintō, Buddhism and the code of honour and upright conduct known as Bushidō have all alike lost their power over society; that in proportion to the intellectual gains of the country there have been moral losses; that something worse than concubinage is practiced by women, and that

* We have aimed at giving the gist of Mr. Minami's article rather than reproducing his exact words, this being the only course possible with the space at our disposal.—(Writer of the Summary.)

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

under these circumstances it is the duty of all lovers of their country to discuss methods of improving the state of Society.

* * *

In the Rikugō Zasshi, No. 209, Mr. Matsumura Kaiseki in an article on religion in general discusses the state of Christianity in Japan at the present time. He says that it is quite hopeless to expect to come to an understanding with foreign missionaries; that there are numbers of them that though knowing the Japanese language and Japanese customs, and after living in the country 20 years, are unable to attract an audience when they preach. They are not open to advice, and they are quite ignorant of the proper way to evangelise. In their schools of divinity they do nothing but teach Western theology without any regard to such systems of thought as Buddhism and Confucianism, which form the basis of the religious notions prevalent in the Far East. They preach to us, he continues, just as they would preach to Europeans or Americans; and hence without any effect. Their message can only be compared to music in the ears of the deaf. There is no feeling of responsibility on the part of their hearers, because there is no appeal to the real sentiments of the people. Japanese evangelists to a large extent follow suit. They praise foreigners and imitate foreign ways. They utterly ignore the fact that they are addressing audiences whose only ideas as to religion are derived from Buddhist, Shintō or Confucian sources. In order to conquer an enemy it is necessary to possess a minute knowledge of his peculialities and weaknesses. The opponents of Christianity oppose it for different reasons and from different standpoints. These reasons should be studied and met instead of being all denounced in a breath as the obstinacy of unbelief.

The Shin Seiki has an article by the editor Mr. Kosaki Hiromichi, on "Morality in Japan," in which reference is made to an address of Dr. Green's in Boston on "Great Questions in Japan." These were stated to be three—(1) Independence; (2) The Army and Navy; (3) Morality. Mr. Kosaki observes that the first two questions were discussed very fully by Dr. Green, but that the third, in Mr. Kosaki's opinion by far the most important, was not treated in a full and satisfactory manner. Dr. de Forest is next quoted by Mr. Kosaki as calling attention to the exemption from blame which even great statesmen enjoy when they amuse themselves with geisha. While this lasts it is plain that all the talk about loyalty to the emperor and faithfulness to superiors produces little practical effect, says Dr. de Forest. Mr. Kosaki says that there is no such censor in modern Japan as public sentiment in England to-day or in Japan during the Tokugawa age. The reason of the strong sentiment in favour of morality in Christian countries, which condemns in an unmistakable manner conduct like that of Parnell and of Sir Charles Dilke, is to be sought in the reality of religious belief. Morality in Japan needs to be strengthened by the addition of religious motives to those already existing.

The Nippon Shugi has an article propounding as exactly opposite view to the one advocated by Mr. Kosaki, saying that the thraldom of public opinion in countries like England, where so many are slaves to traditional sentiment and are opposed to giving freedom of belief and action to minorities, is a state from which Japan is happily far removed. The practice of dragging private morals into politics and rejecting the services of able statesmen on account of transgressions against the ever-changing laws of society is not to be commended, as has been pointed out by discerning men in Europe. The Nippon Shugi thinks that, though there is some good, yet there is also much harm, connected with the attempt of society to despotically control the actions of individuals and to expect all conduct to conform to a standard which by no means possesses unimpeachable authority.

FORMOSA & THE NEW TREATIES.

The recent address of Mr. Mizumo Jun, ex-Director of the Civil Administration Bureau of the Taiwan-sotoku-fu, on "Formosa and the Treaties," delivered before the members of the Kokkagakkwai, has been reported in the magazine of that Association. His opinions, based on actual observations in the Island, are very interesting. We translate them as follows:—

Whether the new Treaties will be put into operation in Formosa is a difficult question on which no settled opinion has yet been given by the public. When the formal transfer of Formosa to Japan took place on the second of June, 1895, the whole island was in insurrection, and the Governor took measures to restore peace by military force. He, however, gave, with regard to foreign intercourse, information to the various foreign consuls in northern Formosa that, despite the war then raging, trade and business might be carried on according to the regulations of the Chinese Government, at the open ports of Formosa pending further information from the Japanese Government. Commerce therefore continued peacefully. The only change noticed was that the Japanese flag was substituted at the Custom House for the yellow Dragon flag about the 8th of the same month. But on the 23rd of December of the same year, Tainan-fu falling into the hands of the Japanese army, and Liu Jung-fu running away into China, the whole Island was brought under the peaceful administration of the Japanese, and the fact was notified to the various nations by the Japanese Government. Then it became impossible to permit foreign trade to be still carried on according to the regulations of the Chinese government, and on the 22nd of February, 1896, the Japanese Government decided to carry out the existing treaties between Japan and foreign nations, in Formosa, and issued the following proclamation.

"A peaceful condition having been established throughout Formosa, the Imperial Japanese Government grants the following privileges and conveniences to the subjects and peoples residing in Formosa, of any nation with which a Treaty is concluded, as well as to the vessels of such a nation sailing to and from Formosa.

"I.—The subjects or people of any nation having a Treaty of commerce and navigation with Japan may enter and conduct trade in the ports of Tamsui, Anhui, Tainan, and Takao, and vessels of such a nation may enter, and import and export cargoes to and from the same port.

"II.—Though special circumstances exist in Formosa, the Treaties of Commerce and Navigation, Tariff regulations, and other arrangements, now existing between Japan and various nations having treaties with Japan, shall be applied, as far as possible, to the subjects of such nations who reside in or sail to and from Formosa.

"Those who enjoy the preceding privileges and conveniences must observe the laws and ordinances in operation in Formosa."

By the above proclamation the present Treaties went into operation in Formosa from the 23rd of February, 1896. Then occurred more or less difficult questions owing to the non-existence of boundary lines at the settlements in the open ports of Formosa. New boundary lines had to be established, and the lands under the ownership of foreigners inside and outside of the boundaries had to be disposed of. These difficulties were, however, harmoniously arranged, and the present condition of the open ports of the island is generally the same as that of Japanese ports. Such is the brief history of foreign intercourse since the occupation of Formosa up to the present day. The present treaties are now in operation in Formosa; but there exist at present various opinions relating to the putting into force of the revised Treaties. The chief point of difference is the suitability or non-suitability of mixed residence, and the disputants may be classified as follow:—

1st.—Those who hold that, as the revised Treaties will not be carried out in the colonies of Great Britain or France, owing to the difference of interests between the colonies and the mother country, Japan may, for similar reasons, postpone the putting into force of the Treaties in Formosa, and there appears no just reason for the refusal of foreign nations to agree to such an arrangement.

2.—Those who hold that, though the new Anglo-Japanese Treaty which was interchanged on the 16th of July, 1894, did not include Formosa in its application, yet there is no exceptional clause concerning Formosa in the other new Treaties which were concluded after its transfer to Japan, and consequently Japan must carry them out in the island.

The former seem to think that Formosa should not be placed outside of the new Treaties because in the island the executive and judicial organizations are not yet in perfect condition, and the same laws as those of Japan can not be put into operation. Stated briefly, their view is to stop the foreign trade of Formosa by closing the island. But Formosa has its own history. From its first opening to foreign trade in the year 1858, about 40 years ago, by Article 11 of the famous Treaty of Tientsin concluded between China and England, up to the present day, foreign merchants, especially English merchants, have resided and traded in the island. Thus the closing of the island can not possibly be enforced. On the other hand, if the Government wishes to leave Formosa as it stands, some special treaties must be concluded, or a proclamation must be issued that the present treaties shall be carried out in Formosa without reference to the new Treaties. In that case the present system of Consular Jurisdiction, and the present scale of Customs duties must be continued for the sake of avoiding trouble possibly incidental to mixed residence.

Mr. Mizuno himself proposes the putting into force of the new Treaties in Formosa, and gives his opinion about their suitability or non-suitability. Many difficulties may arise in putting the new Treaties into operation there, but with regard to mixed residence, the actual condition of the island does not afford ground for the great anxiety felt by some people. In Formosa, owing to the former loose administration of the Chinese Government, foreign merchants years ago employed their capital in industries in the interior, and actual mixed residence sprang up in localities where camphor is produced in central and southern Formosa. Besides, there are numbers of Chinese from Canton and Foochow, and among the natives here is much less anti-foreign sentiment than is shown by Chinese in China. Many foreign missionaries and merchants make tours in the interior of the Island, but no report of injuries to them has yet been received. When Mr. Mizuno travelled through Formosa from the southern part to the northern in the 7th year of Meiji, he himself was everywhere mistaken for a physician belonging to some missionary society, as he wore foreign clothes, and was surrounded everywhere by the natives, who came to receive medicine from him as they usually did from such physicians. A Parsee of British nationality was killed in July, 1896, when the rebels of Unchi were active, but his death was attributed to his having the appearance of a Japanese. Moreover, the probable centres of mixed residence in Formosa will be the places where foreigners have already employed their capital in the production of sugar and camphor. Thus there seems to be no cause for anxiety about questions connected with mixed residence. There is but one thing to which some difficulty may lie, the Boshi (native rebels). They are nothing but robbers, and may attack foreigners when they go on their plundering expeditions. It may be three or four years before they are brought into a state of subjection; but the places where they congregate should be publicly declared as dangerous for the residence of Japanese and foreigners. Even now it is common not to deliver to foreigners passports to these localities. The same measure may be enforced when the new Treaties come into operation.

Mr. Mizuno refers to the difference in the conditions of industrial competition as between Japanese and foreigners in Formosa and the conditions existing in the interior of Japan, stating that in Formosa foreigners were enjoying commercial interests prior to the Japanese occupation. With regard to the putting into force of the new Codes, he proceeds to say that the Japanese Government must, according to the new Treaties, enforce the Codes in Formosa one year before the Treaties go into operation. Law No. 63 March, 1896, entrusted the Governor of Formosa with the power of drawing up regulations suitable to natives for three years from April, 1896, to March, 1899. But the present condition of the Island shows how impossible it is to enforce the new Code among the natives in one year from now. At present the enactment and promulgation of the new Codes need have no connection with the natives of Formosa, and the operation of the Codes in the island may be restricted to Japanese and foreigners, the natives being excluded from consideration. Neither foreigners nor Formosan natives are likely to raise any objection to such a measure.

The eight new torpedo-boats to be added to the German Navy are to be of nickel steel, and their construction will mark the first time that this material has been used in German war-vessels. The boats have a displacement of 155 tons and a speed of 25 knots. The furnaces can be fired by coal or tar, and each boat carries 30 tons of coal and seven tons of tar.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE LEGISLATIVE WORK OF THE DIET IN ITS TWELFTH SESSION.

The Bills that passed both Houses of the Diet in its recent session were as follow :—

1. Abolition of the Law for Encouraging the Direct Export of Silk. (Promulgated May 25th, 1898).

2. Supplementary Budgets for 1898 9. (Promulgated May 31st, 1898).

3. Amendment of the Industrial Bank Law. (Promulgated 4th June, 1898.)

The object of this amendment is to extend the Bank's liberty with regard to the deposit of its unemployed funds. Hitherto it has been necessary to deposit such funds in the Bank of Japan only, but the amendment provides that any bank approved by the Minister of Finance may be chosen. A further provision of the amendment is the decrease of the face-value of the Bank's shares from 50 to 30 yen.

4. Bill relating to the Finances of State Railways in Hokkaido. (Promulgated 4th June, 1898).

This Bill provides that the finances of the State Railways shall be dealt with in a special account, and not according to the Railway Finance Law of 1890.

5. Bill for remitting the Land Tax in the case of sites for Epidemic Hospitals. (Promulgated 4th June, 1898.)

6. Bill for limiting the Period of Exchangeability of silver yen coins to July 31st, 1898. (Promulgated 10th June, 1898.)

7. Bill for limiting the circulation of Government Notes to December 31st, 1899. (Promulgated 10th June, 1898.)

The Notes referred to in this Bill are the old notes issued by the Government prior to the resumption of specie payments.

8. Bill empowering the Minister of State for Finance to indicate articles exportable from Special Ports, in addition to the staples already sanctioned by law, namely, rice, barley, wheat, flour, coal and sulphur; the power to be exerciseable from July 1st 1899. (Promulgated 10th June, 1898.)

9. Bills relating to Local Boundaries in Hiroshima, Kagawa and Okayama Prefectures. (Promulgated June 15th, 1898.)

10. Bill embodying amended portions of the Civil Code. (Promulgated 15th June, 1898.)

11. Bill for rescinding the Peace Preservation Regulations. (Promulgated 24th June, 1898.)

12. Bill for amending the Formosa Bank Law. (Promulgated 24th June, 1898.)

This Bill confers upon the Government the power of restricting the amount of accommodation granted by the Bank of Formosa, and controlling the method of granting it.

13. Bill for amending the Commercial and Technical Education Subsidy Law. (Promulgated 24th June, 1898.)

This Bill provides that the annual subsidy granted by the Treasury for commercial and technical education shall be increased from 150,000 yen to 250,000 yen, and that mercantile marine schools shall be eligible for the receipt of such aid.

14. Bill for abolishing the Special System of Municipal Government in Tokyo, Osaka and Kyoto. (Promulgated 27th June, 1898).

The main feature of the Special System is that the Mayor, instead of being elected by the people, is chosen and appointed by the Government, the Governor of the city being Mayor ex officio.

15. Bill embodying the Law of Procedure in Actions concerning the Personal Status. (Promulgated 15th June, 1898.)

The Bill comprises 83 articles.

16. Bill embodying the Law of Procedure in Non-contentious matters (Promulgated 15th June, 1895.)

17. Bill embodying the Law of Operation of the Civil Code. (Promulgated 15th June, 1895.)

This Bill comprises 94 articles.

18 Bill for amending Notification No 103 of the year 1873 (Not yet promulgated).

This Bill is connected with the proposed Law of Nationality which failed to pass the Houses.

19. Bill embodying the Law of Census Registration. (Promulgated 21st June, 1898).

This Law contains 223 articles.

20. Bill relating to Special Methods of Taxation in Districts devastated by Inundations. (Not yet promulgated.)

This Bill provides for the remission of taxes in the case of lands injured by the floods of July and October 1897.

21. Bill embodying the Law of Public Auctions. (Promulgated 15th June, 1898.)

This Bill contains 51 articles and is intended to bring the old law into conformity with the new Civil and Commercial Codes.

22. Various Supplementary Budgets for the fiscal year 1897-8.

KOREAN TOPICS.

The Whang Sung Sinmun, says the Independent, is responsible for the statement that a rich man of Pyengando went in Sŏul provided with $4,000 to buy a magistrate's position, and that through the good offices of an influential woman, the profitable bargain is soon to be brought to a successful conclusion. The Independent congratulates the rich man on his success but feels sorry for the people of the district over which the almighty dollar may place him as magistrate.

In future, Korean children under the age of seven are to be provided with wooden tablets bearing the names of their fathers or elder brothers, and the street in which they live. This provision of law has been made at the instance of the Police Department who are greatly bothered at times by an accumulation of lost and strayed youngsters of tender years.

The Department of Agriculture and Public Works in Korea has been authorized by the Council, under Imperial sanction, to construct a railroad between Sŏul and Mokpo, and to select ten scholars from the English and French Language Schools to be sent abroad to study the postal systems of Europe.

The Mail il Sinmun gives publicity to the rumour that Mr. Pak Yongho (Boku Eiko, as he is called in Japan) is now in Korea. The paper further states that of late the former residence of Mr. Pak has been closely watched by detectives and that this police surveillance keeps visitors from the house, which is in the charge of a Japanese friend.

The Independent translates the following story of youthful Korean impertinence from the Mail il Sinmun :—

During the recent examination of candidates for the Military school, a young man was rejected on account of the shortness of his stature. Upon which he said to the examiner, an ex-Minister of War, "Sir, I am not yet twenty years old. Who can say how tall I may have grown by the time I get to be thirty or forty? Moreover, you reject me on the ground that I am too short for soldier. Very well. In 1894, when the palace was in trouble all the tall generals took to their heels, deserting our sovereign and making themselves very scarce. I have never heard that a tall man is more loyal or patriotic than a short one." The examiner, who was one of the tall generals in question, ordered the youth out of the gate without delay.

The following correspondence appears in the Independent :—

On the 18th June, the Independent Club sent the following letter to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Sim Sanghoon :—

We have the honour to call Your Excellency's attention to the fact that the monetary system to a nation is what the arterial communications are to the body. Arteries obstructed, the body loses its vitality. The whole country offers weakness and depression when its medium of exchange is in disorder. In these days of international commercial relations the question of money is of great importance. After the "Reformation" our money is composed of five yang silver pieces and subsidiary coins, as Your Excellency well knows. It is reported that of late the mint is coining copper and nickel pieces only without manufacturing a single 5-yang silver money. If this be true it is to be feared that trade, both foreign and interior, will suffer all sort of inconvenience causing distress to people. Being very anxious in regard to this question, we have the honour to address Your Excellency begging that you will be good enough to enlighten us how the matter stands and what may be the ultimate consequences of the excessive coinage of subsidiary pieces alone.

Choi Jungsik,
Kim Nakchip,
Jung Kio,

The Committee of the Independent Club.

Below we give the answer of the Minister of Finance written on the 18th inst. :—

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication concerning our money. The mint, under the control of our Department, has coined copper and nickel pieces to the value of several tens of thousand dollars. But these are kept in the Department and will not be issued for circulation until a sufficient quantity of our standard silver dollars (5 yang pieces) are manufactured for use. Hope this may be a satisfactory answer to your inquiry.

Sim Sanghoon,
Minister of Finance.

On receipt of the foregoing reply, the Club instructed its committee to write, on the 20th inst. the following letter to the Minister of Finance :—

We have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Your Excellency's reply informing us that the subsidiary coins manufactured in the mint are to be "kept in the Finance Department until a sufficient quantity of our standard silver dollars (5 yang pieces) are manufactured for use." As the view of Your Excellency is consistent with the financial interest of the country we believe that the whole nation will be benefited by your policy. But we beg to remind you that there are found in circulation copper and nickel coins with the superscription of the '2nd year of Kwangmu' on them. Now we know they are new coins. This plainly contradicts Your Excellency's assertion and popular suspicion gathers strength from the fact that the coins which are said to be kept in the Finance Department are seen in the market. We, therefore, beg you to kindly inform us how the new coins in question are found abroad.

Choi Jungsik,
Kim Nakchip,
Yu Maing.

The Committee of the Independent Club.

YOKOHAMA'S TRADAL DEPRESSION.

Business has been very dull for a long time past in Yokohama, in consequence of the tightness prevailing in the money market, and godowns of foreign import merchants are filled to overflowing with contract goods that Japanese merchants have failed to take delivery of. The Japan Times says that the Yokohama General Chamber of Commerce recently discussed the subject in all its bearings and as a result the Committee resolved to enforce the following stipulations in regard to transactions in muslins and yarns :—

(1). That goods which were imported to contract up to the end of April last in accordance with orders of Japanese merchants shall all be taken delivery of by the latter without delay.

(2). That goods left undelivered shall be subject to daily interest at the rate of 3 sen on their value, commencing from the 1st of this month.

(3). That in the event of this order being disregarded, future transactions will not be entered into with the defaulters.

The Japanese merchants on receiving this intimation held a conference and resolved "that the proposed raising of the daily interest against goods undelivered be enforced from the 1st of September next instead of from the 1st July, and that the rate of interest be amended to 2 sen." There the matter rests for the moment.

We understand, says the China Mail, that the Portuguese community of Hongkong are to petition the Governor in Council for a commutation of the death sentence pronounced upon Joan de Matta Ozorio for the murder of F. M. X. de Jesus on 9th May. There being no capital punishment under Portuguese law, the Portuguese are greatly concerned regarding the punishment meted out to their unfortunate countryman, and immediately after the pronouncement of the sentence telegraphic communication of the result was made to Lisbon and Macao.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Earth from the Garden of Gethsemane was strewn on Mr. Gladstone's coffin in the Westminster Abbey funeral. It was the gift of an admirer, whose name, by his own desire, has not been disclosed.

Colonel Lewis, R.E., has been selected for the appointment of Commanding Royal Engineers in Wei-hai-wei. Colonel James Frederick Lewis entered the Army in 1867, and was gazetted colonel in May last year. He has lately been employed on special service as Inspector-General of Fortifications.

The P. & O. steamer Rohilla, says the Hiogo News, on her way down from Yokohama, sighted a Japanese steamer ashore at Vries Island. Captain Lockyer stood by for four hours, but no assistance being required, the Rohilla proceeded to Kobe, reporting the matter at the lighthouse at Omaesaki.

Says the Hiogo News of Friday:—From this date the Hiogo News will be brought out under the management and editorship of Mr. B. A. Hale. As most of our readers will know, Mr. Hale has for the last three years been connected with the Chronicle. That connection was amicably severed yesterday."

Messrs. Carlowitz and Co., agents in Hongkong for the Hamburg-America Line, have received a letter from the Directors of the H.A.L. saying that the steamers the company bought of the Kingsin Line will be rechristened as follows:—

Wally ... to ...	Silesia	Gerda ... to ...	Sarnia
Ceres..... to ...	Suevia	Erato ... to ...	Serbia
Hertha ... to ...	Sibiria	Kriemhild to ...	Savoia

Vice-Admiral Von Diederichs, of the German Navy, it is alleged, asked General Aguinaldo to turn over to him the wife and five children of the Governor General, but the Insurgent leader has refused the request point-blank. He said that he wanted them for his own protection. Governor-General Augustin had put a price—$25,000—on his head and until he withdrew it he should hold the Governor's wife and children.

The life of a popular rebel chief is not a bed of roses. Aguinaldo, the head of the Filipinos, has had his life attempted three times within that number of weeks. The first was by poisoning. The last were attempts at stabbing, and one by an Italian adventurer. We have no mention of the fate of these would-be assassins. At present Aguinaldo's Headquarters are in the Palace at Cavite, but when the American troops arrive the general's headquarters will be established in Cavite and Aguinaldo will remove to Imus.

The Times of India reports that the Marine Court of Inquiry which investigated the circumstances attending the loss of the P. & O. steamer China on Azalea Point, Perim, found that Captain de Horne, as Commander, was responsible for the disaster to the vessel, and in consequence his certificate is suspended for six months; the supernumerary second officer is severely censured by the Court, and deprived of his certificate altogether. All the other officers are acquitted, as being in no way to blame for the occurrence."

Her Majesty the Queen sent the following telegram to Mrs. Gladstone on the day when Mr. Gladstone's funeral in Westminster Abbey took place:—"My thoughts are much with you during the trying and painful ceremony of to-day, but nevertheless it must be gratifying to you to see the nation's respect and regret for the memory of one whose character and intellectual abilities marked him as one of the most distinguished statesmen of my reign. I shall ever gratefully remember his devotion and zeal in all that concerned my personal welfare and that of my family."

Humorous in the extreme was the telegram published in Tuesday's Japan Mail as to the proceedings of the American squadron in the Carolines and Ladrones. On entering the harbour of Guam the Charleston fired seven shots at the forts. Apparently the aim was bad, and no damage was done. The Governor of Guam had perhaps never heard anything of war being in progress, or possibly he did not know the American flag when he saw it. At any rate, the impression on his mind was that the firing was intended as a salute, and, not to be outdone in courtesy, he sent a polite message on board to the effect that, having no powder, he was extremely sorry he was unable to return the compliment! The incident is a pleasant little piece of comedy in the midst of the dismal tragedy enacting in both of Spain's afflicted colonies.

It seems that at Manila the electric lamps on the sea-front were extinguished early in the month of June, to prevent the Americans from seeing too much. Following that, the Americans sent a vessel near shore nightly to sweep the sea-front with an electric search light. This, at first, annoyed the Spaniards a good deal; but, rising to the situation, crowds began to gather nightly to enjoy the show. Then the Americans thought they were, perhaps, putting themselves to needless trouble; and the search light exhibitions were stopped.

The wave of stifling and unseasonable heat that visited us during the past week was accompanied by an appearance which some observers describe as a comet and others call a meteor. The phenomenon is reported to have been observed at Osaka and at Wakayama, and the accounts from both places agree in fixing the time at 12 minutes past 2 o'clock on the morning of the 30th ultimo. The sky on the south-eastern horizon became suddenly suffused with brilliant light through an area of about thirty degrees, and something flashed across the firmament, but in what direction it travelled we can not clearly ascertain from the descriptions contained in vernacular journals. Five minutes after the appearance of the light, a crash like the discharge of a colossal piece of artillery became audible. There was no seismic disturbance, and if the blaze was meteoric, no report has been received as to the place where the meteor fell.

An interesting discovery is reported to have been made in the ground behind the Yokohama English Language School in No. 73, Sanchome, Hinode. Some appearances suggesting a tumulus having been detected, excavations were undertaken, which resulted in exposing a grave containing bones and several objects of daily use. Professor Tsuboi, of the Imperial University, to whom the objects were submitted for examination, pronounces them to be about fifteen hundred years old. There was a sword blade, so deeply corroded that the metal was almost in a crumbling condition; there were the usual vessels of unglazed pottery made familiar from previous excavations in various parts of Japan, and there was a bead which had evidently been employed for ornamental purposes. The contents of the tumulus do not contribute anything to the knowledge already garnered by Messrs. Gowland, Hitchcock, Kanda, and other antiquarians.

That Mr. Gladstone had a rare sense of order, and a capacity for business management, is well-known. The following story is a striking instance of his characteristic energy and prudence:—"After Sir John Gladstone's death," says a correspondent of the Telegraph, "the involved condition of Sir Stephen Glynne's affairs, consequent upon the mismanagement of the Hawarden estate by an over-sanguine agent, was disclosed for the first time. With characteristic energy and prudence Mr. Gladstone came to his brother-in-law's rescue, and enabled him to remain permanently in the beautiful Welsh home to which both were so passionately attached. The sum then advanced by Mr. Gladstone to save the Hawarden estate amounted, it is said, to £50,000, and two of the farms became Mr. Gladstone's property. At no time during his long residence at Hawarden did Mr. Gladstone's unofficial income exceed £5,000 a year. Such, however, was the thrift and sagacity with which the Hawarden estate was managed, that the eldest son of Mr. William Henry Gladstone, born in 1885, will, it is believed, succeed to £10,000 a year on attaining his majority."

Considerable interest has been caused by the discovery of some curious caves in Hollingbourne, near Maidstone. The origin of the labyrinths is obscure, and some people consider they are mere sandholes. The passages extend in all directions, with most bewildering irregularity. Here and there is a great vault on which a number of passages converge, and huge, ill-shaped pillars of sandstone support the roof. In places, half-way up the walls, a large cavity is cut, which suggests a sleeping chamber. How far the channels extend has not been determined, but one may walk miles in and out and round about the innumerable corridors. It is suggested that the caves may turn out to be "dene holes" in which the ancient Britons lived.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ROMAJI REFORM.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail"

Sir,—I read with great interest some days ago your remarks upon the practicability of using Romaji generally in printing and writing the Japanese language. Your answer to the objection that the Chinese characters are needed in the case of words of like sound to fix the sense seems to me conclusive. The fact that the Romaji can be understood by the ear when read from behind a screen shows that is only a notion, a superstition, that is to be overcome—the idea of the necessity of the Chinese characters. I have frequently replied that if the language can be understood when spoken, it can also be understood when written. This seemed to me only common sense; but my own knowledge of Japanese was not sufficient to enable me to speak on the matter with the confidence I shall now feel after you, of so great experience in the language, have expressed the same opinion.

I think you are entirely right in saying the Government should take up this reform, Romaji should be taught, both reading and writing, from the primary schools upward, and after a certain date all public business should be transacted through it.

But there is a way in which much may be done to popularize this important reform. Let the newspapers which favour it take it up. Let them keep as "standing matter" at the head of a certain column in each issue the iroha in Romaji print and script of the most approved form. Thus all the people who read will soon become familiar with it. Then, under this "standing matter," let them print short reading exercises; in a short time a whole column in Romaji, then two columns, and after a while, the whole paper. This does not necessarily require any concerted action, though no doubt concert of action would greatly hasten the reform. Let the great Tokyo dailies begin the work, and recommend it to their contemporaries in the provinces.

Hepburn's system of transliteration seems the best and most generally accepted thus far devised. It would seem that a few minor improvements might yet be made, or at least an ideal standard of pronunciation be decided upon to which the Romaji spelling should conform, e.g., it ought to be decided in some way whether the sign of the objective case should be written and pronounced (ideally) wo, or o, whether it should be yen or en, whether it should be waga or wanga, maye or mae. A few small items like these determined, nothing more would remain but to proceed. May we not hope that the public-spirited newspapers will take it up?

As to the objection that all Japanese literature hitherto produced will thus become useless, the books already in existence will be read by this generation, and all that is of sufficient value, or for which there is a demand, will be transliterated. The remainder will afford material for the employment of learned antiquarians, who must have something to do.

I will not dwell upon the manifest advantages which this reform will bring to the Japanese people themselves at home and in international intercourse, as well as to foreigners, because others have already ably pointed them out.

Yours sincerely, EDGAR LEAVITT.

July 1st, 1898.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE FOURTH.

The Fourth of July was celebrated in Yokohama with more than usual spirit on Monday, the war with Spain and the talk of an Anglo-Saxon alliance uniting to infuse greater enthusiasm than ever into the American residents, who are, in the dullest of times, never apathetic over their national holiday. All the principal business places in the Settlement, and most of the American houses on the Bluff showed the American flag and there were scores of people going about with star spangled and red striped ties, while several young ladies dressed in bodices of stars and skirts of stripes. "Alliance badges," with the two flags entwined, were also popular decorations. The P. & O. Shanghai was the only big vessel in harbour that "dressed ship," the M.M. Oceanien contenting itself with one American flag at the fore. Fortunately the weather was fine, and the whole day was a most enjoyable one.

BASEBALL.

A Fourth of July programme would not be complete were baseball omitted, and though this year no American warships are in harbour a sufficient number of members of the Y.C. & A.C. are baseball players to permit of a match being arranged. The teams originally selected would have provided a capital battery on either side, but, unfortunately, on Saturday, Blake hurt his foot and McChesney injured a finger badly, thus knocking out two good men. A message was sent to Tokyo, however, and Messrs. Yamamoto and Katayanagi, of the University, telegraphed that they would be happy to fill the vacancies. They arrived about 11 o'clock, but meanwhile the game had started with substitutes. A large company assembled, despite the strong southerly gale that was blowing, and the game was followed with interest right to the end. Mr. Ellis captained one side and Mr. Smith the other, and the former team won by three points, the score being, Ellis' side, 16 runs; Smith's side 13. Katayanagi, we should explain, took Abel's place when the latter retired, going in as catcher in place of Reed, who moved to first base, Morse going on at 3rd, where Abel had been placed. Yamamoto took Dehrius' position in the 6th innings, relieving Burnett as pitcher. The score was :—

Ellis' Side.	Runs.	Smith's Side.	Runs.
Burnett, p.	1	Smith, s.s.	2
Ellis, c.	1	Bain, p.	1
Gowey, 1st	2	Reed, c.	2
Joline, 2nd	1	Merriman, 2nd	1
Stone, r.f.	1	Morse, 3rd	1
Kilby, mjr. s.s.	2	Curtis, b.f.	1
Dehrius, 3rd	0	Woolsey, r.f.	0
Watt, c.f.	4	Howard, c.	2
Kilby, min., l.f.	2	Abel	2
Yamamoto, p.	2	Katanayagi, c.	1
	16		13

BICYCLE RACES.

A short programme of bicycle races was gone through during the afternoon at the Cricket Ground. The weather, though breezy, held fine, and there was a large attendance, including many ladies. The results were as follows :—

SEVEN LAP HANDICAP.

H. Irwine, 100 yards	1
K. Tsuruta, scratch	2
E. H. Irwine, scratch	3
J. M. Collaco, scratch	4
A. L. J. Dewette, 60 yards	0

Time, 5.15½.

When the competitors had settled down H. Irwine was leading, and Tsuruta next, with Collaco third. In this order most of the distance was covered, but finally E. H. Irwine displaced Collaco. H. Irwine was never troubled for first place, and won by 20 yards.

CHINESE RACE.

Ah Fore	1
Ah Foog	2
Ah Hong	3
Ah Gun	0

Won by 15 yards. The Celestials made a much better show than on the last occasion, the pace being really very fair.

BOYS' RACE.

Irwine, minimus	1
Tasaki	0
Graham	0

Irwine won easily.

POINT RACE.

	Points.
H. Irwine, 25 yards	25
Tsuruta, 20 yards	20
Collaco, 25 yards	10
Dewette	0
E. H. Irwine	0

Collaco led from the start, followed by H. Irwine and Tsuruta. In the fourth lap Irwine overhauled Collaco, and Dewette dropped out. In the fifth Tsuruta came to the front with a rush, and took the lead of H. Irwine by about two lengths, and E. H. Irwine dropped out. In the sixth lap Tsuruta still led, but in the eighth Irwine, who had been biding his time, forced the pace, and got ahead. In the ninth lap he had increased his lead to 40 yards, and finally won by half a lap.

YACHT RACES.

On Saturday there was a 9 mile race for 39 Raters, the course being twice round a markboat off Tsurumi and the Lightship. The wind was about S.S.W. and blowing in hard squalls before and during the first part of the race, the yachts starting with topmasts down and single reefed mainsails—the reefs afterwards had to be shaken out as the wind eased. The race was started at 1.51 p.m., Golden Hind and Kingfisher going over the line together and Mary about half a minute after them. During the run to Tsurumi, Mary passed the other two yachts and on rounding the mark led by nearly a minute, with Golden Hind second. During the beat to the lightship Mary continued to gain on the others, and Kingfisher took second place. In running from the lightship back to Tsurumi Golden Hind did the distance in 13½ minutes, passing Kingfisher again and pulling up ½ a minute on Mary. The last-named was, however, a long way ahead when the yachts rounded the lightship this time, and had the race well in hand. At the harbour entrance Mary led by about 7 minutes, while Golden Hind was about 4½ minutes ahead of Kingfisher. In beating up the harbour Golden Hind had the best of the wind, which shifted a little westerly about that time, but still Mary won the race by six minutes. The following are the times at the finish :—

		Fin.		Corrected.
		h.m.s.		h.m.s.
Mary	39	3.35.15	allows.	3.34.15
Golden Hind	36½	3.41.20	2.56	3.38.24
Kingfisher	36	3.46.27	3.20	3.43.07

WINNERS.

Mary, 1st prize presented by Mr. Elliott and 2 record points.

Golden Hind, 2nd prize and 1 point.

There was also a race for 12 raters which was started at 2.40 p.m. and in which three boats competed. The wind by this time had moderated, but there was still a fresh breeze for the little boats, which sailed under reefed canvas. The race resulted as follows :—

	First round.	Finish.
	h.m.s.	h.m.s.
Botchan	2.53.55	3.13.25
Chocho	53.45	10.25
Waratah	53.15	10.03

WINNERS.

Waratah, 1st prize and 2 record points.

Chocho, 2nd prize and 1 record points.

Yesterday being the Fourth of July the Yacht Club intended to celebrate the day as usual by sailing a series of races for several handsome prizes, the chief of which was the "Fourth of July Cup" presented by His Excellency the United States Minister. Unfortunately the weather turned out so unfavourable, as it was blowing half a gale of wind, and only the 39-rating class were able to start. The course for this class was round a markboat off Tsurumi to the Kitashakane buoy off Natsushima and back, passing each way outside the Lightship and Widow buoy, distance 22 miles.

The wind was about S.S.W. and coming off the land in hard squalls when the yachts were started at 11.7 a.m. The competitors were Mary, Golden Hind, Kingfisher and Svanhild. The three cutters were double reefed with topmasts housed and the yawl had single reefs in main and mizzen. A good start was made, the four yachts going away down wind at a great pace. Mary hauled out her spinnaker and succeeded in being first to round the Tsurumi markboat, where their times were :—

	h.m.s.		h.m.s.
Mary	11.19 15	Golden Hind	11.20 58
Kingfisher	11.19 40	Svanhild	11.21.55

Mary made a short tack in which appeared to be unnecessary, the wind having hauled to S.W. so that the yachts could make the Lightship without tacking and soon the three big boats were ploughing along together on starboard tack with all the wind they wanted. Svanhild found it rather too much for her and worked her way back to harbour. After passing outside the Lightship the yachts tacked and stood in towards the Bluff, Golden Hind leading the race. Soon after tacking out again Mary's jib blew to pieces and had to be shifted for a smaller one. Off Honmoku Kingfisher's jib also gave way, and, not having another, she had to give up the race. The other two, after rounding the Widow buoy, stood into Missisippi bay for some distance and then fetched down on starboard back to Nakane, getting a severe dusting by the way, as it was then blowing very hard. Golden Hind led by about 9 minutes at Nakane and gained nearly three minutes more during the run back to the Lightship, which, with a strong flood tide under and a gale of wind behind them, was made in quick time. As there was some uncertainty about the Tsurumi Markboat, Golden Hind held on for Tsurumi until it could be seen that the markboat was no longer in position when she hauled her wind for the harbour entrance, which she entered 13¾ minutes ahead of the Mary. The wind fell light about this time, and Mary, having shaken out her reefs, gained a little, but when they reached the finishing line was still 9¾ minutes astern of Golden Hind. The times of the finish were :—

	Finish.	Handicap.	Corrected.
	h.m.s.	m.s.	h.m.s.
Mary 39	3.00.12	allows	3.00 12
Golden Hind 36½	2.50.34	8.000	2.42.34

WINNERS.

Golden Hind—1st. Prize, the "Fourth of July Cup," presented His Excellency the United States Minister, and Record points. She also becomes the holder of the "Weston Challenge Shield."

Mary—2nd Prize and 1 Record point.

THE FIREWORK DISPLAY.

The firework display at night was a worthy finale to a most successful fête-day. The Bund was simply thronged with Japanese and Chinese, while the terraces of the Grand and the Oriental Hotels, which occupied the best positions for witnessing the display, were crowded with European ladies and gentlemen. The facade of the Grand Hotel was splendidly ornamented with Chinese lanterns, flags, &c., all expressive of amity between England, America, and Japan. Over the front entrance was a great Eagle, soaring heaven-high in the ordinary Bird 'o Freedom fashion, and under it were entwined the flags of Japan and the Great Republic. The palisadings were set off with lanterns of various colours, showing the Union Jack, the Stars and Stripes and the red sun of Japan. The Oriental Hotel front was also a blaze of variegated light, a somewhat similar style of decoration inspired with the same feelings of international friendship, being followed here.

The fireworks were exceedingly good, and the smooth expanse of sea, with the glare of red and blue lights and the glint of the innumerable sampan lanterns on it made an extremely pretty picture. Of the set pieces those which caught the popular imagination most were an excellent fire picture of the Olympia in action and an equally good representation of the American Eagle and flag. For the rest, there was a huge variety of shooting stars, rockets, Prince of Wales' feathers, &c., excellent enough to excite the envy of Brock and instil black jealousy into the soul of Paine. The music of two excellent bands added to the enjoyment of the evening.

GLORIOUS FOURTH IN KOBE.

Preparations had been made in Kobe to celebrate the Fourth of July with enthusiasm by means of a sort of outdoor fête. The elements, however, proved unpropitious. It rained almost the whole of Sunday and Sunday night, and yesterday was marked by very heavy showers. Indeed, as an inveterate punster remarked, it was a very "Dewey" day. Not to be prevented from celebrating the day, however, a dance was given in the afternoon in the Gymnasium, which had been hastily decorated for the occasion with flags, and, considering the weather, quite a surprising number of people came down to participate in the fun. Mr. Rizetti's band was present and provided the music. In the intervals between the dances some Japanese jugglers and acrobats gave exhibition of their prowess, and, whenever the rain would permit, a few day fireworks were let off, to the great satisfaction of all concerned, who seemed to feel a not unnatural pleasure in the idea of thoroughly enjoying themselves under most adverse conditions. The ladies of the American community provided tea, which was done ample justice to by the adults as well as by the large number of children present, and altogether the proceedings passed off most pleasantly and satisfactorily. The bulk of the firework display and the sports were postponed to Saturday next, and will afford an opportunity for a second celebration.—Chronicle.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE "MELPOMENE"—"PATROCLUS" CASE.

In H.B.M.'s Court for Japan on Wednesday, before His Honour Judge Wilkinson, the hearing of the case of the Owners and Captain of the Austrian Lloyd steamer Melpomene against the Owners of the British steamer Patroclus was resumed. The case was before the court some months ago, and was then referred to the Registrar. When the latter presented his award, however, both parties objected. The terms of the award will be best understood when tabulated. They were as follows:—

	Claimed yen.	Allowed. yen.
Cost of repairs of S.S. Melpomene	5 575	1,546
Fees paid to Marine Surveyor	207	207
Costs of shifting Anchor of S.S. Melpomene	20	20
Cost of Telegram to owners of S.S. Melpomene	86.14	86.14
Second Telegram	46 56	46 56
Four days' detention Melpomene at 400 yen a day... ...	1,600	1,600
	7,534 70	3,507.70
Less one half	3.734 70	1,753 85

The objections of the plaintiffs, who have been represented by Mr. J. F. Lowder, are contained in the following paragraphs from their petition:

The plaintiffs submit that the said report is erroneous, and ought not to be confirmed for the following amongst other reasons:

(a.) Because the reduction of the plaintiff's claim for cost of repairs to the steamship Melpomene from yen 5 575 to yen 1,548 is excessive, and is not justified by the evidence adduced before the Registrar and is against the weight of said evidence.

(b) Because the said report condemns or recommends that the plaintiffs ought to be condemned in the costs of reference, although the said report finds that the plaintiffs are entitled upon their claim to recover a substantial sum against the defendants.

The petition of the defendants, who were represented by Mr. A. B. Walford, was as follows:

(1) That the allowance of yen 1,600 by the Registrar for the detention of the Melpomene is not justified by the evidence, there being no evidence to show that the expenses or damages occasioned by the detention of the Melpomene were "damages occasioned by the collision" or were damages for which the defendants ought to be held in any way or to any extent responsible, or the evidence as to these matters being wholly insufficient.

(2) That evidence as to the Melpomene being detained for the purpose of loading outward cargo, and as to the delay in commencing the repairs and as to the time when the repairs were finished was improperly rejected, the Registrar refusing to allow the defendants to make use of the evidence of Antonio August Martinolich, which was before the Court at the trial of the action.

(3) That the repairs to the Melpomene were not completed within a reasonable time after the collision and that if the said repairs had been effected with proper despatch the plaintiffs would have sustained no damage by reason of any detention for repairs. The defendants do not admit that the plaintiffs have in fact sustained damage by any such cause.

The defendants therefore pray this Honourable Court that the Registrar's report may be amended by striking out the said item of 1,600 yen allowed for the detention of the Melpomene, or by making such amendment in relation thereto as to the Court may seem fit.

And they further pray this Honourable Court to order that the costs of the reference and of this petition in objection to the Report therein be paid by the plaintiffs.

The Judge, at the opening of the proceedings on Wednesday, remarked that at the last hearing Mr. Walford had argued in favour of the admission of a statement by Captain Martinolich, and he (the Judge) had decided to admit this evidence. It appeared that this statement was a deposition, and therefore no question of the Judge's notes came in.

Mr. Walford said he had an extract from the Judge's notes to show that the statement was read at the hearing.

Proceeding, Mr. Walford also pointed out what he thought was a small mistake or clerical error in the Registrar's reports by which he claimed that yen 120 had been allowed in excess of the proper amount on the repairs account.

Mr. Lowder said he could not admit this.

The Judge suggested that the amount was so small that Mr. Walford might perhaps not find it necessary to press it.

Mr. Walford, however, said he could not leave the point, in justice to his client, without consulting; and the Judge said he would make a note of the matter.

Mr. Walford then read the portions of Captain Martinolich's deposition which he thought material, the statement referring to the repairs effected to the vessel.

Mr. Lowder then read the petition of the plaintiff's and extracts from the depositions and affidavits of Mr. Petersen (the engineer who effected the repairs to the Melpomene), Mr. Kirkland Wilson (agent for the plaintiffs) Mr. Tresize (of the Engine Works, who gave his opinion that the charge for the repairs was altogether excessive, in fact three times as much as he himself could have executed the work for), and Mr. Glahn (another expert). On these Mr. Lowder argued at considerable length. He submitted that the charges made by Petersen were not excessive, and that the opinion of Mr. Tresize on the matter must be taken to a certain extent cum grano salis, as that of a competitor in the same business. He contended that at the time the order for the repairs was given plaintiffs did not know whether they themselves might not have to pay for them. True, they had entered an action, but however strong their confidence, they could not be sure how judgment would go. It was the duty of the master of the Melpomene to regard the interests of his employers in this matter, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary he should ask his Honour to believe that he acted to the best of his abilities according to his lights in protecting the interests of those upon whom these charges would ultimately fall. He submitted that the evidence of Captain Efford as to the general reasonableness of the charge was, in spite of his Honour's remarks at the last hearing, of some weight. Captain Efford was in the service of the Government as an officer of Marine Survey and was also Lloyd's surveyor.

The Judge said he thought in neither capacity Captain Efford could have proper expert knowledge of the cost of these repairs; he could be a very good Government Surveyor and a very good Lloyd's surveyor, and yet not possess the detailed knowledge necessary to estimate the cost of these repairs.

After further argument on the same subject the Court adjourned for luncheon.

On resuming Mr. Lowder addressed himself to the question of costs. He admitted that there were cases in which, because the amount of claim was reduced by more than a third, the costs of the plaintiff were reduced, but in all ordinary cases it was usual for the Court to award a successful plaintiff costs, and it must be for his friend to point out that there were very special circumstances in this case to justify the Court in acting as his petition suggested.

The Judge said it was recognised that there was no hard and fast rule on the point. When a large amount was struck off that was a reason for the Judge exercising his discretion with regard to the person who had made the claim which had been reduced. It was a question of discretion.

Mr. Lowder—I have never seen that applied so far as now suggested—to make the plaintiff pay the costs.

The Judge—There have been cases in the Admiralty in which the claimants have had to pay the costs.

Mr. Lowder proceeded to argue that it had always been open to defendants to avoid litigation by making a reasonable offer to the plaintiffs. Such an offer had never been made.

Mr. Walford—Do you seriously say that no tender of that kind has been made?

Mr. Lowder—Nothing is before the Court.

The Judge—I don't think you should assume that because there is nothing before the Court no offer of the kind has been made when counsel says he has made it.

Mr. Lowder—It depends on the definition of the word tender, and I say no tender has been made. It was a most improper remark for my friend to make.

The Judge—I think perhaps on the question of costs things can be said to a Judge that could not be said to a Jury.

Mr. Lowder—Of course that may lead us a long way.

Mr. Walford, addressing the Court for the defence, argued that the question of whether a tender had or had not been made was of no importance at all. He quoted a recent authority to the effect that when the Registrar disallowed more than a quarter of the amount claimed it was a ground for depriving the plaintiffs of costs.

The Judge said he declined to follow any hard and fast rule. What counsel had to show him was whether it was a reasonable thing. The fact that there was a large sum struck off the claim was an element for consideration, but he declined to follow rules of thirds and quarters.

Mr. Walford—It is a rule for Registrars.

The Judge—Then if they go on that rule they are wrong. I will exercise my discretion upon the whole facts of the case. The fact of the Registrar having given his recommendation that costs should be given in that way is an element for my consideration. That is all.

Mr. Walford pointed out that is was to stay claims of that kind which they (the defendants) considered exorbitant that costs were given to defendants if a large sum was knocked off.

Mr. Walford was proceeding to argue on the question of repairs, when the Judge stated that in the interval for luncheon he had referred to the Registrar, who had taken into consideration the matter of yen 120 referred to by Mr. Walford, and had admitted that it was an oversight on his part. He (the Judge) would suggest that the sum should be taken out.

Mr. Lowder said that he thought it would not be just under the circumstances of the case to claim this sum.

The Judge: Thank you.

Mr. Walford proceeded to argue that the sum claimed was unreasonable; that Petersen, who undertook the repairs, could produce no detailed figures to show how he arrived at his charges; that Captain Martinolich at one time in his evidence stated that Petersen undertook the repairs for a contract sum, and at another stated in contradiction that Petersen had to render him a detailed and conscientious account of them; and that Mr. Tresize's evidence showed that the repairs could be effected at a third the cost.

Mr. Lowder not wishing to reply on this part of the case, Mr. Walford proceeded to argue on the question of demurrage. He contended that during a part of the time for which demurrage had been allowed at 400 yen per day the ship was engaged in loading and unloading. Some small repairs might have been done during this time, but he submitted that it was not fair to tax the defendants with a cost of 400 yen a day for repairs that might be done at sea.

In summing up, his Honour recited the principal facts of the case. He said he concurred in the opinion expressed by Mr. Tresize that the repairs done to the Melpomene might have been effected at much less cost. At the same time he had no doubt of the contract having been made bonâ fide and the account paid bonâ fide, and no doubt Mr. Wilson, in paying the account, considered it just and reasonable. But his opinion was against the opinion of an expert. As to the evidence of Captain Efford his opinion, being a general opinion, could not be maintained against that of an expert who furnished details. Proceeding the Judge said:—The amount struck off is a large one, but I cannot see that the Registrar could have done on the evidence before him anything different from what was done. In that respect I confirm the Registrar's report. No particulars in justification of the claim were put in, and, it being shown that the work might have been done for a sum which is between a quarter and a third of that which is claimed, the claim cannot certainly be allowed to stand, and I know of no other principle upon which the case could be met except that followed by the Registrar. I shall therefore confirm the Registrar's report with regard to that. His Honour then turned to the claim for demurrage, which he said he had carefully considered. He disagreed with the Registrar as to Capt. Martinolich's evidence, which he thought should properly be taken into consideration, and from that evidence it was clear that during some part of the time for which demurrage was charged loading and discharging was taking place. He thought the time occupied in taking in and taking out cargo ought to be considered as time during which the owners had the use of their vessel, and in respect of which no demurrage ought to be allowed. Defendants were entitled to insist that evidence should be given that the ship was detained for repairs and repairs only during the time for which a claim was made. He was of opinion that one day at least must be deducted, and he referred that part of the case back to the Registrar to decide the actual time during which the ship was occupied in loading. As to the question of costs he thought, with reference to the appeal from the Registrar, that Mr. Walford was wrong in not giving notice of his intention to ask for the evidence of Captain Martinolich, but on the other hand the evidence, when obtained, was found to be admissible, and he (the learned Judge) therefore thought neither party should have costs of that stage of the proceedings. With regard to the present hearing he thought there was nothing to show that plaintiffs wished to be exhorbitant in their claim, but at the same time it was a fact that the claim had been largely and he thought properly reduced. He thought justice would met by each side bearing its own costs here also.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

In answer to Mr. Lowder, his Honour said the case was referred again to the Registrar, who would present his report in due course to the Court as to the one point still in question. He, (the learned Judge) if counsel were then agreed would make a final order.

LATEST TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF AMERICAN TROOPS.
TAKING THE CAROLINES AND LADRONES.
THE COURTEOUS GOVERNOR OF GUAM.
MANILA EXPECTED TO BE TAKEN ON THE FOURTH.

Shanghai, July 4, 6.10 p.m.

The American troops arrived at Manila on Thursday.

The U.S.S. Charleston has hoisted the American flag over the Carolines and the Ladrones. When entering Guam, the Charleston fired seven shots at the forts; the Governor, supposing these were a salute, sent off a message to the Commander of the cruiser saying that as he had no powder he was unable to return the courtesy.

It is expected that the American flag will be hoisted over Manila to-day, the Fourth of July.

THE WAR IN THE PHILIPPINES.
GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S FAMILY RELEASED.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Shanghai, July 7.

The insurgents have released the wife and family of General Augustin, Governor-General of the Philippines.

(From the "Japan Times.")

THE WAR.
IMPENDING BATTLE AT SANTIAGO.

London, July 1.

General Shafter telegraphs that 8,000 Spaniards, with a quantity of supplies, are advancing on Santiago. He has decided to meet and attack them before they arrive, without awaiting his own reinforcements. The departure of Commodore Watson's Squadron for Spain is likely to be delayed, as the ships are unprepared for the voyage.

OVER TEN THOUSAND SPANIARDS FOR MANILA.

London, July 2.

Admiral Camara commenced coaling at Port Said from colliers of the Egyptian Government. On being requested to desist and leave immediately, Camara declared that the vessels required repair. He thereupon began to discharge coal and material for that purpose. The Spanish force on the way to Manila numbers altogether 480 officers and 10,464 men.

Notwithstanding the German official assurances, suspicion and irritation in the United States against German designs on the Philippines are increasing.

THE BATTLE OF SANTIAGO.

London, July 4.

A general assault on Santiago by land and sea began on Friday morning. The American army was about 17,000 strong. The battle raged furiously the whole day. American losses are estimated at 800 to 1,000, the Spanish at 4,000 to 6,000. General Shafter's despatch dated the 3rd says the defences are so strong that he finds it impossible to storm the place with the present force. He has been ordered to await reinforcements. General Miles describes the battle as drawn, and adds that the Spaniards fought magnificently.

THE SANTIAGO FLEET.
RUMOURED COMPLETE DESTRUCTION.

London, July 5.

It is officially announced at Washington that Admiral Sampson entered the harbour of Santiago on Sunday and destroyed Admiral Cerveras' Fleet. General Shafter in a despatch to his Government says that the Spanish Fleet left Santiago harbour on Sunday and is reported as being practically destroyed. Another despatch says that the Spaniards ran their ships close in shore and then set them on fire.

DECISIVE BATTLE AT SANTIAGO.
SPANIARDS BURN THEIR SHIPS.
ADMIRAL CERVERA TAKEN PRISONER.
HUNDREDS OF CAPTIVES.
GEMERAL SHAFTER TO ENTER SANTIAGO.

London, July 6.

Admiral Cervera on Sunday morning dashed out of the harbour and tried to escape westward, but Admiral Sampson's fleet gave him instant chase. The Spaniards fought bravely, but a torrent of shell drove all their ships ashore, where their crews set fire to them. 350 of Cervera's men were either killed, or drowned, 160 wounded, and 1,600 captured, including Cervera, while the Americans lost only three men. Shafter demanded the surrender of Santiago, threatening otherwise the bombardment of the city. Sampson is now free to enter the harbour.

SPANISH SQUADRON IN SUEZ CANAL.
SPAIN TO FIGHT TO THE BITTER END.

London, July 7.

Admiral Camara has entered the Suez Canal with the big ships of his squadron, while the torpedo boats are returning to Spain. The Spanish Cabinet has decided to continue the war at all costs, so long as a Spanish soldier remains in Cuba. Telegrams from Madrid state that a disorderly spirit prevails among the military. The crowds in the city are becoming riotous, and the population is arming.

NEW ITALIAN CABINET.

London, July 1.

Telegrams from Rome state the General Pelloux has formed a new Cabinet. Admiral Canevaro takes the Foreign portfolio and General San Marzano that of War.

P. & O. STEAMER DESTROYED.
STEWARDESS BURNT TO DEATH.

London, July 1.

The P. & O. steamer Ganges, lying in Bombay harbour, took fire yesterday and was completely destroyed. The Stewardess was burnt to death in her cabin.

TERRIBLE DISASTER AT SEA.
FRENCH LINER IN COLLISION.
NEARLY SEVEN HUNDRED PASSENGERS DROWNED.

The French Transatlantic Liner Labourgogne, from New York for Havre, with eight hundred passengers on board, collided with the ship Cromartyshire on July 4, during a dense fog south off Sable Island. The Labourgogne sank immediately, only 170 to 180 passengers and 30 of the crew being saved.

(Received by the Fiji)

LU-HAN RAILWAY TREATY SIGNED.

Peking, July 1.

The treaty for the Lu-Han Railway, the construction of which is to be undertaken by the Belgian Syndicate, was signed to-day. According to its terms the railway is to be managed by foreigners and the right of sole management to be placed in the hands of the Representative of the country by whose subjects the largest proportion of capital shall have been invested in the work.

The signature of the present treaty is due in a large measure to efforts of Russia and France.

England will not be silent on this movement.

Germany is very desirous of laying down a railway between Tientsin and Chankiang.

ARRIVAL OF THE "MATSUSHIMA."

Hongkong, July 1.

The Matsushima arrived here from Manila to-day, but she had no special news to report.

NEWS FROM MANILA.

Hongkong, July 5.

According to information brought by an American vessel, the first batch of American troops conveyed by the Australia, the City of Peking, and the City of Sydney, convoyed by the warship Charleston, arrived at Manila bay via Guam and landed at Cavite on the 30th ult.

The Japanese warship Matsushima and U.S. dispatch boat Zafiro left this harbour yesterday.

(From the "North China Daily News.")

LATEST NEWS FROM MANILA.

Hongkong, June 27.

General Monet, with 1,200 Spaniards, being besieged by the insurgents at San Fernando, tried to break through their lines. The General was killed and 1,000 of his men surrendered.

Captain-General Augustin has offered a reward of $2,500 for the head of General Aguinaldo.

The insurgents have now 7,000 men armed with modern weapons, and hope to have 10 000 in a few days.

Hongkong, July 1.

The American troops had not arrived at Manila on the 28th ultimo.

The rebels have captured a ship at Tayabas, with several hundred Spanish troops.

The insurgents possess three small steamers and several good launches. Skirmishing continues.

General Aguinaldo, in reference to the establishment of a Republic, has stated that he trusts the Americans and believes they will support him, and that the Philippines will obtain and hold their full rights.

(From Japan Papers.)

CHARGE AGAINST A LOCAL OFFICIAL.

Awomori, July 7.

A man named Shimoyama, a member of the Local Assembly of Kita-Tsugaru-gori, has been arrested on a charge of forgery and fraud.

CHOLERA.

Yamagata, July 7.

Several cases of cholera have appeared in this locality.

NAVAL MOVEMENTS.

Bakwan, July 7.

The Itsukushima and Hashidate have left for the west.

Kobe, July 7.

The Chiyoda arrived to-day from Kure to take the place of the Yoshino.

DYSENTERY

Mito, July 7.

In this locality dysentery is prevailing to a serious extent. On the 8th a disinfectant station will be opened.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHESS.

All Communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor.

The Yokohama and the Tokyo Chess Clubs are closed during the summer months.

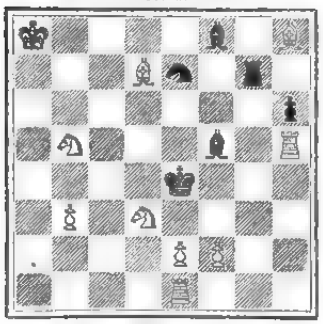
Solution of Problem No. 374.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1—Kt to K B 7	1—R any move
2—Kt, B, or P takes R, accordingly	2—P to K 6
3—B to B 3 mate

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., Marco, and D.D.

J.H.L. (Tokyo).—Your solution is quite wrong, but judging from your remarks, it seems to be your first attempt.

Problem No. 378.
By H. D'O. Bernard.



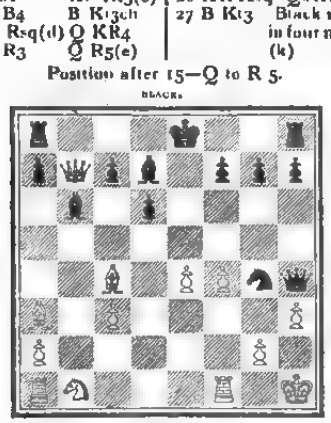
White mates in two moves.

Game No. 405.

The following interesting Evans Gambit game was played at St. Petersburg. It furnishes us with a good example of Alapin's defence :—

White—N. M.		Black—S. Alapin.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	16 Q×Rch	K K2
2 KKt B3	QKt B3	17 Q Q5	Q K 6
3 B B4	B B4	18 Q R15ch
4 P QKt4	B×KtP	(f)	P B3(g)
5 P B3	B R4	19 Q×Kt Pch	K Q q
6 P Q4	P Q3	20 Q×Rch	B K-q
7 Castles	B Q2(a)	21 Q×Pch(h)	Kt×Q
8 Q Kt3	Q K2	22 R B3	Q K8ch
9 B R3(b)	Kt R3	23 R B-q	Q×KP
10 P×P	Kt×P	24 Kt Q2	Q K6
11 Kt×Kt	Q×Kt	25 Kt B3(i)	Kt R4
12 Q×P	Kt Kt5(c)	26 KR K-q	Q×KBP
13 P B4	B Kt3ch	27 B Kt3	Black mates in four moves (k)
14 K Rsq(d)	Q KR4
15 P R3	Q R5(e)

Position after 15—Q to R 5.



Notes by I. Gunsberg.

(a) M. Alapin considers this a better move than ■ to Kt 3, played in the correspondence game Vienna v. St Petersburg.

(b) We prefer P takes P at once ; for then if P takes P, White gains time by following up with ■ to R 3.

(c) A seemingly premature attack. With castling Black would have a good game, if it were not for White's possible reply of Q to Q 5, compelling exchange of queens.

(d) Black has played very artfully. If 14—Q takes B, Q to K R 4, winning the queen by threatening mate.

(e) Black is carried away by the exuberance of his imagination. His intention, of course, is to threaten mate by Q to Kt 6. If he had castled he would have been in a much safer position to prosecute the attack.

(f) 18—Q takes B P ch would not do, for Black would gain the necessary breathing time by K to Q sq.

(g) One cannot help but admire Black's desperate efforts. He could not play K to K sq, for then White would put an end to all mating possibilities by 19—P takes Kt.

(h) The only move to prevent mate. Black may be proud of his partial success.

(i) 25—Q R to Q sq could have been played perhaps with better chances than in the text move.

(k) Kt to Kt 6 ch ; 28—K to R 2, Kt to B 8 dis. ch ; 29—K to R sq Q to R 7 ch ; 30—Kt takes Q, Kt to Kt 6, mate.

Game No. 406.

The following interesting encounter took place at Nuremberg in 1883. The Bird form of game is eminently qualified to exercise and test the skill of the player not well posted in the books :—

BIRD'S OPENING.

White—Bird.		Black—Riemann.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK
1 P KB4	P Q4	13 R QB q	B Q3
2 P K3	P QB4	14 Q KK-3	R KKt-q
3 Kt KB3	Kt QB3	15 Kt×P	P×Kt
4 B QKt5	Q QKt3	16 B×Kt	R QR-q
5 P QB4	P×P	17 KB×KtP	K B q
6 B×P	P K3	18 B K5	R×P
7 Kt QB3	Kt KB3	19 R×P	P B3
8 Castles	P QR3	20 B×Kt	P×B
9 P QKt3	Q QB2	21 P×P	B×R
10 B QKt2	P QKt4	22 Kt Q4 ch	K K2
11 B K2	B QKt2	23 Q Kt5 mate.
12 Q Ksq	R Q-q

Game No. 407.

DOUBLE MUZIO.

The following spirited game is taken from the China Mail :—

White—Sig. Salvioli.		Black—Amateurs in Consultation.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	9 K R-q	Kt K2
2 P KB4	P×P	10 P K5	Q Kt2
3 Kt KB3	P KKt4	11 P Q4	B Kt5
4 B B4	P Kt5	12 B×P	K K-q
5 Castles	P×Kt	13 Kt K4	R B-q
6 B×Pch(a)	K×B	14 Q R5ch	Q Kt3
7 Q×P	Q B3	15 B R6 !
8 Kt B3	B B4ch

15	R×Rch	22 Q R5ch	K K3
16 R×R	Kt Kt-q	23 P Q5ch	K K4
17 Kt Q6ch	B×Kt !	24 B B4ch	K Q5
18 P×B	P×QP	25 Q K-q4ch	K×P
19 R B8ch	K K2	26 Q Kt3ch	K Q5
20 Q R4ch	K K3	27 P B3ch	Resigns(b)
21 Q K-q6ch	K Q4

NOTES.

(a) It is now the fashion to call this the "Double Muzio." Showalter has expressed himself in favour of the soundness of the second sacrifice, but his opinion is not supported by other masters. No doubt the defence is difficult and the chances favour White. But the logic of the situation is against him.

(b) It is worth while to proceed to the end, those of course excepted who can see the calamity that now impends. Signor Salvioli has played in a manner quite worthy his illustrious name.

Coming Events.

The Vienna Tournament we learn from the St. James Budget of 27th May, will after all prove a contest of the first magnitude, as contrary to expectations, all the strong players with the exception of Lasker will compete. There will be Pillsbury, Steinitz, Showalter, Tarrash, Charousek, Tschigorine, Walbrodt, Janowski, Maroczy, Burn, possibly also Mason, in fact every player who has gained renown in previous international contests. Play will begin next week, and will proceed at the rate of five games weekly, until two complete rounds have been played, Such a very long contest constitutes a trial of physical strength in which the fittest will survive, and will well deserve the success. An announcement has been made that an international tournament on a much smaller scale will immediately follow the Vienna meeting. The second event will take place at Cologne.

After the return of Showalter to America, there is a probability of his playing a match with Max Judd, the famous chess amateur, who under Mr. Cleveland's administration, held the post of United States Consul-General at Vienna.

A match is in contemplation between Messrs. Lee and Teichmann in London.

MAIL STEAMERS.

THE NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	M. M. Co.	Melbourne 2	Th. July 14
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Doric 2	Th. July 14
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Tacoma	Th. July 14
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rohilla	M. July 18
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	M. July 25
America	O. & O. Co.	Coptic 3	Tu. July 26
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	Th. July 28
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Hohenzollern	W. Aug. 3

1 Left Shanghai on the 9th inst.
2 Left Hongkong on the 5th inst
3 Left San Francisco on the 7th July.

THE NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Belgic	Sa. July 9
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rosetta	W. July 13
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Kobe Maru	W. July 13
Tacoma, Wash. ...	N. P. Co.	Tacoma	F. July 15
America	O. & O. Co.	Doric	Sa. July 16
Europe, via S'hai.	M. M. Co.	Melbourne	W. July 20
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	M. July 25
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	F. July 29
Hongkong	N. D. L.	Hohenzollern	F. Aug 5

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Hogo Maru, Japanese steamer, 881, H. Walter, 2nd July,—Kobe, 1st July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kumamoto Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,236, K. Iwanaga, 2nd July,—Kobe, 1st July General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, F. W. Horton, 2nd July,—Kobe, 1st July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Haugchow, British steamer, 999, J. Peace, 4th July,—Takow, Formosa, 28th June, Sugar.—Butterfield and Swire.

Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3 003, Geo. A. Lee, 4th July,—Vancouver, B.C., 20th June, Mails and General —C. P. R. Co.

Hohenzollern, German steamer, 2,376, H. Bierker, 4th July,—Hongkong, 29th June, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Kendal Castle, British steamer, 1,813, P. Watson, 5th July,—Antwerp via ports, Hongkong, 27th June,—Sale & Co.

Rosetta, British steamer, 2,039, E. P. Bishop, 5th July,—Hongkong via Nagasaki and Kobe, 3rd July, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Amagi Kan (11), Japanese Wooden-sloop, 926, Commander T. Tarrgaki, 5th July,—Yokosuka, 5th July.

Asturia, German steamer, 3 405, Hahn, 5th July, —Hamburg via ports, Shanghai 30th June, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Hertha, German steamer, 2,199, Hildebrandt, 5th July,—Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Sikh, British steamer, 1,736, J. Rowley, 6th July, —London via ports, Kobe, 5th July, General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Ise Maru, Japanese steamer, 771, J. Arakawa, 6th July,—Yokkaichi, 5th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yayeyama Kan (11), Japanese Despatch-Vessel, 1,509, Capt. T. Sakai, 6th July,—Yokosuka, 6th July.

On Sang, British steamer, 1,300, Young, 6th July, —Iloilo, 26th July, Sugar.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Aztec, Hawaiian steamer, 2,303, G. Trask, 7th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 5th July, Mails and General —P. M. S.S. Co.

Rossia (28), Russia Cruiser, 12,130, Capt. Domnjikoff, 7th July,—Vladivostock via Hakodate, 4th July.

Tateyama Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,347, S. Kakimi, 7th July,—Kobe, 6th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Pak Ling, British steamer, 2,875, H. L. Allen, 7th July,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe, 6th July, General.—W. M. Strachan & Co.

Yamashiro Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,567, James Jones, 7th July,—Australia via ports, Kobe, 6th July, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Empress of India, British steamer, 3,003, O. P. Marshall, 8th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 7th July, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Belgic, British steamer, 2,695, J. H. Rinder, 8th July,—San Francisco via Honolulu, 18th June, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Kobe Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,645, R. Swain, 8th July,—Shanghai via ports, 2nd July, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Inaba Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,709, C. Bainbridge, 8th July,—Hongkong, Rice.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Caleb Curtis, American schooner, 39, Whistler, 9th July,—Hongkong, Stores.—Captain.

DEPARTURES.

Kokura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,567, I. Higo, 2nd July,—Otaru via ports, 1st July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Victoria, British steamer, 1,991, J. Tinebridge, 3rd July,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Moyune, British steamer, 3,016, R. Couraki, 3rd July,—London via Foochow and way ports, General.—W. M. Strachan & Co.

Benmohr, British steamer, 1,935, Le Bontillier, 3rd July,—New York via ports and Suez Canal, General.—Cornes & Co.

Kumamoto Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,236, K. Iwanaga, 4th July,—Hakodate, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hogo Maru, Japanese steamer, 861, H. Walter, 4th July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, Geo. A. Lee, 4th July,—Hongkong viâ ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Hector, British steamer, 3,005, John Barr, 4th July,—London via ports, General.—Butterfield and Swire.

Grafton (12), British Cruiser, 7,300, Capt. E. P. Jones, 4th July,—Yokosuka.

Mount Tabor, British steamer, 1,494, J. Jonsson, 5th July,—Iloilo, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Oceanien, French steamer, 2,080, R. Schmitz, 6th July,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Saikio Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,652, G. H. Conner, 6th July,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Otaru Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,507, Tibballs, 6th July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Aggi, Norwegian steamer 2,126, H. Hatteberg, 6th July,—Moji, Ballast.—China and Japan Trading Co.

Shinagawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,001, K. Yamanouchi, 7th July,—Hakodate, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Falladon Hall, British steamer, 2,206, Jeffells, 7th July,—Java, Ballast.—Frazar & Co.

Astec, Hawaiian steamer, 2,303, G. Trask, 8th July,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Hohenzollern, German steamer, 2,376, H. Bleeker, 8th July,—Hongkong via Kobe and Nagasaki, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Empress of India, British steamer, 3,003, O. P. Marshall, 8th July—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Saëura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,827, N. Mumezono, 8th July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Shanghai, British steamer, 2,163, Peters, 8th July,—London via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.

Asturia, German steamer, 3,405, Hahn, 8th July,—London, Hamburg and Antwerp via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, from Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. Asabuki, Mr. A. E. Blake, Mr. C. H. Burr, Bishop Earl Cranston, Mrs. Earl Cranston, Miss Ethel and Miss Lama Cranston, Mr. L. M. F. Dumont, Mr. and Mrs. Denby, Miss N. M. Daniels, Mr. Hardie and four children, Mr. Hirota, Mr. N. H. Illingworth, Mr. D. H. Illington, Mr. Kitamura, Dr. and Mrs. Malcom, Mr. Morimura, Miss S. Matsui, Rev. Geo. C. Needham, Mrs. Geo. C. Needham, Miss McKenzie, Mr. A. V. Payne, Mr. Van Glahn, Mr. Watanabe, Mr. Waltz, Mr. Weil, and Mr. and Mrs. George Wurts, in cabin; 18 second class; 92 intermediate.

Per German steamer Hohenzollern, from Hongkong:—Mr. Th. W. Vogelgesang, in cabin; Mr. W. Hunter, Mr. James Barrington, Mr. J. Bibeiro, and Mr. A. Bocha, in second class; Mrs. Blad's amah, in steerage.

Per British steamer Rosetta, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Miss Murphy, Mr. G. A. Almond, Mr. T. McKay and native servant, Mr. A. Barr, Mr. Lamb, Miss Meadon, Lieut. Loring, Lieut. E. W. Browne, Mr. R. H. Powers, Lieut. W. A. Cross, Mr. Dearden, Mr. G. W. Bramhall and son, Mr. E. A. Mackay, and Mr. G. Hodges, in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of India, from Hongkong via ports:—Dr. and Mrs. Lyall, Lt. Deverell, Mr. and Mrs. Planebrook, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Graham, Mrs. Twentymen's infant, Miss E. Cameron, Mr. E. de Bavier, Mrs. Groundwater, Mrs. B. Robertson and child, Mrs. E. P. Wickham and child, Mrs. and Miss Dudgeon, Mrs. and Miss Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Cartwright, Rev. and Mrs. Heywood and child, Mrs. Dudgeon's maid, Rev. Fulkerson, Miss Melton, Miss Young, Miss E. Russell, Rev. M. S. Vail, Mr. T. Walsh, Mrs. Forrest and child, Mr. L. D. Abraham, Miss G. Morgan, Mrs. Brown, Mr. R. R. Morriss, Miss Miller, Mr. Groundwater, Rev. J. N. Wodey, Mr. J. Belucend, Mr. A. G. Rowond, Mrs. Probst and child, Mr. J. David, Miss Ellis, Mr. F. S. Dugdale, Mrs. Coney and two children, Miss Parsons, Dr. N. Horsey, Miss A. Wright, Rev. J. C. Davidson, Rev. Brooks, Miss Lawsing, Miss Ghear, Miss Kidwell, Mr. J. Temulji, Mr. N. Bretchneider, Mr. and Mrs. Kuhn, Mr. J. Stiven, Mr. A. Lassus, Mr. L. Escombe, Mrs. Langhorne and 2 children, Mrs. Fitton and 2 children, Mr. and Mrs. J. Kyles, Mr. R. Stephenson, Mrs. Rumsey, Mr. N. C. Sparrow, Mrs. Ewing and child, and Mr. and Mrs G. Ede, in cabin; 8 intermediate; 320 in steerage. For Vancouver:—Mr. J. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas and child, Mr. M. Connady, Miss Bosworth, Miss L. M. Stanley, Mr. Gunnell, Rev. and Mrs. Vicking and child, Mr. E. A. Moring, Mr. C. E. D. Black, Rev. and Mrs. Prier and child, Rev. and Mrs. J. Parker and child, Mr. W. W. J. Oudendijk, Mr. F. D. Alcand, Miss Stanton, Miss Shih Paw-Li, Miss Tau I Lien, Mr. Moring and valet, Rev. and Mrs. Walne and 2 children, Mr. Buquet, Mr. and Mrs. Davis and child Mr. J. G. Kearseig, Rev. and Mrs. B. F Buxton and 4 children, Dr. J. Mosignan, Mr. E. Foming, Mr. H. Evans, Capt. D. Hodgson, Mr. J. Stern, Mr. R. R. Nynd, Mr. Wade Gardner, Mr. R. C. Renny, Mr. P. S. Unwin, Mrs. J. L. Scott, Miss K. Morgan, Mr. P. Hall, Mr. W. Theodon, Mr. C. Luzzatti, Mr. W. H. Shockley, Miss M. Sen, Miss Wilkinson, Miss E. Strong, Mr. W. C. Briggs, Mr. McC. Osborne, and Miss Modeley in cabin.

Per British steamer Belgic, from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Dr. Elizabeth D. Dixon, Mrs. M. E. Vanderpool, Mr. J. S. Lee, Miss Florence Manson, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Dosel, Mr. Thomas C. Jenkins, Mr. J. Witkowski, Mr. Robert Levy, Mr. J. M. Laure, Mrs. J. M. Hood, Miss Alice Watkins Hood, Miss Mabel Douglas Hood, Mr. J. M. Hood, Jr., Mrs. H. B. McCoy, Mr. M. Morioka and Mr. Y. Tsumura in cabin. For Nagasaki:—Mr. A. Dolgoff. For Shanghai:—Mr. John Gilmore, Rev. and Mrs. W. O. Etterich and 3 childs, Miss Bertha Lamont and Mr. P. T. Evans in cabin. For Hongkong:—Mr. and Mrs. Melville McLaughlin, Mrs. Abba Bass, Mr. Earle Stuyvesant, Mr. William W. Miller, Mr. John W. Lusher, and Mr. W. B. Ritchie, in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Loxley, Misses Loxley (3), Mr. F. W. Mills, Consul and Mrs. C. M. Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Meier and 2 children, Mr. Ellis Kelly, Mr. O. J. Ellis, Rev. and Mrs. Hardy and 2 children, Miss McKenzie, Mr. E. W. Maitland, Dr. Keylock, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Bell Irving and maid, Rev. and Miss Albrecht, Mr. and Mrs. H. Heckert, Mr. J. Stiven, Mr. I. Komor, Mr. E. Stadlin, Mr. P. Anitchkine, Mr. H. Ehrie, and Mr. John Farquhar, in cabin.

Per French steamer Oceanien, for Marseilles via ports:—Mr. J. H. Addinsell, Mr. J. H. Hermanovitz, Mr. G. Levy, Mr. Emile Levy, Mr. Lognand, Mr. R. F. Fornaris, Mr. H. Boisard and boy, Mr. Chas. Denby, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Stewart, Miss W. Blanchard, Miss Gladwell, Commandt. Le Coispillier, Mrs. B. Roth and child, Mr. J. Richard, Mr. E. Domballe, Mr. Hata, Mr. C. Mertens, Mr. G. W. Middleton, Mr. G. Debouliet, Mr. B. Roth, Mr. T. Lagrange, Mr. A. J. N. Gomes, Mr. C. Abdoola, Mr. Jock Adams, Mr. Louis Johnston, Mr. H. Nehlsen, and Miss Legrand, in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Saikio Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. Krasilnikoff, Mrs. Thomas, Lieut.-Colonel H. Shimmiya (I.J.A.), Mr. Jan Pütz, Mr. C. Thwaites, Mr. R. Mizutani, Mr. and Mrs. Bagel, Master V. Gryzzbowski, Master L. Kronglik, and Master Geo. Arthur, in cabin; Mr. T. Ono, Mr. S. Suyehiro, Mr. J. Takeda, Mr. G. Tanaka, and Mr. K. Nihara, in second class; 60 Japanese, 4 Chinese, and 1 European, in steerage.

Per German steamer Hohenzollern, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. C. Schmeisser, Mr. K. Ito, Mr. and Mrs. Brockmann and 2 children, Mr. Th. W. Vogelgesang, Dr. H. den Kate, and Miss Brownlow, in cabin; 2 Chinese on deck.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

In yarns and grey shirtings and fancy woollens and cottons absolutely nothing is doing. Prices are nominally as under.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

	per piece.
Grey Shirtings—8½ lb., 38½ yds. 39 inches	$2 55 to 2 85
Grey Shirtings—9lb., 38½ yds. 45 inches	2.85 to 3.35
T. Cloth—7½, 24 yards, 32 inches	1.80 to 2.00
Indigo Shirtings—12 yards, 14 inches	2.75 to 2.60
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches	2 00 to 3.75
Cotton—Italians and Satteens Black, 32 inches	per yard. 0 25 to 0.25

WOOLLENS.

	per piece.
Flannels	$0.30 to 0.50
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches best	0.28 to 0.41
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Medium	Nominal
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Common	Nominal
Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 24 yards, 32 inches	0.15 to 0 17
Cloths—Pilots, 51 @ 56 inches	0.35 to 0.50
Cloths—Presidents, 51 @ 56 inches	0.60 to 0.72½
Cloths—Union, 54 @ 56 inches	0.30 to 0.85
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5lb., per lb.	0 50 to 0 60
	per piece.
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	7 75 to 9.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 12-3 inches,	0.60 to 1 00
TurkeyReds—2.0 to 3.0lb., 24/25 yards, 30 inches	1.25 to 2 20
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 4lb., 24/25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.52½

COTTON YARNS.

	per picul.
Nos. 16 24, Singles	$35.50 to 38.50
Nos. 28/32, Singles	39.00 to 41.50
Nos. 38/42, Singles	43.50 to 45.50
Nos. 32, Doubles	42.00 to 43.50
Nos. 42, Doubles	47.00 to 50.50
Nos. 2 60, Plain	61 00 to 63.00
Nos. 2 80, Plain	75 00 to 76.50
Nos. 2/100, Plain	97.00 to 99.00
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	69 50 to 76.50
Nos. 2 80, Gassed	85.00 to 90.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	124.00 to 184.00

RAW COTTON.

	per picul.
American Middling	$19.50 to —
Indian Broach	19 25 —
Chinese	21.00 to 21.50

METALS.

There is no new business to report. Prices nominally at last week's figures.

	per piece.
Round and square ¼ inch, and upward	3.85 to 4.10
Iron Plates, assorted	4 00 to 4.40
Sheet Iron	4 90 to 5.10
Galvanized Iron sheets	8.50 to 10.25
Wire Nails, assorted	5 90 to 6.10
Tin Plates, per box	5.70 to 5.90
Pig Iron, No. 1	2.08 to 2.10
Hoop Iron (¼ to 1¼ inch)	3.00 to 3.25

KEROSENE.

Market still of quite a retail character.

American	$2 05 —
Russian	1.93 to 2.05
Langkat	— 1.86

SUGAR.

In Browns prices rule 10 to 20 sen lower. Formosas show a decline of 40 sen, and are still weak. In White refined there is no change.

	per picul.
Brown Takao	$5.50 to 5.60
Brown Manila	5.10 to 6.20
Brown Daitong	3.90 to 4.30
Brown Canton	4.25 to 5.90
White Java and Penang	6.90 to 7.85
White Refined	7.70 to 9.60

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

A good demand from Europe makes prices firm, and they close with an upward tendency. Settlements from the 1st to the 5th July were 239 piculs, of which 63 were old and 176 new filatures. The stock on hand in Yokohama is about 1,905 piculs.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra 9/11, 10/12 den.....	Nominal
Filatures—Extra 13/15, 14/16 den.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1, 10/13 deniers	$875 to 885
Filatures—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1½, 10/13 deniers.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	885
Filatures—No. 2, 10/15 deniers.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 2, 11/18 deniers.....	855
Re-reels—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 2½, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 3, 14/20 deniers.....	Nominal
Kakedas—Extra	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1½	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2½	Nominal

WASTE SILK.

Business still nominal; prices rather weak. The stock is estimated at 2,800 piculs—750 Noshi, 1,900 Kibiso, 25 pierced cocoons, 125 sundries.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filature, Best	$115 to 120
Noshi—Filature, Good	105 to 110
Noshi—Oshu, Best.....	110 to 115
Noshi—Oshu, Good	100 to 103
Noshi—Oshu, Medium	90 to [illegible]
Noshi—Shinshu, Best	70 to 75
Noshi—Shinshu, Good	65 to 67½
Noshi—Bushu, Best.....	115 to 120
Noshi—Bushu, Good.....	100 to 110
Noshi—Bushu, Medium.....	90 to [illegible]
Noshi—Joshu, Good	60 to 65
Noshi—Joshu, Fair	55 to 57½
Kibiso—Filature, Best	95 to 100
Kibiso—Filature, Seconds	85 to 90
Kibiso—Joshu, Good	25 to 30
Kibiso—Bushu, Fair	20 to 22½

TEA.

The demand has continued steady and prices have ruled very firm, especially for lower grades. The quality of the second crop is good, and compares very favourably with last year's. So far the shipments this year have been 124,621 piculs against 138,504 last year.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	$33 & upwards
Choice	$30 to 31
Finest	28 to 29
Fine	26 to 27
Good Medium	[illegible] to 25
Medium	22 to 23
Good Common	20 to 21
Common	18 to 19

EXCHANGE.

Silver again ½ lower from London without affecting rates; no change in sterling quotations from China.

Sterling—Bank T.T.	2/0½
— — Bills on demand ...	2/0 7/8
— — 4 months' sight	2/0½
— Private 4 months' sight	2/0⅝
— — 6 months' sight	2/0⅝
On Paris—Bank sight	2.55
On Paris—Private 4 months' sight ...	2.58½
On America—Bank Bills on demand..	49½
— Private 4 months' sight...	50½
On Germany—Bank sight	2.06½
— Private 4 months' sight...	2.10½
On Hongkong—Bank sight 4	1/4% dis.
— Private 10 days' sight.....	6% dis.
On Shanghai—Bank Sight	78½
— Private 10 days' sight ...	80
On India—Bank sight	153
— Private 30 days' sight ...	156
Bar Silver (London)	27 7/16

SLEEP FOR SKIN-TORTURED BABIES

And rest for tired mothers in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a single anointing with CUTICURA (ointment), purest of emollients and greatest of skin cures. This treatment will afford instant relief, and point to a speedy cure of the most torturing, disfiguring, humiliating, itching, burning, bleeding, crusted, scaly skin and scalp humours, with loss of hair, when all else fails.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, London. POTTER D. AND C. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A. ☞ "How to Cure Skin-tortured Babies," post free.

EVERY HUMOUR From Pimples to Scrofula cured by CUTICURA REMEDIES

Trade Mark on WALTER MACFARLANE & Co. GLASGOW SARACEN FOUNDRY every Casting.

Macfarlane's Castings,

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"SHARP, CLEAN, AND FULL OF CHARACTER."

ORNAMENTAL CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

VERANDAHS, BALCONIES, BANDSTANDS, ARCADES, KIOSKS, CONSERVATORIES, ROOFS, RAILWAY STATIONS, BARRACKS, FACTORIES, PUBLIC WORKS, MARKETS, &c.

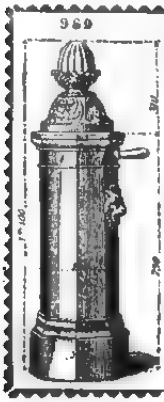
ELECTRIC LIGHT PILLARS, BRACKETS, AND WIRE WAYS.
NUMEROUS HEIGHTS AND DESIGNS TO SUIT THE DIFFERENT REQUIREMENTS.

MACFARLANE'S GLASS ENAMELLED DRAIN AND SOIL PIPES, A SPECIALITY.

TWO GOLD MEDALS, CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

Illustrated CATALOGUES, Price Lists, and Estimates on application.

WALTER MACFARLANE & Co., Glasgow, Scotland.



WATERING APPARATUS

Non-freezing & Ordinary Hydrants and Street Washers.
Garden Watering Boxes and Apparatus.
Gun-Metal, Copper, and Cast-Iron Cocks and Valves.

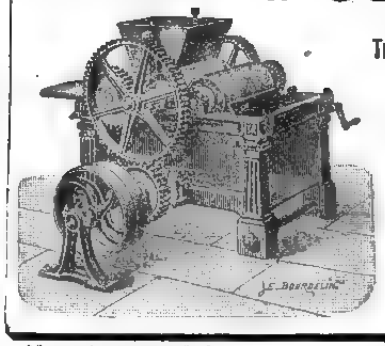
E. GUESNIER, E.C.P.,
Engineer and Cock Manfr.,
(Successor of ACHILLE CADET)
27, Rue des Taillandiers,
PARIS.

Hydropathic and Massage Apparatus supplied to the Vichy Co. Vapour Baths (Berthe system).

Apply to BOYES & Co., agents for M. OPPENHEIMER & Co., PARIS.

December 5, 1896.

A. SAVY & CO., ENGINEERS.



162, Rue de Charenton, Paris.

THE OLD G. HERMANN DEBATISTE WORKS.
ESTABLISHED 1830.

The Oldest and Largest Makers in the World of Chocolate, Cocoa, and Confectionery Plants.

Over 2,500 Chocolate Factories fitted up to January 1st, 1896.

GRINDING MACHINERY for all kinds of dry or wet substances, colours, printing inks, toilet soap, perfumery, and chemicals.

MIXING, CRUSHING, AND PULVERISING MACHINES FOR ALL MATERIALS.

Address Messrs. C. ROHDE & Co., YOKOHAMA.

November 21st, 1896.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LEA & PERRINS'

OBSERVE THAT THE SIGNATURE

Lea & Perrins

IS NOW PRINTED IN BLUE INK DIAGONALLY ACROSS THE OUTSIDE WRAPPER of every Bottle of the

ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale by the Proprietors, Worcester; Crosse & Blackwell, Ltd., London; and Export Oilmen generally.

RETAIL EVERYWHERE.

46ins. May 8th, 1898.

MILKMAID BRAND CONDENSED MILK

The "Milkmaid" Brand is guaranteed to contain all the cream of the original milk. In the process of manufacture nothing but water is removed, nothing but the best refined sugar added.

Avoid low-priced brands from which the cream has been abstracted, and ask for the "Milkmaid" Brand, the best for all purposes.

LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT

is a perfect tonic; it braces up the system to resist Neuralgia, Colds and Influenza; it keeps the healthy well, and strengthens invalids. A perfect essence of Beef; its effect upon the system is lasting, not transitory like alcoholic stimulants. In the Kitchen it provides the essential features of good Cookery—appetising flavour, nourishment and digestibility.

Note this signature in BLUE on every jar.

J. Liebig

AVOID INFERIOR SUBSTITUTES.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

The Universal Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Headache, Heartburn, Indigestion, Sour Eructations, Bilious Affections.

The Physician's Cure for Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Gravel; the safest and most gentle Medicine for Infants, Children, Delicate Females, and the Sickness of Pregnancy.

MAGNESIA

Sold Throughout the World.

N.B.—ASK FOR DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

September 19th, 1897. 9ins.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

THE FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

More Fragrant; More Lasting; and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ATKINSON'S ONLY AND BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Only genuine with "White Rose" Trade Mark.

Of all Dealers & of the Manufacturers—

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

January 1st, 1898. 1y.

NOT SO FAR AWAY IN CHICAGO U. S. A.

IS THE

Greatest Mail Order House in the World.

MONTGOMERY WARD & COMPANY,

111 to 120 Michigan Ave.

WHO ISSUE SEMI-ANNUALLY THE MOST COMPREHENSIVE

GENERAL CATALOGUE AND BUYERS' GUIDE.

Containing 900 pages (8½ by 11 inches), 14,000 illustrations, 40,000 dependable quotations, and Twenty SPECIAL PRICE LISTS, devoted to distinctive lines of GENERAL MERCHANDISE, viz.: FURNITURE, AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, WAGONS and CARRIAGES, DRUGS, MEDICINES, SEWING MACHINES, ORGANS, PIANOS, BOOKS on every subject, PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES, BOOTS AND SHOES, CLOTHING, CLOAKS, DRESSES, BICYCLES, GROCERIES, HARDWARE, CARPETS, DRY GOODS, WALL PAPER, and BARBERS' SUPPLIES.

Any one or all of these publications will be sent postpaid upon application to dwellers in foreign lands, including our "Hand Book for Foreign Buyers." Send in your request, induce your neighbors, friends and relatives to do so, and learn of our limitless facilities for filling orders expeditiously at minimum prices.

Goods Guaranteed as Represented or Money Refunded.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

CHICAGO, U. S. A.

111 to 120 MICHIGAN AVENUE.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF MODERN TIMES

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

PERSONS suffering from weak or debilitatep constitutions will discover that by the use of this wonderful medicine there is "Health for all." The blood is the fountain of life, and its purity can be maintained by the use of these Pills

Sir Samuel Baker, in his work entitled "The Nile Tributaries in Abyssinia," says—"I ordered the dragoman Mahomet to inform the Fakir that I was a Doctor, and I had the best medicines at the service of the sick, with advice gratis. In a short time I had many applicants, to whom I served out a quantity of Holloway's Pills. These are most useful to an explorer, as, possessing unmistakable purgative properties, they create an undeniable effect upon the patient, which satisfies them of their value."

SIMPLE, SAFE, AND CERTAIN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

Is a certain remedy for bad legs, bad breasts, and ulcerations of all kinds. It acts miraculously in healing ulcerations, curing skin diseases, and in arresting and subduing all inflammations.

Mr. J. T. Cooper, in his account of his extraordinary travels in China, published in 1871, says—"I had with me a quantity of Holloway's Ointment. I gave some to the people, and nothing could exceed their gratitude; and, in consequence, milk, fowls, butter, and horse feed poured in upon us, until at last a teaspoonful of Ointment was worth a fowl and any quantity of eggs, and the demand became so great that I was obliged to lock up the small remaining "stock."

Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the World. Nov 26, 1897.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor, at 51, Main Street, Settlement, by Arthur Bellamy Brown, of No. 74, Bluff, Yokohama, Resident, July 9, 1898.

Digitized by Google

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 3.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, JULY 16TH, 1898. 明治三十一年七月十三日 第三種郵便物認可 Vol. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 49
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 50
Export of Jinrikisha 50
Suicide at Negishi 50
Imperial University 50
The Taking of Guam 50
The late Mr. Tennant 51
Joint Stock Companies 52
Violation of Trade Mark 52
The Cabinet's Difficulty 52
The Cabinet and the Peers 52
The Platform of the Constitutionalists 52
Japanese Fishing in Korean Waters 52
Prince Cyril 52
udge Takano 52
Marquis Ito 53
Merchants and Manufacturers 53
Foreign Ownership of Shares in Japanese Companies 53
Railways 43
Annexation of Hawaii 53
The Fight at Santiago 54
The Osaka Shosen Kaisha and Foreign Shareholders 55
Count Itagaki and the Constitutionalists 55
The "Unkwa" 55
Further Trouble in Connection with Warehousing Companies 55
Social and International Courtesies 56
The Treasury's Silver 56
Japanese Silver Coins and Convertible Notes in Korea 56
Korea 56
Outrage at a Church in Shiba 57
The late Marquis Tokugawa 57
The Philippines 57
Austro-Hungarian Revised Treaty 58
The French National Fête 58
Murder of a German Seaman 58
Extension of Hongkong 58
Yokohama Merchants and Japanese Buyers 58
Sendai News 59
New Fine Arts Association 60
Japanese Facts and Comments 60
Notes on News 61
Japanese Plums in America 61
The Nippon Yusen Kaisha 61
Special First-class Carriages 61
Suicide of Mr. Tennant 62
News of the Week 63
Chinese Affairs 63
Harbour Regulations 64
Correspondence:—
The U.S. School Policy 65
Grand Duke Cyril's Donations 65
A School for the Blind 65
Japan Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church 65
The Situation at Manila 66
Arrival of U. S. Transports at Manila 67
The Kobe Insurance Case 67
Latest Telegraphic News 67
Chess 69
Latest Shipping 69
Latest Commercial 70

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"FAISCE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, JULY 16TH, 1898.

BIRTH.

On July 10th, at 16, Tatenaka-cho, Hongo, Tokyo, the wife of the Rev. H. H. COATES, of a daughter.

On the 15th July, at 10 a.m., the wife of DR. RITTER, Swiss Consul-General, of a son.

On the 13th inst., prematurely, the wife of RALPH GEORGE ELLIOTT FORSTER, Esq., H.B.M.'s Acting Consul-General at Yokohama, of a son.

DEATHS.

On July 11, at 4 p.m. at the General Hospital, HENRY TENNANT, Editor of the Japan Gazette.

On July 13th, Jane Marion (Jeannie), the beloved wife of J. H. BOAG, aged 46 years and 8 months.

On Tuesday, the 12th instant, at 12 p.m., at his residence, Komme, Tokyo, Marquis ATSUYOSHI TOKUGAWA.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

ADMIRAL CAMARA'S squadron is returning to Spain.

ON the 7th instant, Mr. Ohigashi, Minister of Justice, accompanied by Mr. Yamada, the Vice-Minister, and some officials, was presented at Court.

THE Germans are fraternising with the Spaniards at Manila.

THE water supply of Manila has been cut off by the insurgents.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA has surrendered to the Americans.

Hawaii has been formally annexed by the United States of North America.

THE Cabinet crisis at Madrid continues. The formation of a Ministry hangs fire.

THE war is proceeding warmly at Santiago de Cuba, which still refuses to surrender.

THE Government has appointed a committee to investigate the question of administrative reform.

DYSENTERY has broken out among the American troops at Manila, 150 cases being reported by July 12th.

IT has been decided that Japanese silver yen shall be negotiable both in public and private transactions in Korea.

IN Kanagawa prefecture, 62 cases of dysentery occurred during the week ending the 10th inst. Six of the patients died.

THE formation of a British Ocean penny postage between the mother country and her Colonies is announced from London.

THE warship Kongo, which has been in Australian waters since April, left Melbourne on the 7th inst. for home.

THE Coke Manufacturing Company of Osaka, which has had heavy losses for some years, has been adjudged bankrupt.

SEVEN cases of dysentery have appeared at a school in Hamamatsu. All the students have been forbidden to leave the premises.

IT is said that torrential rains are preventing the Americans from mounting siege guns at Santiago. Yellow fever has appeared in Cuban ports.

PRINCE CYRIL, accompanied by the Captain and officers of the Russian cruiser Rossia, was present at the French Ball in Yokohama on Thursday.

MARQUIS TOKUGAWA, representative of the Mito family and nephew of the last of the Tokugawa Shoguns, died on the 12th instant after a very brief illness.

THE French National Holiday passed off with much éclat on Thursday, the festivities including a ball at the Oriental Hotel that was largely attended.

THERE is another political crisis in Korea, the abdication of the Emperor, in favour of the Crown Prince, being suggested by the Independent Association.

THE warship Fuso, which was recently floated, will be brought to Kure port. The water has been pumped out of her, and no great damage appears to have been done.

AN official named Hirabayashi, of the Engineering Bureau of Yamaguchi Kencho, has been arrested on a charge of receiving bribes, amounting to over yen 400, from contractors.

A YOUNG man named Ogiwari Saji, 17 years of age, lodging at No. 1, Sarugakucho, Kanda, Tokyo, committed suicide by drinking a quantity of sulphuric acid, on the night of the 11th.

IN consequence of a speech by the Minister of War in the French Chamber, in which he declared that Dreyfus was undeniably guilty, the whole controversy has been re-opened. Major Esterhazy has been arrested.

MR. HENRY TENNANT, Editor of the Japan Gazette, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver on Monday, while suffering from a fit of melancholia induced by chronic meningitis.

A FISHERMAN named Tanaka Gosuke and two others were drowned in Honmoku Bay, Yokohama, on the 2nd inst. They were fishing off Sugita when a sudden squall overturned their junk.

LIEUT. Hobson and others of the Volunteer crew who took part in the sinking of the Merrimac and were taken prisoners by Admiral Cervera, have been exchanged for Spanish prisoners and released.

THE Directors of the Yokohama Silk Traders' Bank met on the 11th instant, and decided to hold the general meeting of shareholders on the 24th inst. in the City Hall. The dividend will be at the rate of 11% per annum.

A FOREIGN firm in the Settlement, Yokohama, has received a telegram from New York that so far there have been no transactions in tea imported after the imposition of the new duty. For tea imported before the new duty, the price has risen 8 cents.

THE promoters of the Shinagawa Electric tramway company have decided to commence the construction of the line between Omori and Rokugo bridge, Kawasaki, and to form a junction with the electric tramway at Daishi, Kawasaki.

THE warship Naniwa, which left the Pescadores on the 10th inst., has arrived at Hongkong en route to Manila. The warship Tsukuba cast anchor at Fusan, Korea, on the 12th inst. The Yamato arrived at the Pescadores on the 12th inst. from Keelung.

A WOMAN named KŌ, the wife of Shimidzu Yasujiro, living in No. 19, Muramatsu-cho, Nihonbashi, Tokyo, committed suicide on the 6th inst., at 1 p.m., by hanging herself. The motive is said to be distress arising from extreme poverty occasioned by the appreciation of commodities.

THE number of lives lost by the La Bourgogne collision is estimated at 526. Frightful confusion and fighting ensued in the effort to get into the boats. No attempt was made to save the women and children. The saved include 108 of the crew, who seized the boats and repulsed the passengers.

STAGNATION continues to characterise the import trade in Yokohama, but for fancy woollens and cottons some improvement may be hoped for next month. With regard to metals, the iron market suffers from over-supply, accentuated by the recent arrival of sailing ships. The only feature is a little enquiry for galvanised corrugated sheets at low prices. The sugar market remains steady, browns being generally 10 to 20 sen lower, while Formosas have declined 15 sen. White refined is at the same level. As regards exports, the European demand for silk is brisk, and prices show a tendency to advance; American buyers, however, are quite inactive. Nothing is doing in waste silk. In tea a large business has been transacted, common to good medium qualities being chiefly in demand. Prices have ruled firm at an advance of 1 to 2 yen per picul.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

It is a curious fact that the present Cabinet, though it rode into power on the crest of a wave of popular approval, is conspicuously without newspaper supporters. We can not recall any instance of a Ministry so lacking in defenders. The inferences seem to be, in the first place, that a feeling of uncertainty exists as whether the long-looked-for consummation has really been achieved—whether, in short, this is a genuine party Cabinet, or whether the clan statesmen have set it up merely for the purpose of knocking it down more decisively than ever—; and, in the second, that the would-be champions of the Ministry, not being at all sure what complexion it will ultimately assume for purposes of constructive statecraft, hesitate to formulate any defence which might afterwards be found to embody inconvenient opinions. One of the great questions of the hour continues to be the spoils system. Several journals take it for granted that the Cabinet can not possibly withstand the pressure brought to bear on it by the party politicians, and that it will be driven, despite its better instincts, to set about the creation of official vacancies in order that its friends may step into them. In that case, of course, the new Ministers will bring upon their own heads, with redoubled force, all the censures that they used to heap upon the clan statesmen.

* * *

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun points out that during the past thirteen years, in fact ever since the organization of the administration by Marquis Ito in 1885, appointment by examination and promotion by seniority have been the rule in the Civil Service. Some exceptions have to be noted, it is true. Count Goto, for example, when he presided over the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, made a record for favoritism, and the last Matsukata Cabinet showed a marked inclination to make the high offices in the Administration prizes for party politicians. But Marquis Ito's control of State affairs was never marked by any such abuses. The only exceptions to his system of appointment by examination were graduates of the Imperial University, and during his second premiership even that exception was abolished.

* * *

We need not elaborate this phase of criticism to any length. It finds wide expression in the columns of several journals, and even the organs of the Constitutional Party—the Mainichi Shimbun alone excepted—seem indisposed to advocate any sweeping official changes. The Mainichi, as we explained in a previous issue, takes a very extensive view of the posts that may be considered to fall within the category of political prizes. If the section of the Party represented by that journal entertain the views advocated by it, the leaders of the Cabinet will certainly be found at variance with them.

* * *

It is certain, the same journal continues, that if men picked up on the way side (michibata no hito) are put into office over the heads of those that have gained their entry into officialdom by proved qualifications and have risen by assiduity and capacity, the latter will not consent to remain, and the public service will be more or less paralysed. The true principle is that from Vice-Ministers of State downwards all officials should be regarded as administrative, not political. So far from selecting party politicians to occupy posts like those of Vice Minister or Bureau-chief, any occupant of such positions who meddles with party politics should be dismissed incontinently. The Constitution is not silent upon this point. It declares that Ministers of State are entitled to attend in either House of the Diet and to speak at any time. The provision indicates clearly that Heads of Departments alone are regarded as political officials by the Constitution. Mr. Den, Chief of the Bureau of Posts and Telegraphs in the Department of Communications, was a man eminently fitted for that position. He had held it for years, knew every detail of its work, and had travelled abroad at the public expense the better to qualify for discharging its duties. Yet, though he actually joined the Constitutionalists when they came into power, he was superseded in favour of Mr. Minoura, a party politician, who can not be spoken of in the same breath so far as fitness for the post is concerned. That kind of thing shows that the so-called "clan favouritism," which in reality had ceased to have the dimensions of an abuse, is now to be replaced by a very substantial abuse in the shape of party favouritism. The Nichi Nichi, as our readers probably know, is opposed to the present Cabinet.

* * *

Another much discussed subject is the Cabinet's apparent hesitation about announcing its administrative and financial programmes. Of course the gravamen of that charge is to be found in the implication that it is quite impossible for the various sections of such a heterogeneous party as the Constitutionalists to agree upon any constructive programme. It is pointed out, for example, with wearisome iteration, that Count Itagaki is emphatically in favour of the State purchase of private railways, whereas Count Okuma is opposed to it; that the Liberals advocate the transfer of prison expenditures to the charges of the State, whereas the Progressists oppose it; that the Progressists want to reduce the Army, whereas the Liberals would maintain it on the footing projected by the post-bellum scheme, and so forth and so on through a catalogue of contradictions which appear irreconcilable in the eyes of observers who would prefer, on the whole, that they should not be reconciled. We shall not run the risk of tiring our readers by pursuing this branch of the subject.

* * *

The Kokumin's view of the difficulties outlined in the last paragraph is decidedly practical. On the ground that there never can be a genuine political party without distinct and intelligible principles, it urges the leaders of the Constitutionalists to take their courage in both hands and formulate a policy which shall be clear beyond all risk of misunderstanding. Let them not seek any longer to draw a cordon of vague generalities round a mob of incongruous partizans, but let them stand out boldly and squarely as the exponents of the views they consider most conducive to the interests of the State. If any of their followers object to the programme thus enunciated, let the objectors secede. It is better to be without the support of men that stand in line merely because they do not know precisely what is before them, but never can be got to move in unison.

* * *

The Jiji, to which we look for opinions untinged with prejudice, concludes that very little is to be expected from the present Ministry. Members of the Cabinet had better make up their minds at once that their rôle must be very small. They stand in awe of the Army and Navy; the Peers are against them; unanimity on the part of their own following can scarcely be secured for constructive purposes. There is only one reform within the compass of their capacities. But it is a valuable reform. Let them apply themselves to abolishing all the airs and graces of officialdom. Let them seek to obtain practical recognition of the principle that the paid servants of the public should endeavour to serve the public with all the promptitude and consideration that mark the conduct of clerks in a bank or employés in a merchant's store. The country does not want displays of the foppery of brief authority: it wants its business transacted with promptitude and conscientiousness. The new Ministry might set before itself that ideal without any risk of endangering the cohesion of its followers.

* * *

It is held by the Hochi Shimbun that the spirit of manliness in Japan has greatly deteriorated. In 1881, when Count Okuma left the Government, more than a hundred of his fellow-thinkers resigned their official positions and went into retirement with him—retirement that lasted for several years and still continues in the case of many of them. Marquis (then Count) Ito, who was at the head of the Cabinet, gave himself no concern about that wholesale exodus. He came to the wise conclusion that it was better to be without men whose zealous cooperation could not be relied on. But when Marquis Ito resigned the Premiership on the 26th of last month, and opened the door for party cabinets, his political friends did not go with him, and Count Okuma has even urged them to remain. The hearts of men have obviously degenerated, says the Hochi.

EXPORT OF JINRIKISHA.

The export of jinrikisha is now quite an important branch of Japanese trade. Singapore and Penang are the chief centres of demand. Last year, Singapore took 4,000 vehicles and Penang 3,000. The class of jinrikisha affected by the inhabitants of these places is an affair highly ornamented with designs of birds, horses, shishi and so forth, costing from 40 to 50 yen and adapted for two people. Five or six hundred single-rider vehicles, at about 20 yen each, were also sent to the same places. It is said that Singapore has only 4,000 drawers, so that no increase of demand from that place can be expected. Some 50 yen jinrikisha are in demand for Shanghai, and Hongkong takes a few at 60 yen each, evidently private vehicles. The principal exporting firm in Tokyo has the picturesque name of the "Autumn leaf company" (Akiha Kaisha). It is about to try a shipment to Siam, on the recommendation of the Japanese Representative in Bangkok. The figures, which we take from the Fiji Shimpo, are supplemented by a statement that the number of jinrikisha plying for hire in Tokyo at the end of last month was 42,282, as against 39,677 at the corresponding period of last year.

SUICIDE AT NEGISHI.

On the 14th inst., about 9 p.m., a clerk named Hamada, 40 years of age, in the employ of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce, shot himself at Negishi village near the race-course. Dr. Ozuda, who was just passing by, examined the unfortunate man, and he was sent to Kondo hospital, where his wounds were found to be fatal. It is reported that he had been drinking at the Chitose restaurant with a friend from Tokyo, and they were returning to deceased's house at Negishi. The friend went ahead in a jinrikisha, and it was then that Hamada committed the fatal act. It is stated that he owed money to his friend and was unable to pay it.

IMPERIAL UNIVERSITY.

The Graduation Ceremony of the Imperial University was held on the 10th instant. Three hundred and fifty-three students graduated in the following sections:—

Law	107
Medicine	30
Engineering	110
Literature	66
Natural Philosophy	26
Agriculture	14

THE TAKING OF GUAM.

The N.C. Daily News telegram with regard to the taking of Guam is a little more detailed than the one which our correspondent wired from Shanghai. Our contemporary's wire says:—

Entering the harbour of Guam, in the Ladrones, the Charleston fired seven shots at the forts. The Governor thought it was a salute, and sent word that he could not reply, as he had no powder. He was informed that he was a prisoner of war, and protested, alleging that he was not aware that there had been any declaration of war. An American resident was appointed temporary Governor.

The Spanish gunboat Leyte was captured on the 29th ult. with 183 Spanish troops on board, driven out of Pampangas River by the rebels.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE LATE MR. TENNANT.

The medical evidence given at the inquest on the body of Mr. Henry Tennant showed that there was chronic meningitis of some standing. Meningitis often occurs as a result of overwork, and probably this was the primary cause in the present case. There is not much rest for any bread-earner now-a-days, but we venture to think that the toil of the newspaper editor in Yokohama is exceptionally severe. Mr. Tennant certainly did not spare himself. He wrought for the Japan Gazette with a degree of earnestness and assiduity that must have been fully appreciated by a business community like that of Yokohama. His predecessors were not idlers by any means, but, without desiring to disparage them, we may be allowed to say that not one of them attained success comparable with that of Mr. Tennant. Only fellow-journalists can fully gauge the industry required to perform, day after day and week after week, a task such as that he set for himself, and only those that have essayed the task understand how intolerably irksome it can become at times, especially when the hot days and sleepless nights of mid-summer in Japan multiply the weight and the weariness a hundredfold. We can not doubt that Mr. Tennant over-taxed his strength, and that life suddenly assumed in his eyes the aspect of a tragedy to be ended with all possible haste. If in one sense these considerations deepen the sadness of the result, they bring with them also the comforting reflection that no reproach can possibly attach to an act the direct result of excessive loyalty to duty. Men are not endowed with means of measuring their physical capacity to attain an ideal, and if they sink in the struggle to reach beyond the limits of their strength, profound pity is the sentiment chiefly evoked by their fate. It will not be judged an impertinence, we trust, if we say that, in our opinion, Mr. Tennant's removal from the journalistic field is a great loss to Yokohama. There was a time, indeed, when his views about Japan and the Japanese seemed to us to be tinged with extravagance; but during the past year his verdicts were eminently moderate and fair, and the Japan Gazette, under his direction, was a newspaper that did credit to Yokohama. It is pitiable that a career already so useful, and with so much promise of increased usefulness, should have been cut short in such a manner.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

According to statistics compiled by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, the number of joint-stock companies in Japan and the amount of their capitals on June 30th were as follow:—

	yen
Commercial Companies.....	1,122
Capital	142,366,040
Industrial Companies.....	1,068
Capital	171,272,926
Agricultural Companies.....	102
Capital	31,260,959
Total number of companies	2,292
Total capital.....	317,899,975

It would be very interesting to know how much of this capital is paid-up, but upon that point the returns seem to be silent.

VIOLATION OF TRADE MARKS.

The Trade Mark Law of Japan, issued in 1889, was intended to be effective in Japan only and with regard to Japanese subjects only. That is almost a truism. The second article of the Law enumerates the trade marks that can not be registered, and the category includes:—"Trade marks identical with, or similar to, trade marks already registered, or used by others before the application was made." It goes without saying that "registered" in this Article means registered by Japanese subjects in Japan—in fact, none but a Japanese subject could obtain registration—, and that "used by others" means used by Japanese subjects in Japan.

In 1892, Mr. Nakamura, a Japanese calico-weaver, registered a mark for the purposes of his trade. It was a mark already used on imported calico, as Mr. Nakamura was doubtless aware. The foreign firms engaged in the import of the foreign calico did not attempt to obtain any protection against Mr. Nakamura for five years. Recently, however, relying on the fact that the benefits of the Japanese Trade Mark Law had been nominally extended to foreigners by the German Revised Treaty, they brought an action in the Patents Bureau of Japan for the restraint of Mr. Nakamura, and they applied, at the same time, for the registration of their own mark. They were cast in the action and their application was rejected.

We do not see what else could have been expected. In fact, it surprises us that steps of such a nature should be advised by competent barristers and adopted by men of business. The Patent Bureau has been interpreting the Trade Mark Law in the one and same way ever since February 1st, 1890, when it took effect. As to the manner of interpretation, no choice has been possible: the protection of foreign trade marks was not contemplated by the drafters of the Law, and could not be considered by the tribunal administering it. The conclusion of a new treaty with Germany could not affect the interpretation of the Law. An international arrangement does not alter a national law. Special steps must be taken to bring the latter into accord with the former. The Japanese Patent Law and the Japanese Law of Trade Marks must be recast so that they may afford to foreigners the protection promised by the German Revised Treaty, and until they are thus recast, it is fatuous to suppose that the definitions "already registered," or "already used by others" can be read to mean "already registered by foreigners in a foreign country," or "already used by foreigners on goods of foreign make."

The particular hardship of this case is not so much that it legalizes Mr. Nakamura's dishonest use of a foreign trade mark, as that it denies to the foreign firms the privilege of registration on the ground that they were fraudulently forestalled by Mr. Nakamura. It is as though the police should reject a man's application for the recovery of his stolen coat because the thief had already been openly wearing the garment. We have no right, perhaps, to use the words "dishonest," "fraudulent" and so forth with reference Mr. Nakamura's act. He did not violate any written law and may fairly object to be described as a criminal. Let us explain, therefore, that we speak merely from the point of view of the aggrieved foreigner. He tells himself that to be denied his rights because an unscrupulous rival has already violated them, is certainly immoral, whether it be legal or not. And that brings us to the pith of the matter. Why are not these laws altered at once? The German revised treaty promises protection. The laws, for want of amendment, render the promise illusory. The result is most injurious to Japan's reputation, to say nothing of the hardship to foreigners. We are aware that things can not be put upon a thoroughly satisfactory footing until the abolition of Consular Jurisdiction and until Japan joins the International Union. But a partial remedy at least is possible—a remedy which will save the foreigner from being unlawfully robbed of his property by any Japanese who has been smart enough to perpetrate the theft in good time. It is to be hoped that the Diet will be invited to take some legislative action next session.

THE CABINET'S DIFFICULTY.

As the days go by, the Cabinet's difficulty in connexion with the "spoils system" attracts more and more attention. The rank and file of the Constitutional party want to be rewarded after their long struggle; the leaders shrink from taking a step that will fix upon them the discredit of having fought for the sake of power, not of principle; the enemies of the Ministry cry, hold or be disgraced; its supporters say, go on or sacrifice the Party's cohesion. It is indeed a dilemma. If the Gordian method of the Nippon could be adopted, the strain of the situation would be at once relieved. "Clear out all the clan elements," says the Nippon, "and thereafter establish distinctions between administrative and political officials." In other words, find a pretext for putting your friends into office and then decide that your enemies shall avail themselves of the same pretext for the same purpose. That is fine, wholesale advice, but there is an aliquid amari in the margin. The Nippon doesn't regard the present Cabinet as a party cabinet at all. If doesn't even regard the Constitutionalists as a political party. They are merely a clan destroying club (hambatsu daha-dômei). A party has principles and a platform The Constitutionalists have neither the one nor the other: they have only the instinct of battle. The had better recognise their real character, and pursue their only logical purpose, destruction. There is a lot of débris to be removed before the new building can be erected. Let the Cabinet do the work of demolition.

That is not the kind of advice that the Party will care to adopt. We suspect that its views are more accurately mapped out by the Mainichi, which, being an organ of the old Progressists, ought to have some idea of their intentions. Its contention is that the category of political officials should include Ministers of State, Vice-Ministers, the chief of the Legislative Bureau, the Chief Secretary of the cabinet, and the principal Heads of Bureau. In other words, it would have all the present occupants of those posts removed, and replaced by members of the Party. Then with regard to the whole body of chokunin officials and local Governors, they may be either party men or non-party men, but they must not be members of the Diet. The Mainichi urges the immediate carrying out of these principles.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Mainichi's catalogue makes 86 political officials, certain, and includes the whole of the chokunin officials among the persons liable to change with every change of Cabinet. We do not know exactly how many chokunin officials there are, but their approximate number is 460, and their annual salaries total 1,384,922 yen. Even if only 86 officials—exclusive of the portfolio holders—were driven out of office at each change of cabinet, we should say that the administrative machine would be in a state of perpetual dislocation. It is to be sincerely hoped that the accession of the party politicians to power will not be the signal for introducing the "spoils system" in its worst form.

THE CABINET AND THE PEERS.

There has been much talk lately of the legislative impotence to which the new Cabinet is condemned owing to the estrangement of the House of Peers. The publicists chiefly concerned in discussing this phase of the situation have hitherto been those that desire the Cabinet to be impotent. By the organs of the Ministry silence has been preserved on the subject. But the Yomiuri has now broken the rule of reticence, and what it has to say does not tend to soften the situation. Its view is that the present Cabinet, being a party organization, should consist solely of party politicians. The House of Peers does not include any members answering to the latter description. To take one of its representatives into the Ministry would be merely to pursue the "smiling-all-round-policy" of former days. If the Peers choose to be offended, let them be offended. They are on the eve of being "reformed" into a better mood. The House of Representatives will amend the Law of Election next session, and the opportunity will be taken to extend the amendments to the Upper House: they can not be limited to one branch of the Legislature. The members now chosen by the various orders of peers as their representatives are all the neediest among the nobles. The Imperial nominees are old and effete. The representatives of the highest taxpayers are men without any talent. Such folks are not fit for the purposes of constitutional government. There must be a sweeping reform.

That is splendidly radical. It is, at the same time, more frothy than fierce. For unless the Yomiuri can give us some idea of the wholesale reforms held in terrorem over the House of Peers, the threat becomes empty rant. Aware of that fact, our contemporary endeavours to supply the required information, but immediately lapses into the vaguest of platitudes. How are the various Orders of Peers to be compelled by law to return wealthy representatives? How are the Emperor's nominees to the cured of their "effeteness?" How are the highest tax-payers to be induced to vote for men of talent only? The Yomiuri's talk seems to us wild and inconsequential. At all events it is not calculated to make narrower the breach between the Ministry and the Peers.

THE PLATFORM OF THE CONSTITUTIONALISTS.

The new Constitutional Party published it manifesto and a platform at the time of as organization. Both documents were epitomized in these columns. But people have naturally been very anxious to know know what line the new Party would take towards the problems of the day when its leaders had obtained the direction of state affairs. Curiosity has been partially satisfied. The standing committee of the Party met at the head office on the 9th instant, and formulated the following declaration:—

Our Party recognises the insufficiency of the state revenue. In order, therefore, to put the finances into order, the deficiency must be made good by means of the sake tax and other sources of taxation. As for the economical distress now prevailing, it should be relieved from the surplus in the Treasury. Commercial strength ought to be developed, the independence of Far Eastern countries preserved, and the balance of power maintained.

No one can quarrel with this document on the ground of over-explicitness. "Other sources of taxation" is vague enough for any fancy. Still, on the whole, we do not agree with our vernacular contemporaries, several of whom denounce the platform as scarcely intelligible. To us it reads tolerably distinctly:—No increase of the Land Tax, but a free hand to get additional revenue from other sources. The funds now in the possession of the Treasury and not immediately needed for State purposes, to be employed for relieving the tightness of the money market. Finally, Japan to interest herself on behalf of Chinese and Korean independence. As to the last provision, "the balance of power," it may mean a great deal and it may mean nothing at all. The "balance of power" was the outcry of the Progressists who wanted to have Germany driven out of Kiao-chou and Russia from Port Arthur. That wild scheme was long ago abandoned, we imagine, and the "balance of power" is probably now a mere platitude.

JAPANESE FISHING IN KOREAN WATERS.

The fishing operations carried on by Japanese in Korean waters must be of considerable importance. It is stated that there are 3,000 licensed boats engaged in the enterprise, and that from 2,000 to 3,000 take part secretly. The value of the annual catch by the licensed boats is put at three million yen, and the whole fleet probably captures five million yen worth every year. The Nichi Nichi, commenting on these figures, declares it to be of the utmost importance that a treaty should be concluded with Korea for the purpose of increasing the facilities enjoyed by fishermen. Japanese subjects should be allowed to reside along the coast, and make arrangements for landing fish when operations of curing or packing are required. At present the boats going to Korea are obliged to carry with them from Japan provisions and all other necessaries, which, of course, hampers them greatly. They are virtually prevented from fishing for whale, since, in the absence of any place to extract the oil and handle the remains, the only available part of the fish is the fins. Our contemporary thinks that the proposed treaty should be framed so as to throw open the whole coast of Korea to Japanese fishermen.

PRINCE CYRIL.

Tokyo's resources in the matter of police were strikingly illustrated in connexion with Prince Cyril's visit. Not merely the routes along which His Highness was to pass but also several alternative routes were lined with constables from end to end whenever any quarter of the city had to be visited. The idea of the police was to keep people in ignorance of the exact streets chosen for the Prince's goings and comings. A very suggestive precaution. Fanatics, however, are excrescences that society throws out with incalculable fitfulness. It is impossible to predict that a second Tsuda Sanzo will not make his murderous appearance at any moment. The citizens of Tokyo, as we have reason to know, did not feel at all easy about the Prince's visit. Among the lower orders a rumour circulated that the Japanese Government had pledged itself to cede to Russia twenty square miles of territory wherever the St. Petersburg authorities might indicate, should the Prince be attacked, and of course every one hearing the story added a mental rider that Tokyo itself would be the place selected. Did that notion emanate from the police, we wonder?

In answer to inquiries—very easily answered without reference to a newspaper—we may explain that Prince Cyril is the eldest son of the Grand Duke Vladimir, uncle of the reigning Emperor. The Prince is therefore first cousin of the Czar. He was born on October 12th, 1876.

On the 9th inst. at 10 a.m., His Majesty paid a visit to H.I.H. Prince Cyril at the Shibahama Detached Palace, and returned at 11.10. His Majesty presented the Prince with the decoration of the Grand Chrysanthemum.

On behalf of the Tokyo City Assembly the Governor of the City, on Saturday morning at the Shiba Detached Palace, presented Prince Cyril with a pair of cloisonné vases and a pair of silver eagles.

JUDGE TAKANO.

It is alleged, but we do not vouch for the truth of the rumour, that the Government has decided to re-instate in his post of chief judge in Formosa Mr. Takano, whose removal created so much commotion last year. Having had his honour vindicated by re-appointment, Mr. Takano will resign voluntarily, and be then nominated to some other judicial position. That is said to be the arrangement, and it is based on the hypothesis that Mr. Takano's removal was unconstitutional. We can only say that if Mr. Takano's removal was unconstitutional, then nearly all the Government's proceedings in Formosa are unconstitutional. Either the island falls within the operation of the Constitution, or it does not. If it does, then the judicial system ought to be organized on exactly the same lines as the judicial system in Japan proper: the Government can not have any constitutional right to arbitrarily apply a special judicial system in one part of the empire. But the Constitution is not operative in Formosa and the Governor-General has competence to deal with judicial officials just as he can deal with any other members of the civil service. Judge Takano's removal was not unconstitutional.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MARQUIS ITO.

Marquis Ito's action in handing over the administration to the party politicians has, of course, been roundly censured by some people. They say that he betrayed his Sovereign and his friends, and that if he had not struck his colours the evil day might have been long postponed. Concerning that view, the Jiji Shimpo has some pertinent remarks to make. Party cabinets, it says, are not a sudden development; they were inevitable from the day of the Constitution's promulgation. The Constitution provided a path, but men's feet were not yet able to follow it. There was no resource except that the older statesmen should remain in office. They did so but not without reluctance. One might compare the situation to the interval that separates summer heat from spring; the interval when people can not wholly discard thick clothes and are obliged still to wear a double garment. Marquis Ito, the framer of the Constitution, would have welcomed the nation's readiness to carry it into full effect. But he had to wait. The interests of the country left him no choice. The moment that a really strong party was formed, he saw that the time had come and he effaced himself without hesitation. It was the act of a true statesman. To have clung to office and dissolved Cabinet after Cabinet would have been virtually equivalent to suspending the Constitution.

MERCHANTS & MANUFACTURERS.

It seems to us impossible to deny the truth of the criticism that the mercantile and manufacturing classes are not sufficiently represented in the political arena in Japan. The first politicians—we refer to politicians outside the ranks of officialdom—in the Meiji era were discontented samurai, as the Kokumin Shimbun justly remarks. These malcontents carried on their crusade entirely in the provincial districts, and obtained a following of agriculturists only. It thus came about—the Law of Election being also largely responsible—that nearly all the members sent up to the Lower House were returned in the farming interest, only 17 out of the 300 members being merchants and manufacturers. The new Law of Election, submitted by the Government to the Lower House last session, extended the representation of the cities so that they should return 103 members. But the House, consisting, as it does, almost entirely of agriculturists, radically altered the scheme and cut down the 103 city members to 39. In fact, the House effectually destroyed the amendment which the Government proposed for the sake of the equitable representation of all classes of the people. There can not be much doubt, too, that the composition of the House greatly affected its attitude towards the question of increasing the Land Tax. Just as the first House that met in 1890 had only one great object, to cut down the Land Tax, so its successor, eight years afterwards, could not possibly persuade itself to agree to an increase of the Tax. Japan's future seems to lie in manufacturing enterprise. It is certainly contrary to the fitness of things that her Legislature should be controlled by the farming class alone.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF SHARES IN JAPANESE COMPANIES.

There has been a great deal of more or less learned discussion lately about the legality of foreigners' holding shares in Japanese companies. The arguments appear to have resolved themselves into this—that where the high contracting parties do not negotiate on a footing of equality, international agreements are constructively restrictive; and where the footing is one of equality, the agreement must be considered constructively permissive. To put the matter into plainer English, every privilege not explicity granted by the former kind of treaty is supposed to be withheld, and every privilege not explicitly interdicted by the latter clan of treaty is supposed to be conceded. Applying this rule to Japan's case, we arrive at the result that since foreign ownership of shares is not textually sanctioned by the present treaties, it must be held to be forbidden; whereas, since it is not mentioned in the Revised Treaties, it must be held to be sanctioned from the time of their operation.

That is interesting enough in its way, no doubt, but truly we fail to appreciate its utility. Is not the question effectually disposed of by the new Civil Code now promulgated, to go into effect from the 16th instant? The second article of the Code provides that "foreigners enjoy private rights except as forbidden by law, regulation or treaty." With that law on record, its seems superfluous to raise any discussion about treaties on an equal or an unequal footing.

The Taiyo alleges, as an indisputable fact, that the Osaka Marine Insurance Company has sold a number of its shares to foreigners, and that the transaction has been approved by the Authorities. Better a grain of fact than a bushel of theory. We agree with the Taiyo that the readiest exit from the foreign-capital difficulty is to be found in the efforts of individual Japanese. The promoters of the Formosa Railway have virtually arranged their loan of 15 million yen from Messrs. Peacock and Company. The Yasuda Bank, which undertook the responsibility of finding 15 million yen for the first part of the Osaka harbour works, is said to have opened very promising negotiations with Messrs. Samuel Samuel & Company. The Mitsubishi and Mitsui firms, which have combined to raise money abroad for extending the Kiushiu, Sanyo and Nippon Railways, are said to be within sight of success. There is only one serious obstacle, and that is the inability of foreigners to own land. The sooner the Japanese abolish that old-fashioned and irrational restriction, the more rapidly will they emerge from their present slough of impecuniosity.

PROFESSOR TOYAMA.

Professor Toyama, whose brief tenure of the portfolio of Education came to an end with the accession of the Okuma Cabinet, to the great grief of the friends of educational progress in Japan, is an emphatic admirer of the system of party government. In a speech recently delivered by him at a banquet given in his honour by the professors and teachers of the Imperial University, he declared that the 26th of June had been a great day for Japan, since it witnessed the consummation of parliamentary institutions. Free speech and public opinion would henceforth possess the full force that properly belonged to them. If, for example, the doings of the officials in the Department of Education were unsatisfactory, they could always be called effectually to account. "Give me the material for a crusade," said the Professor, "and I will undertake to use it to advantage."

Elsewhere there was a note of apparent sarcasm in Professor Toyama's speech. He said that Marquis Ito had contributed to bring about the introduction of party cabinets, but he said it in a way that suggested reference to blunders on the part of the Marquis rather than to liberal statesmanship. Count Okuma tells a different story about Marquis Ito's share in this great political change, and we are disposed to agree with the Count rather than with the Professor.

RAILWAYS.

According to the latest statistics, there are now 38 railways companies with lines open to traffic in Japan, the total mileage of such lines being 2,909 miles. In addition to these, charters have been granted for the construction of 59 lines, having a total length of 3,487 miles, and involving a capital of 220,850,020 miles; and provisional charters for 61 roads, with a length of 1,948 miles and a capital of 92,150,946 miles. Finally, the Railway Council last month decided to sanction the building of 36 lines with a mileage of 481 miles and a capital of 26,662,940 yen, and the Council has still under consideration applications to build 37 roads, with a length of 1,327 miles and a capital of 66,149,883 miles. These figures aggregate 10,152 miles of railway, and 405,813,769 yen of capital, exclusive of the capital already sunk upon the 2,909 miles of roads in operation.

The depressed condition of the money market is painfully reflected in the quotations of railway shares, and in the difficulty that companies experience when the time comes for paying calls. A striking example is furnished by the Kibe Railway which runs through the coal districts of Chikuzen and Buzen. One part of the road is finished, and the general prospects are said to be excellent. Recently the time came for paying up an installment on the shares, but the owners of 6,201 shares were unable to find money for the purpose, and their shares, according to regulation, had to be sold by public auction. The amount actually paid up on each share is 17½ yen, but purchasers could not be found at a higher figure than 4.75 yen, the loss to the unfortunate owners being thus nearly eighty thousand yen. The Iga line, in Ise, is also said to be in great straits. Seven miles of the road are completed; 460,000 yen has been paid up and 180,000 yen has been borrowed. A further sum of from 120,000 to 140,000 yen is now needed, but the shareholders can not pay it, and the market declines to furnish it, so that there is danger of the whole affair's passing into the possession of the creditors who have lent 180,000 yen.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

ANNEXATION OF HAWAII.

Telegrams received in Tokyo announce that the United States Senate and House of Representatives, by a joint resolution, have decided upon the annexation of Hawaii. That result was virtually certain from the moment when Admiral Dewey's Squadron steamed into Manila Bay. Evidently this war is destined to produce immense changes in America. A new Power of almost unlimited strength is about to step into the international arena and play the part of a second England. We shall see the United States with a big fleet, a strong army, a colonial office, a regular diplomatic service, and—suaver diplomatic methods. Every point of the metamorphosis is more than welcome to the subjects of the Queen. It is not that we look for anything like an offensive and defensive alliance between Great Britain and America—not just yet, at any rate. What recent events show, we think, is simply that neither Power will suffer the other to be perilously harrassed; or, as it has been well expressed, that if either Power has to put its back to the wall, a blast upon the magic horn will at once summon a powerful champion to its aid. Certainly to have obtained that assurance is an incalculable gain. But the real basis of Englishmen's satisfaction is nothing more definite than the consciousness that the other branch of the Anglo-Saxon race has emerged from its isolation, and joined the council of the nations, where its voice will assuredly be raised in unison with England's on behalf of every kind of freedom. It is the sort of feeling that a man would have who, after working alone for a great many years, suddenly sees his stalwart kinsmen stepping forward to put their shoulders to the same task. We are aware that there is a sentimental ring in such language, but for all his hard-headed practicality the Anglo-Saxon has a deep well of sentiment in his heart, and long may it remain there.

Now that the annexation of Hawaii has been decided upon by the United States, it becomes interesting to know the opinions entertained by the vernacular press on the subject. When annexation was on the tapis last year, the trouble with Hawaii about her refusal to permit the landing of Japanese immigrants was at an acute stage, and the views of the Tokyo Cabinet as well as of the people at large, were more or less affected by the dispute. But time has produced its usual softening effect, and all talk about the immigration grievance had ceased to be audible until the recent news about annexation arrived. As yet the intelligence has not evoked much comment. Only the Nippon and the Yomiuri allude to it. But the Nippon being the organ of the Chauvinists, and the Yomiuri one of the organs of the former Progressists, as well as a journal that made itself conspicuous by its stalwart attitude in the matter of the immigrants, their views should be worth reference. The Nippon, however, is remarkably perfunctory. It simply says that if America annexes the Hawaiian islands, she must also annex their responsibilities: in other words, she must hold herself accountable for the compensation that Japan is entitled to claim in connexion with the arbitrary rejection of the immigrants. That, the Nippon thinks, may be taken for granted. Otherwise the only point to which Japan need direct her attention is the status of Hawaii under the new régime. Is it to be regarded as an American colony, or will it be at once included in the Union? That decision will have an important bearing upon Japan's future relations with the islands. The Yomiuri is more explicit. It thinks that there is no occasion for Japan to assume a protesting attitude. Her previous remonstrances were intended to secure that her own interests and claims should not be overlooked in the event of annexation, and on the 14th of last August her Representative in Washington received an explicit assurance from the United States Government in the desired sense. Now, therefore, she need not concern herself about anything except the compensation due to her people on account of the immigration incident. That would be a very intelligible and moderate view if it stopped there. But the Yomiuri goes on to say, in effect, that if the United States show any intention of converting Hawaii into a naval basis, Japan ought to object. There can be little doubt that, after this war, America will develop into a great maritime Power, and if she is going to have coal depôts and naval ports in Hawaii, the tranquillity of the Pacific will be threatened. It is Japan's business to oppose anything of that kind.

The comment obviously invited by the above remarks of the Yomiuri is that the time has come for Japan to exercise discrimination. It is not enough for a country to distinguish her probable enemies: she must also recognise her possible friends. The Pacific has lain beyond the limits of the active stage for a long time, but the scene-shifters are now beginning to be busy there, and the old state of quiescence can not be maintained. With America's emergence from the limits of her own continent, another wave of Anglo-Saxon influence will begin to roll eastward. Is Japan to promote or to oppose its progress? The balance of power is a very fine phrase, but if it is to be preserved in the interest of probable enemies and at the expense of possible friends, it loses even its picturesqueness and becomes a mere banalité.

There has appeared in the columns of the vernacular press a certain amount of irresponsible talk about the annexation of Hawaii by the United States and the attitude that Japan ought to assume towards that problem. Want of space prevents us from epitomizing these views to-day, but we may say that, according to intelligence received by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, the United States Government has formally announced its resolve not to disturb any special privileges enjoyed by Japan in the island, and has further expressed its readiness to assume any responsibility devolving on Hawaii in connexion with question of the Japanese immigrants. Under these circumstances, our contemporary adds, Count Okuma has instructed the Japanese Representative in Washington to open negotiations with the United States Government.

THE FIGHT AT SANTIAGO.

It is difficult to form any clear conception of the extraordinary events just reported from Santiago. In the first place we have no exact knowledge of the force under Admiral Cervera's command. The sum of our knowledge is that the squadron comprised at least four belted cruisers, one unprotected cruiser, and some six torpedo boats and destroyers. The cruisers were these:—

	tons.	knots.	Built.
Viscaya	7,000	20	1891
Almirante Oquendo	7,000	20	1891
Infanta Maria Teresa	7,600	20	1890
Cristobal Colon	6,840	20	1896
Reina Mercedes	3,090	12	1887

The first three of these vessels had the same armour, namely, a 12″ belt, 10½″ at the gun position, and a 3″ deck. The Colon was not so heavily defended, her corresponding figures being 6," 6″ and 1½″ respectively. The Reina Mercedes was unprotected. The total armament of the first four vessels was six 11-inch, two 10-inch and twenty 5.5-inch slow-firers; and ten 6-inch, ten 5.5-inch, six 4.7-inch, two two 2.7-inch, thirty 2.2-inch and thirty 1.4-inch, quick-firers. It is possible that the Lepanto—a deck-protected cruiser of 5,000 tons—was also with the squadron.

The components of Admiral Sampson's squadron are even more uncertain. We know that the total force of the United States in the Atlantic is 4 battleships, 5 monitors, 3 armoured cruisers, 2 first-class cruisers, 4 second-class cruisers, and 6 third-class cruisers, besides gun-boats and torpedo craft. Now of this fleet, 3 ironclads and 4 cruisers—the latter doubtless the finest available (probably the Brooklyn, the Texas, the Columbia, and the Minneapolis)—were getting ready to proceed to Spain under the command of Commodore Watson. Hence 7 of the most powerful ships of the fleet have to be subtracted from Admiral Sampson's possible squadron. Then, again, we know that, at the end of June, the President ordered a blocade of the whole south coast of Cuba and of San Juan de Puertorico. A considerable force would be required for that purpose. Of course Admiral Sampson would naturally have made provision for concentrating as large a number of the blockading ships as possible at Santiago in case of necessity. But, however excellent a system of signals and communications may be, time is required to effect any concentration, and time was exactly what Sampson did not have at his disposal when the Spanish ships made their dash for liberty. It will be apparent, therefore, that the force he had under his command to fight Cervera's Squadron can not have been by any means overwhelming, and must have consisted, in great part, of ships very inferior to cruisers of the type of the Viscaya, Oquendo, Teresa, and Colon.

It was under these conditions, then, that the Spanish ships were totally destroyed, with a loss of 350 killed, 160 wounded and 1,600 captured, while the American casualties were only 3 men. What can have happened? If one 11-inch, 10-inch, or 5.5-inch shell had struck an American vessel fairly and squarely, not 3 men but 10 or 20 would probably have been put hors de combat. If one of the four powerful Spanish cruisers had headed boldly for the American squadron, she could not have failed to inflict terrible injury before receiving her death blow. Supposing Reuter's account to be approximately accurate, it is evident that the squadrons approached within quick-firers' range. Indeed we may fairly assume that such was the case, for, with the best possible gunnery, slow-firing guns could scarcely have accomplished what the Americans did. Now the Spaniards had twenty-six quick-firers, of calibres ranging from 6-inch to 4·7-inch, not to speak of their sixty-two smaller guns. Admiral Sampson's quick-firing armament can not have comprised more than seven 6-inch, twenty 5-inch, and twenty-four 4-inch guns, omitting smaller pieces. In number (fifty-one) he nearly doubled Cervera's force (twenty-six), but in calibre the advantage was with the Spaniards. At all events, the disparity was not so great as to place Cervera at Sampson's mercy. We can only ask again, what happened? Of course the Spaniards had to run a kind of gauntlet. They had to emerge from a narrow channel under the converging fire of a number of ships. Under such circumstances their wisest course, one would imagine, would have been to deploy as quickly as possible, and steer end on for the blockading squadron. Instead of doing so, they appear to have headed westward, and steamed directly across the line of fire. It is useless to conjecture about such an incident. Seen from this distance, it looks like the most extraordinary fiasco on record. We may conclude unhesitatingly, however, that the American gunnery was very fine. It is said to have been splendid at Manila, but the conditions there were exceptionally favourable: the Spanish ships offered a virtually fixed target, and the sea was absolutely calm. At Santiago the Spaniards were steaming at the highest pressure, and it is not likely that they chose a calm day, for everything that impeded straight shooting would have been to their advantage. Why Cervera waited to be trapped in Santiago is a mystery. But his method of attempting to escape is still more inscrutable.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE OSAKA SHOSEN KAISHA AND FOREIGN SHAREHOLDERS.

Telegraphic intelligence from Osaka, published by vernacular newspapers, says that the Osaka Merchant Shipping Company (Shosen Kaisha) will hold its annual meeting on the 15th instant, when a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum will be declared, and a sum of 300,000 yen will be placed to reserves. More interesting, however, is the news that the Directors have decided to propose two amendments of the rules: one to the effect that foreigners may not become shareholders; the other that all shares must be registered, even though their owners desire otherwise. Of course this second restriction is a necessary corollary of the first. Unless all shares are registered no supervision can be exercisedas to the nationality of their holders. Every body is supposed to know his own business, and we presume that the Directors of the Osaka Merchant Shipping Company know theirs. But we can not congratulate them on their mood, or upon the time they have chosen todisplay it.

COUNT ITAGAKI AND THE CONSTITUTIONALISTS.

Count Itagaki seems to be very tired. He is besieged by applicants for office. They will take no refusal, but simply sit down at his door, and decline to remove themselves unless they can carry away with them a promise of some kind. So the Count told a deputation of leading Constitutionalists who waited on him a couple of days ago. And if the worthless men were importunate, he added, the competent men were correspondingly self-effacing. For example, he had supposed that Mr. Ebara would be eminently suited to succeed Viscount Okabe as Governor of Tokyo; but Mr. Ebara, when approached on the subject, had resolutely declined to serve. If only all these place-hunting politicians could be induced to go back to the provinces and devote their energies to preparing for the coming elections! That was Count Itagaki's fervent wish.

It has to be recorded to the credit of the leading members of the Constitutional Party that they are stoutly opposing the office-seeking aspirations of the rank and file. Not only do they refuse, like Mr. Ebara, to seek posts on their own account, but they denounce the seekers and encourage the Cabinet Ministers not to yield to any importunity. All that is very praiseworthy.

We observe, too, that a new association—calling itself the Kwanto Doshi Club—has been organized by Dr. Hatoyama, Messrs. Nakajima, Shimada, Arai, and others. It includes forty ex-members of the House of Representatives, and its apparent purpose is to draw tighter the bonds of union between the two sections of the Constitutional Party and to oppose the epidemic of ryōkwan netsu—or place-hunting fever. There appears also to be a stalwart-foreign-policy plank in the club's platform, but that point is somewhat obscure. Some critics will doubtless draw from the formation of such a club inferences unfavourable to the state of the new Party, but we presume that Dr. Hatoyama and his colleagues regard themselves simply as a kind of caucus.

THE "UNKWA."

Last year, the young rice plants were attacked by an insect to which farmers gave the name of unkwa, and the injury done to the crops was officially estimated at six million koku, representing a money value of about 70 million yen. Anticipating a recurrence of the trouble, a notification was issued by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce on the 16th of last May, urging the people to adopt precautions, and explaining the steps to be taken. We read in the Official Gazette that reports have now been received from no fewer than 34 prefectures, indicating that symptoms of the trouble have made themselves apparent there. The great seriousness of the danger has induced the Department of Agriculture and Commerce to despatch a number of officials for the purpose of consulting with the farmers, and applying preventive measures. It will be a terrible misfortune if another bad rice crop is in store for Japan this season.

FURTHER TROUBLE IN CONNECTION WITH WAREHOUSING COMPANIES.

The Kyoto Warehousing Company is said to be in serious trouble. Last May, one of its warehouses was destroyed by fire. The contents had been insured for 150,000 yen by two companies, the Tokyo and the Imperial, but they declined to pay the loss, alleging that goods not permitted by the terms of the policy had been stored in the Warehouse. The owners of the goods that were destroyed are much perturbed about the affair, especially as the Warehousing Company not only pleads the action of the insurance firms as an excuse for not compensating the owners, but also calls upon the latter to pay interest on moneys advanced to them by the company on the security of the goods. It is said that the question will probably find its way into the law courts.

It is alleged by the Fiji Shimpo that three foreign firms have been hit by the Kobe warehouse swindle, Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company being the principal sufferers. Some Chinese merchants have also suffered losses. According to this account, a quantity of the rice in the warehouse had been imported by Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company to the order of Messrs. Yonezawa and Kusuri. The Japanese merchants, being unable, however, to take delivery, proposed that the rice should be stored with the Warehousing Company, the deposit receipts to be handed to Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company, who should hold them until Messrs. Yonezawa and Kusuri were in a position to implement their contract. But the Japanese merchants removed the rice surreptitiously, and it is stated that the loss to Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company is 400,000 yen; Messrs. Raspe & Co., losing 5,000 yen, and Messrs. Popp & Co. being also victimized to an amount not stated. If these figures be added to the previous figures, the total sum involved in the swindle becomes 1,100,000 yen. It is believed, however, that a great part of the money will be recovered.

Meanwhile the affairs of the Hyogo Warehousing Company seem to be going from bad to worse. It now appears that further fraudulent practices have been brought to light. The Company took out insurance policies on 185,600 bags of rice supposed to be stored in its warehouse No. 122. Three insurance companies were concerned, the Nippon, the Meiji, and the Tokyo. Some of the officers of these Companies were suddenly struck by the fact that, according to the dimensions of the warehouse, it could not possibly contain more than 126,300 bags. Steps were immediately taken to examine the storehouse, the result being that its contents turned out to be far below the declared amount. The investigation was then extended to other warehouses of the Company, and, similar discrepancies having been discovered in several cases, the insurance companies declared all their policies invalid, and conveyed a notice in that sense to the bank. We take these particulars from the Mainichi Shimbun.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SOCIAL AND INTERNATIONAL COURTESIES.

There is quite a breeze of sentimental courtesy blowing in Tokyo at present. A few days ago, long accounts were published by vernacular newspapers about an entertainment organized in honour of Mr. Harris. Several leading men took part in the affair—for example, Messrs. Kataoka, Shimada, Taguchi, Tsuda, and Ando Taro—and the Riukwa-yen, or willow-flower garden, of Tsukiji, where the affair took place, witnessed an assemblage of some seventy persons. Subsequently, the Government conferred a decoration on Mr. Harris. We are not in a position to speak accurately of this gentleman's career, but the broad facts appear to be that, many years ago, he served as a missionary in Hakodate and won great respect and affection. It is not on account of his success as a missionary, however, that his friends and admirers in Japan are now showing their enthusiasm; it is rather because of the great assistance he was subsequently able to render to Japanese students during his residence in the United States. We find his name classed with those of Commodore Perry and Dr. Hepburn as Japan's benefactors, and the seventy enthusiasts who assembled at the Riukwa-yen on the 3rd instant, not content with a feast of welcome and several warm speeches, formed themselves into a "Harris Society," and have since taken other opportunities of evincing their gratitude.

Another gentleman on whose account a kwanyei-kai (meeting of welcome) seems likely to be organized, is Mr. T. S. Perry. Some time ago, we briefly described a garden party given by Mr. Fukuzawa at his suburban residence in Tokyo for the purpose of introducing to a wide circle of friends, official and private, Mr. Perry and some other gentlemen who had just joined the staff of the Keiogijuku. Mr. Perry has doubtless many titles to consideration on his own account, but the attention he attracts in Japan is due entirely to the fact that he is the grandson of Commodore Perry's brother. If the spirit of the stout old Commodore could re-visit these earthly scenes, he would be edified and, perhaps, surprised at the halo of reverence and gratitude that has come to environ his name in Japan since the days when he penned despatches abusing England's selfish aggressiveness and recommending his country to follow her example. He is now a luminary of civilization and the reflection of the halo having fallen upon his grand-nephew, there is talk of a social gathering in the latter's honour. The Welcome Society are taking the lead in this case. They held a meeting on the 6th instant in the Imperial Hotel and appointed a committee to make arrangements. We find these demonstrations very pleasant and satisfactory. Some critics will probably call them romantic, but a little romance is an excellent leaven at times. The rapprochement between the foreign and Japanese Chambers of Commerce in Kobe and Yokohama; the interchange of hospitalities between residents of Yokohama and leading officials in Tokyo; the organization of an international committee in Yokohama to smooth the path to Treaty Revision; the formation of an international journalists' association; the friendly réunion of foreigners and Japanese in Sendai, and the welcome parties to Mr. Harris and Mr. Perry—all these things are signs of a wholesome time.

THE REBELLION IN CHINA.

We are unable to identify accurately the place-names given in the telegram which we publish this morning with reference to the rebellion in Kwangsi and Kwangtung. Neither "Moning" nor "Tienpak" appear on any map in our possession. Wu-chuen lies on the south-eastern sea-coast of Kwangtung and a little to the north of it, also on the coast, is Tienpeh, which, so far as similarity of orthography goes, might be the place mentioned in the telegram as "Tienpak." On the other hand, it is not easy to see why the citizens of Wuchow should consider themselves threatened by rebels so distant. Canton ought to feel more disquieted. There is also a town called Wusiuen on the River Yuh, a short distance above Wuchow. If that be the place which has assumed the guise of "Wuchuen" in transit along the wires, then "Moning" may be a mistake for Nanning, and we arrive at the conclusion that the Kwangsi rebels are moving down the Yuh towards Wuchow, possibly with Canton for an objective point. We incline to the latter hypothesis. As for the origin of the rebellion, it appears to be connected with the additional likin dues levied by order of the Peking Government on account of China's new indebtedness. But that is a conjecture. We have no accurate information.

THE TREASURY'S SILVER.

It is stated that the Treasury is getting rid of its stock of silver on terms more advantageous than those originally anticipated. Our readers may remember that Mr. Takahashi Korekiyo, of the Bank of Japan, was recently sent to London to make arrangements for selling the white metal. The stock lying in the Treasury's vaults amounts to some 50 million yen worth, and Mr. Takahashi has succeeded in selling 10 millions for use in Hongkong and Shanghai. There is an impression that very large quantities have been coined into 50-sen, 20-sen, and 10-sen pieces at the Osaka Mint, and certainly there is a considerable stock of these coins in the hands of the money-changers, the railway folk, and the post and telegraph offices. But we doubt whether the coinage has been so very extensive. During June, for example, the Mint returns show that the quantity of 50-sen pieces struck was only 225,000 yen worth, and the quantity of 10-sen pieces, 316,000 yen.

We observe that the total quantity of gold coins struck at the Osaka Mint from the adoption of gold monometallism up to the end of June was:—

20 yen gold coins	37 294,600 yen
10-yen gold coins	41,905,000 yen
5-yen gold coins	560,000 yen

This makes a total of 6,167,230 coins in number.

JAPANESE SILVER COINS & CONVERTIBLE NOTES IN KOREA.

The Yomiuri Shimbun publishes a telegram from Söul, dated 1.20 p.m. on the 12th instant, to the effect that the Korean Government has decided to declare Japanese silver yen coins—stamped or unstamped—as well as Japanese convertible notes, legal tender, receivable in payment of taxes; and that an official announcement in that sense was made to the Japanese Representative on the evening of the 11th instant. The Shogyo Shimpo, however, referring apparently to the same matter, says merely that the Korean Government has withdrawn its veto on the circulation of stamped silver yen. Whichever version be correct, it is evident that Japanese influence is growing in Korea. This question of the silver yen is probably of no great importance to Japan so far as disposing of her silver is concerned, for the stock taken by Korea can not be large, but the convenience of commercial transactions will certainly be promoted by the action now attributed to the Korean Government.

KOREA.

The Korean capital has been the scene of renewed political disturbances. Several arrests of prominent men are reported by telegram, in connexion with a plot which had for its avowed purpose the exclusion of the Emperor from any share in administrative business, and the delegation of his powers to the Prince Imperial. There is no indication that the latter was a party to the conspiracy, but of course that point is not clearly ascertained as yet. The intelligence is meagre. We gather that the plotters were not instigated by disloyalty to the Throne. Their motive was simply to introduce a wholesomer and more vigorous form of government. It is not difficult to sympathise with such a purpose. Nothing seems so supremely ridiculous as that a palpably incompetent person should be entitled, by the mere accident of birth, to play fast and loose with the fortunes and happiness of a whole nation.

It is stated that permission has at length been given by the Korean Government for the return of Mr. Boku Yeiko and his fellow-exiles to their native country. These men shared the disgrace into which the unfortunate Kim Ok-kyun fell many years ago (1884), and have ever since that time been residing as refugees in Japan. Sundry efforts have been made by Korea to get them into her clutches. When, in the sequel of the Tientsin Convention—the Li-Ito Convention—Mr. Mollendorff was appointed foreign adviser to the Korean Government, he took up the question of the extradition of Kim, Boku, and the rest, and urged it upon Japan with quite remarkable vehemence and every appearance of conviction. But, to the credit of the Japanese Government, it declined to depart from the principle of international law which excludes political intrigues from the list of extraditable offences. Then followed rumours of Korean executioners prowling about Japan to compass the deaths of the exiles, and finally Kim was inveigled to Shanghai and foully assassinated, his murderer being subsequently honoured and rewarded by the Söul Government, while Kim's corpse was subjected to the barbarities perpetrated under the Korean laws in the case of public malefactors. A simultaneous attempt to assassinate Boku Eiko ended happily in failure, and the Tonghak troubles in Korea, with their sequel, the Chinese war, effectually put a stop to any further attempts against Boku. After the war, efforts were made to induce the

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Korean Government to pardon the exiles and sanction their return to Korea, but it is alleged—with how much truth we can not tell—that Russian influence was thrown into the opposite scale. At all events, the desired leniency has now been exercised, and Boku, together with some twenty fellow-exiles, will start for their native country in a few days, if the statements contained in vernacular journals be correct. Whether they are wise in placing reliance upon the promises of their Government, we can not undertake to say. Pardon is still withheld from eight of the exiles; the eight men supposed to have been directly engaged in the assaulting and wounding of Bin on the memorable occasion of the post-office banquet. It is pitiable that Kim Ok-kyun is not alive to share this amnesty. None of us could sympathise with his methods, but he was certainly a man of most exceptional gifts. We have heard it said by an Englishman who had the best possible opportunities of judging, and whose opinion, were we at liberty to mention his name, would carry the greatest weight, that Kim was not merely the cleverest Korean, but one of the ablest men, of whatsoever nationality, he had ever met in the course of a long and varied experience.

It is very difficult to form any clear conception as to the real state of affairs in the Korean capital. A telegram received in Tokyo on the 13th instant says that the Emperor of Korea sent an official to offer the Imperial condolences to Bin Yeisho and Boku Teiyo. These men are under arrest on a charge, as the intelligence hitherto to hand indicates, of having formed a plot to dethrone the Emperor and place the sceptre in the hands of the Prince Imperial. Yet the Emperor is now reported to be offering them his condolences!

Another telegram says that, on the 12th instant, the Independence Club memorialized the Emperor, advising him to abdicate. We have no doubt that it would be a very good thing for Korea to be blessed with an able and progressive ruler instead of the gentle and somewhat ill-endowed personage now occupying the Throne. But who can guarantee that from the Emperor to the Prince Imperial would not be a leap from the frying pan into the fire?

OUTRAGE AT A CHURCH IN SHIBA.

Brief allusion has already been made in these columns to an apparently anti-Christian demonstration which took place on the evening of the 3rd instant at a church in the Shiba district of Tokyo. The details are now published. It appears that the demonstration took the form of breaking the church windows with stones while a missionary was in the act of preaching. Rumour said that the preacher had been wounded, but it turns out that he suffered no injury whatever. The police arrested some twenty persons who had engaged in the stone-throwing. They were mere lads, and had been instigated, as the investigation showed, by some grown people who resented certain strong expressions used by the preacher with regard to the religions of Japan. The instigators were fined 1 yen each, and their dupes escaped with a fine of 50 sen.

THE LATE MARQUIS TOKUGAWA.

The sudden death of Marquis Tokugawa has produced a most painful impression in Tokyo. The public had no suspicion whatever that his condition was precarious, and indeed his physicians seem to have been equally unsuspecting. Early in June, or, perhaps, at the end of May, he was attacked by influenza, but recovered without much suffering and appeared to be enjoying normal health. By and by, however, symptoms intervened which showed that he was making fat with unwholesome rapidity, and Dr. Hashimoto, diagnosing weakness of the nerves of the heart, prescribed change of air. The Marquis accordingly repaired to his villa in Nikko on the 9th instant. The following day, he took an unusual amount of exercise, and, on the 11th, experienced a feeling of lassitude with a slight sense of oppression on the chest. He remained in the house all day, but did not imagine that there was any danger, and amused himself playing go. During the forenoon of the 12th, however, he was suddenly seized with acute pain over the heart, and soon fell into a comatose condition from which he never rallied. According to the published accounts, he returned to Tokyo and died there at midnight on the 12th instant, but we have very little doubt that his decease took place at Nikko, and that the statement about Tokyo is merely pro formâ. The Marquis was immensely popular among foreigners and Japanese. A man of wide culture, most winning manners, and ample means, he loved to dispense hospitality worthy of the great family he represented, and his residence at Mukojima, finely designed and handsomely furnished in foreign style, was the scene of numerous banquets and réunions where guests of all nationalities found a charming host and hostess, and enjoyed the privilege of seeing some of the rarest and most beautiful works of Japanese art, which had been handed down from generation to generation of the Mito nobles. The Marquis spoke French fluently, having studied it in Japan and completed his knowledge during the five years of his residence in Rome as Japanese Representative. He was only in his forty-fourth year at the time of his decease, and his two sons are still in their boyhood. The Marquis was born at the celebrated Mito Yashiki, in the Koishikawa district of Tokyo, in the year 1855. He was the eldest son of Yoshiatsu, feudal chief of Mito, brother of Keiki, the last of the Tokugawa Shoguns. While still a lad he lost his father, and consequently did not immediately succeed to the headship of the Mito family, that important position being assigned to his uncle, Akitake, who held the official rank of Mimbu Tayu. In 1867, however, he was formally adopted by Akitake, and ultimately succeeded to the Mito title and estates. He graduated from the Military College in 1878, and proceeded to France in the following year to complete his studies, returning to Japan in November, 1882. He married, in 1880, Lady Fusa, daughter of Matsudaira, former feudal chief of Takamatsu (in Sanuki), and had by her two sons. In 1884, he received the title of Marquis, and in 1887 he proceeded to Italy as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, which office he held until December, 1892. In June, 1895, he was appointed Vice-Grand Master of Ceremonies in the Imperial Court, and was raised to the First Rank of the Third Official Grade. In 1896, he went to St. Petersburg with H.I.H. Prince Fushimi, to attend the Coronation of the Czar, and after his return in 1897 the Third Class Order of the Sacred Treasure was bestowed on him, in consideration of the fact that he and his family had contributed a sum of fifty thousand yen to the war chest during the struggle with China. On receiving news of his dangerous condition, the Emperor raised him to the Second Rank of the Second Official Grade, and bestowed on him the Second Class Order of the Sacred Mirror. It will be seen from the above account that the Marquis was a nephew of the last Tokugawa Shogun, Keiki, who is now residing in Tokyo. The Mito family was a branch of the Tokugawa, and stood first among the Go-san-ke, or Three Houses from which a successor to the Shogunate was appointed in the event of the failure of an heir in the direct line.

THE PHILIPPINES.

The telegraphic news which we publish this morning from the Philippines is somewhat ominous. The presence of the whole German Squadron at Manila has been viewed by Americans with a great deal of suspicion, as is not unnatural, considering the comparative insignificance of German interests in the Philippines. However unwilling we may be to attribute any sinister designs to Germany, there is no denying that she must be perfectly well aware of the impression produced on the public mind by the proceedings of her squadron. Hence, by deliberately ignoring that impression, she justifies many of the harsh things said about her, and if it be true, as our telegram alleges, that the Irene interfered to defend Fort Grande against the rebels, there will be much difficulty in reconciling Germany's conduct with the strict duties of a neutral. We are disposed to think, however, that the news should be received with great reserve. Nothing is easier than to mistake the intentions of a war-ship in repairing to a certain place. Unless the Irene made an emphatic demonstration against the rebels, it will not be safe to assume that she did no more than visit the bay to observe the course of events, and, if necessary, help to save life.

Manila Bay is enclosed by two promontories—Cavite on the east and Batan on the west. Steaming out of the Bay round Corregidor island, and turning northward along the coast of Batan, the entrance to Subig port is reached after a transit of five miles. It is a narrow inlet, running three miles into the shore, and Grande Island lies near the upper end. The possession of Batan promontory could not be of any special service to the rebels for the purposes of their attack upon Manila, but the fact that Admiral Dewey, having captured the little island, handed it over to Aguinaldo's men, seems to effectually dispose of the statement emanating from a Chinese source, that Aguinaldo has proclaimed a republic. The latter intelligence is dated, our readers will observe, "Hongkong, July 8th," whereas our special telegram, despatched from Shanghai on the evening of the 13th, must have been sent from Manila on the 12th, at latest. If Aguinaldo had taken the action attributed to him on the 8th instant, Admiral Dewey would not have lent him armed assistance four days later.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The news of an epidemic of dysentery among the American troops is most serious. A hundred and fifty patients at this early stage is a great number. The transports reached Cavite on June 30th, and the men were then reported to be in good health. Strenuous exertions had been made by Admiral Dewey to prepare for their reception, and it may be assumed that this outbreak of disease is not due to manifestly defective sanitary arrangements. We have had no intelligence of the landing of the troops at Cavite, but it is improbable that they would have been kept on the transports longer than necessary. At any rate, if a hundred and fifty men were attacked by dysentery within less than a fortnight from their arrival at the Philippines, the record must be called ominous. We venture to suggest that there is a splendid field here for the operations of the Japanese Red Cross Association. The physicians of this country have had exceptional experience in the treatment of dysentery as it occurs in the Far East, and five or six medical experts aided by a corps of trained nurses such as the Red Cross Hospital could supply, might do splendid service at Cavite, and would certainly win for Japan a place in the hearts of America and England.

AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN REVISED TREATY.

Sundry statements, more or less conjectural, are published with regard to the Austro-Hungarian Revised Treaty. Among other things it is alleged that the Government in Vienna has expressed its great unwillingness to block the path to the consummation of Treaty Revision not for the sake of any principle but merely because of a temporary dislocation of the Austro-Hungarian legislative machine. Under the circumstances it is proposed—we still quote from rumours published in vernacular newspapers—that the Revised Treaties shall go into operation, independently of Austria-Hungary's ratification, the Governments of Vienna and Buda-Pest agreeing to waive all extra-territorial privileges which would interfere with their subjects' inclusion in the system of the Revised Treaties. That arrangement would not extend to the Tariff, however, since in the matter of customs dues no alteration could be sanctioned without Parliamentary consent.

It is plain that one or other of the high contracting parties—Austria-Hungary, we suspect—desires to avoid publicity in this matter as long as possible. But we have no hesitation in saying that the arrangement mapped out above must be regarded as apocryphal. The only practical course appears be a stipulation on the part of Austria-Hungary that a certain time—say six months—shall be allowed after the issue of the year's notice by Japan; and that if, within that time, the ratifications of the Revised Treaty are not exchanged, the new Tariff, as negotiated by the other Powers, shall nevertheless go into force, its provisions becoming applicable to Austro-Hungarian subjects pending the completion of their own Tariff negotiations. What is certain is that Austria-Hungary's delay is not due to any want of good-will in the matter, but is solely the outcome of a train of accidental circumstances. There can be no doubt that any reasonable exit from the dilemma would be welcomed by her.

THE FRENCH NATIONAL FÊTE.

The 14th of July passed off at Yokohama with considerable éclat. Favoured with splendid weather, the promoters had the satisfaction of seeing both the day and the evening programmes carried out most successfully. The great majority of the business firms in the Settlement displayed flags, and everywhere the Tricolor was to be seen in company with the Union Jack, the Japanese and Russian flags, the Stars and Stripes, and the symbols of the other principal nationalities. During the forenoon M. Ratard, the French Consul-General and his charming wife were "at home" at the Consulate. In the evening the chief hotels on the Bund were illuminated, and the French Consulate was a perfect picture, the façade of the handsome building being hung with fairy lamps, which had a charming effect. The Oriental Hotel was very prettily illuminated with Japanese lanterns of bizarre shape and vivid colouring, this work being tastefully done by Messrs. Colomb and Company. A display of fireworks was watched by large crowds from the terraces of the different hotels. The designs used on the 4th July were largely followed, that of a battleship being almost exactly similar to the one on the American holiday, except that the Tricolour instead of the Stars and Stripes "floated" from the stern of the mimic vessel.

THE BALL.

The ball at the Imperial Hotel was a pleasant function, and was very largely attended, several hundreds accepting the Committee's invitation. It was, of course, a quite cosmopolitan gathering, and probably every nationality in Tokyo and Yokohama had its representative. Among the official and diplomatic circle were M. Harmand, the French Minister; the Viscount de La Boy, military attaché to the French Legation; M. Ratard, French Consul-General, Yokohama; Baron Rosen, Russian Minister; General Yanjoull, Russian military agent; Mr. Puklowski, First Secretary, and Mr. Andrew, Second Secretary of the Russian Legation; Lieut. Chaghin, Russian naval attaché; Prince Lobanoff, Russian Consul at Yokohama; Count Orfini, Italian Minister; Mr. Chalmers (British Consulate), His Honour Judge Wilkinson; Messrs. McLean and Miura, U.S. Consulate; Mr. Da Freitas, Portuguese Chargé d'Affaires; Mr. Bovilla, Spanish Consul; Mr. Plaza, Mexican Consul; Mr. Asada, Governor of Kanagawa Kencho; Mr. Inouye, Secretary of the Kencho; Councillor Sugiyama; Mr. Takehisa, Chief Superintendent of Police for Kanagawa Kencho; Mr. Ameda, Mayor of Yokohama; Mr. Watanabe, Chief Justice of the Yokohama Courts, Marquis Nembrini de Gonzaga, &c.

About ten o'clock considerable interest was lent to the proceedings by the appearance of Prince Cyril, who was attended by the Captain and officers of the Rossia. His Highness, whose advent was greeted with the playing of the Russian National Anthem, stayed for about an hour, passing most of the time in the ball room. After his departure dancing was renewed with vigour, and was continued until the early hours of the morning. The whole of the arrangements were excellent, and every one appeared delighted with the handsome rooms and many conveniences of the Hotel. Following was the dance programme:—

1.—Quadrille..... 2.—Valse.
3.—Polka..... 4.—Scottish.
5.—Mazurka..... 6.—Valse.
7.—Quadrille..... 8.—Pas de quatre.
9.—Valse.....10.—Pas de deux.
11.—Quadrille.....12.—Valse.
13.—Scottish.....14.—Valse.
15.—Quadrille.....16.—Pas de quatre.
17.—Valse.....18.—Polka.
19.—Valse.....20.—Quadrille.

It should be added that before dancing commenced Mdme. Ratard presented the prizes won in the races contested during the afternoon by members of the Yacht Club.

MURDER OF A GERMAN SEAMAN.

A German stoker named Rischke, belonging to the steamer Asturia, met with his death under shocking circumstances at Yokohama on Thursday evening. Rischke, with a companion, had been taking an evening's pleasure in Ishikawa, and about 10 30 a dispute arose between them and some Japanese coolies. It ended in Rischke being struck a heavy blow on the back of the head, the instrument used, a heavy piece of wood, fracturing the skull and causing almost immediate death. Some arrests were made by the police, and a preliminary inquiry by German and Japanese officials was opened the same night at Kotobuki-cho Police Station.

A Japanese account of the matter is that the two Germans took too much drink at the saloons in the Settlement, and in the evening wandered aimlessly into Japanese town. Near the bridge at Yoshiha-cho, Rischke commenced a dispute with a jinrikisha coolie, who cried loudly for assistance. A crowd of Japanese at once rushed up, and attacked Rischke, while the other German ran away. When he returned he found the dead body of his friend with the back of the head quite smashed in and the neck vertebræ dislocated. The police were then called and proceeded to investigate.

On Friday morning Mr. R. Kallen, the German Vice Consul, and a doctor from the Naval Hospital went to the Kotobuki-cho Police Station to hold a formal inquiry, and the body was afterwards sent to the Naval Hospital. About 20 Japanese have been arrested, among them two named Yokomizo Motojiro (45 years) a painter, and his apprentice named Kateumata Yeisaku (20 years), who are supposed to be the ringleaders.

EXTENSION OF HONGKONG.

It would seem, says the China Mail, that the formal annexation of the new Kowloon territory is not yet. The impression had got abroad that the acquisition was to take place as from the 1st of July, and that there would be some form of public demonstration on such an important occasion. From what we hear it is evident that the negotiations are not quite completed, however, or that, some dubiety existing as to the exact boundary line and the control of the adjacent waters, further reflection may be demanded by the British authorities. Whatever the true position of affairs, it is at least certain that the Hon. J. H. Stewart Lockhart, C.M.G., who is expected to arrive in the Colony by the C. P. R. steamer Empress of China about 2nd of August, has been delegated to carry out some investigations and report upon the new territory about to be acquired. In the recommendations of that gentleman, we hope he will stipulate for the complete control of the whole of Mirs Bay, and the inclusion of Sham Chun, the great central market town, between Deep Bay and Starling Inlet.

YOKOHAMA MERCHANTS AND JAPANESE BUYERS.

The Japan Times learns with reference to the action taken by foreign merchants in Yokohama against Japanese buyers in the matter of the failure by the latter to take delivery of goods which have arrived to their order, that mutual negotiations have finally effected the following result:—

1. That delivery of contract goods imported prior to the 20th of April last shall be carried out by the 15th of this month, and that in consideration of further postponement daily interest of 2 sen 5 rin per 100 yen shall be payable after the 15th inst.

2. That delivery of contract goods imported after the 15th of July shall be carried out within 100 days from the date of payment of Customs dues, and in the event of failure to do so daily interest of 2 sen 5 rin per 100 yen shall be chargeable.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SENDAI NEWS.

Graduation ceremonies are the order of the day in Sendai as elsewhere. On the 28th ult. the Ella O. Patrick Home, connected with the Baptist Mission, held its Third Annual Commencement. The school is now under the sole charge of Miss Buzzell, Miss Mead, the former superintendent, having gone home on furlough. The proceedings were somewhat lengthy, occupying about two hours and including no fewer than 19 items. There were 5 graduates, each of whom read an essay in English or Japanese. The subjects treated were:—"The Christian Home," "The Duty of Christian Women;" "Women in the State;" "The Supreme Motive in Life," and "The Life of Faith." The essays were all characterised by earnestness of tone, the ideas expressed evidently representing the convictions of the writers. Though the whole proceedings reflected great credit on the hard-working lady in charge of the school, one performance is worthy of special mention, and that was the singing of an English song by a number of girls, each of whom took her part with excellent effect. It is very seldom that Japanese girls can be got to sing together in such a manner. Several of the voices were very sweet. The time kept and the expression given to the rendering of the parts left nothing to be desired. One reads a great deal in the newspapers about the denationalising tendency of Christian Female Schools. We must confess that we have never been able to discover this tendency in the schools we have inspected. Nothing could have been more pronouncedly Japanese that the proceedings at the Ella O Patrick Home, or the Shohei Gakko, as it is called in Japanese, and the Miyagi Jogakko ceremony which took place the next day. In each case the Imperial Rescript on Education was reverently read. In each case the sentiments expressed in the essays were characterised by unmistakable patriotism. The proceedings were nearly all in the hands of Japanese, and foreigners played a very insignificant part. The girls dress in Japanese fashion and their manners differ in no respect from those of other well-trained Japanese girls. It is easy to work up a hue and cry against the Missionary ladies in charge of Christian Schools, but in our opinion it would be very difficult to find many Japanese ladies fully qualified to take their places, were they removed. The discipline, cleanliness, and general management of these Schools seem to us to be only capable of being enforced by women of energy and will. The yielding nature of most Japanese ladies would render them unfit for the task. The decorations at the ceremony we are describing were in excellent taste; the crowning achievement among them being the use made of an ordinary Japanese todana situated at the back of the platform. The doors of this cupboard were removed and the recess was filled with wistaria and other creepers, so arranged as to give the alcove an appearance of endless depth and make it look like a romantic lovers' retreat of the type that novelists are so fond of describing.

On the 29th, the Miyazaki Jo-Gakko held its Sixth Annual Commencement. There are three ladies in charge of this establishment: Miss Zurfluh (Superintendent), Miss Hollowell, and Miss Rohrbaugh. There was only one graduate connected with this school, but she was evidently a girl of exceptional ability, as evinced by the two essays that she read, one in English and the other in Japanese. Her pronunciation of English was excellent, and her English Essay on "Meekness in Women", contained remarks that one does not often hear from the lips of a school graduate. Miss Hasegawa, for this was the lady's name, maintained that modern Japanese women were in no way inferior in feminine qualities to the women of former times, and added that in point of knowledge they were in a different world from the women of the Tokugawa era. Congratulatory addresses were read by a prefectural Counsellor (Sanji-kan), representing the Governor and by the new mayor of Sendai, Mr. Satomi. Various musical performances were given on the fine-toned piano belonging to the school, and Miss Zurfluh delivered an address in English. The attendance was large, every available seat being occupied.

More than a year ago a desire was expressed by certain Sendai citizens to take some steps towards preparing the way for mixed residence by periodically meeting with foreigners in a social manner. A few weeks ago this movement took definite shape. Dr. de Forest, as one of the oldest residents, was asked to form a foreign Committee. Messrs. Schneder and Dening were requested to act as members in conjunction with Dr. de Forest. Here it may be well to mention that the whole of the foreign Community of Sendai, with two exceptions, consists of missionaries or persons connected with missions. It seems that the Japanese originators of the movement, knowing that most of the Sendai foreigners were missionaries, asked a prominent Christian residing in the town what would be the conditions on which foreigners could be induced to join. This man being an ardent teetotaller and an anti-tobacco zealot, without waiting for any formal expression of opinion on the part of the foreign community as a body, laid down the law after his own fashion. The conditions are these, said this all-wise, self-constituted spokesman of the foreign residents: At your meetings there must be (1) no geisha, (2) no saké drunk, (3) no smoking, and (4) no conversation on politics or religion. This gentleman's action, however, was not endorsed by the missionary members of the Committee. On the contrary, Dr. de Forest said he was prepared to give the Japanese members of the Committee full liberty to make what arrangements they pleased as long as geisha were not employed. The Japanese were informed at one of the Committee meetings that ministers of religion were by no means invariably teetotallers, and that, as regards the missionary residents of Sendai, some of them took alcoholic drinks, and others, though teetotallers themselves, did not object to sit at the tables of residents who habitually drink wine or beer. But nevertheless the Japanese went away with the impression that nothing but a teetotal repast would be largely attended by missionaries, and in that generous fashion which is so familiar to those who have had dealings with the Japanese for any length of time, they gave up their saké, and even beer and wine and arranged for a foreign dinner minus the liquor. The dinner came off on the evening of the 29th ult. at the Matsu-no-Yen, and was attended by all the foreign gentlemen of Sendai and by some 40 invited leading citizens. The city band was in attendance and various speeches were made. Mr. Satomi, the Mayor of Sendai, said that he was highly gratified at the ready response given to the appeal that had been made. With few exceptions those who had been invited were present. This showed that there was a general feeling in favour of establishing a closer relationship between Japanese and foreigners. This being a first attempt, imperfections in the arrangements were unavoidable. Sendai at present was without a suitable building and the necessary requisites for such a purpose as had brought them together, but he hoped that in time this would be remedied. Dr. de Forest said that the whole credit of organising the new movement belonged to the Japanese and that the part that foreigners had played in it was quite insignificant. There were those who affirmed that the union of alien races was impossible, that England would make no alliance with Japan on account of differences of sentiment, customs, and religion, but he was not of that opinion. It had been predicted many years ago that Treaties granting equal rights to Japanese and foreigners could never be made. But those treaties actually existed and were soon to go into operation. The greatest of all difficulties connected with attempts of this kind was difference of language. Not a few of the Konshin-Kai that he had attended had proved to be Konnan-kai. But in the present instance not a few of the foreigners in attendance spoke Japanese and there were some Japanese who spoke English, and he therefore hoped that there would be no barrier to free intercourse. Mr. W. Dening said that the principles of the union they had met to cement must be perfect equality and mutual concession. In reference to the latter it would never do to have all the concessions on one side. If asked which was the happier, the person who conceded something or the person who accepted the concession, he would say, as far as the intercourse of gentlemen went, the person who conceded. In reference to the present movement, opinions differed as to how it should be conducted, and there were some who wished to utilise it as an opportunity for enforcing conformity to their special rules of life. Any one who thought it possible to hamper the action of an assembly like this by the imposition of restrictions such as the abolition of saké and tobacco was very ignorant of the first elements of social intercourse. The fact of there being no alcoholic drinks on the table had already called forth comments. He, Mr. Dening, was in favour of supplying these on future occasions for those who wished to partake of them. There must be no mutual recrimination among the members of the Association. Mutual concession must be the order of the day. There were, no doubt, difficulties ahead, but they had made a good start. The surest way to learn how best to conduct the movement was by putting their ideas into practice. In such matters there was nothing like practical experience, after all, as was well said in a verse with which they were no doubt familiar:—Ai-mite no nochi no kokoro ni kuraburéba, mukashi wa mono wo omowazaru keri.

Congratulatory speeches were made by several leading Japanese citizens, followed by a short speech by the Rev. E. H. Jones, in which he said that he objected to attend assemblies where saké was drunk, and that he was of opinion that there were other missionaries in Sendai who would absent themselves from such meetings as were contemplated were saké introduced. His own personal reason for assuming this attitude was that many years ago, when he and his wife were present at an entertainment given by Mr. Matsudaira, the Governor of Miyagi at the time, his wife was insulted by one of the guests who was the worse for liquor.

It was subsequently suggested that as there seemed to be a very wide difference of opinion on the saké question, it might be better to confine the meetings to what are known as chawa kwai, and have no more dinners of the kind held on the 29th.

On the occasion which we have described it is plain that all the concession was made by the Japanese and that the foreign community conceded nothing. The Japanese do not take kindly to water meals, but one of their leading characteristics as a nation is the power to conceal their feelings when occasion calls for it. This they did to perfection. We cannot say that the rôle played by the foreign community of Sendai on this occasion commends itself to us. Notwithstanding all that the Japanese had conceded to the teetotal party which indirectly seems to have brought influence to bear on them, not one of the leaders of that party publicly acknowledged the obligation they were under to the saké drinkers who had given up their liquor in order to please a large section of the foreign community. It was the case of some 40 Japanese giving in to a dozen foreigners, for the ardent teetotallers do not exceed, even if they reach, that number. How the gentlemen that object to take a friendly meal with Japanese who drink saké at their meals can reconcile this with the fact that they have been known to sit at foreign tables where alcohol is used without protest, is best known to themselves. Notwithstanding the cold water thrown on the movement by teetotal partisans, we think it has sufficient fire in it to make extinction impossible. One of the pleasing features of the meeting was the presence of the two Roman Catholic priests residing in Sendai, one of whom, M. Jacques, speak Japanese with remarkable fluency and correctness. Altogether the meeting was one of considerable interest when we bear in mind that it took place in a hitherto ultra-conservative provincial town. The proceedings throughout were conducted in Japanese with the exception of a short English speech made by a Japanese and the translation of an amusing Japanese story given by Dr. Yamamoto. The chief promoters, who also formed a committee of management, consisted of eight Japanese and three foreigners, and the invitations were issued by these gentlemen.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

NEW FINE ARTS ASSOCIATION.

The ceremony of the inauguration of the new Fine Arts Association, recently organised under the auspices of Mr. Okakura, ex-President of the Fine Arts School in Uyeno, and many eminent artists in the capital, took place on the 7th instant at the Shiba Maple Club, Tokyo. Over one hundred guests, including three foreigners, were present. Messrs. Okakura, Tauzuki and Takada gave brief addresses. Mr. Tauzuki, in the course of his speech, remarked that the fine arts of Japan were considerably influenced in olden times by religion, in the middle ages by aristocracy, and at present by a majority of the people who could hardly claim to have any knowledge of art. In Japan, as in all other countries, genuine critics were few. The Japanese artists ought always to bear this fact in mind, and direct their energies to the attainment of artistic ends, disregarding their personal interests. The guests afterwards dined, and were entertained with music and dances. As for the regulations of the Association, the most prominent may be given as follows:—The Association is to be designated the Bijutsu-In (Fine Arts Institute), the object being to maintain and develop the characteristics of Japanese fine arts. The members are classified as ordinary, temporary, special, and honorary, the first of these classes consisting chiefly of experts in art, and the second of students. The affairs of the Association are conducted by seventeen officials:—A President, 11 Councillors, and 5 Managers—to be elected from among the ordinary members, the period of their service being fixed at six years. The duties to be undertaken by the Association are as follow:—(1) The study of fine arts and the production of objects of art. (2) The holding of a special exhibition at least once every year for the works of members of the Association, and also the organisation of a permanent gallery. (3) The execution of works of art at any time on demand. (4) Holding meetings for the discussion of questions bearing on fine arts. (5) Sending the Association's productions for exhibition in Japan and abroad. (6) Acting as agents for the production of artistic designs. The Head Office of the Association has been established in Yushima, Hongo, Tokyo, with four branches in different parts of the capital. The eminent artists connected with the Association number 75 in all, the various departments of art represented being painting, sculpture, designs and plans, lacquering, gold work, &c. Mr. Hashimoto Gaho was elected as acting President, and Mr. Okakura as Chief Councillor.

Our readers will desire to learn something about the circumstances under which the above association came into existence. Perhaps the simplest explanation is to say that it grew out of the trouble which occurred some time ago in the Fine Arts School. The proximate causes of that trouble we can not attempt to set forth, first, because the task would occupy too much space, and secondly, because we are by no means sure that our version would be just to all the parties concerned. But the primary cause seems to have been a tendency on the part of the Authorities to discontinue the system on which the pictorial art teaching of the School was based—the system of grafting Occidental elements on Japanese stem—, and to insist upon either pure Japanese style or pure Occidental. Against the prospect of such a change Mr. Okamura, the President of the School, rebelled, and was supported by a very large majority of the Professors and Teachers in the School as well as by the bulk of the students. Indeed, we understand that his resignation has virtually paralysed the School, and that its continued existence is problematical. Be that as it may, the immediate purpose of the new Fine Arts Association is to persevere with the work hitherto carried on in the Art School. As a private enterprise, the Institution will be in a position to serve the public much more unreservedly than the Art School does. That, indeed, is an important feature in its prospectus. The faculty intend to execute work to order. They have a fine field for operations. The interference of the middle-man between the customer and the artist-artisan means, under existing circumstances, that the cost of production of all art objects is increased to the extent of 50 or 60 per cent. The new Institution can cut down that exorbitant figure by one half and still realize a handsome profit. It ought to succeed, and we trust that it will, not merely for the sake of art in Japan, but also because the public will benefit materially by its existence.

JAPANESE FACTS AND COMMENTS.

The Official Gazette of the 7th instant publishes the following Ordinance of the Home Department embodying regulations for the control of temples and shrines with regard to the receipt of fees:—

Art. I.—No temple, shrine, or Buddhist place of worship is allowed to take money from visitors or devotees except as a voluntary contribution.

Art. II.—If any Shinto or Buddhist Temple desires to collect fees from visitors who inspect buildings, gardens, courts, or treasures preserved by it, permission, must be obtained from the local Governor.

Art. III.—Any temple or shrine desiring to raise contributions outside the body of its congregation and devotees must obtain the sanction of the local Governor.

Art. IV.—Violation of any of the above provisions renders the responsible head liable to a fine not exceeding 20 yen. These regulations shall be enforced from August 1st of the 31st year of Meiji.

Commenting upon the desirability of an alliance between Japan and England, the Yomiuri says the balance of power in the Orient can not be preserved without some such scheme. It refers to the speech of Mr. Chamberlain as an indication of the current of English opinion in favour of an alliance. Mr. Chamberlain's remark that in order to counteract the Russian movements in the East it would be absolutely indispensable for England to secure a military ally, was a hint as to the wisdom of cöoperation with Japan. Moreover, at a great social gathering in London, with the Japanese Minister, Mr. Kato, in the chair, Lord Charles Beresford, a member of the House of Commons, after proposing the health of the Emperor of Japan, expressed a wish that the proposed alliance between the two countries might be consolidated. He remarked that an alliance of this nature alone could restore the balance of power and preserve peace and commerce in the East. The new Cabinet ought not, the Yomiuri adds, to lose this unique opportunity for cöoperation.

From the Fiji we gather the following:—The depression of trade throughout the country seems to have seriously affected railway traffic, which shows a marked reduction since May. Compared with the receipts for the corresponding period of last year, a decrease of over 20 per cent. is noticeable. Telegraph receipts, too, since May have suffered a reduction of 10 per cent. The insufficiency of funds allowed to the Communications Department has crippled the working of both means of communication, and complaints in regard to mails and telegraphs are heard on all sides. To remedy these evils an Imperial Ordinance was lately issued embodying slight alterations in the official organisation of the Department for Communications. The number of engineers connected with the Post and Telegraph Offices was increased from 19 to 23; the clerks engaged in the same task from 2,339 to 2,876; operatives from 257 to 322; and assistant clerks from 4,407 to 4,593. The Fiji thinks, however, that, distributed among the various offices in the country, the augmentation of the staff is very insignificant.

According to to the Yorodzu, Messrs Shibusawa Kisaku and Amenomiya Keijiro recently forwarded a memorial to the Premier and Home Minister with regard to financial reform. Their programme is as follows:—(1) A sum of 20 million yen out of the Indemnity to be brought home and appropriated for the purchase of public bonds. These bonds to be sold again in case of necessity, so as to supply funds for the annual expenditure of the Government. (2) Steps to be taken to allow foreigners the liberty to hold local bonds and company's debentures. (3) The question of the State ownership of railways to be determined by the Cabinet, and a promise to be exacted beforehand from the railway companies to the effect that they will present a Representation in the 13th session of the Diet urging the necessity of the Government purchase of railways. (4) The amount of bonds in the purchase of which the Government is at present engaged to be increased to at least 20 million yen. (5) The issue of convertible notes above the legal limit to be restricted to 50 million yen, and the rate of tax on the issue to be reduced from 7 to 5 per cent. (6) The rates of interest adopted by the Bank of Japan to be lowered and loans to be issued on a more liberal basis. The above schemes, however, remarks the Yorozu, would only have the effect of enhancing the value of shares of all descriptions and could hardly fail to dangerously disturb the money market.

Japan is yearly troubled, says the Kokumin, by the appearance of noxious insects in the rice fields. Last year Niigata prefecture suffered most, its loss from this source being estimated to have reached 1,324,723 koku, valued at 18,849,036 yen. Ishikawa, Toyama, Hiroshima, and Yamaguchi suffered almost as badly, and the total damage throughout the country exceeded 5,954,891 koku, valued at 75,014,785 yen, while the expenses incurred in the destruction of the insects aggregated 3,310,000 yen. This year reports are already to hand announcing the appearance of these destructive insects in various parts of the empire. Nagasaki, Niigata, Ishikawa, Toyama, Hiroshima, and Saga Prefectures are seriously infected; in Niigata, not only the local authorities but over 300 men from the Shibata barracks are engaged in destroying insects. The Department of Agriculture and Commerce has resolved to despatch ten engineers with a view to enforcing the best preventive measures.

The Nichi Nichi publishes an article from the pen of Mr. Ariga Nagabumi, Professor of Literature, the gist of which may be rendered as follows:—The industry of Japan has made marked progress of late. Investigations completed at the end of last year show that the number of companies engaged in mechanical industries alone reached 1816, while manufacturing corporations aggregated 1,207, making a total of 3,023. These figures might seem to indicate hopeful prospects for native industry. The imperfection, however, in the organisation of workshops, the slow progress of art, the insufficiency of labour for productive purposes,—these and many other defects render the native manufacturer unable to compete in the world's market. Mr. Brenan justly remarked that Japanese industry is yet in a state of immaturity. Dexterity is wanting both in the actual process of production and in the management of workshops. The industrial classes have in the past been inclined to suppose that by the cheapness of their goods they could occupy a superior position as compared with the manufacturers of all other nations. This supposition, however, has proved entirely fallacious. The cheapness of their products was simply the result of advantages peculiar to the circumstances of the time, the silver standard formerly adopted by the country, and the unrivalled cheapness of labour. These favourable circumstances, however, have now disappeared or are dwindling away. New industrial organisations are rapidly increasing, but none seem to direct their attention to the pressing needs of the hour.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The inauguration at this juncture of overseers of industry is absolutely indispensable. They might be charged with the duty of inspecting and reporting upon the actual condition of industrial districts, and issuing precautionary instructions to persons engaged in industry. Something like an Industrial Examination Office might also be established with a view to furnishing a model for workshops throughout the empire. Without adopting some such measures the improvement of porcelain and lacquer wares can hardly be expected.

A report of the Japanese Consul at Tacoma, published in the Tokyo Asahi, is to the effect that Japanese labourers along the northern coast of the Pacific are rapidly increasing, their total number already reaching 1,400. Of these, 800 are engaged on the inland railway, 100 are employed by timber companies, 160 in agriculture and forestry works, and 350 in miscellaneous occupations. Those receiving fixed wages are labourers on railways and in timber industries, the rates allotted to them being $1.10 per day. Those that have attained proficiency by three or four years' service receive $1.45 per diem, the rate allowed to white workmen. Japanese labourers of this class, however, do not exceed 100 at present. Timber workmen in Port Blakely are generally paid at the rate of from $0.90 to $1.10. Miscellaneous labourers do not receive more than one dollar, and the lowest wage is 50 cents. These labourers are mostly from Okayama, Wakayama, Kumamoto, and Hiroshima. Labourers from Wakayama are on the increase. Of the Japanese who recently went to America, I find some students suffering great embarrassment. They were originally induced to go over with a view to learning English and at the same time pursuing a calling. But they have failed to attain their object, and, being neither pure students nor labourers, may be regarded as a very unsatisfactory class of men. On the whole, white labourers are paid 20 per cent. more than Japanese. While Japanese labour has thus found its way into land enterprises in America, it is seldom employed at sea. The Klondyke mining rushes brought about a scarcity of local mariners along the coast, and their pay was raised from $25 to $35. A union was recently formed by sailors between Tacoma and Seattle with a view to raising their wages to $40. If the Klondyke enterprise really offers any prospects of success, wages will surely rise to $45, and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha must expect to be seriously affected by this enhancement. A scheme is on foot to raise sailors at $40 for service in fishing vessels and in the ships now used for the transport of preserved salmon to Europe.

The Keizai Zasshi is very bitter against proposals to impose new taxes on commodities, which it says will increase the misery of the indigent classes. Arguing that taxes on articles of daily consumption, while injurious and vexatious, are not a fruitful source of income, it gives the following figures as to defaulters and leakages during the 28th year of Meiji:—

	Gross receipts. Yen.	Defaulters.	Losses. Yen.
Land tax	38,692,865	259	297
Income tax	1,497,095	35	75
Saké tax.....	17,749,090	8	23,770
Taxes on other commodities...	8,422,973	3,163	127,546
Total	66,362,026	3,465	151,688

Thus, while the gross amount of receipts from taxes on articles of consumption was a little over 8 million yen, the number of defaulters reached over 3,000, entailing a loss of 127,000 yen. The receipts from land tax totalled 38 million yen, yet the number of defaulters and the amount of loss were only 359 and 297 yen respectively. A new tax is spoken of as about to be levied on sugar and salt. Such taxes are of great injury to trade, and inflict much suffering on the poor.

The Chuo has apparently awakened to the fact that there is a new ministry, and that it ought to have a leader on the platform. It must be confessed that the Chuo does not [illegible] production add greatly to the store of knowledge or the triumphs of the human intellect. It goes over the wearisome history of the whole affair in a manner that suggests that this is the first the writer has heard of it (a failing of Japanese journalists generally); and ends by roundly abusing the leaders of the party, which it says has no proper head, the authority being divided between four leaders, each of whom acts more or less as seems right in his own eyes. From which the Chuo argues that no reliance can be placed on the promises of these politicians.

Taking as the text a meeting to be held at Osaka for the purpose of urging the Government to present a bill for the reassessment of the taxable value of land, the Shogyo argues that as the new Minister of Finance, Mr. Matsuda, has clearly declared his intention not to introduce for the present a bill for increasing the land tax, the question of reassessment need scarcely be brought upon the tapis yet. Reassessment threatens to diminish the value of land by 140 or 150 million yen, and entails a loss of 3 or 4 millions upon the Treasury. The new Cabinet, the Shogyo says, has early recognised the necessity of increased taxation, and yet shrinks from carrying out any resolute measure merely lest party interests should suffer. The adjustment of finances under these circumstances can hardly be expected.

NOTES ON NEWS.

Instructions have been issued for establishing extraordinary sanitary stations in nineteen prefectures and cities. This precaution is taken in connexion with dysentery. During the first six months of the year, the number of cases reported from Yamanashi, Shizuoka, Kanagawa and Aichi was 923, and in several other prefectures—as Toyama, Saitama, Gifu, Wakayama, Miyazaki, Kumamoto, and Kagoshima,—there were 100 cases each. These returns show an increase of 20 per cent. compared with the figures for the corresponding period last year. Hence the measures now resorted to by the Authorities.

The British Admiral, the Captains of H.M. ships recently in Yokohama, the Admiral's Secretary, the Flag Lieutenant and some other officers, were received in audience by the Emperor at 11 a.m. on the 8th instant, Sir E. Satow introducing them. Afterwards the whole party lunched at Marquis Saigo's Meguro villa, Viscount Ito, Baron Ito, Mr. Komura and other officials being among the guests.

The first-class cruiser Tokiwa, the building of which is in the hands of Lord Armstrong & Company, was launched on the 7th instant. She is a steel vessel of 9,855 tons displacement, 18,000 horse-power, and 21½ knots speed. Her length is 127.357 metres and her beam 20.445 metres. She is armed entirely with quick-firing guns; namely, fourteen 8-inch, fourteen 15-cent., twelve 12-pr., and seven 47-mill.

The total value of the War Bonds purchased by the Bank of Japan up to the 28th of June, under the arrangement made by the late Minister of Finance, Count Inouye, was 6½ million yen approximately. The 30th of June, however, being the settling day for the first half of the year, there were numerous applications from sellers, so that when the Bank closed its accounts for the half year, its purchases of Bonds aggregated 10 million yen. The price remains steady at 96. It is evident that, whatever may be the pressure in the money market, holders of War Bonds are very unwilling to realize at a loss of 4 per cent. We may mention that of the sum appropriated for these purchases, only 5 million yen now remain in the hands of the Bank.

The first ourang outang that ever came to Japan has been brought from Borneo by a stoker named Kawaguchi. The man had to penetrate into the interior of the island and expose himself to some risks before he procured the animal—which, by the way, the Japanese call shojo. He thought that it might be a good speculation, and he was right, for the authorities of the Zoological Garden at Uyeno have purchased the big monkey, as well as a large snake, obtained by the same stoker from Singapore.

A great deal of capital is made out of this question of redemption. The Opposition journals endeavour to convict Count Okuma of inconsistency, because, while he is understood to have denounced the unwisdom of redeeming debts with one hand and contracting them with the other, he is nevertheless allowing the Bank of Japan to continue its purchases. We fail to detect the contradiction ourselves. The operation in which the Bank of Japan is engaged is not primarily a redemption of debt. Its paramount, indeed we may say its sole, object is to provide monetary facilities for enterprise by enabling people to unlock some of the capital invested by them in public securities. The Treasury merely places so many millions at the temporary service of business, instead of keeping the money idle in its vaults.

JAPANESE PLUMS IN AMERICA

Several varieties of the Japanese plum are being successfully cultivated in some parts of the United States. The importation of these plums began about 20 years ago with one Luther Burbank, of California; and different varieties have proved perfectly adapted to different latitudes—some to one location and some to others—so that altogether the Japanese plum is considered a great success. The Japanese names have been dropped and English names have been given to the best, such as Burbank, Abundance, Williard, Babcock, etc. And yet a few Japanese names, such as Satsuma, Yosebe, and Red Nagate have been retained. Mr. Arthur M. Clement, orchardist, Boston, Mass., has 25,000 trees in three orchards in Massachusetts, and is very successful in the cultivation of these plums.

THE NIPPON YUSEN KAISHA.

We read in vernacular journals that the ships of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha engaged on foreign lines, are as follow:—

European line	10 ships.....	62,129 tons (two sailings per month).
American line	3 ships.....	11,918 tons (one and two sailings in alternate months).
Australian line	3 ships.....	7,159 tons (one and two sailings in alternate months).
Bombay line.....	3 ships.....	10,677 tons (two sailings per month).
Shanghai line	3 ships.....	7,688 tons (four sailings per month).
Total	22 ships.....	99,571 tons

It is further expected that during the course of the present year the steamers on the European line will be augmented by the Sado Maru and the Hitachi Maru. The former, a vessel of 6,000 tons, left Southampton on the 6th inst., and is expected to reach Japan in September. The Australian service, also, will soon be increased by the Yahata Maru and two others, all passenger steamers, one of which is expected to reach Kobe before the end of this month.

SPECIAL FIRST-CLASS CARRIAGES.

The Japan Railway Company has inaugurated a system of special first-class carriages (tokuto-kisha). They are not to carry more than 6 passengers at most, and must be ordered beforehand. The fares are to be, 5 yen for one person for any distance up to 100 miles; 10 yen for two; 13½ yen for three; 17 yen for four; 20 yen for five, and 22½ yen for six. After 100 miles there is an additional charge of 50 sen a head for every 10 miles, and the charges for two, three, four and five, follow the same rules as in the case of distances under 100 miles.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

A SDA TRAGEDY IN YOKOHAMA.

Suicide of Mr. H. Tennant.

A painful shock was caused in Yokohama on Monday morning by the report—which unhappily proved but too true—that Mr. H. Tennant, Editor of the Japan Gazette, had shot himself with a revolver at his residence on the Bluff. As late as Sunday night, he was seen by Mr. Robert Hay, also of the staff of the Gazette, and he then appeared in his usual health and spirits, with the exception of a slight tendency to thoughtfulness. On Monday morning, shortly before eleven, a shot was heard in Mr. Tennant's room, and the person who rushed in found him with a fearful wound in the head. The bullet—a very light one, discharged from a small revolver found in the room—had entered the back of the skull behind the ear, passed through the lower part of the brain, and flattened itself against the bone at the other side of the head. Mr. Tennant was still alive when Dr. Wheeler arrived, and he was conveyed as soon as possible to the General Hospital, where Drs. Wheeler and Monro attended him, and did everything possible under the circumstances. It was, however, apparent that the case was hopeless, and all that could be done was in the nature of alleviating the patient's sufferings. The bullet was found and extracted, but the doomed man gradually sank, passing beyond the veil about 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Tennant, who was an unmarried man and a general favorite in Yokohama, had been connected with the Japan Gazette for about four years. He was previously at Kobe, where he edited the Hiogo News. Before he came to the Far East he had had a varied and comprehensive experience of English journalistic work. Born at Liskeard, in Cornwall, he was for some time on the staff of the Western Morning News, a large and influential Plymouth daily paper which he served with considerable credit. This was not his only connection with Western journalism, for he was also at one period attached to the Devon and Exeter Gazette. The smart seaside town of Eastbourne was the scene of some of Mr. Tennant's brightest work, for it was there that, adopting the cue of Mr. Frederick Greenwood, he wrote a series of articles for the Eastbourne Gazette on workhouse life and discipline, based on his own experiences as an "amateur casual." Mr. Tennant's connection with London journalism was limited, we believe, to an appointment in the office of the National Press Agency, a huge corporation known to every Pressman, which supplies news and comments on every conceivable subject to every conceivable kind of newspaper. The exacting nature of work of this kind probably made Mr. Tennant glad to leave the rush of Fleet-street for the comparative quiet of Press life in the Far East. It was, perhaps, an unfortunate choice, for probably had he remained longer at home his undoubted abilities would have secured him a creditable position in English journalism. In Japan, however, those abilities have been recognised and appreciated, and by none more than those whose fortune it has sometimes been to traverse his written opinions. The Japan Gazette loses by his untimely death an able and conscientious conductor, and his numerous acquaintances and well-wishers have to mourn the loss of an amiable, loyal, and true-hearted gentleman.

The Funeral.

Amid every sign of regret and respect the funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon at the Cemetery. The procession was formed at the Hospital, and a great number of Mr. Tennant's friends and acquaintances attended to pay the last tribute to his memory. The Consular services, the public bodies, the banks, business houses, sporting clubs, and the local Masons were all represented. The chief mourners were Mr. C. K. M. Martin, Mr. Robert Hay, and Mr. A. M. Gale, of the Japan Gazette; the pall bearers were Mr. E. Flint Kilby, Mr. J. H. Brooke (editor of the Japan Herald), Mr. Adam (editor of the Japan Advertiser), Mr. A. Bellamy Brown (manager of the Japan Mail), Mr. W. Gordon, and Mr. F. H. Bugbird; and among others present were:—Mr. R. G. E. Forster (Acting British Consul), Mr. F. Chalmers (of the Consular Staff), Mr. H. C. Litchfield, Dr. Tripler, Dr. Munro, Messrs. A. Woolley, S. Isaacs, W. Sutter, F. W. Thomas, K. Kingdon, F. J. Lias, Reid, E. V. Thorne, M. Russell, Jas. Stewart, &c. On arrival at the Cemetery the procession was met by the Rev. F. C. Billingham, who conducted the service in the absence of the Rev. E. Champneys Irwine. The solemn ceremony, the more solemn in contrast with the glory of the blazing summer sun and the deep blue sky, was peculiarly affecting, and when the last farewell was said there were few eyes that did not bear traces of emotion. The respect in which the deceased journalist was held wherever he was known in Japan was testified by the large number of beautiful wreaths sent, among them being the following:—

The Japan Gazette Company; the Japanese Staff of the Japan Gazette; the Editor and Foreign Staff of the Japan Mail; Japan Daily Advertiser; the members of the Yokohama Cricket and Athletic Club; the members of the Yokohama Lodge of Freemasons, No. 1092 E.C.; the "Reliance Wheelmen;" Mr. and Mrs. R. Hay, Mr. and Mrs. E. Flint Kilby, Mr. and Mrs. James Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bellamy Brown, Mr. and Mrs. G. Blundell, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Bugbird, Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Thorn, Captain and the Misses Ekstrand, Mr. and Mrs. B. Hyde-Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Unite, Mrs. C. J. Strome, Mr. Clarrence Martin, Mr. J. H. Brooke, Mr. A. M. Gale, Mr. S. Isaacs, Mr. F. L. Taverner, Mr. A. M. Watt, Mr. J. Marshall, Mr. E. V. Sloen, Mr. H. MacArthur, Mr. G. Allcock, Mr. C. I. Fraser, Mr. H. Rose, Mr. M. Russell, Mr. L. Ph. von Hemert, Mr. H. Bent, Mr. W. Sutter, Mr. E. B. S. Edwards, Mr. F. E. White, Mr. J. M. Maitland, Mr. C. M. Duff, Mr. K. T. Nicholas, Mr. O. Keil, Mr. H. C. Pigott, Mr. S. Warming, Mr. F. Schroeder, Mr. E. J. Lilleaud, Mr. P. C. Potts, Dr. N. G. Munro, M.B., C.M.; Mr. T. Tanaka, Messrs. W. B. Clayton, H. A. Stewart, and C. G. Price; Messrs. Hall, Hooper and Gibson. From Kobe: Mr. R. Young (Chronicle), Mr. A. W. Curtis (Herald), Mr. B. A. Hale (Hiogo News); Mr. W. Kerr, Mr. G. J. Penney, Mr. F. J. Bardens; Rising Sun Lodge, No. 1401, E.C.

Inquest.

The inquest into the circumstances attending the death of Mr. Henry Tennant, Editor of the Japan Gazette, was opened on Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock before Mr. R. G. E. Forster, Acting Consul, in his capacity as Coroner; and a Jury consisting of Mr. J. P. Mollison, Mr. G. Philip, and Mr. R. B. McKinnell.

The Jury having viewed the body, Dr. Wheeler identified it. He said:—At 10.30 yesterday morning, while I was driving on the Bluff, Mr. Tennant's boy ran up to me in a very excited manner, and told me in Japanese that something had happened to Mr. Tennant. I proceeded to his house at 133 Bluff, and found him lying on the bed in the back room. His right hand was lying between his thighs, and in it was a revolver (a small weapon with two cartridges still in the chambers). The pillow and the bed were covered with blood. On examining the deceased I found a pistol bullet wound on the right side of the head about three quarters of an inch above and in front of the right ear. He was unconscious and breathing stertorously. While I was there Mr. Hay came in, and we were proceeding together to go to the General Hospital to get an ambulance when we met Dr. Munro. He said he would get the ambulance, and take the deceased to the hospital. Yesterday afternoon Dr. Munro and myself held a post mortem examination on the body just before dusk. We found on opening the brain that there was chronic meningitis of some standing. Meningitis is inflamenation of the coverings of the brain. We found that the bullet had passed along the base of the brain under the right lateral ventricle, across the left lateral ventricle, and through the substance of the brain on the left side, where it was found just under the skull. We trepanned and extracted the bullet. The bullet wound was without doubt the cause of death.

Mr. Forster: Would this meningitis be sufficient to affect the mind?

Witness—No doubt it was a factor in producing the melancholia from which Mr. Tennant seems to have suffered lately. Witness had attended him occasionally, and he believed deceased had been for some time in that hospital.

In answer to Mr. Mollison, witness said deceased was fully dressed as if about to go out. The meningitis would be quite sufficient to cause, in certain cases, a temporary unhinging of the mind.

Dr. Munro said that when he saw deceased first the previous morning he was lying on his back on the right side of his bed fully dressed, insensible, breathing stertorously 62 to the minute, pulse 50. There was a stream of blood issuing from the wound described by Dr. Wheeler. Witness had him moved to the hospital, where he was also seen by Drs. Meere, Stoughton, and Hoskins. He described the operation for the extraction of the bullet, and said the wound was a large one, from which he inferred that the bullet, which was a small one, must have turned round after entering the skull, and passed through transversely, thus making a much larger wound than its size would suggest. The patient improved a little after the bullet was extracted, but did not rally long, and died about four o'clock. Witness would like to call attention to the meningitis, which was quite pronounced. From the wound itself it was quite impossible to say whether it was self-inflicted or not; it was consistent with suicide. Witness had attended deceased, who had been subject to occasional fits of depression. Deceased had been in the hospital with a slight attack of fever four or five months ago. Witness was quite intimate with deceased, and the fits of depression from which he suffered, in the absence of any obvious motive for the act, would indicate that his mind was not quite normal.

In answer to Mr. Mollison, Dr. Munro said the meningitis would be quite sufficient to induce a temporary aberration.

The inquiry was then adjourned till this morning at 10 30.

The inquest on the body of Mr. H. Tennant, late Editor of the Japan Gazette, was resumed on Wednesday morning before Mr. R. G. E. Forster at the British Consulate.

Deceased's amah, Yamazaki Yasu, stated through the interpretation of Mr. Chalmers, that deceased rose rather later than usual on Monday. After he had had breakfast, witness went into the room to take the things away, expecting he had gone down to the office, but found he was still in the room. After she had taken the breakfast things away, deceased went into the bed-room, and she heard a report. On going into the room she found Mr. Tennant lying down, bleeding and breathing very hard; she ran to fetch Mr. Hay. She had noticed that deceased seemed to be in trouble for a week past.

Robert Hay, assistant editor of the Japan Gazette, said he was with Mr. Tennant the night before the occurrence. He went to Mr. Tennant's house in reponse to a letter from him. It was shortly after nine o'clock, and witness remained with him till nearly eleven. Witness understood deceased's object in sending for him was because he felt out of sorts, and he gave witness the impression that he wanted to go into the country, but that he was reluctant to propose the matter because of the additional work it would entail upon witness. They discussed the matter, and witness understood when he left that deceased was going as soon as possible to Chuzenji. Witness understood that another reason for deceased's sending for him was that he had been in the house the whole day, that he was having another attack of malaria, and while in an irritable condition he had been disturbed by laughing and talking in a house near. Witness left him quite in his usual spirits. Next morning, shortly before eleven, a jinrikisha man delivered to him a message that Mr. Tennant was very ill. Witness reached the house in time to see Dr. Wheeler go into the bed-room. Witness remained in the dining room until he assisted to place the deceased in a stretcher to take him to the hospital. Witness on Monday afternoon received a letter from deceased through Mr. Gale, of the Gazette office.

The letter was produced and submitted to the Jury, but Mr. Forster did not consider it necessary that it should be read. The letter did not throw any light on the motive for suicide, but simply contained directions for the disposal of deceased's property. It read as follows:—

July 11, 1898.

Dear Hay,—The comedy was only an interlude, all comic as touches are in tragedies—something to relieve the horror.

Please send my mother any private letters that may come for me, also if possible the picture in the next room and any money that my goods may realise or the Gazette proprietors may deem to be my share. (I did my duty by the Gazette.)

Yours in Torment H. TENNANT.

Mr. Hay added that he found a manuscript under the blotting pad of deceased's desk, but Mr. Forster said this had nothing to do with the case, being apparently the manuscript of some tale or novel.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

In answer to Mr. Mollison, witness said the irritability of deceased did not strike him as exceptional—for deceased. He suffered from attacks of malaria.

The Jury expressed themselves satisfied with this evidence, and retired to consider their verdict.

On returning Mr. Mollison announced that the Jury had come to the following decision:—

"That the death of Henry Tennant was caused by a bullet from a revolver discharged by his own hand whilst in a state of temporary insanity due to the inflammation of the coverings of the brain, from which he had been suffering for some time."

Mr. Forster—I entirely concur in the verdict.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Agent of the Pacific Mail S.S. Co. has received advices that the steamer City of Rio de Janeiro has been chartered by the U.S. Government and there will be no departure from San Francisco on the 16th inst.

The dead bodies of a man and woman were found in the river near the Ryogoku bridge, Tokyo, on the 9th inst. The man was 30, and the woman probably 27. It is supposed that they committed suicide.

Hongkong was visited by a typhoon on the last day of June. But ample warning had been given by the Observatory and very little damage was done. Two little girls were drowned from one sampan.

It is notified at Singapore that the Ordinance authorising a Government note issue has not been disallowed. It is, therefore, to be presumed that the Government note issue will be made when the necessary arrangements are completed.

Two cases of cholera appeared in Tokyo on the 10th inst. One victim was a man named Matsumoto Katsunosuke, 22 years old, living at Sakumacho, Kanda, and the other a man named Fukazawa Jinzaemon, 67 years, a farmer living at Oshima village, Minami-Katsushika-gori.

The China Mail understands that the coal supply of the naval authorities at Hongkong is far in excess of any previous record, and, the whole of the naval authorities' coal storage having been completely filled, the overplus has been accommodated in private stores.

On Saturday, says the Kobe Chronicle, Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Penney celebrated their silver wedding, which may be considered a matter of public interest in the port, inasmuch as for the greater part of the time Mr. and Mrs. Penney have resided in Kobe.

The Smithsonian Institution is contemplating a scientific invasion of the Philippines along with the military occupation. As contemplated, the invasion will be by a company of the scientific men of the institution under the leadership of a scientist of the highest attainments, to go along with the troops under their protection.

The Intercolonial Universities boat-race took place at Port Adelaide on the 8th June. The race resulted in an easy win for the Sydney crew by six lengths. A great struggle occurred between the Adelaide and Melbourne crews for second place, the former eventually defeating Melbourne by half a length.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has closed its financial year most successfully. The debt with which it commenced the year, amounting to $97,454, has been wiped out, and the total receipts have fully covered the expenditures. To meet the debt, appropriations for the past year unused and cancelled were applied, amounting to $17,715. Churches and individuals gave $36,741, women's boards and societies $20,417, and the missionaries on the field contributed $10,533. The remainder was made up from other sources.

It is learned that the importers of Chicago lost $40,000 in an exciting run against time and Uncle Sam's war taxes which had a finish at midnight on Monday, June 13th, on the Canadian border, near Portal, N.D., says the Vancouver News-Advertiser. A score of carloads of choice tea was being rushed into America from Canada in order to escape the new war duty, which fell due on June 13th, midnight. Only five car-loads arrived on United States soil in time. The other fifteen cars were on British territory a few hundred feet away as the clock struck twelve, and were brought to a standstill by the peremptory orders of United States International Revenue officials, on watch at the dividing line.

A return of the fleets of Great Britain, France, Russia, Germany, Italy, and Japan has been issued as a Parliamentary paper, on the motion of Sir Charles Dilke. The return shows that there are 52 British battleships in commission, 9 building, and 3 ordered—64 in all. The grand total of all vessels shows 377. The French fleet comprises battleships in commission, 27; building, 8. The grand total is 148. The Russian fleet consists of battleships in commission 12; building, 6; to be commenced this year 4. All vessels total 112. The German fleet consists of battleships, 15. The Italian fleet consists of battleships, 15. The Japanese fleet consists of battleships, 3; armoured cruiser, 1; protected cruisers, 10; unprotected cruisers, 8; coast defence vessels, 3; torpedo vessel, 1; torpedo-boats, 44—a total fleet of 70. Japan is also building battleships, 3; protected cruisers, 6; unprotected cruiser, 1; armoured cruisers, 6; torpedo-boat destroyers, 8; torpedo-boats, 12.

The Tageblatt, Berlin, says:—The first impression of a stranger in Spain is that his preconceived ideas of the country are erroneous. He finds the people more quiet, more sober, in short much better than he supposed. There is much poverty, but also much unexpected wealth. Madrid has colossal fortunes; Barcelona has wealthy middle classes. Seville, Malaga, Cadiz, have more money than German cities of their size. And Spain has great resources awaiting development, mineral as well as agricultural. The industries are extending, and the exports increase. The fault lies chiefly in unjust taxation. Real estate is taxed too much. Indirect taxation is too high. Capital goes almost scot-free. There is, for instance, no income tax. However rich a country may be, its resources must fail in a few generations in the face of such injustice. If all taxes were paid regularly, taxation distributed more evenly, and the resources of the country used properly, Spain could vie in wealth with any country in the world.

CHINESE AFFAIRS.

A Peking telegram received in Shanghai on June 26th states "that H.I.M. the Empress Dowager has now openly taken over the direction of the affairs of the Empire in consequence of which the high Ministers of the Court and Government have lately applied for instructions in all important matters to her Majesty, the Emperor being relieved of all real power." Truly Her Majesty is a remarkable woman, knowing by instinct when to take opportunity by the hand. The death of Prince Kung must have been an important factor to her.

It is universally believed in Peking, writes "An Occasional Correspondent" of the N.-C. Daily News, that Li Hung-chang is virtually if not nominally to preside at the Tsung-li Yamên, and that the changes all bear closely to this fact. He is not to be first among peers in that anomalous Junta of foreign affairs, but to be facile princeps; to ensure this, the composition of the Yamên has been greatly altered. If this be so the outlook is indeed serious, The notion is common both to native and foreign circles that Li's Russophile bias is at present only equalled by his positive Anglophobia. Curious stories are circulating in native officialdom as to recent passages of arms between Li and Sir Claude MacDonald in which pretty plain speaking was indulged in on both sides; and in which the penultimate state of exacerbation was reached. A waggish debater in the House of Commons once publicly thanked God there was a stout fixed table between Gladstone and Disraeli. The occasion of this lively procedure is said to have been the Kowloon Extension.

It is definitely reported at Tientsin that the number of men lost in the melancholy wreck of the Fuching near Port Arthur was 146; only the first lieutenant and three seamen escaped. The vessel is said to have been Foochow built and was under-engined. The Captain ran in during a fog and anchored when soundings warned him he was close in shore. The coming gale lifted the fog and showed he was close to the reefs, but he thought he could ride out the "blow" at anchor and refused to put to sea. When the two cables parted, the ship was on the rocks in a few minutes. The Russians rendered help gallantly and promptly but either panic, or kismet, or ignorance rendered the crew unable to take it. The ship lies now close to Port Arthur with her back broken. Most of the crew were Southerners.

It is reported from Peking, says the Supao, that the Emperor recently presented Li Hung-chang and Chang Yin huan with the 1st class decoration of the Double Dragon, and the recipients having thanked his Majesty for the distinction proudly wore their decorations as they left the Palace. This is the first time in the history of China that a decoration meant specially to be presented to foreigners has been given to Chinese officials and is a sign of the change that is now going on in that country.

The North China Daily News prints Peking despatches stating that the Emperor will accompany the Empress Dowager in her visit to Tientsin and that the date set for the visit is early next autumn. The principal object of the visit is to review the disciplined forces of Chihli under General Nieh, the Provincial Commander-in-chief, at Lutai near Kaiping, and under Yuan Shih-kai, at Hsiaochan. The troops, however, are to be massed at Tientsin for their Majesties' convenience. The Tientsin Admiralty buildings are to be overhauled, extended, and repaired for the reception of the Imperial Court, while at the Eastern and Western Arsenals large pavilions are to be built in anticipation of their Majesties' inspection of those places when they come.

In order to encourage interest in shooting amongst the members of the Municipal Police force, the Shanghai Council have just presented a silver cup, value $50, to be shot for annually; the trophy will be called the Council's Prize and the competition for its possession is to commence this month.

The official announcement has been made of an increase in the pay of the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs staff. The increase amounts to 100 per cent. for the indoor staff, about 66 per cent. for the outdoor staff, and about 50 per cent. for the Chinese staff down to and including the rank of writer.

It is perfectly true, says the Shanghai morning journal, that the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation having settled a loan to the Imperial Chinese Railway for the construction of the intended line from Shanhaikuan to Newchwang, the Russian Chargé d'Affaires sent to the Tsung-li Yamên a formal written protest against it. Does Lord Salisbury propose to sit down quietly and allow the Russian Chargé d'Affaires to annul a contract between an English Bank and a Chinese Government Department? Subsequent telegrams indicate that despite Russia's protest, the loan was concluded.

A warrant has been forwarded from Shanghai to the British Consul in Chefoo for the arrest of the stranded steamer Amarapoora, which ran ashore on the S.E. Promontory in a fog early in May. It seems that the master and managing owner declined to leave the vessel, and, as no enquiry into the accident could be held in the absence of the master, this course has had to be adopted to force matters to a conclusion. A truthful history of the Amarapoora's doings in the Far East should prove interesting if a tithe of the stories that were circulating about her in Yokohama are correct.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Shanghai new Municipal loan, amounting to Tls. 300,000, has been entirely applied for, the average price being slightly above par.

It is not impossible, says the N. C. Daily News, that Tsai Taotai will be appointed Chinese Minister to Washington in succession to H. E. Wu Ting-fang, or Ng Choy.

H. E. Chang Chih-Tung, the Hukuang Viceroy, has, it is said, sent 50 picked men from his bodyguard to Japan to the trained there. After three years the men are to come back, be appointed sergeants, and set to work to drill and discipline their less fortunate comrades.

The native correspondent of the N.-C. Daily News at Peking writes that the high officials of the Imperial Government, with only a couple of conspicuous exceptions, have had their eyes opened at last to the false friendship of Russia and that the gratitude of the country for the aid in getting back the Liaotung Peninsula has been entirely misplaced. They have also begun to perceive the disinterested help of Great Britain; but that China, while not thanking Japan for pricking the bubble and exposing the hollowness of the country, certainly owes meed of gratitude to that country for opening the eyes of the literati to the necessity of hurrying up and keeping pace with modern civilisation and requirements, a gratitude which will greatly deepen in the future if Japan continues to show her friendship, by helping China in giving instruction to her people whenever desired and siding with Great Britain in trying to preserve the integrity of China. It is further reported, and the correspondent believes it to be true, that it is the intention soon to dismiss from the military and naval services all foreign instructors with the exception of British, American, and Japanese officers. Under date of the 24th June the correspondent also states that Prince Ching had recovered from his recent illness and begun to attend to his multifarious duties at Court, etc.

An Imperial edict of the 26th June contains the following warning to Director-General Shêng:—"For the scheme of building a railway between Hankow and Lukou Bridge, Peking, we sanctioned the proposal to make it a mercantile enterprise open to all our subjects, and further specially appointed Shêng Hsüan-huai to be Director General of the project. Two years have now elapsed since then and by rights we ought to expect that the work of surveying the route, buying up of land for the road, and such like, should be completed by this time. Now the proposed railway route is one of very great importance to the Empire and we cannot permit any delay to be made with the progress of the work. Furthermore, we have now the requisite funds in hand for building this railway and therefore command the said Shêng Hsüan-huai to commence work immediately. He is also to report to us in advance the manner he intends to carry on the said construction. Now if there be any more delays and it be found that there has been an air of levity in the prosecution of an affair of such grave and national importance, the question is asked whether Shêng Hsüan-huai will be able to avoid heavy punishment for conduct for which he is doubtless responsible. With reference to the Hankow-Canton Railway and the Shanghai-Nanking Railway we hereby enjoin upon those who have been authorised to conduct their construction to hasten with their work and refrain from unnecessary delay in the matter." Apropos of the above, the Daily Chinese Progress publishes a report that Shêng signed a loan with the Belgian Syndicate for the building of the Lu-Han Railway on the same day that the above decree was issued.

HARBOUR REGULATIONS.

An Ordinance has been issued over the Imperial Sign Manual with counter-signatures of four Ministers of State, relating to the promulgation of Harbour Regulations. It reads as follows:—

Art. I.—The boundaries of the various ports opened to foreign commerce are established as follow:—The boundary of Yokohama extends from Mandarin Bluff as far as the Lightship, and then, turning direct to the north, passes along the eastern bank of the mouth of the river Tsurumi.

Kobe occupies an area bounded by a line extending southward from the former mouth of the river Ikuta, and running north-easterly from Wadamisaki promontory.

Niigata covers a circular area having a radius of 2½ nautical miles from the lighthouse as centre.

Port Ebisu occupies a territory between two lines, one extending from Shiidomari village to the outskirts of Ebisu for a distance of 50 miles, and the other running from Minatochi, on the eastern bank of the Lake Kamo, as far as Kamo village, on the northwestern bank of the same lake.

Osaka covers an area enclosed by two lines, one of which extends from the Free Point at the mouth of the River Buko towards the south and slightly to the west, where it meets the other, which extends from the mouth of the river Yamato to a point 6 nautical miles from the Tree Point and 5 nautical miles from the mouth of the Yamato.

Nagasaki occupies a long strip of land from Kauzaki to Megami.

Hakodate covers an area extending half a nautical mile towards the sea in a southerly direction from Anomasaki and as far as the eastern bank of the mouth of the River Arikawa in Kamiiso village.

Art. II.—Vessels entering the ports are required to hoist their national flag and to signal. Regular mail steamers alone are allowed to use their company's flags as signals. The national or company's flags and signals so displayed are not to be withdrawn until after the arrival of the vessel is reported to the Harbour Master. A report of arrival must be presented, except on Sundays and national Holidays, within 24 hours from the ship's anchorage. No vessel shall be entitled, before the presentation of such report, to enjoy facilities of customs examination.

Art. III.—All Captains are required, at the time of their arrival, to refrain from communication with other vessels at anchor, or with the land, until permission has been secured for free communication.

Art. IV.—The Harbour Master will ordinarily meet ships near the entrance of the port, and direct the place of anchorage. No vessel is allowed to leave the place so assigned without special permission, except in case of emergency. The Harbour Master, however, may, if he deems it necessary, direct a vessel to change its place of anchorage.

Art. V.—The Harbour Master is required to wear uniform during working hours. He is entitled to right of inspection at any time as to whether his directions with respect to the anchorage and movement of vessels have been duly executed.

Art. VI.—No vessel is allowed to lie at anchor in the fairway, or to obstruct the liberty of navigation.

Art. VII.—Vessels anchoring or sailing within the limits of a port are required to use the lights prescribed by the regulations for the prevention of marine collisions.

Art. VIII.—Whenever a storm is expected, or a signal for warning is given, each vessel shall at once prepare to cast one or more spare anchors, steamers being also required to get up steam.

Art. IX.—Vessels loaded with explosives or combustible substances in excess of the quantities for ordinary use are required to proceed beyond the limits of a port to await directions from the Harbour Master. These vessels, while awaiting instructions, must show the signal between sunrise and sunset, and hang a red lantern on the foremast from sunset to sunrise. No ship is entitled to load or unload the materials above mentioned except in places specified by the Harbour Master.

Art. X.—Vessels at anchor and not engaged in loading or unloading, or vessels under repairs, and all others, including yachts, warehousing and cargo boats, are required to lie in the places specially fixed by the Harbour Master.

Art. XI.—In case of outbreak of fire on board a vessel her bells shall be rung until the arrival of aid. Between sunrise and sunset signal flags "NM" shall be displayed, and from sunset to sunrise a red lantern shall be continuously raised and lowered. When police assistance is needed the signal "G" shall be shown between sunrise and sunset, and a blue or flashing light be burnt between sunset and sunrise. With these exceptions no gun is to be fired, nor fireworks displayed, except by permission of the Harbour Master.

Art. XII.—Vessels coming from districts notified by the Imperial Government as affected by epidemics or contagious diseases (as cholera, small pox, yellow or scarlet fever, pest, &c.), or vessels in which any of these diseases is found to have broken out in the course of the voyage, are required to moor beyond the limits of a port, flying a yellow flag between sunrise and sunset, and exhibiting two lanterns, red and white, the one above and the other below, on the top of the foremast, between sunset and sunrise. The sanitary officials shall have notice of the nature of the diseases, in order that suitable preventive measures may be adopted. Vessels having disease on board are not allowed to withdraw the yellow flag, or the lantern signals, until permission for free communication is obtained; nor are they allowed to land any persons on board, or communicate with other vessels, without the permission of the sanitary officials concerned. The above provisions are also applicable to any vessels at anchor within the limits of a port, in case an epidemic disease breaks out in them. They are required to change their place of anchorage on receipt of directions to that effect from the Harbour Master.

Vessels coming from districts affected by cattle or sheep plague, or vessels in which plague has broken out, are not allowed to land cattle or sheep, their carcases, hides, or bones, or to transfer the same to any other vessel for re-shipment.

Art. XIII.—It is strictly forbidden to cast overboard corpses, ballast, embers, dust, refuse, &c., within the limits of a port. In loading or unloading coal or ballast, or other materials of a similar nature, precautions must be taken to prevent the same from dropping into the water. Vessels known to have cast into the sea any of the above-mentioned substances, or to have allowed the same to drop through negligence, shall be required by the Harbour Master to remove them. In the event of their failing to do so steps may be taken by the Harbour Master to effect the removal at the expense of the vessel concerned.

Art. XIV.—Vessels desiring to clear out of port must notify the Harbour Office, and a departure flag must be hoisted. Steamers arriving and leaving at fixed hours or dates need present once only a notification of their arrival and departure.

Art. XV.—Any wrecks or obstructions likely to impede the routes of navigation within or near the port must be removed by the owner within the period specified by the Harbour Master. If the owner fails to comply with such directions, the Harbour Master may cause the removal or destruction of the obstruction to be undertaken at the owner's expense.

Art. XVI.—The Harbour Office shall provide suitable still buoys for steamers engaged on regular services, and collect a prescribed due for the use thereof.

Art. XVII.—No chain, cable, or rigging shall be attached to a lightship or to signal buoys or beacons. In case any vessel collides with and damages a lightship, buoy, beacon, or pier, or structure, she must defray the necessary expenses for repair or reconstruction.

Art. XVIII.—Violation of the above regulations shall render the offender liable to a fine of not less than 2 yen and not more than 200 yen.

Art. XIX.—The captain of a vessel shall be held responsible for the payment of fines, fees, and other charges imposed upon the vessel.

Art. XX.—Any vessel on which fines, fees, or other charges are imposed shall not be allowed to clear until she has discharged the full amount, or presents satisfactory security to the Harbour Master.

Art. XXI.—The term "Harbour Master" in these regulations must be understood to include his Assistant or the Mayor or Headman or his delegate in ports where no harbour master is appointed. The term "Captain" is to be defined as the person who controls or directs a vessel, whatever title he may have. The word "port" or "harbour" relates to any one of the ports enumerated in Article I. of these regulations.

Art. XXII.—A portion of each port shall be set apart for the anchorage of war vessels.

Art. XXIII.—Of the above provisions those which are applicable to war vessels are Articles IV., VI., XI., and XXI., and clauses 1 and 2 of Article XIII.

Art. XXIV.—The date of the operation of these regulations shall be notified by the Minister of Communications. Bye-laws for the enforcement of the regulations will be promulgated by the said Minister.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE U.S. SCHOOL POLICY.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—In your weekly issue of April 16, you have inserted a letter from a correspondent who signs himself "X," and to this I ask leave to offer a correction. After describing the policy of Secular education adopted by the Japanese Government, which prescribes that no religious instruction is allowed in any school recognized as a Public School, he proceeds:—"The United States of America, the cradle of the Public School system, has that proviso as one of the fundamental laws of the educational system. Religious training is to be obtained in Theological Schools established at private cost. The better sense of the people has resolutely stayed the hands of the Christian Church from any control of the Public Schools; the Bible is excluded from them. The Churches, Schools, Christian associations—places where religious dogma is taught—being considered sufficient for all the needs of Christian training."

I infer that this was not written by an American, as every American knows that the United States of America has no school policy whatever, except that at long intervals the national government has made grants of land to the States for the advancement of education. The United States has no schools or colleges or universities, although it has a department of education, which collects statistics and disseminates information, and is useful in many other ways. There is a movement making to carry out a plan of Washington's and Jefferson's for the establishment of a national university at the seat of government, but thus far nothing definite has been achieved.

As for the States, each of which has its own educational policy, very few of them adopt the secular policy of excluding the Bible and other agencies for teaching religion from their Schools. New York does it by custom rather than by law. Wisconsin, which has sixty per cent. of immigrants in its population, does it by a decision of its Supreme Court; but the children of that State are largely educated in the parochial schools of the Lutherans, Catholics, and a few other denominations. I am under the impression that Missouri follows a secular policy. Illinois is abandoning it from a conviction that it does just what Prof. Huxley predicted for it, viz., that it was "just as likely to produce a crop of unusually astute scoundrels as anything else." There has been prepared a text-book of religious and moral instruction, drawn mostly from the Bible, for use in the schools of Chicago, and introduced with general consent. In nearly all the States the Bible is a school text book. I am at the head of the largest boys' school in Pennsylvania. I am required by the law of the State, to read the Bible every day to the pupils of the school. Any other book may be used or omitted, but this is always in use. And the common practice is to sing religious hymns at the opening exercises of the schools, although this is not required.

It is a very common mistake to assume that the American theory and practice of Government, in separating Church from State, also divorced the State from religion. The Supreme Court of the United States accepts the maxim that "a tolerant Christianity is a part of the common law of the land." Those of the majority of the States have made similar declarations again and again. The courts of New York recently refused a charter to an organization which specified Sunday as its day of business, although the incorporators were Hebrews. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has declared that anything antagonistic to Christianity is against public policy. When a citizen of this State left money for the publication of irreligious literature, the State set the bequest aside, and gave the money to his heirs. Several of the States, in amending their Constitutions, have inserted clauses expressing their recognition of Almighty God as the supreme ruler. The nation and the States unite in proclaiming annual days of Thanksgiving every November; and at great emergencies they have proclaimed days of fasting and humiliation in which to implore God's mercy. Both appoint chaplains for the religious instruction of their military and naval forces, and for that of prisoners in their jails and penitentiaries. Both declare invalid any document executed on the Christian day of rest, and punish those who fail to observe that day by cessation from needless labour. Both commonly swear witnesses on the Bible, and always with the invocation of the name of "Almighty God, the searcher of all hearts."

Nothing of this involves any union or confusion of Church and State. It is assumed that the State has its own relations with God, independently of the Church, and that his authority is behind that of the civil ruler. It is not thought necessary therefore to act through any specific religious body, or to bestow favours upon any.

I am sir, Yours most truly,

ROBERT ELLIS THOMPSON.

Philadelphia, May 19th, 1898.

GRAND DUKE CYRIL'S DONATIONS.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—Some papers having made mistakes when stating the amount of money given by H.I.H. the Grand Duke Cyril to the City of Tokyo, &c., we have decided to let you know the exact amount which H.I.H. has deigned to give. It is as follows:—

	Yen
To Charity Organization in the City of Tokyo	500
To the Municipal Hospital of Yokohama...	200
To Zojoji Temple in Shiba (H.I.H. visited the Temple)...	150
To Sengakuji Temple at Takanawa (H.I.H. visited the graves of the 47 Ronins) ...	50

We are, yours respectfully,

Committee for the Reception of H.I.H. the Grand Duke Cyril.

Shiba Palace, Tokyo, 13th July.

A SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND.

Amid the barren clash and jangle of creeds, the futile speculations of philosophies that lead us nowhere, and the cynical selfishness of the indifferent, it is refreshing to find—what happily may still be found everywhere—quiet, unobtrusive practical work conceived in the highest spirit of the religion most of us profess. Here, in Japan, we have happily labour of this practical type, and it has probably done more towards such progress as the Western religion has made than all the arguments of theologians and all the dicta of dogmatists. Among such effort a place—and a very high place—must be accorded to the work originated and, with the assistance of a few others, carried on for some years in Yokohama by Mrs. Draper. This excellent lady was some years ago struck with the miserable condition of the blind, of whom there are said to be some 150,000 in Japan. Anywhere blindness must be regarded as one of the greatest natural calamities human flesh is heir to, but in Japan the condition of these unfortunate people is exceptionally miserable. For them it is not merely physical but mental and moral night. Deprived of the opportunity of healthy exercise and destitute of mental resources and consolations, they have a more than ordinary tendency to yield to vicious influences; and it is said that the masters who employ them are often an impelling rather than a restraining force.

Influenced by a desire to do something for the good of this unfortunate class, Mrs. Draper in 1892 commenced a school for the blind at Ushizaka. In a short time the accommodation was found insufficient for the number of pupils, and a larger house at Umegayecho was taken. The curriculum is simple, but the instruction given must be very valuable to the pupils, not only in enabling them to earn a living but in lightening the mental darkness which would otherwise claim them for its own. They learn "acupuncture," massage, geography, history, Bible singing, and the Koto. The school, in fact, meets a want which the authorities have been regrettably tardy in supplying, and which even now, in spite of schools in Tokyo, Kyoto, and Gifu, is but very inadequately met. It is a charity which should appeal to the philanthropic of all shades of opinion, and, once its good work is sufficiently known, funds ought to be readily forth-coming to meet the demands already made for its expansion.

An interested audience, chiefly of ladies, gathered on Friday afternoon in Van Schaick's Hall to witness the performances of the scholars and hear an account of the progress of the school. The Rev. Dr. Meacham presided, and after devotions by the Rev. E. S. Booth, made a few appropriate remarks eulogistic of the object of the meeting. Then were given Japanese songs and recitations, an English song (which did not sound at all English), and a dialogue, all by pupils of the school. Then came the well-known sacred solo, "The holy city," by Miss Hayashi. Her rendering of it came as a perfect revelation to one who knew nothing of the musical powers of the Japanese further than those shown in the somewhat gruesome performances in the theatres and other places of amusement. Miss Hayashi has a singularly sweet and highly cultivated voice, and she sang with a purity of accent and a depth of feeling that indicated a marvellous command of the English language as well as of musical technique. Mrs. Payne and Mrs. Mollison also sang, and when it is said that they fully maintained the high reputation they have as vocalists in Yokohama it will be understood that the musical programme was an enjoyable one. Miss Dickinson obliged with a charmingly played violin solo and Mr. Ellis acted as accompanist.

During the afternoon an address was given by Bishop Cranston, who has newly arrived in Japan from Canada, and the report was read, stating that 162 persons had passed through the school, and 25 were at present being instructed. Twenty-seven of the pupils had been baptised.

The afternoon concluded with an exhibition in dictation by blind pupils, who by means of the Braillé system took down short passages from a Japanese book, and afterwards read them aloud for the edification of the company. It was a most interesting afternoon, and the most indifferent spectator could not help being impressed by the valuable nature of the work which is being carried on by this school.

JAPAN ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

[By C. W. Hurtt.]

Among the many influences that have contributed to make Japan different from what she was fifty years ago, Christianity holds a very important place. Twenty-five years ago, the M. E. Church of the United States feeling her responsibility in the Christianizing of Japan, began her work here. R. S. Maclay, then a missionary in China, was appointed to superintend the work, and he, with J. E. Davison, Julius Soper, M. E. Harris, and J. H. Correll, became the Nestor of Methodism in Japan. This week we are celebrating the twenty fifth anniversary of the founding of the Japanese M. E. Mission, and, thinking that a report of the proceedings may prove of interest to your readers, I send you an account of the three days' session. The services which will be followed by our annual conference session, began on Saturday, July 9th, in Yokohama First M. E. Church with a consecration meeting, led by Rev. Hawasumi, which was full of interest to the large number present. On Sunday a.m. we assembled at 9 a.m. in the new church now being erected in Honcho. This new building, which bids fair to be one of the best churches in Japan, is not yet completed, but was decorated, for this occasion, with flags and potted plants. This meeting, under the leadership of Rev. M. Yamaka, took the form of the class meeting so dear to Methodists, and prayer singing and testimonies were in order until 10.30 a.m., when the Rev. Julius Soper preached from Psalms 118 12, the anniversary sermon. Dr. Soper referred briefly to the many changes that have taken place in the twenty-five years in which he has been connected with the work, and preached a sermon vigorous in thought. It was listened to with the closest attention. In the afternoon Bishop Cranston gave a short address on "World Wide Methodism," which elicited many compliments. This was followed by a sermon by the Rev. M. E. Harris, who spoke in his usual masterly eloquent manner. In the evening the house was again crowded to hear Rev. Y. Honda on the "Religious situation of today," and Hon. Taro Ando in an address on The Outlook of Christianity in Japan." On the whole the day was an intensely interesting one, not only from its association with past events, but also from the hopeful pictures that were drawn by those who are interested in Japan's future. Monday a.m. the day's session began with a devotional service at 8.30 a.m. led by Rev. C. Nagano. "The Material Conditions in Japan 25 years ago," were fittingly portrayed by Mr. Sen Tsuda, and this was followed by "The Political Condition of Japan 25 years ago" by Rev. S. Matsumoto. Next came Rev. J. Davison with an interesting paper on "The Religious condition of Japan 25 years ago." Two papers from absent brethren, "Foundation Laying" by R. S. Maclay, D.D. and "Early Experiences" by J. H. Correll, D.D. were also of much interest to all present. Dr. Correll, in his paper, referred to Mr. Nagasawa Yaemon, who, 25 years ago, was in the employ of the Bible Society, and to the surprise of many and the pleasure of all, this brother, now eighty-one years old, was introduced and made a short speech. Rev. D. S. Spencer read an interesting paper embracing "A Historical Review of 25 years work," and the meeting closed with the Doxology. At 2 o'clock when the friends reassembled with Rev. T. Yamaka in the chair, Rev. M. S. Vail, connected with the Chensai Gakkau at Nagasaki, read a paper on beginnings, and Rev. J. O. Spencer, of the Eiwa Gakko at Aoyama, Tokyo, also read an interesting article on "Development." These were followed by papers by Miss R. Russell, of Nagasaki, and Miss R. J. Watson, of Aoyama, on "Female Education." The Girls' Schools at these two places are in a prosperous condition and all indications point to a decided advance in this department of the work. Prof. M. Takagi, Ph.D., followed these papers with a brief but telling speech on "Opportunities." It is certain that the ultimate results of all evangelistic and school work in Japan depend largely on our Japanese brethren themselves. That there are many and difficult problems to solve goes without saying, but we trust that with wise and careful oversight the difficulties arising from time to time will be overcome, and that the material and spiritual advancement of the people of Japan may come hand in hand. The great peril to the Japanese at this juncture of affairs is that many expect to secure the results of a Christian civilization without using the means. It needs no long drawn out argument to prove that that is impossible. On Tuesday evening, a reception to the fraternal delegates was held in the Church, at which the following named gentlemen made addresses: Rev. M. Mitani, until recently pastor of the Japanese M. E. Church in San Francisco, who will now enter the work here. Brother Mitani has made an excellent record in San Francisco and will be an able man for the work in Japan. Rev. J. H. Worley, Ph.D., of Foochow, extended greeting from the Foochow conference in a brief speech, and Dr. Harris followed with an address, which was a pleasure to all who heard it. It is a matter for congratulation that His Imperial Majesty the Emperor on Tuesday conferred upon Dr. Harris, the decoration of the 4th class of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure in recognition of his services to Japanese on the Pacific Coast of the United States. While Dr. Harris is not the first missionary who has been decorated by the Emperor, he is the first one who, though never having been in the employ of the Japanese Government, has still enjoyed that honour. In the case of Dr. Harris, it is a recognition of a Christian life and Christian principles. We rejoice in this event, not only because of the honour that has come to one of our number, but also because it shows such a liberal progressive policy on the part of H.M. the Emperor and those associated with him in the government. Dr. Harris' address was followed by one in Chinese by the Rev. Huong Pau Seng, a presiding elder of the Foochow Conference. This was interpreted by a Japanese brother who read the Chinese characters. For those of us who understand Chinese not at all, and Japanese only imperfectly, this was decidedly agreeable. Several others spoke briefly, among them being Rev. Mr. Smith, of the Methodist Protestant Church, Rev. C. F. Kupper Ph.D., of the Central Chinese Mission, and others. These greetings were responded to in a few well-chosen words by Rev. J. C. Davison and Rev. E. Aibara. During the evening choice music was rendered by a quartet composed of Misses Cranston, Spencer and Allen, and Mrs. Alexander, and added greatly to the pleasure of the occasion. After the benediction by Bishop Cranston the meeting came to a close, and the friends dispersed, happy in the good results already attained and hoping for more of them in the future.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

At 9 o'clock a.m. July 13th, the meeting was called to order by Bishop Cranston. After the congregation had sung a hymn Dr. Harris led in prayer. The Bishop then gave a brief address basing his remarks on Isaiah 32:2, after which the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. The Bishop was assisted in administering the Sacrament by the Japan Conference Presiding Elders, Dr. Worley and Rev. Huong Pau Seng, members of the Foochow Conference. At the conclusion of this service the Conference was formally organized by the election of H. B. Johnson, and H. Kawasumi as English and Japanese secretaries respectively, E. R. Fulkerson and W. Ishikawa statistical secretaries, Julius Soper treasurer, S. Ogata, M. Takesugi, and T. Ukai interpreters. The following Presiding Elders reported their Districts: G. F. Draper, Hakodate District; Kurimura, Kagoshima District; J. C. Davison Nagasaki District. The following brethren were introduced: Dr. M. C. Harris, of the California Conference, Dr. C. F. Kuffer, of the Central China Mission, A. M. Brooks and C. W. Huett, late transfers from the Atlantic and Idaho conferences to the Japan Conference. The conference then adjourned until 2 p.m. At 2 p.m. the Conference reassembled and after prayer by Dr. T. Ukai Bishop Cranston took the chair. The roll of the appointments was read and the preachers handed in their statistical reports. At this point the Bishop introduced Dr. Worley and Hvong Pau Seng, of the Foochow Conference, and Rev. S. Shimidzu and Rev. A. Mito, of the Evangelical Association. The two latter made brief addresses, which were responded to by the Bishop. Nagoya District was called and D. S. Spencer, the Presiding Elder, read his report. Sapporo District was called, and Charles Bishop, the Presiding Elder, handed his report to the Japanese Secretary, who read it. Next the list of the Standing Committees was submitted by G. F. Draper for the Presiding Elders and approved by the conference. The Conference adjourned at 4 o'clock with the benediction by Bishop. At 8 p.m. the anniversary of the Home Missionary Society was observed. Rev. F. Ukai preached an eloquently earnest sermon, which was enjoyed very much by those present.

THE SITUATION AT MANILA.

(From the Hongkong Daily Press.)

Manila Bay, 26th June, 1891.

The advent of the Bonaventure, followed by the Iphigenia, has had an invigorating effect on the feelings of Americans as well as Britishers. Two of the German men-of-war have gone out to Morivales to coal and may go on to some other port, but I am not definitely informed. The French ship Pascal left on Friday, but the flagship of the station, the Bayard, arrived on Saturday. It is not true that the Archbishop escaped, as stated by Shanghai papers. He is still here, and very much here!

Admiral Dewey does not confine his labours to the Olympia. He goes to Cavite almost every day, or at least every few days. Nothing misses his eyes. While he is instructing Commander Wood, of the Petrel, who has charge of the work at the Navy Yard and Arsenal, or Lieut. Hodges, of the Nanshan, to do one thing, he is looking about for more work to be done and invariably has a new suggestion when he has finished the first. By his order and by the speed and excellence of its execution, the Navy Yard, Arsenal, forts, and barracks have been converted in a wonderfully short time from confusion and chaos to neatness and system. Everything is in readiness so that the troops can make it their headquarters if they wish and be most comfortable. Just outside of the Cavite entrance to the Navy Yard, or the gate called "Camp Dewey," is a large level open space of ground, nearly five acres in area, which will make an admirable drill or exercise ground. It would also be an admirable field for cricket, football, and lawn tennis, if it were evened off in a few spots here and there. From present indications, however there will be little occasion to use it for any such purpose during the next six weeks. On one side of this great campus are barracks used now by the insurgents as prisons and filled with fully 600 Spanish regulars. Recently Admiral Dewey and Consul Williams crossed it on their way to inspect the town. In some way the prisoners learned that the Admiral was passing and could be seen. It took but a minute for the word to be passed along. There was a grand rush and scramble to the windows. Men piled on top of men and pulled each other away in a mighty effort to get a glimpse of the Almirante Americano who had so completely defeated their Admiral, whom they deemed absolutely invincible.

At first this rough and tumble contest was thought by the guards to be a wild attempt to escape and the signal was given to call help, but in a moment the manner and comment of the prisoners proved that they were only satisfying their curiosity as to the "Unconquerable American," as one Spanish officer saluted Admiral Dewey. Strange to say, the remarks of Spanish officers and privates overheard by those who were near contained only kind or complimentary words, while the looks on their faces were those of wonderment and admiration rather than curiosity and hatred. Though Dewey was the cause of all their misfortunes in a way, they showed genuine respect for him, almost as a child would for a parent who punished him severely for wrong doing. It was the first time they had seen him, and they probably will not have another opportunity. For hours afterwards Spanish soldiers, from Brigadier General Garcia Pena down to privates, were talking over this extraordinary man who had no fear for Spanish hosts on land or sea.

The relations between Admiral Dewey and General Aguinaldo are perfectly agreeable—that is, there are no differences and misunderstandings as to policy and methods. There is no union of forces or action of the American Naval force in co-operation with the insurgent troops, but there is a friendly feeling between them which is in a sense equal to an unofficial alliance. Any stories of inability to agree or to support one other are unfounded. Consul Williams, whose tact is never wanting in dealing with the insurgents, conducts most of the exchanges of opinion or negotiations between Admiral Dewey and General Aguinaldo. He confirms my statement about pleasant relations.

If anyone in Hongkong doubts the strength of the rebel movement he should go within their lines nearly every day for a week as I do, and the facts of the case would soon be demonstrated beyond question or quibble. Aguinaldo has more able-bodied volunteers than he can need. They come from all over Luzon and from every section that is within a few days' journey by land or water from the insurgent headquarters. To-day I saw 500 men from Bataanga and yesterday 200 from Balucan that had come freely and wanted arms that they might go into the field. A rich man in Pampangas has sent in great quantities of rice. Another in Cavite supplies cattle and still another brings the actual cash. $5,000 arrived to-day from men living in Bataan. At first they would not accept any receipt, but Aguinaldo, who is apparently trying to do things in a business way, insisted on giving them one, saying that when the war was over the amount would be paid back. These are passing incidents that indicate earnestness on the part of the people.

I asked General Aguinaldo the other day what he expected—what he hoped - would happen when the war was over and did he anticipate the establishment of an independent Philippine republic. He hesitated in his usually reticent manner and then said:—"It would be very indiscreet for me to express my hopes about the future before the war is over and when matters are so unsettled as now, but I will say that we Philippines have the greatest confidence in the fairness of the United States. We trust the American people and we know that if they are at the back of us we will be able to obtain and hold our full rights and be respected by all the great Powers of Europe. The Americans have righted a wrong in Cuba and they will in the Philippines."

The General has fully 6,000 well armed men in the field whom he is massing as fast as possible around Manila, bringing them in from lesser places as they are captured. Had he the arms to equip them he could send a force into Manila that would seize the place like a swarm of bees covering a piece of honey.

The lot of Aguinaldo's followers who came down from Hongkong on the Kwong Hoi were mostly sent to the front without any delay and will experience a very different kind of life than they enjoyed in Hongkong. Most of them may be patriots and willing to stand any hardship required, but I met to-day one of them who looked and acted as if he wished he were back in Hongkong. Warfare was evidently too much of a reality for him. He came dressed like a dandy and expecting some soft billet in Aguinaldo's office. He received a commission to go at once to the rear of Manila and look after the supplies for the rebel troops, which meant also that he might even have to take a turn as cook! Two days were enough. He is back in Cavite alleging illness and fever and looks already as if he had been in the backwoods for six months. He is well known in Hongkong, but at the special request of one of the General's secretaries I refrain from giving his name. I understand that he has been assigned to a position as messenger between the outer and inner sanctums of the General's headquarters! But this is not typical. By far the majority of these men accept their orders without question and faithfully execute them. They at least seem quite a match for their Spanish foes.

Quite a severe engagement between the Spanish regulars and insurgents lent a little excitement to Thursday night. The Spaniards made their first notable attempt to drive back the rebels from their advanced position. Fully 1,500 of the former attacked the latter just south of Manila and tried to drive them from the trenches which the rebels captured a few days ago after a hard fight in which many were killed.

The insurgents numbered 700. At first it looked like victory for the insurgents, who met the advance of the Spaniards with an enfilading as well as direct fire. Then the Spaniards came up with reinforcements and seemed sure of carrying the rebel position and capturing the 700 as prisoners, but at the critical moment the rebels steadied and poured in such a strong fire that the Spaniards retreated and did not renew the attack. Had the Spaniards had a little more spirit and kept on they could surely have driven out the rebels, but in this as most other fights they show a lack of nerve when it is needed. Several lesser skirmishes have broken the monotony at other points, but they have not been decisive.

The insurgents won a double prize a few days ago. They captured a fine ship in Tayabas Bay and on her several hundred Spanish troops being conveyed from one point to another. Then Spanish soldiers made some resistance, in which a Lieutenant-Colonel was killed. The vessel's name is the Bohol. The insurgents are now collecting quite a fleet. They have three small steamers, several good launches, many cascos, and a few barges, but all of these are not at Manila, some being at Marivales and Subig.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Fires are seen almost every day at different points around Manila. They are started both by insurgents and Spaniards, and often get beyond their control. The rains that come down nearly every day do more to put out these fires than any body of men. The rains have been of advantage as they were badly needed. All cisterns and tanks are now filled which three weeks ago were empty.

Cavite presented a gay scene on Friday morning. The Philippinos in their zeal to show the spirit that is so strong these days did honour to the memory of Dr. Rizal, who was shot two years ago by the Spaniards, by appropriate exercises and display of troops together with religious ceremonies, including the opening of a school to be called Rizal College. Thousands of natives joined in the demonstration and mingled cheers for the cause of freedom from Spain with speeches eulogizing the dead patriot.

HONOURS FOR ADMIRAL DEWEY'S OFFICERS.

On the 2nd ult., the commanders of the vessels who fought with Admiral Dewey at Manila were substantially rewarded by the President. He sent their names to the Senate with the recommendation that they be advanced in their seniority numbers on the naval list. This means to each nearly one year nearer promotion to the next grade. Captain Frank Wildes, of the Boston by this change will jump over such excellent officers as Captain Crowninshield, who now rules over the Navigation Bureau, and steps into a position equal to that of "Fighting Bob" Evans, who is at present commanding the Iowa. Captain Coghlan of the Raleigh, will be advanced six numbers, which will place him just ahead of Captain Harrington, now Commander of the Puritan. Captain Gridley, who commanded the Olympia, ranked one number below Captain Coghlan, and he was also to be advanced six numbers. [On the 4th of June Captain Gridley died at Kobe.]

Captain Dyer, of the Baltimore, is to pass up seven steps on the naval list, a long jump, as he now stands No. 41 of forty-five captains in the service. He will jump over Captain Sigsbee, who commanded the Maine when it was blown up in Havana harbour on the night of February 15th.

Captain Lamberton, who, prior to his assignment to the Asiatic squadron, had been a commander, serving as Lighthouse Inspector, will under the complimentary advancement of seven numbers find a place in the list of captains about No. 41—the position vacated by Captain Dyer. Asa Walker, commanding the Concord, gets a jump of nine numbers, which will place him at No. 30 in the list of commanders. Edward P. Wood, commanding the Petrel, was No. 78 in the list of commanders. He was recommended to be advanced ten numbers.

ARRIVAL OF U.S. TRANSPORTS AT MANILA.

Hongkong, July 4.

The cruiser Charleston, convoying the transports Australia, City of Peking, and City of Sydney, arrived at Manila on the afternoon of June 30, the Baltimore having met the troopers at Cape Engaano and piloted them into Manila Bay. The new arrivals received an enthusiastic reception from the American ships, and immediately on arrival Admiral Dewey and Brigadier General Anderson had a conference. They were undecided whether to attack Manila at once or to await the arrival of the next brigade, expected to arrive at Manila in about a week. The troops were all in good health, and glad to be at the end of the long voyage.

The delay of the voyage was occasioned by finishing off another little job. At Honolulu, Captain Glass, of the Charleston, received sealed orders to proceed to the Island of Guam, in the Ladrones, and destroy the fortifications and any Spanish ships that might be there. On June 20, the ships arrived off the island of Guam, and entered the harbour of San Luis de Apra, the Charleston preceding the transports throwing 13 in. shells from her second battery at the old fort of Santa Cruz, at the head of the bay. The fort was evidently abandoned, as no reply was vouchsafed. A number of Spanish officers from Piti, the port of Agana, were made prisoners on boarding the cruiser, and sent ashore to notify the Governor of the Ladrone Islands to come on board the Charleston.

The authorities of the place were totally unaware of the existence of a state of war between Spain and the United States, and it is humorously suggested that the Governor on hearing the firing from the warship sent a boat off to apologise to the Captain for not returning the salute, as he had no powder. The authorities at any rate were taken entirely by surprise.

Later in the day, the Governor sent a letter by his secretary stating he would not board the foreign warship, and inviting Captain Glass to come ashore for a conference. Next morning a party of two hundred strong under command of a lieutenant landed at Piti, where they found the Governor-General Juan Marina with his staff. After a short parley the Governor surrendered Guam Island, with all the troops, stores, supplies munitions of war, and the whole group of the Ladrone Islands. The Governor was taken under protest on board, leaving orders for the troops at Agana to march down to Piti to be disarmed. In the afternoon a force of marines landed and took 54 Spanish soldiers prisoners, and a like number of native militia was disbanded. Fifty-four Mauser rifles and four Spanish flags were taken. The Spanish troops with the Governor and six officers were put on board the City of Sydney. The scene at Piti during the disarmament was affecting, many soldiers shedding tears when their arms were taken away. On the afternoon of 22nd June, Captain Glass landed and hoisted the U.S. flag over the fort at Santa Cruz, the Charleston saluting with twenty-one guns in token of American sovereignty over the Ladrone group. When nearing Manila, the German flagship steamed quite close to the transports, and came up the bay in their company close to the Olympia and saluted the flag of Admiral Dewey. The German ship then went over to the foreign men-of-war anchorage. There are still five German ships at Manila. On the voyage of the transports, Private Elias Hutchinson, M. Company, 2nd Oregon, died from appendicitis, on board the City of Sydney, and on June 24 was buried at sea.

THE KOBE INSURANCE CASE.

Mr. F. W. Playfair, H.B.M.'s Vice-Consul, at Kobe, sitting with Messrs. A De Ath, F. W. Hill, W. H. Gill, and H. S. Teverson, gave judgement on Monday in the action brought by Mr. Remegio Perez against the Imperial Insurance Company for recovery of a sum of yen 4,402.09 alleged to be due under a policy of insurance.

His Honour read the following judgment:—

"In this case both parties agreed to submit their difference to a sole arbitrator whose award was not to be subject to review by any Court of Justice or of any nature or kind whatsoever.

"The award appears to be fair and honest, and within the terms of the submission; there has been no valid reason adduced for setting it aside, so the award must stand.

"And it is adjudged that the plaintiff recover against the defendants such amount as shall be found due by a special referee to be agreed on by parties, or in case of their non-agreement, appointed by the Court, for the loss and damage by fire suffered by the plaintiff on or about the 15th day of January last past, and costs to be taxed."—Hiogo News.

LATEST TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

REBELLION IN CHINA.
CAPTURE OF IMPORTANT CITIES.
LIKIN OFFICIALS MURDERED.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Shanghai, July 11.

The rebels in Kwangsi have captured Moning and Tienpak and are now surrounding Wuchuensien, in Kwangtung. Many likin officials have been killed. The situation at Wuchow is considered so critical that there is an exodus of wealthy Chinese citizens.

TRAGEDY ON A CHINESE RIVER STEAMER.

Captain Thulmann, of the steamer Dosing, shot his compradore dead at Wuchow. He was arrested, and, claiming American citizenship, was taken down river and will be tried at Canton to-day.

THE WAR IN THE PHILIPPINES.
THE ACTION OF GERMANY.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Shanghai, July 13, 4.35 p.m.

The crew of the Spanish steamer Filipinas, hitherto hiding in Subic Bay, revolted and killed their officers. They then handed the vessel over to the insurgents.

The second detachment of American troops are expected on the seventeenth.

The Germans are fraternising with the Spaniards.

GERMANS INTERFERE WITH INSURGENTS.

CAPTURE OF GRANDE ISLAND.

Shanghai, July 13, 6.22 p.m.

The Manila insurgents attempted to bombard the fort on Grande Island, Subic Bay, when the German cruiser Irene intervened. Admiral Dewey at once sent the cruisers Raleigh and Concord and captured the island, which he then handed over to the rebels. Four hundred Spaniards were taken prisoner.

DYSENTERY AMONG U.S. TROOPS.

One hundred and fifty American soldiers are down with dysentery.

(FROM THE "JAPAN TIMES.")

THE WAR.

CERVERA'S LAST SHIP SUNK.

London, July 8.

The Reina Mercedes, the last remaining ship of Admiral Cervera's Squadron, attempted to leave Santiago at midnight on Monday. She was immediately sunk by the American fleet and lies partly submerged at the entrance to the harbour.

The Palace at Madrid is especially guarded.

It is expected that Marshal Martinez Campos will form a Cabinet and propose peace.

TRUCE AT SANTIAGO.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS GOING ON BETWEEN WASHINGTON AND MADRID.

London, July 9.

Firing has not been resumed at Santiago, though the period of truce is supposed to have ended on Thursday. Peace negotiations are proceeding between Washington and Madrid.

LIEUTENANT HOBSON RELEASED.

Lt. Hobson and others of the volunteer crew who took part in the sinking of Merrimac and were taken prisoners by Admiral Cervera, were exchanged for Spanish prisoners and released.

PEACE RUMOURS DENIED.

CAMARA GOES HOME.

SANTIAGO ABOUT TO CAPITULATE.

London, July 11.

The peace rumours are denied in Madrid. Admiral Camara's squadron is returning to Spain. General Miles has sailed for Santiago. General Shafter telegraphs to Hon. Mr. Alger, American War Minister, indicating that negotiations for the capitulation of Santiago are proceeding.

FIGHTING RESUMED AT SANTIAGO.

UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER REFUSED.

THE POPE ATTEMPTS TO MEDIATE.

London, July 12.

Hostilities were resumed at Santiago on Sunday, the Spaniards refusing to surrender unconditionally. The peace movement in Spain is becoming notably apparent, but the main difficulty in the way of peace is the military ardour of General Blanco's undefeated troops.

The Vatican is trying to induce Spain to agree to a ten days' armistice.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SANTIAGO BOMBARDMENT RESUMED.
THE CITY STILL HOLDS OUT.

London, July 13.

General Miles and Staff have arrived at Santiago. The naval bombardment of Santiago was resumed on Monday, and lasted two hours, when Shafter signalled that the stock of shells was falling short. The last shot struck a church in the heart of the city, wherein was a large store of munitions, which exploded.

DISUNION IN MADRID: CABINET RESIGNS.

A telegram to the Times from Madrid states that the Cabinet, being hopelessly divided, resigned. The formation of a Cabinet with a strong military element capable of maintaining order at home and securing peace is expected.

RAIN AND "YELLOW JACK" STOP THE WAR.

London, July 14.

Torrential rains at Santiago are preventing the Americans from mounting siege guns. Yellow fever has appeared at Caimamera, Guantanamo, and elsewhere on the Cuban coast.

THE SPANISH CABINET CRISIS

The Cabinet crisis at Madrid continues. The formation of a Ministry hangs fire.

THE LA BOURGOGNE DISASTER.

DISGRACEFUL BEHAVIOUR OF THE CREW.

London, July 8th.

The number of lives lost by the La Bourgogne collision is estimated at 526. Frightful confusion and fighting ensued in the effort to get into the boats. No attempt was made to save the women and children. The saved include 108 of the crew, who seized the boats and repulsed the passengers.

HAWAIIAN ANNEXATION.

AMERICAN SENATE APPROVES.

The American Senate has passed a Resolution in favour of the annexation of Hawaii.

President McKinley has signed the resolution annexing Hawaii, and a warship has forthwith been despatched to hoist the American flag there.

RUSSIA AND CHINA.

London, July 9th.

M. Michael De Giers has been appointed Russian Minister to China, replacing M. de Speyer, who is transferred to Rio.

BRITISH COLONIAL PENNY POSTAGE.

London, July 14.

The Duke of Norfolk, Postmaster-General, announces the establishment of penny postage between Britain, Canada, Newfoundland, the Cape, and Natal, also the Crown Colonies, should they be desirous of joining the Union.

THE DREYFUS AFFAIR.

ESTERHAZY ARRESTED: WHOLE CASE RE-OPENED.

In consequence of a speech by the Minister of War in the French Chamber, in which he declared that Dreyfus was undeniably guilty, the whole controversy has been re-opened. Major Esterhazy has been arrested.

(Received by the Fiji.)

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY.

Söul, July 9.

Mr. Kim Chai-pong, ex-Chief of Police, Mr. Kim Chai-yun, Commander of a regiment, and Mr. Ye Chung-ka were arrested yesterday on the charge of conspiring against the Government. Mr. An Keng-su and others who are under similar suspicion have fled.

FRENCH MISSION DESTROYED.

Peking, July 9.

In the course of a mutiny some soldiers at Pao-ting-fu set fire to a French Mission and destroyed it.

SETTLEMENT OF SHASHI AFFAIR.

Peking, July 10.

The negotiations over the Shashi affair have been concluded. China is to pay yen 15,000 as indemnity, besides yen 75,000, being a moiety of the expenditure of the Settlement Embankment Repair to Japan, which has also secured certain concessions in connection with the Foreign Settlements of Yo-chow, Fu-nyng, and Fu-chow.

RIOT IN KIANG-SI.

A riot has broken out here and the situation is very serious.

NEW POLICE CHIEF.

Söul, July 9.

Ye Chong-kung has been appointed Chief of Police. He will conduct with rigour the arrests of the suspected.

CABINET CHANGE.

Söul, July 10.

Min Yong-ki has been transferred to the Ministership of Finance, while Sin Sun-tak has been appointed Minister of War.

CONSPIRACY TO DETHRONE THE EMPEROR.

Rumour is being actively circulated that the cause of the present arrests is attributed to the design to dethrone the Emperor and to instal the Crown Prince in his stead.

POLICE DESPATCHED TO ARREST MIN YONG-CHU.

Last evening several policemen were dispatched to Min Yong-chu's villa at Hanku.

YE CHONG KUNG DISMISSED.

Ye Chong-kung has been dismissed and Yung Yong-yol (In Yu-retsu) has been appointed his successor as Chief of Police.

THE MEMBERS OF THE CONSPIRACY.

A large number of well-known Koreans are implicated in the present affair. A majority of the old pro-Chinese faction are among the suspected. The case is assuming a grave aspect.

ARREST OF MIN YONG CHU.

Seoul, July 11.

As previously announced, Min Yong-chu has been arrested at his villa in Honku.

FURTHER ARREST OF PROMINENT MEN.

Pak Ting-yong, the Home Minister, and a few other influential prersonages have also been arrested.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES IN KOREA.

Söul, July 12.

Ye Tai-men has been appointed Minister of the Imperial Household, while the War Minister Sim has been instructed to act also as provisional Home Minister.

JAPANESE SILVER "YEN."

Söul, July 13.

It has been decided that Japanese silver yen shall be negotiable both in public and private transactions.

CONSOLATION TO PRISONERS.

The Emperor has despatched messengers to Min Yong-chun, Pack Chong-yang, and others recently taken into custody, and conveyed to them words of consolation. These prisoners are receiving liberal treatment.

MEMORIAL OF THE INDEPENDENT ASSOCIATION.

The Independent Association has addressed a memorial to the Emperor advising him to abdicate.

THE PHILIPPINE REPUBLIC.

(From a Chinese Source.)

Hongkong, July 8.

Aguinaldo has issued a proclamation announcing the birth of the "Philippine Republic,"—which act will greatly embarrass Admiral Dewey and the U S. programme generally.

(From the "Shanghai Mercury.")

MANILA NOT YET TAKEN.

Manila, July 4.

Manila is still in the hands of the Spaniards. We have had very heavy rains and the country is flooded and roads impassable, which has very much delayed operations.

WATER SUPPLY CUT OFF.

Manila, July 4.

The insurgents have cut off the water supply from Manila.

(From the "N.-C. Daily News.")

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE SPANISH FLEET AT SANTIAGO

Hongkong, July 5.

Admiral Sampson has destroyed every vessel in Admiral Cervera's squadron in a running fight of sixty miles lasting three and a half hours. Admiral Cervera and 1,300 men have been made prisoners.

(From Japanese Papers.)

SMALL POX.

Aomori, July 13.

Small-pox is prevalent in this locality. There are 40 patients at present.

COAL MINE ON FIRE.

Sapporo, July 12.

The fire at a coal mine at Horonai is still raging. Mr. Inouye, manager of the Hokkaido Coal Mining and Railway Company left yesterday for the scene of the conflagration.

ALLEGED EMBEZZLEMENT.

Otsu, July 14.

A clerk named Hattori Toyotaro, of the local office at Shiga-gori, has been arrested charged with embezzling yen 1,420 contributed to the Red Cross Society.

PAK YONG HO AND KIN YU-GEN.

Nagasaki, July 14.

Mr. Kin Yu-gen, ex-Secretary of the Korean Cabinet, has arrived here, and had an interview with Mr. Pak Yong Ho. During their meeting three policemen waited at the door of the room. Pak left to-day for Tokyo.

FREIGHTS RAISED.

Nagasaki, July 14.

The Steamship Union has decided to raise freights from to-day.

MAIL STEAMERS.

THE NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rohilla 2	M. July 18
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co	Em. of China	M. July 25
America	O. & O. Co	Coptic 2	Tu. July 26
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Glenfarg	Tu. July 26
Hongkong	M. M. Co.	——	W. July 27
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	Th. July 28
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Victoria	F. July 29
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Hohenzollern	W. Aug. 3
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Belgic	Th. Aug. 4

1 Left Hongkong on the 9th inst.
2 Left San Francisco on the 7th July.

THE NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Tacoma, Wash....	N. P. Co.	Tacoma	F. July 15
America	O. & O. Co.	Doric	Sa. July 16
Europe, via S'hai.	M. M. Co.	Melbourne	W. July 20
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Sanuki Maru	W. July 20
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	M. July 25
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	W. July 27
Hongkong	P. & O. Co	Rohilla	W. July 27
America	P. M. Co.	Glenfarg	W. July 27
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	F. July 29
Hongkong	N. D. L.	Hohenzollern	F. Aug 5

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHESS.

All Communications to be addressed to the CHESS EDITOR.

The Yokohama and the Tokyo Chess Clubs are closed during the summer months.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 375.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1—P to B 3	1—P to B 3
2—Q to R 8 ch	2—K to B 4
3—Q to Q 5 mate.	if 2—K to K 6
3—Kt to B sq mate
	1—Kt to Kt 6
2—Q to R 7 ch	2—K to K 6
3—Q to Q 3 mate, etc.

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., D D., Marco and J.B. (Nikko).

PROBLEM No. 379.

By A. F. MACKENZIE, Jamaica

First Prize, British Chess Magazine Problem Tourney, 1898.

White mates in three moves.

THE VIENNA INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS.

This great Tournament of Chess-Masters was opened in Vienna on June 1st. The first round was played in the following order :—

Marco v. Maroczy, Schlechter v. Halprin, Showalter v. Schwarz, Blackburne v. Lipke, Pillsbury v. Caro, Janowski v. Baird, Schiffers v Trenchard, Tarrasch v. Burn, Alapin v. Walbrodt, and Steinitz v. Tschigorin.

The result is :—Marco and Maroczy drew; Halprin beat Schlechter; Showalter beat Schwarz; Blackburne and Lipke drew; Pillsbury defeated Caro; Janowski got the best of Baird; Schiffers and Trenchard drew; Tarrasch and Burn drew; Alapin beat Walbrodt, and Steinitz scored from Tschigorin. It will be seen that three of the American players—Steinitz, Pillsbury, and Showalter—won their games.

At the time of going to press we have received the score of three rounds, showing the following results :—

	Won.	Lost.		Won.	Lost.
Alapin	2½	½	Pillsbury	3	0
Baird*	0	2	Schiffers*	1	1
Blackburne	1½	1½	Schlechter	1	2
Burn	1	2	Schwarz	½	2½
Caro	1	2	Showalter	3	0
Halprin	1½	1½	Steinitz	2½	½
Janowski	1½	1½	Tarrasch	2½	½
Lipke	1½	1½	Trenchard	½	2½
Marco	1½	1½	Tschigorin	1	2
Maroczy	1	2	Walbrodt	1	2

* Adjourned game in hand.

The Times, Philadelphia, publishes the following interesting data concerning the Masters who play in this event.

Simon Alapin, born 1866, a strong Russian player.

D. Graham Baird, born 1854, of the Manhattan team.

J. H. Blackburne, born 1842, the English champion.

Amos Burn, born 1848, the second English player.

H. Caro, a German Englishman, who played on the cable team.

R. Charousek, born 1873, the Hungarian champion and winner of Berlin Congress of 1897.

Adolph Halpfin, a strong Vienna player.

D. Janowski, born 1868, the French champion.

Paul Lipke, born 1870, the second prize winner at Leipsic Congress of 1894.

James Mason, born 1849, won third prize at Vienna in 1882.

George Marco, born 1865, winner of recent Vienna Tourney.

Geza Maroczy, born 1870, winner of second prize in Nuremberg, 1896.

H. N. Pillsbury, born 1872, winner of the Hastings Tourney 1895, and champion of America.

E. Schiffers, born 1850, a veteran Russian master.

Carl Schlechter, born 1874, strong Vienna player.

J. W. Showalter, born 1860, ex champion of America.

W. Steinitz, born 1836, champion of the world 1866 to 1894.

S. Tarrasch, born 1862, German champion.

M. I. Tschigorin, born 1850, Russian champion.

K. A. Walbrodt, born 1871, German master.

GAME No. 408.

Baird, believes P to K Kt 3 and B to K Kt 2 to be an effective and advantageous answer to the From gambit attack. If so, P to K 4 can hardly safely be played in answer to K B P 4, and the value of the new opening will become further enhanced. Appended is a lively and interesting game contested between Baird and Lasker :—

FROM GAMBIT.

White—Bird.		Black—Lasker.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P KB4	P K4	19 P QB4	B B3
2 PxP	P Q3	20 Q K2	P QKt4
3 PxP	BxP	21 P Kt3	PxP
4 P KKt3	P KB4	22 Kt PxP	B R5
5 P Q3	Kt KB3	23 R Kt-q	R QKt-q
6 P QB3	Kt B3	24 Kt Q2	BxPch
7 B Kt2	Kt K4	25 K K2	B R5
8 Kt Q2	Q K2	26 R R2	B QB7ch
9 Kt B-q	B Q2	27 RxR	RxR
10 B B4	Castles KR	28 P Q4	PxP
11 BxKt	BxB	29 PxP	R K q
12 Q B2	K R-q	30 Q KB q	R R8
13 B R3	QR QKt-sq	31 P B5	QxQP
14 Q Q2	KR K-q	32 QxR	BxQ
15 P KR3	Q Q3	33 Kt Kt3	BxKt
16 K B2	P QB4	34 PxB	QxBP
17 P K3	B K4	35 Resigns.
18 QR Q-q	QR Q-q

At move 10 White should not have disdained ■ takes Q Kt P, and at move 14 or 15 the natural move of Kt to K B 3 was the proper one, but White plays with a timidity quite unusual with him.—Baird.

THE EXPERT AND THE PROBLEMATIST.

A good story is told in Der Schachfreund, Berlin, of a Chess-expert who was in the habit of giving any player the odds of all the moves he could make in five minutes. One day a stranger undertook to play the Master with the five minutes' odds. The stranger made sixteen moves in less than the time given, and used up the rest of his time by moving his King back and forth. When the five minutes were up, the expert looked at the position, but did not attempt to play. "What do you want?" he said. "I am mated in two, whatever move I make." The stranger was a distinguished problematist, and the moves he made were as follows :—

1 P QR4	5 P Q4	9 QR R3	13 P KKt3
2 Kt QR3	6 Kt Q2	10 Kt K4	14 B R3
3 P R4	7 KR R3	11 Q Q2	15 Q B4
4 Kt B3	8 QKt B4	12 RR KB3	16 QR K3

GAME No. 409.

The latest of London champions is Mr. C. Schulz, who has won the championship of the large and thriving Spread Eagle Chess Club after a hard fight against some of the best players of the club. We append a game in which Mr. Schulz was one of the two consulting players.

GAME PLAYED IN A CONSULTATION MATCH.

White—C. Schulz, G. Frankland		Black—C. W. Bowles, S. Stewart.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	15 PxP	Q B4
2 KKt B3	QKt B3	16 B Q3	Q Q2
3 P Q4	PxP	17 Kt K4	P B3
4 KtxP	B B4	18 B KB4	Kt K4
5 B K3	Q B3	19 Q Kt4	Q Kt5
6 P QB3	KKt K2	20 B K13	KtxB
7 B QKt5	Castles(a)	21 RxKt	P B4
■ Castles	KtxKt (b)	22 BxP(f)	QxKt
9 PxKt	B Kt3	23 BxR	QxR
10 Kt B3	P Q3	24 Q K7	B Q5(g)
11 Q Q2	Kt Kt3(c)	25 Q K8	P KR3
12 QR Q-q	P B3	26 R K-q	B B3
13 B Kt5	Q K3	27 B K7ch	And White won (h)
14 P Q5(d)	PxP(e)

NOTES.

(a) P to QR 3 may be played here; also B to Kt 3.

(b) This does not seem very satisfactory, though frequently adopted. If B takes Kt, 9—P takes B, P to Q 4 gives Black an open game, though he has to exercise care for a time.

(c) This curtails the powers of movement of the queen. Q to Kt 3 with a view to playing P to K B 4 looks reasonable.

(d) Good play. White obtains an advantage by blocking the QP.

(e) White's preparatory move of 12—Q R to Q sq shows that he had anticipated this line of play. If Q to K sq, or Q to Q 2, then 15—B to Q R 4 with 16—P takes P to follow.

(f) Again a pretty combination, in which White gives up a piece for the sake of position.

(g) Q to Q 5 would not have been an improvement on this move.

(h) If K to R 2 28—B takes B, to be followed by Q to K 7.

NOTES.

We regret to find that the projected cable match between the American Colleges and the English Universities is abandoned for this year owing to the difficulty at the end of the chess season of selecting teams and training them for the encounter. It is hoped, however, that next year this interesting match will take place.

The American Chess Magazine suggests to the Chess-players of the United States that arrangement be made to have a grand tournament during the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition which opened in Omaha on June 1st.

At Rio de Janeiro a Chess Club has been formed, under the auspices of Herr Sittenfeld (late of Paris). He recently played 20 games there simultaneously, winning 16, losing 2, and drawing 2.

On March 31st, a meeting of delegates from each of the principal Berlin clubs was held, with the object of drawing closer bonds between them, and of establishing a Berlin Chess Association.

In April, Dr. B. Lasker, the champion's brother, paid a visit to Venice, and was most hospitably welcomed by the chess players there. He is apparently out of practice, says the British Chess Magazine, but he gave evidence of his ability by winning games of several local players, though he lost to Signori Salvioli and Dalla Corte. He also won many hearts by his urbanity, and appears to have given some excellent advice to those of his opponents who needed it as to their style of play.

The Value of the First Move.—It is generally admitted that when players are evenly matched White has a great advantage. The Deutsche Wochenschach has compiled a table showing that since 1851, in 2,767 tournament games, White won 1,100, Black 901, and 676 were drawn.

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Glenlochy, British steamer, 2,997, J. McGregor, 9th July,—London via ports, Kobe, 8th July, General.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Masagon, British steamer, 3,280, E. G. Andrews, 10th July,—Bombay, Singapore and Kobe, 9th July, Cotton.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Arthur Fitger, German ship, 1,696, H. Denker, 10th July,—Middlesborough, 9th March, Coke and Pig Iron.—To Order.

Mogul, British steamer, 2,354, C. H. Butler, 10th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 8th July, General.—Dodwell Carlill & Co.

Diomed, British steamer, 3,005, Thos. Bartlett, 11th July,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe, 10th July, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Radnorshire, British steamer, 1,589, Vyvyan, 11th July,—London via ports, Kobe, 10th July, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Kansu, British steamer, 1,158, A. Sommerville, 12th July,—Hongkong, 5th July, Rice and Sugar.—Butterfield & Swire.

Picciola, German steamer, 875, Hap, 12th July,—Hongkong, Petroleum.—M. Raspe & Co.

Craigearn, British steamer, 1,948, D. Kirkwood, 13th July,—Vladivostock, 5th July, via Mororan, 10th July, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Tacoma, British steamer, 1,661, A. Dixon, 14th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 12th July, Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Melbourne, French steamer, 2,033, D. Duchateau, 14th July,—Marseilles via ports, Kobe, 13th July. Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Doric, British steamer, 2,936, Harry Smith, 14th July,—Hongkong via ports, 5th July, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Beniedi, British steamer, 1,481, R. Farquhar, 15th July,—London via port, Kobe, 14th July, General.—Comes & Co.

Satsuma Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,157, N. Ohno, 15th July,—Shanghai via ports, 9th July, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hungarian, British ship, 2,290, Charles Lowe,

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

16th July,—New York, 23rd Feb., Kerosene Oil.—Standard Oil Co.

Hogo Maru, Japanese steamer, 881, H. Walter, 15th July,—Yokkaichi, 14th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, F. W. Horton, 15th July,—Otaru via ports, 10th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Fuyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 875, Tennick, 15th July,—Moji, 13th July, Coal.—Mitsu Bishi Co.

DEPARTURES.

Morven, British steamer, 2,360, J. T. Nottie, 9th July,—Moji, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Belgic, British steamer, 2,695, J. H. Rinder, 9th July,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Yayeyama Kan (11), Japanese Despatch-Vessel, 1,509, Capt. T. Saki, 10th July,—Yokosuka.

Hangchow, British steamer, 999, J. Pearce, 10th July,—Moji, Ballast.—Butterfield & Swire.

Hertha, German steamer, 2,199, Hildebrandt, 11th July,—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Mogul, British steamer, 2,354, C. H. Butler, 11th July,—Portland, Oregon, via Victoria, B.C., General.—Dodwell Carlill & Co.

Caleb Curtis, British schooner, 39, Whistler, 11th July,—Tacoma, Wash., Stores.—Captain.

Hart (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 260, Lt. Com. Shakespear, 12th July,—Kobe.

Barfleur (14), British Battleship, 10,500, Capt. R. N. Custance, 12th July,—Kobe.

Undaunted (12), British Cruiser, 5,600, Capt. C. Clark, 12th July,—Kobe.

Baring Brothers, American ship, 2,091, E. S. Smalley, 12th July—New York via Kobe, General.—Simon Evers & Co.

Wm. H. Macy, American ship, 2,092, J. A. Amesbury, 12th July,—Port Townsend, Ballast.—T. M. Laffin.

Amagi Kan (11), Japanese Wooden-sloop, 926, Commander I. Taregaki, 13th July,—Yokosuka.

Rosetta, British steamer, 2,039, E. P. Bishop, 12 h July,—Hongkong via Kobe and Nagasaki, Mails and General.—P. &O. S. N. Co.

Kobe Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,645, R. Swain, 13th July,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Celtic Monarch, British ship, 1,982, George Morrison, 13th July,—Kobe, Coke and Pig Iron.—Sale & Co.

Kendal Castle, British steamer, 1,813, P. Watson, 13th July,—Kobe, General.—Sale & Co.

Pak Ling, British steamer, 2,875, H. L. Allen, 13th July,—London via ports, General.—W. M. Strachan & Co.

Yamashiro Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,567, James Jones, 14th July,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tantalus, British steamer, 2,299, Hannah, 15th July,—London via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Sir Robert Fernie, British ship, 2,410, P. F. Cannon, 15th July,—Port Townsend, Ballast.—China and Japan Trading Co.

Glenlochy, British steamer, 2,997, J. McGregor, 15th July,—Moji via Kobe, Ballast.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Tacoma, British steamer, 1,661, A. Dixon, 15th July,—Victoria, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Radnorshire, British steamer, 1,889, Vyvyan, 15th July,—Saigon, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Tacoma, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. J. B. Cousin, Mr. and Mrs. Reid, and Mr. Christensen, in cabin; 118 in steerage.

Per French steamer Melbourne, from Marseilles via ports:—Mr. Chaumarbin, Mr. Chodzko, one Japanese, Mr. and Mrs. Devaux and boy, Mr. G. Serrantes, Mr. T. Peyre, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Toche, 2 children and amah, Mrs. Mouinot and child, Mr. and Mrs. Gribble, Mrs. Lamont, Mr. Garneaux, Mr. and Mrs. Heritte and 2 children, Baron of Swein, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Burt, one Chinese, Miss Bell Shereitz, Dr. T. Wilkinson and wife, 4 children and boy, Mrs. McConnink, Miss Una E. Hall, Mr. Health, Mr. and Mrs. Heckert, Mr. T. H. Parry, Miss Mancini, Mr. Kawana, Mr. Chang Ting, Rev. H. B. Price, Miss Nettie Dubose, and Rev. R. E. McAlpine and child, in cabin.

Per British steamer Doric, from Hongkong via ports:—Lieut.-Colonel J. Burns and wife, Miss M. M. Burns, Mr. and Mrs. C. Buermann, Dr. E. Paulun, Mr. I. R. Michael, Mr. J. W. Brown, Mr. E. Runge, Miss E. Runge, Mr. H. Grun, Mr. J. Wilson, Mr. R. Hauff, Mr. A. T. White, Mr. J. E. Machado, Mrs. C. J. Holcombe, Mrs. Teichwan, Mr. K. T. Stoepel, Mr. S. Moosa, Mr. W. A. Behrends, Mr. A. A. Thomas, Mr. G. H. Quick, Mr. and Mrs. Roth and child, Miss Cassie Cook, Rev. G. E. Albrecht, Miss Albrecht, Mr. Middleton, Mr. R. C. Howard, Mr. R. J. Kirby, Mr. J. W. Copman, Mr. H. Frazer, Mr. O. Voigt, Miss G. Cozad and maid, and Miss F. Denton, in cabin. For San Francisco:—Mr. J. Ambrose, Mr. J. Behrend, Mr. R. W. Mustard, Lieut. R. Cedie, Mr. A. McLeod, Mrs. A. McLeod, Mr. H. E. Edgar, Miss L. Mondford, Mr. H. T. Such, Mr. Ziemssen, Mr. Schweitzer, Mr. W. L. Doney, Mr. A. Brown, Mr. Sevey, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Likdell, family and amah, Mr. and Mrs. Jameson and child, Miss James, Miss A. E. Harwood, Miss E. Torrey, and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Happer, in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Shanghai, for London via ports:—Mr. Andrew Patterson, Mr. Patt Gibson, Mr. George Coles, Mr. George Anger, Mr. Bertie Wager, Mr. John Postill, Mr. George Matthews, Mr. Walter Moolly, Mr. Robern Hein, Mr. Franz Hess, Mr. Wanely Lowe, Mr. Milk Byrne, and Countess B. Bavanda and amah, in cabin.

Per British steamer Belgic, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. A. Waite, Master Alan Smith, Dr. J. Bell, Mr. E. S. Oakes, Mr. Gilbert Davis, Mr. Jug Jesselsen, Mr. A. H. Emanuel and native servant, Miss A. Akio and native servant, Mr. R. H. Powers, Mr. E. C. Dalton, Mr. J. W. Copmann, Mr. F. Abenheim, Mr. C. S. Burt, Mr. Stewart Clark, Mr. Leng, Mr. T. Murray, Mr. A. A. Lindenbough, Mr. E. C. Mathews, Mr. J. Roche, Mr. R. Witter, Mr. W. N. Karl, Mr. C. McCurdy, Mr. D. Heneghty, Mr. G. H. Quick, Mr. B. C. Howard, Mr. W. A. Behrens, Mr. T. B. Pocklington, and Mr. H. Bretschneider, in cabin.

Per British steamer Rosetta, for Hongkong via ports:—Miss Meadon, Mr. A. R. Thistlewaite, Mr. Walsh, Miss Walsh and native servant, Mr. Tung Tong Tye, Mr. Walsh, and Mr. Whiskel, in cabin; 6 Chinese, and 2 children, in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Kobe Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—Admiral H. Tsunoda, Governor S. Oimori, Mr. Charles Rogers, Rev. Wolff Joseph, Rev. Henrick Alsbouse, Mr. T. Tsunoda, Mr. J. de Rijke, Mr. R. Hara, Mr. C. C. C. Lee, Mr. R. Yamashita, Rev. Nicholas Walter, Rev. George Schneider, Mr. N. E. Mygind, Capt. T. H. Going, and Mr. G. Sierich, in cabin; Mr. and Mrs. Hwan, Mrs. T. Ogata, Mr. K. Sayehiro, Mr. N. Miyahara, Mr. N. Tamioka, Mr. K. Uchida, Mr. T. Shimanokoji, Mr. R. Kujo, Mr. S. Kojima, Mr. C. Yamamoto, and Mr. S. Watanabe, in second class; 60 Japanese, and 2 Chinese, in steerage.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

The stagnation continues and all prices are nominal. In fancy woollens and cottons the Japanese dealers anticipate some improvement next month.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

	per piece.
Grey Shirtings—8½ lb., 38½ yds. 39 inches	$2 55 to 2 85
Grey Shirtings—9lb., 38½ yds. 45 inches	2.85 to 3.35
T. Cloth—7lb., 24 yards, 32 inches	1.80 to 2 00
Indigo Shirtings—12 yards, 44 inches	1.75 to 2 60
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches	2 00 to 3.75
Cotton—Italians and Sateens' Black, 32 inches	per yard. 0 15 to 0.25

WOOLLENS.

	per yard.
Flannels	$0.30 to 0.50
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches best	0.28 to 0.41
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Medium	Nominal
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Common	Nominal
Alpaccine de Laine—Crape, 24 yards, 31 inches	0.25 to 0.47
Cloths—Pilots, 54 & 56 inches	0 55 to 0.80
Cloths—Presidents, 54 & 56 inches	0.60 to 0.78
Cloths—Union, 54 & 56 inches	0.50 to 0.85
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5lb. per lb.	0 50 to 0.60
	per piece.
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	7.75 to 9.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 32-3 inches	0.60 to 1.00
TurkeyReds—2.0 to 3.0lb, 24/25 yards, 30 inches	1.85 to 2 20
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 4lb, 24/25 yards, 32 inches	3.50 to 3.75

COTTON YARNS.

	per picul.
Nos. 16 24, Singles	$35.50 to 38.50
Nos. 28/32, Singles	39.00 to 41.50
Nos. 38/42, Singles	43.50 to 45.50
Nos. 32, Doubles	42.00 to 43.50
Nos. 42, Doubles	47.00 to 50.50
Nos. 2 60, Plain	61 00 to 63.00
Nos. 2 80, Plain	75.00 to 76.50
Nos. 2 100, Plain	97.00 to 99.00
Nos. 2 60, Gassed	69.50 to 76.50
Nos. 2 80, Gassed	85.00 to 90.00
Nos. 2 100, Gassed	114.00 to 124.00

RAW COTTON.

	per picul.
American Middling	$19.50 to —
Indian Broach	19.25 —
Chinese	21.00 to 21.50

METALS.

The iron market suffers from over-supply and the recent arrival of sailing ships does not tend to improve matters. The only feature is a little enquiry for galvanised corrugated sheets at low prices.

	per picul.
Round and square ¼ inch, and upward	3.85 to 4.10
Iron Plates, assorted	4 00 to 4.40
Sheet Iron	4 90 to 5.10
Galvanized Iron sheets	8.50 to 10.25
Wire Nails, assorted	5 90 to 6.10
Tin Plates, per box	5.75 to 5.95
Pig Iron, No. 3	2.08 to 2 10
Hoop Iron (1 to 14 inch)	5.00 to 5.25

KEROSENE.

The market shows no sign of change.

American	$2 05 —
Russian	1.95 to 2.00
Langkat	— 1.85

SUGAR.

In Browns prices are 10 to 20 sen lower except for Manila, which has advanced 10 to 20 sen per picul. Prices for Formosa have declined 15 sen per picul. White refined, in which little business has been done, retains its previous price. The arrivals from the 6th July have been 66,663 piculs of Manila and 2,174 piculs of China varieties.

	per picul.
Brown Takao	$3.40 to 3.60
Brown Manila	5.20 to 6.30
Brown Daitong	3.80 to 4.20
Brown Canton	4.15 to 5.80
White Java and Penang	6.90 to 7.25
White Refined	7.70 to 9.60

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The European demand is brisk, and prices show a tendency to advance. American buyers, however, are quite inactive. The settlements from July 1st to date have amounted to 1,061 piculs, against 520 piculs at the same time last year, and the stock unsold in Yokohama is 2,469 piculs, against 3,040 piculs last year. The total visible supply this year is 3,530 piculs, compared with 2,560 in 1897.

GREY WHISKERS

EYEBROWS, &c.

GEO. COURTICE'S

CONCENTRATED

EXTRACT OF NUT GALLS

Has been thoroughly tested and approved in all parts of the world for over a quarter of a Century.

It is NOT A DYE, but the colouring principle of the Nut Gall in a concentrated form, perfectly harmless, and will positively restore the colour true to nature in two hours.

NOTE.—Thirty years Professor of Hair Specifics to the Honourable Benchers of the Inner Temple.

GEO. COURTICE & CO.,

Laboratory, 8, Bishop's Court, Chancery Lane, London

(Late 254, STRAND).

PRICES: 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s. 6d., £1 1s. per BOTTLE.

This EXTRACT is INVALUABLE to LADIES, as it restores the Colour close to the Skin.

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra 9/11, 10/12 den.....	$930
Filatures—Extra 13/15, 14/16 den.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1, 10/13 deniers	900 to 910
Filatures—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den	940 to 950
Filatures—No. 1½, 10/14 deniers.....	880 to 890
Filatures—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	910 to 920
Filatures—No. 2, 10/15 deniers.....	850 to 860
Filatures—No. 2, 14/18 deniers.....	890
Re-reels—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	870
Re-reels—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	850
Re-reels—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	830
Re-reels—No. 2½, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 3, 14/20 deniers.....	Nominal
Kakedas—Extra	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1½	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2½	Nominal

WASTE SILK.

Nothing is doing, the new produce not arriving till next month. The present stock is estimated at 2,775 piculs, Noshi 725, Kibiso 1885, pierced cocoons 15, and sundries 150. Prices nominally as under.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filature, Best	$115 to 120
Noshi—Filature, Good	105 to 110
Noshi—Oshu, Best.....	110 to 115
Noshi—Oshu, Good	100 to 103
Noshi—Oshu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Shinshu, Best	70 to 75
Noshi—Shinshu, Good	65 to 67½
Noshi—Bushu, Best	115 to 120
Noshi—Bushu, Good.....	100 to 110
Noshi—Bushu, Medium.....	90 to 95
Noshi—Joshu, Good	60 to 65
Noshi—Joshu, Fair	55 to 57½
Kibiso—Filature, Best	95 to 100
Kibiso—Filature, Seconds	85 to 90
Kibiso—Joshu, Good	25 to 30
Kibiso—Bushu, Fair	20 to 22½

TEA.

A large business has been transacted, common to good medium qualities being chiefly in demand. Prices have ruled firm at an advance of 1 to 2 yen per picul. There is a large stock, not of the best quality, on offer. The total settlements for the season so far amount to 138,189 piculs, against 145 804 at the corresponding date last year.

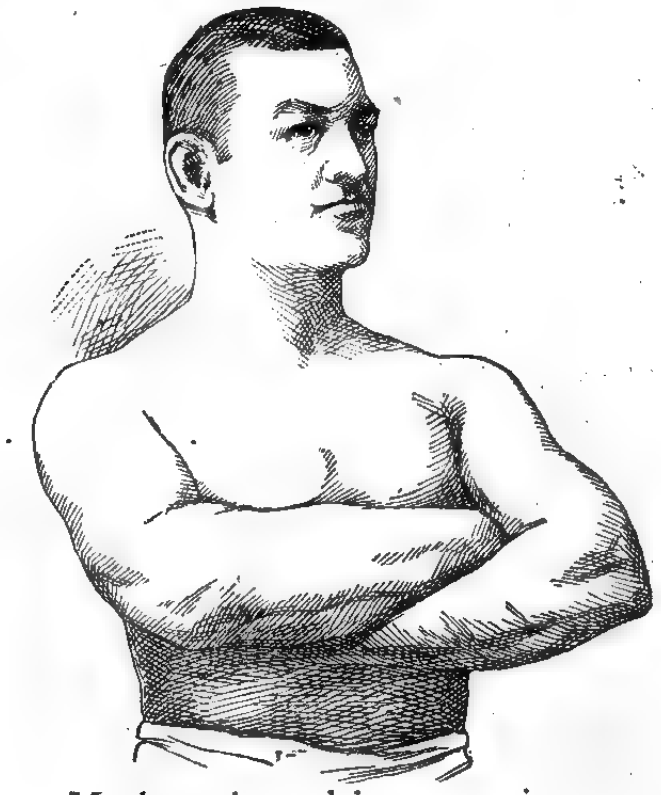
QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	$35 & upwards
Choice	$33 to 34
Finest	31 to 32
Fine	29 to 30
Good Medium	23 to 24
Medium	25 to 26
Good Common	23 to 24
Common	21 to 22

EXCHANGE.

Silver unaltered but slightly firmer from London, no alteration in sterling from China and rates here all steady, closing for the mail per steamer Doric as under.

Sterling—Bank T.T.	2/0½
— — Bills on demand ...	2/0 5/16
— — 4 months' sight	2/0½
— Private 4 months' sight	2/0⅝
— — 6 months' sight	2/0⅞
On Paris—Bank sight	2 55
On Paris—Private 4 months' sight ...	2.58½
On America—Bank Bills on demand..	49½
— Private 4 months' sight...	50⅛
On Germany—Bank sight	2.06½
— Private 4 months' sight...	2.10½
On Hongkong—Bank sight .....4104½% dis.
— Private 10 days' sight...5 1/16 06% dis.
On Shanghai—Bank sight	78⅜
— Private 10 days' sight ...80
On India—Bank sight	153
— Private 30 days' sight ...	156
Bar Silver (London)	27⅞



Manly purity and beauty are inseparably associated with CUTICURA, the world's greatest blood purifier and skin beautifier.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A. "How to Purify the Blood and Beautify the Skin," post free.

Trade Mark on WALTER MAC FARLANE & C.ⁱ GLASGOW SARACEN FOUNDRY every Casting.

Macfarlane's Castings,

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"SHARP, CLEAN, AND FULL OF CHARACTER."

ORNAMENTAL CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

VERANDAHS, BALCONIES, BANDSTANDS, ARCADES, KIOSKS, CONSERVATORIES, ROOFS,

RAILWAY STATIONS, BARRACKS, FACTORIES, PUBLIC WORKS, MARKETS, &c.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PILLARS, BRACKETS, AND WIRE WAYS.

NUMEROUS HEIGHTS AND DESIGNS TO SUIT THE DIFFERENT REQUIREMENTS.

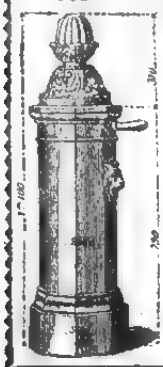
MACFARLANE'S GLASS ENAMELLED DRAIN AND SOIL PIPES, A SPECIALITY.

TWO GOLD MEDALS, CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

Illustrated CATALOGUES, Price Lists, and Estimates on application.

WALTER MACFARLANE & Co., Glasgow, Scotland.

960



WATERING APPARATUS

Non-freezing & Ordinary Hydrants and Street Washers.

Garden Watering Boxes and Apparatus.

Gun-Metal, Copper, and Cast-Iron Cocks and Valves.

E. GUESNIER, E.C.P.,

Engineer and Cock Manr.,

(Successor of ACHILLE CADET)

27, Rue des Taillandiers,

PARIS.

Hydropathic and Massage Apparatus supplied to the Vichy Co. Vapour Baths (Berthe systems).

Apply to BOYES & Co., agents for M. OPPENHEIMER & Co., PARIS.

December 5, 1896.

A. SAVY & CO., ENGINEERS.

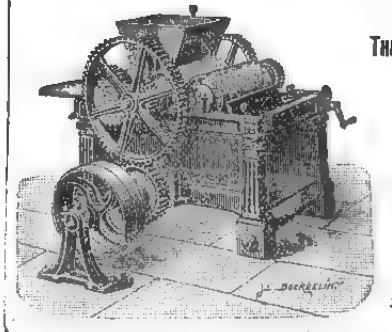
162, Rue de Charenton, Paris.

THE OLD E. HERMANN DEBATISTE WORKS.

ESTABLISHED 1830.

The Oldest and Largest Makers in the World of Chocolate, Cocoa, and Confectionery Plants.

Over 2,500 Chocolate Factories fitted up since January 1st, 1896.



GRINDING MACHINERY for all kinds of dry or wet substances, colours, printing inks, toilet soap, perfumery, and chemicals.

MIXING, CRUSHING, AND PULVERISING MACHINES FOR ALL MATERIALS.

Address MESSRS. C. ROHDE & Co., YOKOHAMA.

November 21st, 1896.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LEA & PERRINS'

OBSERVE THAT THE SIGNATURE

Lea & Perrins

IS NOW PRINTED IN BLUE INK DIAGONALLY ACROSS THE OUTSIDE WRAPPER of every Bottle of the

ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

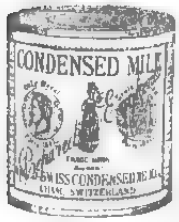
SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale by the Proprietors, Worcester; Crosse & Blackwell, Ltd., London; and Export Oilmen generally.

RETAIL EVERYWHERE.

46ins. May 8th, 1898.

MILKMAID BRAND CONDENSED MILK



The "Milkmaid" Brand is guaranteed to contain all the cream of the original milk. In the process of manufacture nothing but water is removed, nothing but the best cane sugar added.

Avoid low-priced brands from which the cream has been abstracted, and ask for the "Milkmaid" Brand, the best for all purposes.

TRAVELLERS CARRY

Liebig

LIEBIG

COMPANY'S EXTRACT.

It keeps good for any time, even after being opened, and is supplied to Armies, Expeditions, Governments, Hospitals, Doctors and Nurses all the world over.

DINNEFORD'S

The Universal Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Headache, Heartburn, Indigestion, Sour Eructations, Bilious Affections.

The Physician's Cure for Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Gravel; the safest and most gentle Medicine for Infants, Children, Delicate Females, and the Sickness of Pregnancy.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

Sold Throughout the World.

N.B.—ASK FOR DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

September 19th 1897. 9tm.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

THE FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

More Fragrant; More Lasting; and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ATKINSON'S ONLY AND BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Only genuine with "White Rose" Trade Mark.

Of all Dealers & of the Manufacturers—

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

January 1st, 1898. 1y.

THE

GENERAL CATALOGUE AND BUYERS' GUIDE

ISSUED SEMI-ANNUALLY BY

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.

THE GREAT MAIL ORDER HOUSE.

Chicago, U. S. A.

IS THE MOST COMPLETE IN THE WORLD

It has more than 10,000 illustrations, about 40,000 quotations of prices, weighs 2½ pounds, and contains over 800 pages. Everything you wear or use is listed in it; and the prices quoted place you in a position to buy from us in large or small quantities, at wholesale prices. We do not sell this General Catalogue and Buyers' Guide: we give it away. To introduce to you our immense facilities we will send free of charge to you or any other foreign resident our "Buyers' Guide," and our "Hand Book for Foreign Buyers," which gives all information necessary to put you in touch with our methods. Send us your address and we'll do the rest.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

111 to 120 Michigan Ave., Chicago, U. S. A.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF MODERN TIMES

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

PERSONS suffering from weak or debilitatep constitutions will discover that by the use of this wonderful medicine there is "Health for all." The blood is the fountain of life, and its purity can be maintained by the use of these Pills

Sir Samuel Baker, in his work entitled "The Nile Tributaries in Abyssinia," says—"I ordered the dragoman Mahomet to inform the Bakir that I was a Doctor, and I had the best medicines at the service of the sick, with advice gratis. In a short time I had many applicants, to whom I served out a quantity of Holloway's Pills. These are most useful to an explorer, as, possessing unmistakable purgative properties, they create an undeniable effect upon the patient, which satisfies them of their value."

SIMPLE, SAFE, AND CERTAIN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

is a certain remedy for bad legs, bad breasts, and ulcerations of all kinds. It acts miraculously in healing ulcerations, curing skin diseases, and in arresting and subduing all inflammations.

Mr. J. T. Cooper, in his account of his extraordinary travels in China, published in 1891 says—"I had with me a quantity of Holloway's Ointment. I gave some to the people, and nothing could exceed their gratitude; and, in consequence, milk, fowls, butter, and horse feed poured in upon us, until at last a teaspoonful of Ointment was worth a fowl and any quantity of pets, and the demand became so great that I was obliged to lock up the small remaining "stock."

Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the World

May 21st, 1898.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor, at 51, Main Street, Settlement, by Arthur Bellamy Brown, of No. 7-C, Bluff, Yokohama, Thursday, July 16, 1898.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 4.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, JULY 23RD, 1898. 明三年五十二治明 第五百六號第十三 VOL. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 73
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 74
First Trouble in the Constitutional Party 75
Baron Sonoda Dismissed 75
Serious Affray in Tokyo 76
Marquis Ito 76
Administrative Reform 77
Tea-Growers 77
The Autumn Manœuvres 77
Baron Suyematsu 77
Finance 78
Suicide of Captain Hijikata 78
A Singular Swindle 78
The Land-Tax 78
Germany in the Far East 79
Mr. Pak Yong-ho 79
The Affair of the German Stoker 79
An American Orchestra 79
Marquis Tokugawa's Funeral 80
Modern Enamels 80
Japanese Facts and Comments 80
Our Book-Shelf 80
Disaster at Sea 85
Monthly Summary of Current Japanese Literature 85
A Tokyo Lady's Suicide 85
Concerning Foreigners' Disabilities 86
Japanese Trade in 1898 86
Notes on News 87
Korean Affairs 87
Chinese Affairs 88
German Notes 88
News of the Week 89
Correspondence:—
A Good Song Misused 89
Missions in Japan 90
Starvation in Japan 90
The Re-United States of America 90
Japan Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church 90
The Portuguese Prisoner at Kojibashi 91
The West River Rebellion 91
Japanese Settlers in Australia 91
Latest Telegraphic News 91
Chess 93
Latest Shipping 93
Latest Commercial 94

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"FAISCE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, JULY 23RD, 1898.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

EMILE ZOLA has left Paris for Lucerne.

DYSENTERY is very prevalent in Kanagawa Prefecture.

THE Constitution has been suspended throughout Spain.

IT is reported in official circles that Manila has fallen, but the news lacks confirmation.

THERE has been a serious riot in Shanghai in the course of which twenty Chinese were killed.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA has fallen, the Spanish garrison marching out with all the honours of war.

RELATIONS between Admiral Dewey and the German Admiral are said to be very strained at present.

IT is suggested that warlike operations in Cuba will be suspended until the end of September.

Marquis Ito, who is leaving for China shortly, had a farewell audience of His Majesty on the 15th inst.

CAPTAIN HIJIKATA, eldest son of Count Hijikata, committed suicide on the 15th instant by shooting himself.

BARON SONODA, Chief of the Metropolitan police, has been removed from office for breach of discipline, in that he spoke against the present Cabinet at a meeting of heads of police.

The Times says that Great Britain would feel no jealousy whatever if the United States took possession of the Philippines.

THE Doyo—or hot season in Japan—came in on Wednesday with blazing heat. Reports from the country are favourable.

IT is stated that two men have been arrested charged with secretly manufacturing quantities of dynamite at Yunokawa, near Hakodate.

THE Yokohama Dockyard Company will hold its general meeting on the 23rd inst., and will declare a dividend of 10 per cent. per annum.

THE Secretary of the Yokohama Japanese Chamber of Commerce shot himself on Wednesday while under the influence of liquor.

THE Prince of Wales fractured his knee this week by falling on a staircase at Waddesden Manor, the country house of Baron Rothschild.

AMERICAN papers to hand by the last mail contain serious charges of political jobbery in regard to the granting of commissions in the U.S. army.

THE rebellion in the south-east of China is spreading, the rebels being materially assisted by the "funk" into which the Mandarins have been thrown.

THE Japan Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Mission has been in session this week in Yokohama under the leadership of Bishop Cranston.

THE Treaty Powers have been advised that the Commercial Code came into force on the 1st inst., and the remaining parts of the Civil Code on the 17th inst.

THE N.Y.K.'s steamer Nagoya Maru, which stranded off Hira-uchi, Iwate Prefecture, on the 25th ult., has been purchased by Mr. Nakahara Shozaburo, of Yokohama.

PRINCE CYRIL of Russia left Yokohama on Tuesday for Kobe and the South in the cruiser Rossia. He seems to have greatly enjoyed his visit to Yokohama.

DESPITE the heat two games of cricket have taken place in Yokohama this week. The first was an inter-Club match; in the other the Club beat a team from H.M.S. Grafton.

COUNT ITAGAK, the Minister for Home Affairs, on the 19th at 5 p.m. entertained at dinner at his official residence the high officials of the Department of Home Affairs.

GENERAL MILES has assumed command in Cuba. Popular sentiment in Spain is against any yielding, being encouraged by the outbreak of fever among the Americans.

IN the course of the trial at Versailles in connection with the Dreyfus case, Emile Zola and Perreux were each sentenced to a year's imprisonment and 3 000 francs fine.

ON Thursday seven prisoners in Taipeh Gaol, Formosa, escaped by demolishing a part of the building. Four of them were arrested, and three others were killed by the authorities.

COUNT OKUMA, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has instructed Mr. Shimamura, Minister to Honolulu, to close the Legation and return at once. A Consulate will be established there.

AN importer in Yokohama recently attempted to smuggle great quantities of alcohol in tin cases having the appearance of kerosene oil cans. The cargo was found and confiscated by the customs authorities.

ON the 18th inst., at 11 a.m., the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's steamer Harima Maru ran on a sunken rock near Nemuro, during a thick fog. There was no loss of life.

A ROBBER named Ishiwara and his followers murdered a policeman named Sotoyama, and mortally wounded another policeman named Uyematsu at Akagi, Gumma prefecture. They are still at large.

AN Italian squadron has left for Cartagena, Colombia, to enforce the settlement of President Cleveland's award in Italy's favour in the case of Cerrute, an Italian subject having a pecuniary grievance against the Republic of Colombia.

A WOMAN named Kane, 45 years old, the wife of a policeman named Sugiura, of the Kanda Police Station, Tokyo, committed suicide by jumping into a well on the 17th inst. She had been in bad health for two years.

THE Directors of the Koya Railway Company have decided to raise foreign capital to the extent of half a million yen to complete the line and to pay off debentures. The directors are opening up negotiations with a foreign resident in Kobe.

Princesses Fushimi-no-Miya and Yasu-no-Miya will proceed to Miyanoshita on the 24th inst., and will stay at the detached palace for the summer season. Princess Sada-no-Miya will leave for the Myogi mountains on the 22nd inst., and will stay there for some weeks.

THERE is a growing tension between the Americans and Cuban insurgents. The latter are indignant because Santiago has not been transferred to them. American officers and men do not conceal their contempt for the Cubans, and an early collision is predicted.

WITH the setting in of the Dog-Days the native merchant invariably "goes up country to sleep." But this year his retreat to the inland spas and mountain solfataras does not cause any violent disturbance in the commercial world of Yokohama. For sooth to say, his appearances in our midst these past few months have only been occasions for elaborating miserable excuses for not "settling his little account," or for begging further time ere he took delivery of contract goods already nine months' warehoused. Yet hope springs eternal in the foreign breast, and it is hinted at, though in scarcely buoyant tones, that trade may revive in the autumn. Meanwhile the burden of the yarn, piece-goods, metals, kerosene, and cotton markets' reports is always the same—nothing doing, prices nominally the same as last week. Sugar alone continues steady, but then the appetite for confectionary and sweetmeats generally always continues strong. In exports, a fair demand is reported for raw silk, and prices are rising. Waste silk transactions are dead for the moment. Tea continues active, large purchases being concluded during the week. There is a stock of over 1,000,000 lbs. on offer at present, but a lot of this is of inferior quality.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

There has been a good deal of writing recently in vernacular newspapers on the subject of the annexation of Hawaii by the United States and the probable fate of the Philippines. Speaking broadly, the opinions expressed may be divided into two sections; namely, views dictated chiefly by a desire to embarrass the Cabinet, without much regard to the real rights or wrongs of the question; and views dictated by genuine solicitude for the welfare of Japan. It is doubtless fresh in our readers' recollection that when the problem of the annexation of Hawaii came upon the tapis last year, Count Okuma, the then Minister of Foreign Affairs, publicly protested against it, and adopted a remarkably firm line of policy. Some of his opponents now seek to discredit him by showing that he can not adhere to that policy under existing circumstances without great inconvenience, and that he can not abandon it without loss of face. Arguments of that nature have been effectually disposed of by the Mainichi Shimbun, which points out that they are quite inconsistent with the instructions given to Mr. Hoshi Toru when he returned to Japan last summer to discuss this very question. He was instructed to direct his exertions to obtaining from the American Government an engagement that Japan's treaty privileges in Hawaii should be respected, and, in the event of obtaining such an engagement, everything in the way of protest was to cease. The Ito Cabinet took the same line. In fact, there has been no kind of protest for the past year: it has been merely a matter of consultation. It is now stated that the Government will be perfectly content if America promises that Japan's treaty rights shall be respected, that the immigration problem shall be taken over by the United States, and that tradal facilities in Hawaii shall remain as they are at present.

* * *

As this subject is of much interest to our American readers, we shall briefly epitomise the views most recently expressed by the various journals, omitting those which plainly derive their inspiration from domestic politics, and premising that, during the past few days, some symptoms of vacillation originally observable have disappeared, while on the other hand some journals originally disposed to adopt a very stalwart line towards America, have greatly modified their tone.

* * *

The Osaka Asahi referring to the necessary proviso that Japan's treaty rights should not suffer by the annexation of Hawaii, asks what reasonable prospect offers of such a provision's being secured. A clause in the Annexation Treaty declares that all Hawaii's treaties and conventions with foreign Powers shall lose their binding force immediately on annexation. Will America make an exception in Japan's favour? Or will she sign a new treaty granting to Japan privileges not enjoyed by all alike? A protesting attitude commends itself to the Osaka journal's judgment.

* * *

With regard to the Philippines, the Hōchi Shimbun is persuaded that America does not intend to depart from her traditional policy of peaceful progress. She has drawn the sword solely because she could not stand by tamely and see the sufferings of the people of Cuba. Her occupation of the Philippines should not cause any uneasiness to Japan. It would be the best thing possible for the people of the islands and for the cause of tranquillity in general. Japan should not offer any kind of opposition.

* * *

The Nippon leads the opposition to America's occupation of the Philippines. Numerically, it is a very weak opposition, but our readers are acquainted with the vigour of the Nippon's methods, and will understand that to this discussion also it succeeds in imparting a certain amount of snap and clatter. Assuming as a certainty that America will take the Philippines—a part or the whole, it does not matter which—the question is, what shall Japan do? Japan bears no ill-will to America, her principal commercial friend. But if the United States obtains possession of Hawaii and the Philippines, she will hold the key of the Pacific. The balance of power will be completely upset. Japan considered it necessary to obtain from China a guarantee that no part of Fuhkien should be alienated. It is incomparably more important that she should secure the Philippines from falling into the possession of a great Power. There is only one safe and prudent course. It is to enter into an agreement with the United States and Great Britain for guaranteeing the independence of the Philippines. No other Power has a right to a voice in the question.

* * *

The Kokumin Shimbun, which leads the vernacular press in liberality of foreign policy, considers that the two great events of the era are England's abandonment of her attitude of isolation and America's change to a policy of expansion (shinshu shugi). Both events will make largely for the peace of the world and the progress of civilization. America, when she comes into possession of Hawaii and the Philippines, will be an ally of immense potentiality. If she joins hands with England and Japan, the combination will be invincible. Nothing is more regrettable than that Japan has lost so many opportunities of showing her goodwill to America. It was her duty, no doubt, to assume a neutral attitude in the war. But there is neutrality and neutrality. France, without violating the obligations of a neutral, has managed to exhibit so much sympathy with Spain that French influence is now paramount in Madrid. If the Japanese Government had behaved with similar tact, there never would have been an increase of the import duty on tea, and the two nations would now be fast friends. But, whatever the shortcomings of the Government have been, there has been no wavering in the sentiments of the Japanese people towards America, and now the time has come to give practical expression to those sentiments. If a great Power like Germany obtains the Philippines, or if they remain in the hands of Spain, a constant temptation to foreign aggression, Japan will have a live volcano at her doors. She must do what she can to secure their occupation by America; not, indeed, unconditionally, since she has her own interests to safeguard, but on such conditions only as shall not embarrass America. It is extraordinary that the organs of the Government keep silence at this crisis, or, if they speak, speak in faint tones. Is the Cabinet too much occupied with petty questions of party politics to appreciate the overwhelming importance of such a problem as the triple alliance of America, England, and Japan?

* * *

The Yomiuri, which is, of course, a supporter of the Cabinet, has not taken any strong line upon this subject. On the whole, however, it advocates conditional endorsement of America's wishes. If any strong Western State gets possession of the Philippines, the balance of power will be sensibly disturbed in the Far East, and Japan, although she does not radically object to the islands falling into American possession, should endeavour to safeguard her own interests as much as possible.

* * *

The Mainichi Shimbun has performed something very like a volte face. Its latest utterance, as quoted above, condemns the ignorance of people who insist that an attitude of protest must be maintained by Japan with regard to the annexation of Hawaii by America. But a few days ago, its own voice was raised in favour of protesting. However, we presume that its new attitude may be accepted as final.

* * *

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun, though it argues cleverly and speciously, does not appear to have any profounder purpose than to convict Count Okuma of unskilful policy. It avers that his original protest against the annexation of Hawaii was a clumsy proceeding, and that, recognising his error, and the fruitlessness of protesting, he lapsed into silence. When out of office, however, he did not hesitate to declare that protest after protest must be formulated, if necessary, to preserve Japan's interests. What does he now propose to do? Rumour says that he will be content if America assumes Hawaii's liabilities to Japan. How can he refuse with one breath to recognise the annexation, and demand, with the next, that the annexing Power shall accept the responsibilities of annexation?

* * *

The Yorozu Choho contends that whereas Count Okuma was originally very keen against annexation, he is now quite indifferent. It is impossible for him to efface himself completely, however. He must do something, and fortunately a good opportunity now offers; for with the Philippine problem awaiting solution America will be very careful not to alienate Japan's sympathies. The best plan, therefore, is to continue protesting against the annexation of Hawaii so long as the Philippine question is open. Japan values America's friendship highly, but she sets a still higher value on her own interests, and, as Count Okuma began by protesting, he has no choice but to stand his ground.

* * *

Such was the gist of the Yorozu Choho's writing a few days ago. It insisted that Count Okuma must not suffer the catastrophe known in Japan as "dying a dog's death" (inujini); in other words, must not allow himself to be fruitlessly effaced, but must maintain his attitude of protest. Like the Mainichi, however, the Yorozu now appears to have been "looking round the corner." It says that Count Okuma must withdraw his protest. He has no alternative. But he must make capital out of the withdrawal. The United States probably recognises that to take possession of the Philippines would be bad policy. On the other hand, she does not wish them to pass into the possession of any strong Power. Japan's interests point in the same direction. Hence the Tokyo Cabinet can safely turn the situation to account by giving a general support to America in the Far East, on condition that the whole Pacific Coast is thrown open to Japanese emigrants, and that the interests of this country in Hawaii are respected.

* * *

Turning from the subjects of Hawaii and the Philippines, we find that abuse of the new Cabinet continues to occupy a large space in vernacular columns. The Tokyo Asahi is clever and epigrammatic. It says that the Ito Cabinet was distinguished by its yoriten shugi, or policy of adroit drifting, and the present Cabinet is remarkable for its konton shugi, or chaotic policy. It is chaotic in that it fails to distinguish between administrative officials and political officials; chaotic in that the leading members of the Ministry have declared themselves diametrically at variance on several important subjects; chaotic in that when a Constitutionalist is asked about his policy, his answer is "learn it from our acts." The Nippon insists that the public are already weary of the new Cabinet. The first revolution of the Meiji era had the merit of interesting people, and its moving spirits were rich in ideas and bold in progressive reforms. But in the case of this second revolution, although it resembles the first in the fact that men who were mere denizens of lodging-houses have been raised to the posts of Ministers of State, the new administrators seem to be able to think of nothing but dividing the spoils. They have no clever policy. They have no better moral endowments than their predecessors. They do not appear to be freer from corruption. They do not enjoy a larger share of public confidence. They can not even be said to be more youthful and vigorous. No wonder that people are already getting weary of them.

* * *

That kind of writing abounds, the Jiji Shimpo being the only one of the independent journals that refrains from attacking the Cabinet. As for the friendly newspapers, they show remarkable discretion. Instead of adding fuel to the flame by vehement contradictions and strenuous recrimination, it is evidently their cue not to bandy words but to let the Cabinet be judged by its deeds. If they adhere to that resolution they will make a record.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

FIRST TROUBLE IN THE CONSTITUTIONAL PARTY.

The difficulty of reconciling party principles and administrative responsibilities has just presented itself very forcibly to the Constitutionalists. The Party has a General Committee (somu-kin) of four, to which is entrusted the management of the whole business presenting itself from time to time. Of course the Committee wields great power, and its members are persons of considerable importance. Every one of the four committee-men obtained a portfolio when the present Cabinet was organized; the four being Messrs. Ozaki, Ohigashi, Hayashi, and Matsuda. The question then arose, should these four Ministers of State continue to discharge the functions of committee-men, or should they be replaced by persons not holding official appointments? The four Ministers themselves were of opinion that they should continue to act as committee-men, their contention being that in their dual capacity they would be best able to give effect to the theory of party cabinets. But other leading members of the Party—notably Messrs. Hatoyama, Kono, and Kataoka, and Baron Kusumoto—emphatically declined to subscribe to any such doctrine. Their notion was that the Party must retain the power of controlling the Cabinet, which certainly would not be the case if the Ministers of State, in their capacity of general committee-men, had the direction of all the Party's affairs. The discussion became somewhat acute, and a compromise was proposed, in the sense that two of the Ministers should remain on the Committee, and two should resign, their places being taken by ordinary members of the Party. An extraordinary meeting was held to consider that exit from the dilemma, but the great majority of those attending condemned it as unacceptable, and after a hot debate the meeting broke up re infecta, to come together again on the 18th instant. In the meanwhile, the four Ministers cut the Gordian Knot by resigning, and when the members assembled on the 18th instant, they had merely to decide upon a method of electing a new Committee. Their decision was that the four Ministers, together with Mr. Kudo Kokan, who had acted as chairman at the meeting, should nominate twenty members, and that the twenty-five should then proceed to elect the General Committee.

It does not occur to any one reading the above story that the Constitutionalists have very firm faith in the present holders of portfolios. We suspect, however, that the real objection to entrusting to Ministers of State the duties of Committee-men was not so much a sense of the necessity of keeping the power of control in the hands of the Party, as a conviction that portfolio-holders are much too busy to attend properly to party affairs. That seems to us a very reasonable view, but one can easily appreciate the desire of the Ministers of State to avert all danger of frivolous and vexatious interference from the side of the Party by retaining in their own hands the direction of its affairs.

The new Managing Committee of the Constitutional Party consists of Baron Kusumoto and Messrs. Inugai Ki, Ebara Soroku, and Kataoka Kenkichi. There are two interesting features about this Committee. The first is that care has been taken to secure equal representation for the two sections of the Constitutionalist Party: Baron Kusumoto and Mr. Inugai Ki belong to the former Progressists, and Mr. Ebara and Mr. Kataoka to the former Liberals. Such precise balancing does not suggest that the two sections have really amalgamated. They still retain enough of the spirit of separation to consider that they have independent claims. The second point is that Messrs. Ebara and Kataoka are earnest Christians. Evidently that point does not tell against them in the eyes of the Party. A grain of fact is worth a bushel of theory. We commend this grain to the critics who allege that the spirit of religious intolerance bars the path to preferment for all Christians in Japan. We are not so fatuous as to imagine that the spirit of intolerance has entirely died out, but neither can we be blind to the significance of this Committee incident.

BARON SONODA DISMISSED.

Quite a ferment was caused in official circles on the 16th instant by the action of Baron Sonoda, Chief of the Metropolitan Police. The Baron tendered his resignation when the present Cabinet came into power, but was induced to remain in office until the conclusion of Prince Cyril's visit to Tokyo, the Government being naturally anxious to avoid any change in the police organization on the eve of that event. On the evening of the 15th, the Baron convoked a meeting of all the Superintendents of Police in the capital, and having read them a letter from the Minister of Home Affairs praising their zealous and thorough discharge of their duties in connexion with Prince Cyril's visit, went on to explain that he now proposed to resign his office, since he considered that the present Ministry did not enjoy the full confidence of the Emperor, and since, further, he was persuaded that the system of party cabinets was contrary to the Constitution. The exact terms of the speech are not reported, but it seems to have stirred the audience considerably, for, after the meeting, the propriety of a strike on the part of the police was freely discussed, and the idea appeared to be on the point of being carried into execution. So serious did the situation seem that Counts Okuma and Itagaki repaired to the Palace to confer with His Majesty, and the result was that Baron Sonoda was removed from office as a disciplinary measure, four Superintendents of Police and one Chief Warden of a Jail being placed on the Retired List at the same time, and one Superintendent of Police allowed to resign by his own desire. The trouble was thus disposed of, not, however, without the services of Marquis Saigo as mediator between the Satsuma members of the force and the Government. Baron Sonoda's position has been given to Mr. Nishiyama Seicho, a Liberal representative in the Lower House.

This incident is evidently regarded as exceedingly grave, and indeed, we can not wonder at the fact, for if politics are to come between the police and the discharge of their duties a most objectionable state of affairs will be inaugurated. It has always seemed to us an unfortunate and unwise arrangement that the holder of the office of Chief of Police in Tokyo should be changed with every change of cabinet. The functions of the police ought to be pre-eminently beyond the range of politics, a result which can hardly be attained under the present system. In the days when the administration wielded exceptional and extraordinary power with regard to newspapers, public meetings, political associations, and so forth, it may have been expedient that the chief of the Metropolitan police, through whom those powers were exercised, should share the Ministry's political views, but no such necessity can exist any longer.

It is curious to note the view taken of this matter in some quarters. The organ of the former Liberal Party (Tokyo Shimbun), for example, writes in terms almost hysterical. It calls the change to party cabinets "the Second Revolution," the first having been the Restoration of 1867; it places Marquis Ito in the position occupied by Keiki, the last of the Tokugawa Shoguns, and it completes the parallel by saying, that although the Marquis has surrendered quietly, his followers are strongly disposed to show fight, so that the Ministry must be prepared for a new Fushimi and a new Toba—in other words, for a repetition of the battles fought at the fall of the Shogunate. Use the sword freely is the Liberal journal's advice. Restrain, with one hand, the men that are clamouring for office, and expel, with the other, every occupant of office that shows any sign of insubordination.

We have now before us the text of the speech delivered on the evening of the 13th instant by Baron Sonoda, Chief of the Metropolitan Police, to the police officers subordinate to him. It is a very remarkable speech; so remarkable, considering the circumstances under which it was made, that we should find difficulty in crediting the reported version were not all the Tokyo journals uniform in their account. What the Baron said was this:—"Marquis Ito used to say that without the cöoperation of political parties the administration could not be satisfactorily conducted, but the Constitution contains nothing that can be construed, either directly or indirectly, as sanctioning party cabinets. Marquis Ito's action in handing over the administration of state affairs to the party politicians was the great mistake of his whole career. There is no reason, indeed, why portfolios should not be held by Counts Okuma and Itagaki, who are among the Meiji statesmen, but the other members of the Cabinet are chosen from among the party politicians who do not possess the confidence of the Emperor in any degree. Before these men were elevated to the ranks of officialdom, they played the part of mere professional politicians (seiji-ya). They did not regulate their behaviour so as to qualify for high office, but were so crippled with debts that they knew not whither to turn. To appoint such men to Ministerial posts was to impair the Imperial Prerogative. No other description is applicable. That His August Majesty should be placed in a position which deprives him of liberty of choice is profoundly improper. I am, therefore, utterly and uncompromisingly opposed to the system of party cabinets. It devolves upon you, gentlemen, to bring together all that are of the same way of thinking, and to combine for the purpose of bringing about the establishment of a proper Constitutional Cabinet."

This speech is said to have made a deep

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

impression on its hearers. Some deemed it extravagant and unbecoming, but others shared Baron Sonoda's views, and were prepared to support him resolutely. The latter were the Inspectors who received the congé on the 16th instant, as described in our last issue. The Asahi alleges that Baron Sonoda went considerably farther than merely speaking. He planned a strike on the part of the whole of the Metropolitan police, his idea being to deprive the capital altogether of police assistance, and thus bring about the fall of the Cabinet. Information of the scheme was secretly conveyed to the Government, who were thus enabled to frustrate it. We can not say how much or how little truth that version contains.

There is an extraordinay rumour, ventilated by the Nippon alone, that Baron Sonoda's intemperate and improper speech was not the sole cause of his removal from office. In language so mysterious as to defy clear interpretation, our contemporary alleges that a plot was on foot to destroy the cabinet by contriving some attack upon Prince Cyril during his visit to Tokyo, and hints plainly that Baron Sonoda was concerned in it. The Government fortunately got wind of the conspiracy, and adopted infinite precautions to defeat it, but no arrests were made, it being considered more judicious to hush up an affair so discreditable. This story seems to us altogether apocryphal. Had it been discovered that Baron Sonoda, the Chief of Police, the one man without whose cöoperation Prince Cyril could not be protected, was engaged in such a conspiracy, his removal from office without a moment's notice would have been unavoidable, whereas he was suffered to retain his position until three days after Prince Cyril's departure. His speech to his subordinates amply warranted his dismissal as a disciplinary measure. We need not go beyond it.

It appears to be a mistake to say that Marquis Saigo's good offices were required to settle the above complication. The Marquis was in Kobe at the time. A messenger was despatched to him to ascertain whether, as a member of the Cabinet, he assented to the decisive steps contemplated by his colleagues, and he replied in the affirmative. That appears to have been his sole share in the business.

What adds to public surprise at Baron Sonoda's speech is that he had long occupied a responsible position in the police, and had earned the reputation of being a strict disciplinarian and a self-contained man. In 1890, he was appointed Vice-Chief of the Metropolitan Police, Viscount Tanaka, the present Minister of the Imperial Household Department, being his immediate superior. In 1892, he himself became chief, and held the position until the retirement of the Ito Cabinet in 1896. Last January, when another Ito Cabinet came into office, he was re-appointed to his old post. No one expected a flagrant breach of discipline from such a man.

The talk about a conspiracy headed by Baron Sonoda, late chief of the Metropolitan Police, receives no manner of confirmation. It is evident that there was nothing in the incident except the delivery of a strong speech under improper circumstances. The speech itself was a perfectly legitimate expression of opinion, though some of the utterances were in decidedly bad taste. For example, the Baron denounced the personal character and pecuniary morality of some of the Ministers, alleging that one had left his hotel bill unpaid for eight months; that another was threatened with an action for fraud; that a third was accused of having set fire to an office in order to destroy inconvenient records, and that nearly all were crippled with debts and of impaired reputation. Such things might have been left unsaid with advantage. For the rest, the speech was merely an outspoken declaration of frank conservatism. The Baron does not believe in any wholesale importation of exotic systems. He is not an enemy of party Cabinets, if a country is prepared for such a system. It works excellently in England, and were the conditions in Japan similar to those in England, party cabinets would be most desirable here also. But it is impossible to pretend that party politicians in this country are fit to be entrusted with the responsibilities of administration. (It was here that Baron Sonoda's personal indictment came in, Counts Okuma and Itagaki, however, being carefully excluded from it.) The Japanese nation has its origin in the Imperial House, and if the Emperor has graciously been pleased to admit the people to a share in the Government, the people, on their side, are under a profound obligation not to encroach upon the prerogatives reserved by the Sovereign. The Emperor could not possibly have had any reason to trust the party politicians—Counts Okuma and Itagaki excepted—to whom portfolios have now been given. His Majesty knows nothing of them. But he had every reason to trust Marquis Ito, and he gave them a mandate on Marquis Ito's recommendation. Marquis Ito forgot the duties of a good and loyal subject (chiuryō) when he recommended these persons. There is no course for self-respecting men except to turn their backs on such a Ministry, and labour to promote the end that will certainly be achieved sooner or later, the resumption of administrative power by worthy representatives of the nation.

All that is fair enough in its way. We may differ from the Baron, but we can not deny his right to express his opinions, and there is a decidedly agreeable directness in his language. The time that he chose, however, was wholly improper. Not a single vernacular journal attempts to defend him. He himself claims that he did not speak as an official but simply as an individual addressing friends with whom he had served for years. But not so much as one journalist accepts his excuse, or questions the propriety of the Government's action in dismissing him with disgrace. That is very significant. Baron Sonoda is evidently a clever and courageous man, but he has made a grievous mistake and is justly punished.

SERIOUS AFFRAY AT TOKYO.

On the 18th inst. a carpenter named Zenichiro quarrelled with another carpenter named Yoshinosuke at a workshop in Tanaka-machi, Asakusa, Tokyo. A fight ensued, and Yoshinosuke had the fingers of his left hand cut off, and other wounds inflicted, to which he finally succumbed. Zenichiro also seriously wounded two carpenters named Miyakichi and Isaburo, who interfered in the dispute. He was not arrested at the time of writing.

MARQUIS ITO.

The public have been informed that Marquis Ito intends to retire from political life, but very few people believe, we should think, that there is much truth in the statement. The idea of retirement may seem very attractive to the Marquis himself after his many years of administrative labour, but the country will scarcely be content to dispense with his services, and unless we are much mistaken, there will be greater need of him than ever by and by. The manner of his retirement from the Premiership was so tactful and adroit that his reputation gained largely, and he may safely be said to be the most trusted statesman in Japan at this instant. The one weak point in his armour used to be the possibility of charging him with self-seeking, in that he seemed to support the Sat-Cho interests against those of the political parties. He completely dispelled that suspicion by surrendering the Administration to the party politicians the moment they were able to undertake it, and he has achieved the remarkable feat of converting his old opponents into warm panegyrists.

On the 13th instant, the Marquis returned to Tokyo. That evening Count Okuma visited him at the Imperial Hotel, and the two statesmen had a long consultation. The next day, at 3 p.m., Count Itagaki waited on him, and another protracted conversation took place. On the 15th, at 9.50 a.m., he repaired to the Palace, and was received by the Emperor in audience, remaining with His Majesty until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. It is understood that the reason of the Marquis' return to Tokyo was to make preparations for a trip to Korea and China, and to take leave of the Emperor before starting. He will set out on the 25th, and proceed by train to Shimonoseki, embarking there for Fusan. After visiting the newly opened Korean ports and Söul, he will take steamer at Chemulpo for Tientsin en route for Peking, and afterwards, according to circumstances, will continue his journey to Hongkong, Amoy, and Formosa. He is to be accompanied by Mr. Zumoto, formerly his Private Secretary, and by Mr. Mori Taijiro, a Chinese scholar of note, whose literary name is "Kwainan." At Peking the party will be joined by Mr. Narabara, Chinese Interpreter of the Japanese Legation. It is announced that this trip is purely unofficial, but of course a statesman of Marquis Ito's eminence can not travel in the two neighbouring empires under existing circumstances without attracting much attention.

Several vernacular newspapers refer to the affair in terms which probably express a close approximation to the truth. They say that in view of the seemingly inevitable collision between Russia and Great Britain in the Far East, when China and Japan, unable to preserve an attitude of strict neutrality, will certainly be drawn into the maelstrom of the struggle, Marquis Ito appreciates the prime importance of arousing the statesmen of Korea and China to a sense of the gravity of the outlook. He hopes especially to meet and consult with his old friend Li Hung-chang, and to urge him to fresh exertions with the object of rousing China from her lethargy. Count Okuma, when he held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs in the Matsukata Cabinet, had a most definite policy with regard to the advisability of employing Japanese influence and Japanese assistance to promote the growth of China's capacity for independence, and since it may be assumed that his views have not undergone any change, he doubtless welcomes this project of Marquis Ito's as a powerful aid to his own policy.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM.

The Government has again taken up the often mooted and often essayed problem of administrative reform. A temporary committee of administrative investigation (rinji seimu chosa-i-in) has been organized, consisting of Count Itagaki, as president, and all the Vice-Ministers of State—except those of the Army and Navy—together with the Chief Secretary of the Cabinet, as members. It is announced that the Committee will direct its inquiries to the following questions :—

1. The abolition of superfluous procedure and useless formalities in the discharge of official business.
2. The correction of abuses in the management of railways, posts, and telegraphs.
3. The organization of a department of public works, and the unification of business connected with public works.
4. The public election of headmen of districts (now officially appointed).
5. The abolition and amalgamation of prefectures and law courts.
6. The separation and combination of bureaux in the various Departments of State.
7. The clear definition of the responsibilities of officials.
8. Measures to correct the apparent abuse that the decisions of Administrative Courts are nearly always favourable to the office concerned in the suit.
9. The abolition of the office of Chief of Metropolitan Police.

People that have followed the course of political discussions during the past few years will recognise in the above proposals many, if not all, of the reforms or changes advocated from time to time by either the Liberals or the Progressists. The programme is one that any Cabinet would doubtless be pleased to carry out.

Of course the vernacular newspapers have a great deal to say on the subject, but their comments are so plainly dictated by their prejudices that our readers would be little edified by perusing them in detail. On the whole, the sentiment appears to be that the results achieved by the Committee will be insignificant. One journal congratulates the Cabinet on the celerity it has shown on approaching this difficult work, but opines that its courage is greater than its capacities, and that, when the committee-men go to work, they will find themselves deficient in the experience requisite for such a task. Another sees nothing except the fact that the Departments of War and of the Navy are excluded from the proposed reforms. The proximate cause of the Committee's appointment is financial, and the root of all the financial trouble is armaments expansion, yet the military and naval services are left entirely beyond the range of all reform. It will inevitably be said that the Ministry are too much afraid of the Sat-cho statesmen to touch either the Army or the Navy. But unless Japan is to fall into the same financial slough as Italy, she must extend her administrative reforms to the Army and Navy. A third newspaper regards the appointment of the Committee as a mere device to secure Parliamentary consent to increased taxation. The cry of the Opposition in the last Diet was that they would never vote for increased taxation unless administrative reform went hand in hand with it. The Government is now taking means to prevent a renewal of that cry. There is no need for any investigation; no occasion for new rules and regulations; no want of a committee. If each Department chose to make reforms, it could do so on its own account.

Such is the general trend of the criticisms. They confirm the impression that we have gathered, and that our readers must also have gathered, from the writings of the vernacular press since the present Cabinet came into office, namely, that people have no great confidence in the Ministry's ability to accomplish anything worthy of note. It is a most satisfactory impression from the Cabinet's point of view, since, where nothing is expected, there will be all the more readiness to applaud anything that is achieved.

TEA-GROWERS.

Recently the principal tea-producers of Miye held a meeting to consider the situation resulting from America's action in imposing an import duty of ten cents per lb. upon tea. They decided, after some discussion, that the wisest course would be to put a stop to the production of tea, and a circular was accordingly issued to all the districts represented at the meeting, directing that no more leaves should be pulled after July 31st. Against that extraordinary resolution the Yokohama Association of Tea-dealers have now protested. A meeting of the officers of the Association was held on the 14th instant, and followed by a general meeting the following day. The leading members of the Association agreed unanimously in denouncing the Miye's folk action as petulant and unreasoning. If no market offered for tea, there would be valid reason to discontinue its production. But as a matter of fact, brisk sales were reported from the States, and that the producers at this side should sit down idly under the circumstances would be quite silly. A document was prepared embodying those views, and sent to the parties concerned.

THE AUTUMN MANŒUVRES.

It is the rule in Japan to organize military and naval manœuvres on an exceptionally large scale every fourth year. The year 1894 would have been the set time for applying the rule, but the War with China in that year gave the two services all the manœuvring they wanted. Next November the manœuvres will again fall due, and arrangements are in progress to hold them in the provinces of Kawachi, Settsu and Izumi, during the period of a week from Nov. 9th. It was originally intended that the Navy should take part in the affair, but investigations show that no suitable ports are available in the proposed districts. The operations will therefore be confined to the Army. It is stated that the troops engaged will be the Third, Fourth, Ninth, and Tenth Divisions, and that they will muster sixty thousand strong, a force nearly twice as large as any hitherto assembled for such a purpose. The Emperor will of course be present. Lieut.-General Viscount Kawakami is expected to proceed to the scene of the manœuvres for purposes of inspection at the end of this month.

BARON SUYEMATSU.

Baron Suyematsu is not one of those speakers that have the gift of calming an audience. His style of oratory is somewhat aggressive. But he has the immense merit of saying exactly what he wants to say in the clearest terms, and of leaving no manner of doubt in the minds of his hearers that he is absolutely in earnest. At the recent meeting of the Oriental Society in the Kanda Hall, he went in for some very plain speaking. His audience grew much excited, and interrupted him in a manner that would have silenced any orator not endowed with imperturbable calm. Baron Suyematsu, however, has all the courage of his opinions, and a hostile audience is absolutely powerless to perturb him. The chief point that he wished to make at the Kanda meeting was one with which all students of Japan's modern history must sympathise. It is the fashion now-a-days to claim for party politicians a monopoly of liberal principles, and to assert that the national progress had been arrested when the political parties stepped forward, and insisted on the consummation of constitutional principles. We have often contended in these columns against such an extravagant and unjust notion. By whom has the practical application of Liberal principles been made possible? Who are they that have worked resolutely and unflaggingly in the cause of progress during the past thirty years, and have obtained for Japan a really remarkable measure of national and international success? Baron Suyematsu did well to remind his audience of these things. He told them that he and his fellow-thinkers were just as desirous as the most radical of them could be to see party cabinets succeed, and he reminded them that if the so-called "Clan Statesmen" had desired to remain in office, they might easily have done so for four or five years longer. They stepped aside in the interests of the progressive movement which they had themselves planned and rendered possible.

But, while wishing success to the first party cabinet, Baron Suyematsu said that he and his friends could not ride in the same boat with it for several reasons. One was based on the general principle that there must be two parties if the system was to work properly. There was only one party at present. Another reason was that he did not consider the present Cabinet a purely party cabinet: it was a coalition ministry. A third reason was that the Party's attitude towards the "spoils system" had disgusted him. Concerning this last point he made a singular statement. Some of his former subordinates and official friends, he said, had asked his advice about retaining their positions. The new Cabinet wished them to remain, and the only question was, could they do so with propriety? He advised them in the affirmative, and all arrangements were made for their continuing in office. But the Cabinet, finding itself unable to resist the pressure of office-seekers among its political followers, had ultimately called on these men to resign. He considered such procedure a breach of faith, and a display of undignified weakness on the part of the Cabinet.

The "spoils system" is about as great an abuse as can disfigure the polity of any country, but it must be confessed that the present occasion in Japan has some very exceptional features. What has happened is not a mere transfer of the administration from one party to another. It is the accession to power of a body of men who had been struggling for twenty years to attain that end, and whose contention throughout the whole time had been that the prizes of officialdom fell to the share of the "clan statesmen's" favourities. Is it not natural that these men should now believe themselves entitled to oust the nominees of the Sat-Cho administrators? Nothing could be more unhappy than the establishment of such a precedent, and the Ministers are bound to fight against it with all the strength they possess. But if they are not gaining a complete victory, can we be altogether surprised?

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

FINANCE.

The Cabinet has been but three weeks in office, yet its opponents appear to think that it should already have formulated some definite financial policy; an unreasonable contention. In point of fact there is little, if any, doubt about the Cabinet's policy. It evidently intends to increase the sake tax as far as possible, and to make up any deficiency of revenue that may still present itself by taxes on salt and sugar. Mr. Hayashi, Minister of State for Communications, interviewed by a representative of the Jiji Shimpo, has expressed himself very explicitly. He regards the financial problem as comparatively simple, and thinks that 30 or 35 millions of extra revenue can easily be obtained without recourse to the Land Tax. By interdicting the private brewing of sake for domestic use, and enacting strict rules for the control of mixed sake, it is thought that the taxable quantity of sake will be increased to six million koku, and an additional 5 yen per koku of tax would give a return of 30 millions. Then there remain sugar and salt in reserve. Should these various sources prove insufficient, it will be time enough to fall back on the Land Tax. Mr. Hayashi then passed on to speak of the State purchase of private railways. For himself he had always been—, and still was, an advocate of that measure, but he was unable to say what would be the Cabinet's ultimate attitude towards it, for—and this remark seems to us specially worthy of note—the Constitutional Party was made up of two sections who had been called upon to take over the responsibilities of administration before they had thoroughly amalgamated or brought their views into full accord. Time would be needed to marshal them in accurate line for a general advance.

SUICIDE OF CAPTAIN HIJIKATA.

A sad and seemingly inexplicable event occurred in Tokyo on the 15th instant. Captain Hijikata Hisaakira, an officer of Artillery, son of Count Hijikata, formerly Minister of the Imperial Household, shot himself at 7 a.m., in his residence at Omote-machi, Akasaka. Captain Hijikata was only 36 years of age. He usually enjoyed robust health, but is said to have suffered lately from pains in his head. Not the slihgtest reason for alarm seemed to exist, however. On the 13th, the deceased officer attended to his duties at the office of H.I.H. Prince Fushimi, whose aide-de-camp he had been for more than a year. He passed the following day at home, his attendance not being required at the Prince's, and, up to the time of retiring to rest in the evening, neither his conversation nor his demeanour suggested anything unusual. At 7 o'clock the following morning, a shot was heard in his bed-room, and Mrs. Hijikata, hurrying in, found him in the agony of death. He had placed the muzzle of a six-chambered revolver to his gorge, and the bullet, severing the jugular, had passed out at the base of the skull. Captain Hijikata was an officer of much promise. He spent nearly ten years in Germany prosecuting his military studies, and he enjoyed a high reputation for zeal and intelligence. He was twice married. His first wife died during his absence in Germany, leaving a daughter who now lives with the Count and Countess. His second wife, who is little more than a bride, has a son who now becomes heir to the title. Very deep sympathy is felt with the bereaved widow and parents. It is understood that Captain Hijikata did not leave a will or any document throwing light on the sad occurrence. The funeral is to leave the residence of Count Hijikata in Hayashicho, Koishikawa, at 2 p.m. on the 18th instant.

A SINGULAR SWINDLE.

Probably some of our readers remember that twelve years ago there was much talk about the monetary affairs of the celebrated Kyoto temple, Chion-in. The temple, one of the grandest and most interesting in Japan, was said to be seriously embarrassed, and nobody could understand clearly how such a misfortune had overtaken it. Of course it is never surprising to hear that a Buddhist temple is in low water. The Restoration was an evil season for the folks to whom Japan owed nearly all her old-time civilization. They were deprived of revenues and estates, and reduced to a state of comparative, if not actual, poverty. But about such an institution as the Chion-in there was an atmosphere of grandeur that could not easily be reconciled with the idea of impecuniosity. Nevertheless, proofs were produced to show that the temple owed some eighty thousand yen to the Sixty-first National Bank in Kurume, and, after protracted investigations and discussions, the priests agreed to pay a sum of fifty thousand in ten yearly instalments, the parishioners promising to contribute the money. Last year the final instalment was paid, and everything seemed settled. But the incident is said to have now assumed a totally new phase. A book-keeper of the Bank has come forward and lodged information that the money was never really due by the temple, and that the whole affair was a plot concerted between Sugiyama Seiun, the chief steward of the Chion-in, and Sassa Osamu, the manager of the Bank. Several arrests—all the Bank's officers, it is said—have been made, and the preliminary investigation is going on. Much excitement is reported from Kyoto, and no wonder, for the deliberate robbing of temples has never been regarded with leniency in this country. It may turn out, of course, that the book-keeper is concocting a romance on his own account, but such a hypothesis is difficult to entertain.

THE LAND TAX.

We note with interest that Messrs. Taguchi and Shimada, speaking at the recent meeting of the Oriental Society in the Kanda Hall, used with respect to the Land Tax exactly the arguments advanced frequently in these columns. The opponents of an increased Land Tax speak with much eloquence and sympathy about the hardships of the farmer's life; how he goes to his work while the stars are still in the sky and leaves it after the moon has risen; how the sun scorches him and the frost numbs him, and so forth and so on, but in point of fact it is not the tiller of the soil that pays the tax but the landlord, and among all the classes of which a community is composed there is not one that works so little for its income as the land-owning class. Japanese landowners have been sitting with folded hands for twenty-four years, and all the time, owing to the effects of a general progress to which, in their capacity of landlords, they have contributed nothing, the value of their property has been steadily rising and the income they derive from it steadily increasing. Are they to enjoy the whole of that unearned increment, and is no share of it to go to the public who have created the conditions responsible for it? With regard to urban lands the case is quite monstrous. For purposes of taxation the land in Tokyo, for example, is registered at the prices ruling a quarter of a century ago, though its market value is often a hundred or even two hundred times as great as it was when the assessment was made. With respect to urban lands there is no question of that sentimental and misleading figure, the star-and-moon tiller of the soil. The tax-payer is the land-owner whose sole toil is the collection of his rents. This country is an inimitable object-lesson for the propagandists of that most enlightened of all systems, the single tax.

It was the land-owners, said Mr. Taguchi, that overthrew the Sat-cho Government. The Ministries of Yamagata and Matsukata fell because the land-owning interest in the Lower House clamoured for a reduction of the Land Tax. After the war, the Ito, the Matsukata, and again the Ito Cabinets fell because they wanted to increase the Land Tax. And now we have a Cabinet that shrinks from touching the Land Tax, and turns rather to taxes on articles of consumption, as sake, tobacco, salt and sugar. The consuming classes are to suffer in order that the landlords' interests may be consulted. Mr. Taguchi called the land-owners the "drones of society" (shakai no yumin), and to us the epithet seems excellently chosen. Apart, too, from the importance attaching to the subject itself, it is noteworthy that two such eminent members of the Constitutionalist Party as Messrs. Shimada Saburo and Taguchi Ukichi adopt towards this crucial question of finance an attitude opposed to that of the Party in general. They voted against an increase of the Tax last session. They did so, however, not because they objected on principle, but because they thought that the Diet should not be asked to sanction an increase of revenue until it had before it an exact statement of the estimated expenditures.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

GERMANY IN THE FAR EAST.

We have alluded more than once to the fact that Germany's procedure in the Far East has excited suspicion, and we now find a very out-spoken article on the subject in the Jiji Shimpo. Our contemporary's idea is that ever since she joined the Triple Alliance to deprive Japan of the Liaotung Peninsula, Germany has been steadily and astutely pursuing the policy of driving England out of the trade of the Far East and obtaining for herself the leading commercial place. With that object in view she made friendly advances to Russia, securing, at the same time, the additional advantage that an obstacle was thus opposed to the consummation of France's policy of revenge. In short, she made puppets of France and Russia and put restraining pressure on Japan, always keeping before her eyes an anti-English scheme, and always taking care to avoid anything that could excite England's suspicions. Meanwhile, John Bull watching these doings with dull eyes, did not detect the gradual paring away (kogatana-saiku), of his influence. Just as Germany was beginning to congratulate herself, however, the war between America and Spain came to upset her calculations. The prospect presented by the war is that another great Anglo-Saxon Power will make its début on the Far-Eastern stage. It is true that America has not yet appropriated the Philippines, and that she may, perhaps, sell them to England or cede them to Japan. But in any case the outlook is most unfavourable to Germany's plans, and she is therefore doing what she can to embarrass the United States at Manila. It is of prime importance to Japan—the Jiji continues—that America should take and hold the Philippines. Far from opposing such a consummation, this country should do everything possible to promote it, to the end that the rise of a dangerously ambitious Power in the Far East may be prevented. By thus acting Japan will be in full accord with England's ideas also, and will be preparing the day for that great result—the union of England, America, and Japan against Germany, Russia, and France.

The Kokumin Shimbun also writes on the subject of an alliance between America, Japan, and England, declaring that the time is eminently favourable for bringing the project into the field of practical politics, since the Philippines question will speedily present itself for settlement. China was opened by England; Japan by America. England has eight-tenths of China's foreign trade in her hands. America is Japan's best customer. All the three States are actuated by the same desire to promote civilization and assist the cause of humanity. Their interest and their sentiments are alike identical. They should certainly march hand in hand.

MR. PAK YONG-HO.

It appears that the reports recently circulated about a private messenger having been sent from the Emperor of Korea to convey his Majesty's pardon to Mr. Pak Yong-ho (known in Japan as Boku Yeiko) are incorrect. The only foundation for the story seems to be that Mr. Pak made a journey to Nagasaki a few days ago, but the account of his reason for making the journey, as now published by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, imparts a new complexion to the affair. When Pak fled from Korea in 1884, he left behind him a young wife and a baby daughter only a few months old. His wife was put to death, but a nurse saved the child's life and placed it under the care of a Mr. and Mrs. Lascelles (?), American Missionaries then residing in Sōul. Pak did not know that his baby had escaped. He returned to Korea in 1894, under the auspices of the Japanese Government, without any idea of finding the child. After he had been appointed Minister of Home Affairs, however, the guardians of the little girl thought that her safety would not be imperilled by making known her parentage, and her father had the immense pleasure of finding a ten-year-old daughter instead of the sad memory of a slaughtered baby. He wisely entrusted the care and education of the little girl to Mr. and Mrs. Lascelles—wisely because, after a brief period of service in Korea, he was once again obliged to fly to Japan. Last year the Lascelles came to Nagasaki and took charge of the Kassui Jogakko (Female School of the Water of Life). They brought Mr. Pak's daughter with them, and it was to meet her after a parting of three years that her father recently repaired to Nagasaki. He denies that there was any question of a private messenger from the Emperor of Korea, or that there is any visible prospect of a pardon being extended to him.

THE AFFAIR OF THE GERMAN STOKER.

There appears to be a great deal of excitement in Yokohama about the probable consequence of the recent killing of a German sailor. Two men are under arrest, Mizoguchi Motojiro and Mizoguchi Tokujiro. They are said to be quiet, industrious people, and the contention is that the behaviour of the German towards a girl, who is described as Motojiro's daughter, was so brutal that forbearance could not be exercised by the most self-contained onlooker. Of course that may be a mere excuse. But it may also be true. We have no right to pronounce judgment one way or the other. At all events, a certain Mr. Ito Tomojiro organized a lecture meeting under the name of Satsugai Jiken Ketsurui dai-ensetsu-kai (tears-of-blood-for-the-killing-affair great lecture meeting), his intention being to arouse public sympathy on behalf of the suspected persons, and thus secure a mitigation of any sentence that that might be pronounced on them. The police, hearing of Mr. Ito's purpose, warned him that such a proceeding would be illegal while the case was sub judice. The law, indeed, is very clear on the subject. But Ito and his fellow-thinkers insisted that the affair was too pitiful to be left to take its ordinary course. They held their lecture meeting, and were all arrested by the police, some being committed for trial and others bound over to appear when required. It is an unhappy complication, not unlikely to arouse a good deal of feeling. Beyond all question, however, the promoters of the lecture meeting were to blame. There were many steps that they might have taken with perfect propriety, whereas the step they chose was utterly unlawful and intolerable. Justice could never be administered without fear or favour if the public were at liberty to organize indignation meetings while a suit is pending. Subscriptions to engage able counsel for the defence, the collecting and marshalling of trustworthy evidence on the prisoners' behalf, and finally the circulation and presentation of a petition—all these are legitimate measures, but a public lecture meeting is opposed to all reason.

AN AMERICAN ORCHESTRA.

Among the remarkable results of the rapid development of American musical taste within the past twenty years, not the least conspicuous is the creation of highly trained orchestras, the achievements of which have given them a European fame. The work accomplished by Theodore Thomas's superb body of musicians is as cordially appreciated in Berlin or Vienna as in New York; and the reputation of the late Anton Seidl and Damrosch, as organizers and conductors of the first class, is scarcely less extensive. It is perhaps needless to say that the majority of the performers of whom the orchestras in question are composed are of foreign birth. This is a circumstance to which, until recently, no particular consideration has been given. But we observe that a patriotic movement has now been initiated for the formation of an exclusively American instrumental force, every individual connected with which shall be required to produce testimony of his birth within the territory of the United States. Already a list of more than seventy members has been published, but even the most strenuous advocates of domestic art-interpretation must draw curious conclusions from the nomenclature displayed. Out of the whole seventy odd names, there is but one (Davis) which indicates American origin. The rest bear evidence of derivation from all the countries of Europe, England alone excepted, and do not even suggest the slightest attempt at naturalization. Sam Franko is the conductor,—a name merrily significant of the Italian fantoccini. One of the violins is more or less profanely designated Gotodamme, and cannot, naturally, be suspected of descent from a Puritan ancestry. The leading double-bass signs himself Kissantelle, a combination of sounds which no chivalrous son of the Republic would ever have selected for a surname. Among the trombones is one entitled Pfeiffenschneiderberg, a volley of syllables as raucous to the auricular nerves as the blast of the instrument with which the player thus styled rends the air. The second clarinet likewise bears an appellative burden of five syllables,—nothing less than Strelitzträmerlung. Every variety of nationality seems to be represented, save that which the new organization is intended to typify. One Davis can hardly make an American orchestra, in the strictest sense, any more than one swallow can make a summer. It is possible that all the individuals concerned were born under the Stars and Stripes, but who can doubt that their artistic qualifications are inherited from abroad? Every one knows the land where the names of Pfeiffenschneiderberg and Strelitzträmerlung are emblems of deeds that are done in their clime—done with musical, not lethal instruments,—and such names point unerringly to the nativity of their first possessors. You may break,

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

you may shatter the line of citizenship for a generation or two if you will, but the trace of the fatherland hangs round them still. And they certainly carry better prima facie warrant of musical ability than any conceivable assortment of Browns, Smiths, and Joneses, or even Davises. Looked at impartially, and by the light of common reason, the idea of an orchestra made up of purely and unadulteratedly American players is absurd and impracticable. It could not be realized,—unless, perhaps, by laying a continuous prohibitory tariff on the foreign artist, and even then the home product would probably not be worth listening to.

MARQUIS TOKUGAWA'S FUNERAL.

The funeral of Marquis Tokugawa took place on the 17th instant, as announced. It was attended by an immense concourse of mourners. Indeed, the difficulty would be to say who was not there, rather than to enumerate those that were. The progress of the cortêge from Mukojima to Uyeno seems to have been somewhat quicker than had been anticipated, for whereas the service at the temple was notified to take place at 9 a.m., it was over fully fifteen minutes before that hour, and numbers of people arrived late. Immediately on the conclusion of the ceremony, which, being according to the Shinto ritual, was comparatively short, the coffin was taken to the terminus of the Mito Railway and despatched by train for the ancestral home of the deceased nobleman in Mito. Several carriages had been specially retained, and any person desiring to accompany the body to its last resting place found a seat awaiting him in the train.

MODERN ENAMELS.

The Japanese are certainly making wonderful progress in the art of enamels. Great interest was excited some ten years ago by the cloisonless work of Namikawa of Tokyo. It did not, however, elicit unmixed admiration, some critics being doubtful whether the attempt to produce purely pictorial effects by recourse to means so mechanical and with materials so obdurate could be reconciled with the principles of true art. Still, whatever objections might be raised on theoretical grounds, there could be no question about the beauty of the results produced. Quite a long time was needed to awaken public enthusiasm about these cloisonless enamels. People did not understand them and would not take the trouble to understand them. It is related of the first specimen—a snow scene—sent by Namikawa to London, that it was "skied" among the pictorial exhibits at the "Fisheries," and that the only attention it attracted was from people who wondered what on earth such a "drawing" had to do in such an entourage—among a number of sketches intended solely to illustrate piscatorial matters. However, as the plaque represented a man poling a boat along the base of a snow-clad mountain, spectators concluded that it bore some kind of relation to the business of fishing and its presence escaped censure but certainly evoked no admiration. The plaque returned to Tokyo in due course, somewhat "fly-blown," and the apocryphal sequel to the story is that an Englishman subsequently visiting Japan recognised the incongruous exhibit which he had seen at the Fisheries, and purchased it for a price dictated by languid curiosity. Namikawa seemed as far as ever from achieving success when an American dealer fell in love with one of his productions—a plaque with a design of barn-door fowl—and, more Americano, at once secured a monopoly of it. How many examples of that niwatori plaque thereafter passed into the hands of Western collectors at monopolist prices, we refrain from suggesting, the point being, not the story of a particular specimen, but the fact that the cloisonless enamels first obtained ingress to the market by the aid of a specimen which did not owe anything of its beauty to the absence of cloisons, and belonged rather to the class of work for which Kyoto had already become famous; work remarkable for the delicate manipulation of its wire outlines and the purity and richness of its colours. In a word, Namikawa captured the public by reverting to the technical traditions from which it was his speciality to have departed. All that he needed, however, was to attract attention. So soon as people began to look seriously at his productions, they recognised the great beauties of the work, and prosperity followed the long season of neglect and failure. Than came the manufacture of monochrome enamels. An English collector is said to have given the initial impulse to that very admirable departure. Observing the softness and grandeur of tone that distinguished the ground colours in some of Namikawa's pieces, he asked whether these accessory effects could not be raised to the rank of principal aims, and, by way of encouraging the effort, gave a carte-blanche order for a pair of monochromatic canary-yellow vases. Unqualified success was achieved. The vases —some twelve inches in height and of "eloquent form"—were duly despatched to London, at a price—well, for the collector's sake we suppress details. Nothing could exceed the loveliness of this canary-yellow. It had all the pearly tenderness, "maiden's-breath" softness and glowing delicacy of the choicest Chinese porcelain. In short, an ecstasy of adjectives might fairly be used in describing it. But Japan is the last country in the world where pioneer prices can be paid with any sense of security. The people's aptitude for imitation is so marked that they can confidently be trusted to follow successfully any route trodden by others. If the English collector had been gifted with a little Trans-Atlantic shrewdness, he would probably have stipulated that the canary-yellow process should be patented. But he missed that point, and the consequence was that, after a very brief interval, the Nagoya enamel-workers, keen rivals of both Tokyo and Kyoto, sent to the usual Spring Exhibition of the Fine Arts Society in the Uyeno galleries, a pair of canary-yellow vases, three times as large as Namikawa's originals, quite as satisfactory in the matter of colour, and just one-tenth of the price. There was a difference, it is true. At the rims of the Nagoya vases the metal base was exposed, whereas in Namikawa's specimens the yellow enamel was continued over the rim and carried to an invisible point within the vases. It does not sound like a crucial difference when thus described, but it amounts just to this, that in the one case the art is hidden, in the other it is bluntly revealed. Further, to carry the enamel over the rim so that there shall be no break of continuity is a technical feat which appears to be beyond the capacity of the Nagoya artizan. Everybody knows what a series of grand monochromes were produced after that first essay—liquid-dawn-red, pearl-grey, cerulean blue, aubergine-purple, grass-green, and many other admirable tints. Then followed transparent enamels run over a silver base. There is nothing novel in that idea. The use of translucent enamel laid on a metal ground on which various designs are sculptured so as to be seen through the enamel envelope, took its birth in Italy at the beginning of the fourteenth century, and several brilliant examples of the process are preserved in European collections. That is the method which the Japanese revived some four years ago. Whether they hit upon the process by their own genius or were instructed by foreign experts, we do not know, but the latter supposition is much the more likely of the two, for, speaking generally, the remarkable progress that their enamellers have made in recent years unquestionably owes much to foreign inspiration and foreign pigments and fluxes. As copyists or originators, however, they are eminently qualified for such work, their skill in graving and sculpting metals being almost unequalled, and their ability to produce translucent coloured enamels having reached a very high point. Yet another advance has now to be recorded. It is a combination of the translucent enamel processes of mediæval Italy and the enamel painting in which the artists of Limoges acquired such celebrity four hundred years ago. The beauty of the pieces thus produced is very great, but the technical difficulties are immense. The utmost care is required during firing, to prevent the several colours running together in a confused mass, and as yet this difficulty introduces such an element of uncertainty that fully fifty per cent. of the objects undertaken are spoiled before they have been subjected to the numerous firings required in the course of manufacture. That means, of course, high prices, but it must be confessed that these enamels are veritable things of beauty, probably the finest examples of the enameller's art ever produced in any country at any epoch. They should be commended to the attention of people who imagine that the artistic capacities of the Japanese have deteriorated since the country was opened to foreign intercourse.

JAPANESE FACTS AND COMMENTS

The Nippon reports the inauguration of a new political organisation designated the Kwanto Doshi Club, which is composed of former members of the Diet attached to the Constitutional Party. They held their meeting on the 12th instant at the Shiba Maple Club, Tokyo, when over 40 members were present. Their principles are the steady protection and development of the Constitution, and they propose to direct their energies to securing to the club a leading power in Japanese politics.

The marine produce of Hokkaido, according to the Nichi Nichi, varies from 7 to 13 million yen in value, but this amount is insignificant compared with its agricultural potentialities. The reclamation of the North, when completed, will secure agricultural produce to the value of at least 200 millions. The speedy construction of railways and harbours is indispensable in view of these circumstances. As regards forests, it may be mentioned that an immense tract of land has been sold by the

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Government with the view of having trees planted on it, and several thousands of tsubo have been appropriated to this purpose for the first time this year. Many cases of fraud in respect to forest plantations are reported.

The Formosa Government Office is reported by the vernacular papers to have resolved upon retaining the silver yen for permanent circulation in the island. The approval of the council having been obtained, special regulations have been drafted and transmitted to the central Government for Imperial sanction. According to these regulations the silver pieces are to be circulated as legal tender from the 1st of August next, the value being determined by taking the average for four months. Stamped silver now in circulation is to be withdrawn by degrees.

The Chuo gives voice to the grievance of the saké brewers over the Government's taxation proposals. An augmentation of the tax to 20 yen would, it says, involve the utter ruin of the unfortunate brewers. If it be the intention of the Cabinet to destroy them, they had better give up their occupation at once, and cripple the Ministry by the withdrawal of 30 millions of yen which they have hitherto paid in the form of national taxes; and upon the subversion of the present Cabinet they could adopt measures to inaugurate a new and more equitable Ministry. A very practical scheme.

The authorities of the Army and the Navy, according to the Yorozu, are urging the necessity of putting aside a certain amount of money as an emergency fund. The project was submitted to Count Inouye for consideration during the last Ministry, and it was arranged that a bill for raising a foreign loan to the amount of 70 million yen should be presented to the Diet, but there was no practical result to the negotiations. The project, however, is under consideration by the present Cabinet, and the Premier is to be approached by the promoters of the scheme.

According to the vernacular papers, Count Itagaki, Minister for Home Affairs, convoked on the 13th instant a meeting of the Prison superintendents from Hokkaido, Nagasaki, and Miye, and addressed them on the necessity of improving the prison system in Japan. He said that while holding the portfolio for Home Affairs last year he had contemplated sweeping changes in the organisation of prisons, but his resignation rendered him unable to carry out the design. Now that he was again in office, however, he had determined to pursue this same policy. The most important step was the rigorous enforcement of sanitary precautions.

The Nipton states that marine transport business during the first half of this year has been extremely discouraging. During the first three months of the year no serious reduction was noticeable in cargo and passengers compared with the corresponding period of 1897. April and May witnessed, too, a slight increase, but in June the number of passengers considerably decreased, the reduction on the whole being no less than 20 per cent, and this too with freights higher by 20 or 30 per cent. than in previous years. Expenses of navigation have increased in consequence of the abnormal appreciation of coal and other commodities, and the result is to leave but a small margin of profit.

Makino Ioseki, of Kojimachi, Tokyo, recently lodged a complaint in a law court against the Minister of Communications for the recovery of 122,775 yen. It seems that, in in the 17th year of Meiji, one Kodama Shosuke obtained a charter for filling up a portion of the beach at Shinagawa. An enormous amount of money, however, being needed for the enterprise, Mr. Kodama transferred the privilege to Makino for 8,250 yen. Makino undertook the work with a capital of 220,000 yen and completed it. Subsequently a part of the land so filled in, covering 2,391 tsu, was purchased by the Government for the construction of the Shinagawa-Shinbashi railway, and, the value having not as yet been paid, the present claim has been made before the Tokyo District Court.

The Cabinet has not as yet adopted any definite course of action in regard to the position of Mr. Takano. Some of the Ministers, however, are reported to regard as unconstitutional the measure taken against the ex Chief Justice for his removal from office in Formosa. But if this step be declared invalid, then the appointment of Mr. Mizuo, the present Chief Justice, would also necessarily be illegal; and the judgments pronounced by Mr. Mizuo, it seems to follow, would be open to question. The Yomiuri's view is that the Minister responsible for Mr. Takano's removal, Count Matsukata, should be punished by being deprived of the special treatment to which an ex-Minister is entitled.

The Nippon criticises the present Ministry in its usual breezy style. The Government, it says, has installed and still endeavours to install in high posts persons whose talent is hardly equal to the duties they are called upon to perform. To retain its popularity, however, it must be firm in excluding from the sweets of office persons of the following classes:—Those who are notorious for their corruptibility and infidelity; those who are not respected by their constituents; those who are despised and nicknamed by newspaper writers; those who have incurred the imputation of want of learning. If nicknames ought to exclude men from official positions, Gladstone, Disraeli, and Salisbury would never have held Cabinet rank.

In order to exclude criminal or dishonest persons from the occupation of keiwan (conductors of servants' agencies) the granting of licences to them has been entrusted to the police authorities, and rules have been established for their control. Licences are not to be granted to the following:—(1) Those who have been, within three years, convicted of theft, gambling, fraudulent exaction of money, kidnapping, or the receipt of stolen goods. (2) Those who are considered to be of immoral character. (3) Inn keepers and inmates of inns. (4) Agents, clerks, office boys, and others connected with persons enumerated in (1), (2), and (3). The above rules were enforced from the 1st of this month. The licensed agents are prohibited from supplying as servants persons of the classes mentioned below:—(1) Those who, being under 20 years of age, have failed to obtain the consent of their relatives or guardians. (2) Wives without the approval of their husbands. (3) Persons whose social status is uncertain, and for whom there is no surety. (4) Those convicted of theft, frauds, or offences connected with stolen goods. (5) Pregnant women. No person is to be induced to become a servant against his own desire, or to be urged to leave his master during the fixed period of his service. No fees are to be received, under whatever pretext, beyond the lawful commission, and false statements must not be made either to employer or employed. No person seeking employment is to be lodged in the keiwan's house.

With regard to the claims of Japan on account of the late Shashi affair, several conferences have taken place between the Commissioners of the two Governments, and the following terms, according to the Chuo, have been agreed upon:—That the Chinese Government shall issue a notification warning the officials and people against similar occurrences. That the rioters and the officials who failed to adopt adequate measures at the recent disturbances shall be severely punished. That an indemnity of 10,000 taels shall be paid by the Chinese Government in addition to 50,000 taels as expenses for the construction of an embankment in the Shashi settlement. That the value of land for the Shashi settlement shall be reduced and the roads exempted from tax. That new buildings shall be erected as a Japanese consulate free of charge. That Santo island in Gakushiu shall be opened to commerce, with the condition that it may be conceded or transferred to Japan as soon as the system of exclusive settlement is established. That the Foochow settlement shall be determined by fresh conference with reference to the actual condition of the territory.

Count Okuma, the Premier, recently received a visit from Viscount Tani, Marquis Konoye, and Viscount Soga. The Chuo claims to have afterwards interviewed Viscount Tani, and states that the Viscount expressed his intention of supporting the Government in the event of its financial and foreign policy being satisfactory. The Viscount is opposed to a scheme for increasing the Land Tax, and speaks of the Premier as entertaining the same views. He is, however, utterly disgusted at the anxiety of the Constitutional party to secure the sweets of office. "Among the upstarts," he said, "many are so unworthy of the posts assigned to them that I cannot but look upon them with disdain. Even some of the Ministers themselves are hardly entitled to respect.

The stock of ice stored in the various vaults in Tokyo since the Spring amounted, according to the Nippon, to 8,500 tons, or 21,500,000 catties. One-fourth of this is estimated to have melted up to the end of last month, and the actual amount now available does not exceed 1,150,000 catties. The cause of this reduction is ascribed to the abundance of rain and the mildness of the weather during the cold season of last year, and to the general curtailment of stock determined on by dealers in view of the fact that improved machinery was to be imported by the Ice Manufacturing Company, capable of producing 110,000 catties of ice per diem. The ice dealers' forecasts, however, have proved fallacious. The machinery is not to arrive from England till September next; and as the stock of ice is falling short of the demand, prices are rising rapidly.

The Official Gazette of the 15th instant publishes an Imperial Ordinance inaugurating the establishment of a Commissioners' Office for adjustment of land questions, in Okinawa Prefecture. The Office is placed under the direct control of the Finance Minister, with a personnel of 90; the President and Vice-President being respectively of chokunin and sonin rank. The powers of the President, however, are to be vested in the Governor of Okinawa. Another Ordinance refers to the official organisation of the Central Observatory, to which the work of observing meteorological phenomena and those relating to magnetism, aerial electricity, earthquakes, &c., has been assigned in addition to the astronomical duties already undertaken. A third Notification refers to the official organisation of the Harbour Office, subject to the Minister of Communications, with a staff of 100 officials.

Now that the Administration Investigation Committee has been appointed, radical reforms are expected in the various official departments. The question of the establishment of a Public Works Department seems to have been already agreed upon by the majority of the Committee. No details have yet been ascertained, but the general programme appears to be that one or two Bureaux of the Agricultural Department are to be severed and placed under the control of the new Department. The funds required for the maintenance of the proposed Department, though they may seem to be an additional burden to the Treasury, will be amply provided for by a decrease in the expenditure of the Agricultural and Commercial Department. The problem of abolishing the Police Board is also on the tapis, and other sweeping changes are contempl ated in regard to the amalgamation or abolition of sections of various Departments.

The Kokumin deals with the old story of financial stringency and commercial embarrassment. It says no path is open for the introduction of foreign capital, and many important enterprises are fast sinking into decline through impecuniosity. The only remedy is to secure the aid of foreign capitalists, but their support can not be expected unless some radical measures are adopted. Municipal and prefectural loans should be put on the foreign markets, foreign funds should be obtained on the security of railways, and foreigners should be granted the privilege of owning landed property in the interior. The outlook, according to the Kokumin, is dreary. The Nippon Yusen Kaisha's coasting steamers are embarrassed through scarcity of cargo; the Nippon Railway Company's lines have suffered a reduction of 25 per cent. in goods traffic; the owners of houses in Osaka have had to reduce their rents by 20 per cent. As to the future, the rice crop in the autumn is, of course, the key to the solution of the question, but silk must also be taken into consideration. Quotations are rising beyond expectation; the close of the Hispano-American War is expected ere long; and the approach of the Paris Exposition can hardly fail to increase the volume of the silk trade. As for tea, the imposition of a tax in America has had no effect upon the trade. The extraordinary excess of imports during the past six months is simply to be ascribed to the precipitancy of merchants anxious to import on favourable terms prior to the operation of the new Tariff. A reaction will come next year.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

An Imperial Ordinance was published in the Official Gazette of the 19th inst. declaring that the chief of the Administrative Courts shall hereafter be treated as a shinnin official. Another Ordinance issued over the signatures of the Premier and the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce defines the number of officials to be engaged in the investigation of mining districts throughout the empire. The personnel consists of 3 engineers, 42 assistants, and 7 clerks. These are to be distributed among the various Mining Inspection Offices at the discretion of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce.

The Japanese salt industry, remarks the Tokyo Asahi, with its capacity of producing 10 million koku of salt, may fairly be considered as one of the most important of marine enterprises. The recent abnormal appreciation of fuel and labour, however, has led to the importation of Chinese salt manufactured by the heat of the sun, and German salt has also found its way into the field, to the no small anxiety of the native producers. In view of these facts an association has been formed to introduce reforms into the system of manufacture, but, whatever improvements may be introduced, the imposition of a tax upon imported salt seems to be of absolute necessity as a protective measure.

According to the Kokumin, the members of the Financial Investigation Society lately interviewed Counts Okuma and Itagaki, and Mr. Matsuda, Minister of Finance. Count Itagaki is reported to have stated that he still held the same views as formerly in regard to the state ownership of railways. Mr. Matsuda seems to have answered that he was awaiting an opportunity for carrying out measures of financial relief, and he is still engaged in making necessary investigations. The Premier announced his intention, meanwhile, to continue the purchase of public bonds through the Bank of Japan until October. As to applications to the Government asking for its guarantee for raising a foreign loan in connection with railways and harbour works, the Premier seems to have condemned the project as temporising. The committee of the Society reported the results of the interview to a meeting on the 17th instant, and a conference took place as to the best means of strengthening the combination and attaining the objects in view.

The Yomiuri writes at some length in condemnation of a scheme now under contemplation to increase the allowances of Parliamentary members from 800 yen to 1,800 yen or 2,000 yen, as to which a bill is to be presented in the 13th session of the Diet. The arguments in favour of the measure are that insufficiency of income on the part of members is likely to lead them to sell their consciences for money or remunerative employment, and to put a premium on bribery and corruption. The Yomiuri, however, thinks such members as are at present to be bought would not be likely to reform their morality on account of a slight increase of allowances. The project deserves serious condemnation if it is based, as rumour says, on the Government's desire to allay the discontent of disappointed members of the Constitutional Party. A Parliamentary career cannot be regarded as a definite profession, and no salary is paid to members in foreign countries, except in France and America, and even there the results of the system are not entirely satisfactory. Japan is mistaken in granting annual allowances to representatives in the Diet, and is still more mistaken in attempting to increase the amount.

The trade of Kobe, remarks a vernacular paper, has so developed during the past few years that it now threatens to surpass Yokohama. Comparing the commerce of the two places for the first half of this year, it is to be noted that the imports at Kobe largely exceed those of Yokohama, and this tendency is likely to increase in future. In view of these facts the Mitsubishi has taken steps to construct its warehouses at Wadamisaki, while the Mitsui firm has lost no time in following its example at Onohama. The following are the comparative figures for the two ports:—

	Exports. Yen.	Imports. Yen.
Yokohama	30,054,702	57,668,867
Kobe	28,174 813	82,634 956

Compared with the volume of trade throughout the Empire, the figures stand thus:—

	Imports Exports. Yen.	Percentage.
Gross total	224,465,705	100
Yokohama	87,723 569	39
Kobe.....	110,809,769	49

But the fact is not to be overlooked that, although the trade of Kobe may be, so far as figures go, superior to that of Yokohama, it cannot claim to rival the latter port in regard to the excellent quality of goods and the extensive demand for valuable articles.

The Hochi publishes a long speech delivered by Mr. Nishimura Shigeki on the subject of concubinage in Japan. He remarks that the custom has existed in the Orient from time immemorial, from Turkey and Persia on the one extremity to Japan on the other, and recalls the curious fact that the Book of Rites and Etiquette (Raiki) of China contains an express provision that an emperor shall keep 3 ladies as Empresses, 9 as Lady Chamberlains, 27 as proper Maids of Honour, and 81 as concubines. Japan resembles China on this point. The Shinritsu Korei (a code of laws promulgated immediately after the Restoration) ranks concubines with relatives of the 2nd class; they virtually held a position next in importance to legitimate wives. Until recently no argument has been advanced against concubinage except from the pen of Mr. Fukuzawa, who has written in condemnation of the practice now and then. His views are European in character, and being chiefly derived from Christian sources, recognise monogamy as the only virtuous course of life. Any comparison of the morality of East and West has its difficulties, arising from the difference in views between Orientals and Occidentals. To keep an unbroken family line is regarded by Oriental ethics as one of the greatest acts of piety and this doctrine carried to an extreme point, could scarcely fail to give rise to the abuse of concubinage. The reverse is the case in western countries; extinction of a family line, though regrettable, is not taken so tragically. The Oriental bias shows itself in Mr. Nishimura, when he expresses the opinion that it is justifiable to keep a concubine when a wife is childless. He regrets, however, the general prevalence of polygamy which, he is afraid, there is no prospect of extirpating for many years. He regards the custom as a great bar to progress.

We read in the Tokyo Asahi that zeal for the formation of political societies and combinations has become apparent among public men in Korea. Meetings are frequently held to discuss the topics of the day, and resolutions are submitted to the Government in the form of addresses to the Throne. The Independence Club, which figures most conspicuously among political organisations, has lately adopted, in addition to the course hitherto pursued in this respect, the practice of forwarding memorials to the chiefs of the Bureaux, and submitting questions to which replies are demanded. The Departmental heads are not a little perplexed by such procedure. A scheme is under contemplation to amalgamate the two sections of the Central Council in order to extend the authority of the body, but as this is the suggestion of the Independence Club, which is regarded with aversion by some of the Cabinet Ministers, it will probably be disregarded. Ministers lately suggested the necessity of organising a club under the name of the Imperial Party to counterbalance the operations of the Independence Club. The Prince Royal of Korea is said to have approved the idea and contributed 800 yen towards the organisation fund. Some of the Privy Councillors even counsel the Emperor to forcibly overthrow the Independence Club as dangerous to the imperial prerogatives. These proposals, have naturally, caused much resentment among the members, who are reported to have demanded on what possible grounds the subversion of the Club could be undertaken. They also remark on the delay in seeking redress for the insult to the Minister of Foreign Affairs at the hands of the German Consul. With reference to this latter question, on the 3rd instant the members of the various political parties held a meeting at which it was decided that if the story of the insult proved true the German Consul ought to be removed immediately. The rumour as to the possible return of Pak Yong Ho seems to have struck the Emperor with terror, and he has given orders to his bodyguards to patrol the palace with increased vigilance.

OUR BOOK-SHELF.

The Standard Bearer: by S. R. Crockett. Methuen's Colonial Library; Yokohama—Kelly & Walsh, Limited.

We cannot agree with the reviewer in Literature when he describes "The Standard Bearer," "as Mr. Crockett at his best." Undoubtedly the tale is a pretty one to read and we find ourselves again in the good company of some of the brave folk who figure to such advantage in "The Men of the Moss Hags," to wit, Sir Alexander Gordon, more commonly known as Sandy Gordon, the Bull of Earlstoun, and his sanctimonious wife, the Lady Jean Hamilton, and also, though in a minor degree, we catch a glimpse of Col. William Gordon the narrator of the former story: but somehow or other there steals over one a feeling that the author has had to flog his pen and drive his brain to get the romance done and out of hand. It is perhaps the penalty that successful authors have to pay these days; the public clamours for books from their hands—and the demand must be satisfied. More's the pity. In "The Standard Bearer," Crockett takes us back again to his well-known Galloway hills and waters, but the date of the present story is a generation further from the time when the Bull of Earlstoun chivied the right honourable the Privy Council of Scotland from their seats and Council Hall when they casually suggested that he should be put to the torture. The storms of the "Great Killing" have almost passed away when the book opens, and men's minds, though still working like a yeasty sea in some parts of Scotland, have begun to turn towards more worldly things ere the story finishes. The book begins, in fact, in the year 1685, a year of ruth and death for so many a Cameronian Minister and Covenanting elder, and concludes shortly after Queen's Anne's Test Act had been accepted by the majority of the Kirk of Scotland. Quinton MacClellan, who tells the story, is the son of the "indweller" of the hill farm of Ardarioch, "which sits on the purple braeface above the loch of Knockmo." He sees the murder of one

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Edgar of Milnthird, a young saddler of Dumfries, a staunch Whig and Covenanter, who was shot down as he tried to escape from the King's soldiers along the flat table-land of Bennan; and later in the day safely conducts past these soldiers the Lady Mary Gordon, the three-year old daughter of the Bull of Earlstoun, to her aunt, then sheltering in the old tower of Lochinvar, while the girl's father makes good his escape. Years afterward, when peace has descended upon the Covenanters and men are once more allowed to abide safely in their own homes and worship God in the Kirk after their own fashion, the pair meet again. By this time Quintin has become the duly licensed and settled Minister of the parish of Balmaghie, which lies "in the very heart of Galloway, between the slow, placid, sylvan stretches of the Ken and the roaring, turbulent mill race of the Black Water of Dee." He makes love to Mary, but goes about it in so foolish a fashion that he receives an answer in the negative—as he richly deserves. This scene is about the best in the book. Troubles of another kind gather around our hero's head and finally he is excommunicated by the Presbytery for refusing to bow his head when the rest of the Kirk accepted Queen Anne's overlordship of the restored Kirk of Scotland. The parish stick by the brave young Minister in his sturdy fight for the Covenant, keeping the ecclesiastical, civil, and military powers at bay. But eventually "The Standard Bearer," as he feels justified in calling himself now, accepts the call of the Seven Thousand of the Hill-folk, in whose bosoms still burns bright and strong the spirit of the old Covenant, for they belong to those who "refused to enter the portals of any State church, but abode in the Way of Conscience and Righteousness." They can offer him no pay, no manse, no worldly emoluments whatever. But his spirit finds rest in their communion and that is all sufficient. He gives up his parish of Balmaghie and goes forth "a broken man." On the way to the West he calls in at Earlstoun and this time attains to his heart's desire, for the proud heart surrenders before the man who had lost all for conscience sake.

The story of "The Standard Bearer" is worth reading, even though the characters seem merely reflections from the pages of several others of Crockett's works. It is the inevitable result of this prolific writer's work that despite change of environment he cannot tear himself from the characters he first invented. Even his atmosphere remains the same. We wonder, too, why he sometimes fails to assimilate the spirit of the time which he strives to illustrate? Would a young Scots' farm lassie of the late seventeenth century really use such a phrase as this—"I will play the game fairly?" But our author can describe a fight very well, whether in the close wynds of Edinboro' or in the wilds of Galloway, and his descriptions of Scottish scenery and the delight of long, long days spent alone with nature are as fresh as the mornings he must often have seen breaking when he lived and worked in that very delectable land of the Covenant.

Hugh Wynne: by S. Weir Mitchell, M.D., LL.D., Edin., and Harvard; T. Fisher Unwin; Yokohama, Kelly & Walsh.

At such a time as this, all books dealing with the very beginning of the republic of the United States of North America, come freighted with absorbing interest, "Hugh Wynne," who tells the story, was sometime Brevet Lieutenant Colonel on the staff of His Excellency General Washington. He sprang from a Quaker stock—the well known "Society of Friends"—who were mostly of opinion that passive resistance was a duty. But others among them held that active resistance, even to bloodshed, was justifiable. These latter were disowned by the Friends and became known as Free Quakers. Many won distinction in Washington's army, others entered the civil service of the States, and in most cases they achieved high position. "Hugh Wynne" was one of their number, and his tale of the war of Secession—mingled with the woof and warp of a love story which at one time did not run at all smooth—makes one of the most interesting narratives we have had the pleasure of reading for some time. Here is the description of Washington which he puts into the mouth of his bosom companion, John Warder:—

"He (Washington) had changed greatly from the fresh, clear-skinned country gentleman I saw first in Philadelphia. His face was more grave, his very ruddy skin less clear and more bronzed. I observed that his eyes were deep set, light blue in colour and of unusual size; his nose was rather heavy and large; the mouth resolute and firm, with full lips. His general expression was sedate and tranquil. . . . There need be no silence as to this man, nor any concealment, and there has been much. I would have men see him as we saw him in his anger, when no language was too strong, in his hour of serene kindliness, when Hamilton, the aide-de-camp of twenty, was 'my boy;' in his starving camp by Valley Forge, with naked men shivering all night in their blankets by the fires, when 'he pitied those miseries he could neither relieve nor prevent. Am I displeased to think that although he rarely laughed he liked Colonel Scammel's strong stories, and would be amused by a song such as no woman should hear? This serene, inflexible, decisive man, biding his hour, could be the venturesome soldier, willing to put every fortune on a chance, risking himself with a courage that alarmed men for his life. Does any but a fool think that he could have been all these things and not have had in him the blood of passion? He had a love of fine clothes and show. He was, I fear, at times extravagant. As to some of his letters, they contained jests not gross, but not quite fit for grave seigniors not virginibus puerisque. There is one to Lafayette, I have been shown by the Marquis, but—oh, fie! Was he religious? I do not know. Men say so. He might have been, and yet have had his turns of ungoverned rage, or of other forms of human weakness. He was not given to speech concerning his creed. He had no tricks of the demagogue. He knew not to seek favour by going freely among the men. The democratic feeling in our Army was intense, and yet this reserved aristocrat had to the end the love and confidence of every soldier in the ranks."

We can thoroughly recommend "Hugh Wynne," for its historical as well as its human value.

DISASTER AT SEA.

A telegram received on the 19th instant at the Tokyo office of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and published by vernacular newspapers, reports that, on the 18th instant at 11 a.m., the Company's steamer Harima Maru ran on a sunken rock in the neighbourhood of Nemuro during a thick fog. There was no loss of life, but the ship made water very fast, and it is supposed that she has sustained serious injury. The Kwanko Maru from Nemuro and the Suruga Maru from Hakodate have proceeded to her aid. The Harima Maru is a small steamer of 721 tons gross. She runs between Aomori, Hakodate, and Nemuro.

Nemuro, July 19.

Yesterday at 10 a.m. the N.Y.K. steamer Harima Maru stranded off Goyonui during her voyage between Nemuro and Hakodate. A heavy fog prevailed at the time. The vessel is injured.

[On enquiry at the offices of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, we found that no details of the disaster or the damage done had been received. The steamer was one of 720 tons, and was under the command of Capt. Y. Ota. She had a general cargo for Yokohama and Kobe.]

Hakodate, July 19.

The N.Y.K.'s steamer Harima Maru last night stranded at Shanappu, off Nemuro. The passengers and crew were rescued, but it is feared it will not be possible to get the vessel off.

Nemuro, July 20.

The Harima Maru is damaged in three or four parts of the hull. The engine room and other parts of the interior are filled with water and the cargo is wet. Bad weather prevails, and it is impossible to get the vessel afloat.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF CURRENT JAPANESE LITERATURE.

In the Toyōtetsugaku, Dr. Katō Hiroyuki has a long article on the teaching of leading Chinese philosophers on the question of the original goodness or badness of human nature. The essay is too technical for reproduction here. The conclusion which Dr. Katō reaches is that just as conduct generally is mixed, being partly good and partly bad, so the human heart is never entirely good nor entirely bad. As is well known, Mencius was the great champion of the doctrine that man is originally good, but is made to go astray by his surroundings, and 荀子 Sun-tsz was his great opponent. Dr. Katō thinks that the controversy would be more intelligible if for the terms good and evil the words egoism and altruism were substituted. The definitions of good and evil given by the leading Chinese philosophers show that actions are according to them to be judged by their effect on the person performing them and on others. Their system is essentially utilitarian, says Dr. Katō, and the recognition of this would render their writings on ethical subjects much more intelligible and interesting than they have hitherto proved.

* * *

In No. 34 of the 名家談叢 Meika dansō, Yeuchō gives an account of the things to be borne in mind by would-be orators (hanashika.) These are written out and the student of oratory is required to affix his seal to them before being allowed to practice. They are as follows:—(1) Talk about what is not true (that is the imaginary). (2) Don't put on airs or presume on your elevation above your hearers.* (3) To be laughed at is good, but to be disliked is bad. (4) The speech must be suited to the occasion and the audience. (5) Never refer to a subject treated by a former speaker that has tickled the fancy of the audience. (6) Even though you may not be able to make a living, obey to the letter the laws of the Association you have joined (Ago no kakegane wa hazusu tomo, renjū no torikime ni wa fundoshi wo shimete kakarubeshi.

* * *

In No. 204 of the Tōkei Shūshi Mr. Tokutomi Iichirō in a very interesting article discusses the significance of statistics. Few Japanese, says Mr. Tokutomi, pay attention to statistics. Even to members of the Diet they seem to have little interest, and yet in a great variety of subjects they are the only sure guide. I often hear men say that the sight of lines of figures gives them a head-ache. There are some who allege that in a little country like Japan statistics are unimportant, but Japan is bigger than Italy and not much smaller than France, and as regards population ranks high among the six leading nations of Europe. Even the members of our Cabinets are frequently nonplussed for the want of reliable statistics. To give an example, last year the Cabinet found itself confronted with a deficit of 23 million yen. In order to meet this they proposed to increase the land and sake taxes. To the increase of the land tax it was objected that the time was inopportune, seeing that the farmers had recently suffered great losses. On this subject the Ministers had no statistics at hand, and they consequently had to telegraph off to the provinces to inquire into the extent of the losses, &c. Nothing but indifference as to the accuracy of published statistics can account for the discrepancies between the tables that are published by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce and those issued by the Cabinet. In the report for the 26th year of Meiji is a table drawn up by the Statistics Bureau connected with the Cabinet, it is stated that the number of companies in Japan was 4,133, whereas in the Nōshōmushō report the figures given are 4,349. The capital of the companies is represented by the Cabinet report to be 209,860,400 yen, but by the Nōshōmushō report

* The reference is to the Kōza, high seat occupied by the orator.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

is said to reach 223,900,000 yen—a difference of over 14 million yen. The same discrepancy is found in other Government Departments and bureaux. Many of the reports of the Finance Department differ from those of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. Even about the population of Tōkyō there is no agreement, a discrepancy of over 300,000 being found between the reports of the Police Office and that of the Tōkyō City Office. Thus we see that where less than 2 million persons are concerned there is no agreement. But there are still worse cases than this. We are told that in districts where there are only a few thousand inhabitants nothing like accuracy is aimed at. In the provinces rough estimates are made from year to year, and this is deemed sufficient. One hears a great deal about Japan's progress, but the materials for showing in a striking and detailed manner what has been the extent of that progress are not at hand. Take the subject of railways. How impossible it is to compare the relative cost of the different lines with their profits in the way that is so easy in Western countries. A little time ago this feat was attempted by a number of business men in Japan, but was given up in despair for want of the necessary statistics and on account of the difficulty of collecting them. The first step of progress in this matter must be the awakening of interest in statistics. If the majority of the nation realise the importance of reliable statistics they will soon be forthcoming. There are a hundred questions on which it would be an immense advantage to be in possession of accurate figures. Take the last election, for instance: Owing to the severity of the Government restrictions, the use of sōshi became impossible, and since sōshi have to be paid, one might argue that electioneering expenses were very much reduced by the Government interference. Such was not the case, however. In the place of money paid to sōshi, pecuniary inducements had to be provided for indifferent or sordid voters, and hence it was found that the abolition of the sōshi was a measure that cost the candidates large sums of money. In one case it is reported that the election expenses did not fall short of 70,000 yen. Now if statistics on this subject could be published public opinion would be immensely enlightened thereby as to the real state of the country. Take another example. In some prefectures in the North-Eastern part of Japan, the robbing of government forests is not only common, but so highly approved of by the majority of the residents near these forests, that when culprits are arrested and taken off to prison, their neighbours accompany them in a body to the gates of the prison, and when their time is up they make a demonstration that can only be compared to the reception given to the men who in the last war figured in the taking of Port Arthur. It is said that in the prefectures referred to quite seven-tenths of the criminals imprisoned are wood-stealers. It would be quite possible by a careful collection of statistics bearing on this subject from other parts to show that in the local regulations which are so triumphantly broken there is something unreasonable. It comes to this, that there is no instructor so reliable as carefully compiled tables of statistics, and in many cases there is no sure way of arriving at the truth but by wading through columns of figures.

* * *

The Teikoku Bungaku asks what is the use of the Gakushi Kai-in? Though its members are undoubtedly men of learning and reputation, as an Institute this Association may be said to have effected little. Has anybody ever heard, asks the Teikoku Bungaku, of any reform that this Institute has brought about? Has it ever recommended to the Mombushō any measure having for its object the enlightenment of the nation? As we read of the many meritorious performances of similar bodies in Europe, we feel ashamed of our Gakushikai-in, which seems to us only to serve as a quiet retreat for the aged.

The Teikoku Bungaku has something to say on that much discussed subject the nude in Art. Over the acquittal of the editor and publisher of the Shincho Gekkan, on the ground that there was no proof that the naked figure published was an offence against public morals, this organ rejoices. But it maintains that since, apart from considerations of beauty, there can be no adequate reason for exhibiting pictures of nude women, it is desirable to determine at precisely what point beauty stops and indecency begins. Nude paintings that have no æsthetic merit whatever should be prescribed. As things are now, under the name of art, vulgar, suggestive representations of the human form are widely circulated. This should be put a stop to.

* * *

The Teikoku Bungaku in a note on "The Publication by Subscription of Old Books," alleges that publishers are by no means always reliable and that there are numerous instances of long delay in the issue of works that have been paid for in advance. The cases cited by the Teikoku Bungaku are the Gunjo-ruijū and the Kokushi-taikei, advertised by the Keisai Zasshi Company, and the Shiryōtaikan announced by the Teisugaku-in. There have been cases where three years have elapsed before the publication of works announced to appear within 12 months, and still publishers do not return the money subscribed. This is a sure way of destroying confidence in the integrity of publishers. Then carelessness in proof-reading is almost universal. We were informed on one occasion that since proof-reading costs money, an important work would be published without revision. Another thing that has struck us, says the Teikoku Bungaku, is the great disproportion between the subscription prices and the subsequent advertised prices of books. The object of this no doubt is to tempt people to subscribe. But the early advertisement and the actual selling price of the work in many cases do not agree. For instance, a work whose actual price after the subscription list has closed is put at 3 yen per copy is often to be had in the bookshops at 2 yen per copy or even less. These and similar practices are very damaging to those whom they concern. They have frequently come beneath our notice, and hence it is that we call attention to them.

* * *

We are often surprised by the number of pessimistic articles that appear in various literary organs. It is certainly one of the signs of the times that so many leading writers in Japan are engaged in denouncing the age and its practices. In the pages of the Rikugō Zasshi, under the title of "State Education and Ethics," Mr. Yokoi Tokio has some very trenchant things to say about his own countrymen. Under the plea of patriotism and loyalty to the Emperor, says Mr. Yokoi, many persons use language in reference to foreigners that can only be compared to the utterances of a New York workman. Such terms as hekigando (碧眼奴), akahige, and kelōjin are not such as one would expect to hear in the lectures of gentlemen, but they are most frequent, nevertheless. Many speakers can not refer to the Chinese without employing such an epithet as chanchanbōsu. This readiness to apply abusive terms to persons of other nationalities shows how little real morality there is in the minds of the masses. There is a deal of prating about Jingi Chūshin, benevolence and justice, loyalty and truth, as being virtues of which Japan is proud, but how few are the people that practise them. Lying is habitual among many classes. And as for the relation of the sexes, we are quite 200 years behind foreigners. Though chastity in women is expected and praised, licence in men is considered quite right and proper. The admiration for such heroes as the 47 Ronin does not imply any imitation of the nobility of their acts. The Chūshingura is regarded by many as the highest type of morality of which Japan is capable, yet it is but a tale of vengeance such as was very common in Europe 300 years ago, but would be universally condemned to-day. It is evident that ethically it can never rank high judged by the best standards. By foreigners it is rightly regarded as a pitiable story—so many lives and so much domestic happiness sacrificed in a cold-blooded manner to satisfy a code of honour that now no longer exists in most civilised countries.

* * *

An article of great length from the pen of Mr. Tokutomi Iichirō appears in the Wasedā-bungaku, the subject being general literature. We have no space for more than a brief notice of its contents. Mr. Tokutomi expresses surprise at the way in which students of foreign literature neglect to study the Bible. To study foreign literature without reference to the Bible is like studying European Law without a knowledge of Roman Law . . . . . Good translations are desirable, but the labour they entail is considerable, and we are not sure whether the results of study may not be given in a shorter time by writers expressing themselves in their own way in original works. Instances where, as in Mr. Tsubouchi's case, there is special talent are quite exceptional. It is our hope that Mr. Tsubouchi will make the translation of Shakespeare the work of his life. . . . . In Fiction there is great dearth of political novels. At the present time the whole life of Japan centres in politics. Is it not surprising that this fact should not be recognised and made use of by novelists? As things now are, the political and literary worlds have little connection with each other. It is difficult to awaken a thorough interest in politics in the minds of most of our littérateurs. And as for the mass of active politicians, they are not of a literary turn and could not figure as writers even if they would. Thus we are confronted with the fact that we are passing through a time of great conflict of rival forces, through changes of an unprecedented character, and yet there is no class of fiction corresponding to the writings of leading English novelists marking the progress of thought, the passing away of the old and the inauguration of the new.

* * *

No. 370 of the Kokumin-no-Tomo is full of interesting matter, but the articles which seem to us most worthy of mention are "The debasement of Japanese Taste," by the Editor; "Evolution in Social Ethics" by Mr. Ukita Kazutami; "Japan's Foreign Policy," by Mr. Asagawa Kanichi; and "A talk on Education" by Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō. In the first of these it is maintained that there is a general decay in manners, the higher classes having descended to the level of the lower ones, and that, corresponding to this, the middle and upper classes have lost the refinement of taste they formerly possessed. A foreigner is alleged to have observed that "in Japan the coolie is a gentleman and the tea-house girl a lady." It would be more correct to say that "the gentleman has become a coolie and the lady a tea house girl." In architecture, in the language in everyday use, and in the various customs of society the writer of the editorial we are noticing sees nothing but deterioration. To him the whole country seems permeated with vulgarity. Most Japanese newspapers are not superior to the sensational, gossippy sheets that circulate in America, and in the publication of indecent details and personalities they far surpass American journals. The writing in these journals is mostly of an extravagant type. Praise and blame are both carried to excess. A man is either represented to be a saint past all praise or a scoundrel beneath contempt. All proportion is lost in many of the diatribes penned to please a degenerate public.

* * *

The Sekai-no-Nippon (No. 29) publishes the views of a foreign visitor who has been recently engaged in the inspection of schools and the examination of the state of education in Japan. The impression received was unfavourable. We have only space to record the general conclusions reached, as given in a lengthy article. The general physique of the mass of students in elementary schools is pronounced to be bad. Their respect for their teachers is not what is desirable. The blame of this is not to be imputed to the scholars only. The teachers act in a mercenary and perfunctory manner and show little real interest in the progress of their pupils. The elementary schools of the metropolis are inferior to those of the provinces in both size and cleanliness. The morals taught are rendered as unattractive and ineffective as possible. Instead of holding up the lives of men of virtue for imitation and endeavouring to explain what is implied in the terms duty, right, justice, &c., the instructors perpetually harp on the importance of loyalty to the Emperor and filial piety. No respect for the teaching of Shintō, Buddhism, or Christianity is enjoined. Though religion is not usually taught in Government schools in the West, yet the general teaching at such schools is not antagonistic to religion, but here ethics are of a distinctly materialistic type. The practice of reading an Imperial Rescript that is 9 years old from time to time can only be compared to the reading of prayers with which everybody is familiar by Buddhist priests and others. This can only be regarded as an empty ceremony. The Rescript undoubtedly lays stress on important moral principles, but the application and explanation that these principles receive at the hands of school-teachers is most inadequate. As a subject of study, Ethics may be said to awaken little interest in the minds of pupils. They listen to moral discourses in a sleepy, listless manner, and for this the method of discussing the subject is to a large extent responsible.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

* * *

In an interview with Dr. Inouye Tetsujirō held by one of the staff of the Kokumin-no-Tomo, the professor is said to have given utterance to the following sentiments respecting education. Ethical teaching is too much in the hands of old men of the Chinese School. These teachers are slaves to the letter and exercise little influence over the minds of students. The dissociation of morals from the ideographs is most desirable from every point of view. Exactly what will be the nature of the change that our language will undergo it is difficult to forecast, says Dr. Inouye, but the disuse of Chinese as much as possible is highly desirable. There is no denying that the physical science and the Confucian ethics which are being taught are antagonistic influences. Turning to other features of the present educational system, the employment of very young teachers in the way that is common in the Middle Schools is a mistake. The students are apt to regard such teachers as on an equality with themselves. There are both teachers' and students' strikes. The former are usually connected with salaries. The latter are in the majority of cases caused by unreasonableness in the application of rules. One remedy for this friction between students and teachers to be recommended is the holding of periodical friendly gatherings of masters and pupils.

* * *

There exists an Antiquarian Association known as the 考古學會 Kōko-gakkai, the headquarters of which is at No. 3, Motomachi, Hongō, Tōkyō. The work of this society consists of the collection, classification, and comparison of relics of various kinds, and the recording of the changes which the articles collected have undergone in the course of ages. By degrees the members hope to collect sufficient information to form the basis of a scientific archæological system. At a recent meeting of the Society, noticed by the Nihon Shugi, Dr. Tsuboi Shōgorō read a paper on "The Weapons of the Stone Age," in which he expressed the opinion that there were traces of a race of men that neither resembled the ancient Japanese nor the Ainu, whom he considered to be a branch of the Northern Esquimaux. After this an elaborate paper was read by Mr. Miyake on "Ancient Weapons of War." These he divided into five kinds, which were subdivided into 14 sub-classes. Iron weapons predominated; copper weapons were rare. Mr. Matsubara followed with a paper on "The Armour of the Middle Ages." Suits of armour belonging to different ages were exhibited and put on by the lecturer.

* * *

Mr. Hara Kei, formerly Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, has published a work entitled Shinjōyaku Jisshi-jumbi ("Preparations for the carrying out of the New Treaties,") which deals with most of the questions likely to arise when the new arrangements come into force next year. Such subjects as foreign property in the Settlements, and the connection of foreigners with Japanese commerce and industry are fully discussed. The work was issued by the Osaka Mainichi Shimbun and sells at 20 sen.

* * *

In both the Kirisutokyō Shimbun and the Fukuin Shimpō, Count Okuma's address to the Young Men's Society is reported. The subject was, "Changes in My Ideas during the past half century." We give a short summary of the speech:—I was born just after Napoleon had been overthrown and the Treaty of the Holy Alliance signed. It was a time when the Bakufu was beginning to feel the effect of a large amount of disaffection. In my yearly days I studied the writings of 朱子 Chu-hi. My father was Commander of the Fort at Nagasaki and in constant communication with the Dutch. From them he obtained a general notion of the state of foreign countries. When I was quite young an Ambassador from Russia who failed to make himself understood in this country was so overcome with chagrin that he committed suicide. This impressed me very much; I began to think that there were great men even in foreign countries. The arrival of Commodore Perry was the signal for a conflict between the anti-foreign and pro-foreign parties and the anti-Bakufu and pro-Bakufu sections. I urged educational reform in my native place, and for this was turned out of the school. I made use of this opportunity for studying Dutch. But at that time to study a foreign tongue was deemed a sign of disloyalty. This I felt keenly, and in order to nourish my patriotism took to the study of native literature. With the view of making myself a worthy successor to my father, I studied military books. In a Dutch work which fell into my hands the causes of the prosperity of European countries were discussed. I was impressed by what was said about the importance of learning and of a military spirit. For some time I was an ardent anti-foreign partisan and an enemy of Christianity, which I regarded as a danger to the State. I studied physical science so much that I became a zealous materialist. The Dutch books circulating in Japan at this time were nearly all materialistic. This accounts for the tendency of Mr. Fukuzawa's teaching. I studied the Bible under Dr. Verbeck for about a year and a half, but I failed to understand it. I laid myself open to suspicion by this action, but subsequently cleared myself by representing that my object in studying the Bible was hostility to foreigners and a desire to know their real tenets with a view of combating them. But in the meantime my mind was undergoing transformation. Study of foreign books gradually undermined my anti-foreign sentiments, and intercourse with foreigners revealed to me my own defects. I felt anxious to spread foreign learning, and in order to effect this determined to throw in my lot with those who were planning the overthrow of the Bakufu. I became what we now call a shōshi and for a time entirely abandoned study. In the meantime, thought was advancing, and at last it came about that he who once was an irresponsible inmate of one lodging-house after another with one leap reached the rank of a Minister of state. The fight between the Liberals and Conservatives was severe, and it is surprising that the nation did not run riot at this time. It is creditable to us that we kept our heads during that crisis. My policy was to make use of foreign pressure in order to insure internal progress and reform. Everything went ahead apace, but I found that as a nation we had drifted into materialism. What has impressed me most in recent years is the necessity of replacing those good old rules of life which were swept away by the flood of Western knowledge with something lasting and effectual. The materialism that I once believed in I now see to be one of our greatest foes.

* * *

In the Tōyōtetsugaku (No. 6) Mr. Mitsuishi continues to discuss the desirability of radical linguistic changes in Japan. The first step to be taken, according to Mr. Mitsuishi, is the choice of a style for the written language that shall answer all purposes. At present there are in everyday use at least six different styles. There is (1) The archaic native style; (2) the Chinese literal translation style, in which Chinese is rendered into Japanese without altering the order of the words in the sentence more than is necessary; (3) the style adopted by literal translators from European tongues; (4) the style of the novelist (5) the style of contemporary literature—the newspaper and magazine style; and (6) the polite epistolary style called Sōrōbun-tai. It is quite evident that as long as these different styles exist the amalgamation of the written and spoken languages can never be effected. Coming to colloquial, it is very desirable that a standard of speech should be decided on and rendered authoritative, says Mr. Mitsuishi, and, all things considered, the Tōkyō dialect, with objectionable terms expurgated, offers the most suitable medium of communication. The numerous forms which some words have acquired should be reduced to one or two. There are nine forms of the honorific auxiliary verb to be (1) gozarimasu, (2) gozaimasu, (3) gozaesu, (4) gosansu, (5) goesu, (6) gowasu, (7) gonsu, (8) gansu, (9) gesu. Mr. Mitsuishi does not pretend to have exhausted the forms. Two more occur to us at the moment. Gozat and gozaru. In this writer's opinion Tōkyō has established its claim to take the lead in the reform of Japanese colloquial speech.

* * *

Two other articles on the same subject appear in recently issued magazines. One in the Kokumin-no-Tomo, signed Yayoi; the other by Mr. Maruyama Mitsukazu, published in the Rikugō Zasshi. Yayoi is an advocate of the use of kana in preference to Romaji as a substitute for the ideographs. He says that the cost of placing kana by the side of ideographs is very great and that the proprietors of newspapers have to pay a special people for this work. He is of opinion that linguistic reform must come of itself in a natural manner and cannot be effected by the efforts of any special party, however strong.

Mr. Maruyama refers to the fruitless attempt to substitute the Roman letter for the old German forms in use in Germany, as illustrating the difficulty attending linguistic reform of any kind. His essay is very long. The following are the subjects treated:—(1) The suitability of the Japanese language for being written with kana only. (2) The imperfections of the kana as now used. (3) The use of Romaji. (4) The need of adding to the kana now in use. (5) The necessity of altering the method of using kana. (6) The use of old and new words co-ordinately. (7) The principles to be observed in the retention of words and in the observance of rules of grammar. As we remarked a few months ago, the necessity of bringing about some kind of change in the method of writing the language is very widely felt, this being evidenced by the number of articles published on the subject.

A TOKYO LADY'S SUICIDE.

A sad incident occurred on the steamer Shinkyu Maru on the night of the 15th inst. As the steamer was off Niiura, Watarai-gori, Ise Province, one of the passengers, a young lady named Yoshizawa Kume, 19 years old, residing at Yayoicho, Hongo, Tokyo, jumped into the sea. The Captain promptly stopped the ship, and lowered boats, but with no result. In the lady's cabin the Captain found a letter asking pardon for the trouble her conduct would cause.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CONCERNING FOREIGNERS' DISABILITIES.

From a vernacular magazine named the Naichi zakkyo Jumbi Kwai Zasshi, or Magazine of the Society of Preparation for Mixed Residence, we gather the following opinions relating to the private rights of foreigners in Japan.

I. RIGHTS in rem OF IMMOVABLES.—According to the new Anglo-Japanese Treaty foreigners have a right to own buildings, leases land for residential or commercial purposes (Par. 2, Art. 3 of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty), and hold land, as superficiaries, (Par. 4, Art. 18 of the same Treaty). These are rights the enjoyment of which Japan is bound by Treaty to grant to foreigners. Other rights in rem of immovables not mentioned in the Treaty may also be enjoyed by foreigners according to the provisions of ordinary Japanese law, the only difference being that the enjoyment of the latter class of rights may be prohibited by Japan without any breach of the Treaty. Art. 9 of the new Law of Operation of the Civil Code provides that the present regulations, except Art. 11, shall be abolished on the coming into force of the new Civil Code. Article 11 thus excepted relates to mortgage and hypothecation of land, and prohibits the sale, mortgage, or hypothecation of land to a foreigner. But as Art. 2 of the new Civil Code (which comes into force on and after the 15th of July, 1898) provides that foreigners may enjoy all private rights except those prohibited by law or treaty, it must be concluded that foreigners may enjoy all rights in rem of immovables, inasmuch as there is no prohibition in Japanese law concerning such rights.

II. CAN A FOREIGNER OWN SHARES?—Upon this subject the magazine refers to the memorial (which we believe preceded the promulgation of the new Civil Code) presented to the Government by the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce as an expression of the wishes of the commercial public. The writer approves the principles set forth in the memorial, but at the same time states his opinion that it was unnecessary to ask for the Government's admission of them, as they were already self-apparent. The essentials of the memorial are these:—There are no provisions either in the present treaties or in the new Treaties to prohibit foreigners owning shares, and there are no regulations in Japan which clearly provide that all the rights not mentioned in the Laws or Treaties shall not be enjoyed by foreigners; it may, therefore, be inferred that a foreigner may own shares if such ownership is not prohibited by Japanese laws or regulations. By the present regulations, foreigners are prohibited from becoming shareholders of National Banks, the Bank of Japan, the Specie Bank, Mining Companies and Bourses; and the laws relating to the Encouragement of Navigation, and of Shipbuilding provide that subsidies shall not be granted to companies whose shareholders are foreigners. The existence of such special prohibitions proves conclusively that a foreigner may be a shareholder of any company which stands outside of the above regulations. He may become even a shareholder of a railway company (which stands outside of the regulations quoted), although such company own land, because the right of ownership of land is not extended to him when he becomes a shareholder of the company.

III. CAN A FORRIGNER BE PROHIBITED BY JAPANESE REGULATIONS FROM BECOMING A SHAREHOLDER OF A JAPANESE COMPANY?—Some people believe that the present regulations, which prohibit foreigners from becoming shareholders of mining companies, companies for gathering mineral dust, emigration companies, bourses, the Bank of Japan, and the Yokohama Specie Bank, must be abolished on the eve of the operation of the new Treaties to avoid a breach of the Treaties. Their assumption is grounded on (1) Par. 3, Art. 1 of the Franco-Japanese treaty, and (2) First clause of Par. 1, Art. 4 of the same treaty. They allege that the word industrie in the First Clause of Par. 1, Art. 4 of the Treaty includes occupations such as those of the companies above-mentioned. But the Naichi Zakkyo objects to such a wide interpretation of the word, and believes that the regulations are not in contravention of the treaty. It is very questionable whether the word should be held to include mining, but if it does include mining the present law which prohibits foreigners from becoming shareholders of Mining Companies or Companies for gathering mineral dust will be in contravention of the Treaty. A Bourse can not be included in the word industrie because it does not itself carry on trade. If, however, a foreigner were prohibited from becoming a shareholder of a company, the occupation of which is an industrie, or kogyo, a métier or shukogyo, or trade in a narrow sense, it would be a breach of Par. 1, Art. 4 of the Treaty, unless the prohibition was based on very important causes touching the public peace of the State. The other assumption, grounded on Par. 3, Art. 1 of the Franco-Japanese Treaty, turns upon the word valeurs. It is alleged that shares are included in that word, but the magazine under review objects to such an interpretation, and after giving its reasons at some length, proceeds to argue that even if it be presumed that shares are included in the term, it can not be understood that the existing prohibition is inconsistent with the treaty stipulation. To interpret reasonably the paragraph in question, which permits foreigners to "acquire, own, or transfer goods, valeurs, and movables," it must be admitted that the paragraph refers to goods, valeurs, and movables which are in their nature enjoyable by every person, and the ownership of the shares of certain companies like the Bank of Japan cannot be regarded as of that nature. Moreover, Par. 1, Art. 4 of the Treaty, which stipulates that foreigners shall not be prohibited from becoming shareholders of industrial companies in the narrower sense of industrie proves incidentally the fact that Par. 3, Art. 1 of the Treaty is not intended to give foreigners the right of holding all kinds of shares.

A propos of this we refer to the Regulation affecting Doctors' Licences (Notification No. 35 of the 16th year of Meiji), which in Art. 4 provides that "when a person who has graduated from a foreign medical university or school, or who has obtained a licence as a medical practitioner in a foreign country applies for a licence to practise in Japan, the Minister of Home Affairs shall inspect such foreign diploma or document, and may grant the licence to practice in Japan without any examination." We believe the article is now in force. It is no doubt intended to apply to Japanese subjects only, and shows how a graduate of a foreign medical school is appreciated in Japan, and also indicates the treatment likely to be accorded to foreign physicians when the new treaties come into force. But with regard to Japanese advocates (bengoshi), the provision is quite different. Even a Japanese who has obtained the highest foreign degrees relating to jurisprudence is not permitted to practise law in Japan unless he passes the specified Japanese examination.

JAPANESE TRADE IN 1898.

The excess of imports during June this year amounted, accordingly to the vernacular papers, to 16 million yen, while the excess of exports in bullion and coins aggregated 4½ millions. The figures for the 1st half of this year, compared with those for the corresponding period of last year, are as follow:—

	1st half of 1'8. Yen.	1st half of 1'7. Yen.
Exports	69 647,099	75,071,485
Imports	154,840,805	99,041,224
Total	224,487,904	174,112,709
Excess of imports	85,193,706	23,969,739

Comparing the aggregate amount of exports and imports each year since the 28th year of Meiji (the year before the war), the following figures are obtained:—

	Exports & Imports. Yen.	Excess of Imports. Yen.
1893	177,970,036	1,455,692
1894	230,728,041	4,235,896
1895	265,372,756	6,851,599
1896	289,517,234	53,831,713
1897	382,435,848	56,165,674
1898 (1st half)	224,487,904	85,193,706

The increase of population and the appreciation of commodities may naturally have had the effect of augmenting the volume of trade, but it is surprising to observe that the aggregate total for the 1st half of this year is larger than that for the whole year in 1893. The figures as to the excess of imports are still more striking, and it is no exaggeration to predict, under these circumstances, that the excess this year will probably be treble that of 1897. If the treaty between Japan and Austria were ratified the new Tariff could be enforced from October next, and the tendency to an excess of imports would be effectually checked; a gradual fall in prices of commodities might contribute to the same result; and a success in the rice crop this year would certainly lead to a marked reduction in imports. But these are not yet accomplished facts, and until they are, the foreign trade of Japan can not be expected to be other than adverse. The following table gives the figures of bullion imports and exports:—

	1st half of this year. Yen.	Corresponding period of last year. Yen.
Exports	61,275,764	4,148,534
Imports	4 677,353	69 920,678
Excess of exports	56 598,411	—
Excess of imports	—	65 772,144

The following table shows the value of imports and exports in the staples of Japanese commerce during the last two years:—

	1st half, 1898. Yen.	1st half, 1897, increase or decrease. Yen.
EXPORTS.
Raw silk	13,005,414	—6 517,078
Noshi & waste silk	1,216,965	— 283,424
Habutae	4,784,650	59,648
Kai silk	284 559	235,129
Silk handkerchiefs	1,607,302	— 156,281
Cotton yarns	9,451,449	2,998,176
Cotton stuff	1,103,110	— 70,178
Ground matting	441,519	— 90,510
Matches	3,295,001	438,445
Straw matting	1,727,577	— 521 365
Porcelain	944,860	16,790
Lacquer wares	370,687	— 10,687
Straw braids	1,027,406	— 455,315
Umbrellas	491 901	57,266
Tea	3,930,118	— 377,363
Rice	2,170,009	—2,784,108
Sardines	417,116	— 131,802
Sea weeds	225,053	— 15,278
Fish oil	153 487	— 78,834
Mushrooms	250,572	— 36,163
Camphor	627,024	— 52,062
Crude and wrought copper	2,863 903	— 224,616
Coal	7,498,775	2,367,085
Vegetable wax	291,353	—6,914
Miscellaneous	11,469,219	225,053
Total	69,647,099	—5,424,386
IMPORTS.
Raw cotton	27,699,159	4 148,014
Cotton yarns	5,404,250	1,368,172
Shirtings and muslin de laine	3,112,438	1,264,198
Cotton serins & velvets	1,221,779	— 481
Wool	691,152	320 584
Turkey reds	2,425,860	407,160
Italian cloths	325,121	467,850
Flannel	500,262	10,746
Cloths	731,222	— 29 689
Watches	1,328,173	419 201
Machinery	4,166,684	—3,324,757
Locomotives and cars	2,239,878	143 826
Iron, bar, road, and sheet	2,917,664	1,792,457
Rails	1,699,651	— 78,428
Iron nails	402,923	— 86,379
Other iron and steel	3,174,464	1,598,242
Sugars	10,686,184	2,506,224
Rice	39,524 404	30,283,790
Peas and beans	4.083,742	1,622,273
Kerosene oil	4.001,793	290,063
Oil cake	3.045,511	1,748,208
Indigo	1,128,678	325,738
Spirits	1,318,267	1,027,093
Cigarettes	601,245	152 929
Miscellaneous	32,439,801	10,258,288
Total	154,840,805	55,799,581

Original from a decrease.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

NOTES ON NEWS.

The Bank of Japan continues buying bonds —consols and war-bonds. Its purchases are now said to aggregate 13 million yen, and the price of the bonds stands at 96. There appears to be some uncertainty about the extent to which this transaction is to be carried. Our own belief is that Count Inouye set aside a total sum of 20 million yen to relieve the pressure in the money market; 5 millions to be handed to the Industrial Bank for the purpose of accommodating manufacturers, and 15 millions to be employed by the Bank of Japan for the redemption of bonds. But the Nichi Nichi Shimbun now alleges that 30 millions was the sum placed at the disposal of the Bank of Japan, and that the maximum price to be paid for the bonds was fixed at 96. We are disposed to question the correctness of the former figure. Certainly the accounts of the Finance Department when Count Inouye held the portfolio showed that the total surplus temporarily available from the Indemnity was only 20 millions.

A great deal of capital is made out of this question of redemption. The Opposition journals endeavour to convict Count Okuma of inconsistency, because, while he is understood to have denounced the unwisdom of redeeming debts with one hand and contracting them with the other, he is nevertheless allowing the Bank of Japan to continue its purchases. We fail to detect the contradiction ourselves. The operation in which the Bank of Japan is engaged is not primarily a redemption of debt. Its paramount, indeed we may say its sole, object is to provide monetary facilities for enterprise by enabling people to unlock some of the capital invested by them in public securities. The Treasury merely places as many millions at the temporary service of business, instead of keeping the money idle in its vaults.

The embarrassment of the cotton-spinning industrials seems to be increasing rather than diminishing. The Naniwa Company has had to suspend operations; the Hiroshima branch of the Asahi Mill has also been closed, and work at the Mill itself is said to be merely nominal. These, we presume, are companies which, not being in a position to comply with the conditions imposed by the late Minister of Finance, Count Inouye, with regard to reserves and general organization, were unable to obtain any accommodatiom from the Industrial Bank.

Prince Konoye denies that his rejection of the Cabinet's proposal to appoint him Director of the Legislative Bureau was dictated by any sense of the insufficiency of the post. He refused simply because his occupations are already too numerous to be supplemented by the duties of such a position. Nevertheless the general tone of the Prince's conversation with the interviewer who records these statements does not indicate any friendly disposition to the Cabinet. He said that, for his own part, he had no desire to be converted into a mere figure-head, and that, so far as concerned the section of the Peers—the Sanyo-kai—to which he belonged, they were by no means opposed to the principle of party cabinets, but they felt much uneasiness lest the epidemic of office-fever now raging should be the means of connecting the first party cabinet with a thoroughly bad precedent. They intended, therefore, to be guided by events in their attitude towards the Cabinet. It is to be noted, however, that since the delivery of the above opinions, relations of an apparently close character have been established between Count Okuma and Prince Konoye.

The Formosa Railway Company have obtained another postponement of the period fixed by their charter for commencing work. They are now allowed until October 10th. This is the fourth postponement they have obtained, and the Hochi Shimbun, in reporting it, recalls the proverb that even Buddha loses his temper if his face is three times buffetted.

It is stated that the Government intends to issue an Imperial Ordinance strictly prohibiting all bribery and corruption at the coming general elections. Our readers remember that the Ito Cabinet issued an Ordinance forbidding the use of weapons of every description by persons engaged in canvassing, but there are folks who say that corrupt practices were rife at the last elections, though acts of violence were happily prevented by the Cabinet's method. An Imperial Ordinance may not do much good, but its issue will be decidedly a step in the right direction.

There is a strong movement on the part of a number of private schools in Tokyo to obtain the special privileges enjoyed by public schools, namely, that their graduates should be eligible without examination for ordinary official appointments of Hannin grade, and that such of their graduates as have taken degrees at the Imperial University should be considered qualified for the post of teacher in a common school, or in an ordinary female high school, or in an ordinary normal school. (We do not understand this point about University Graduates, but set it down as it appears in the vernacular press.) More than 17 schools are concerned in the movement, and they have elected a committee of seven to promote their object, the principal committee-men being Messrs. Ebara Soroku, Takanashi and Sugiura, Dr. Hasegawa, etc.

KOREAN AFFAIRS.

General le Gendre, whom many in Japan will remember, has been appointed Adviser to the Council of State in Korea.

A Japanese paper published in Korea announces that the Korean Government intend setting up a postage-stamp printing plant. The Independent thinks such a step would be a grievous mistake, as stamps can be bought cheaper in Japan.

The Pedler's Guild of Korea is said to have secured a subscription of $1,000 from the Crown Prince, and permission to use, as its headquarters, the hall of the Board of Honours. The Independent, from which we take this news, adds:—The association is proud of having among its members some of the highest officials in the Government. It is even rumoured that the Crown Prince is going to be the president of the Society. We can hardly believe this, though. Some think that this may be the beginning of distinct political parties in Korea; and that, as the Independents stand for popular rights and progress, the Pedlers may represent the "tory" sentiment in Korean politics.

The Independent, in its issue of the 2nd July, prints the following note with regard to the recent alleged assault made by the German Consul on the acting Minister of Foreign Affairs:—"Hearing that the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, Hon. Yu Kuiwhan, was on the 29th June assaulted by the German Consul of this city, one of our reporters the day before yesterday had an interview with Mr. Yu. It seems that he went to the Consulate on some disputed business at an hour appointed for a meeting. The Consul met him at the door and, without any explanation, struck Mr. Yu on the arm with an official dispatch from the Foreign Office, which the Consul had certain reasons for not accepting. As if this was not enough, he struck the Minister on the breast with his fist and pushed him out of the door throwing the document on the ground." A disinterested eye witness of the scene in the German Consulate, however, informed the Independent that the Consul did not go so far as to strike the Acting Minister.

A recent memorial of the Independence Club to the Korean Emperor, runs as follows (according to a free translation made by the Independent newspaper:—

"Notwithstanding our ignorance and rudeness, we, your humble servants, have the good fortune of living under Your enlightened reign. Actuated by the sentiments of loyalty to our sovereign and love for our country, we have established the Independence Club with the desire of protecting the interest of the Imperial Family and maintaining the rights of the nation. Being thus minded for some time past, we were overpowered by the sense of gratitude when we respectfully read Your Majesty's decree of the 25th June. An ancient book says, 'How great the word of a prince! The state may be made prosperous by a single word.' Your Majesty's gracious words inaugurate a new era of prosperity in our history. Hence, after expressing our joy in loud cheers for Your Majesty, we came to the following conclusion:—

"Having laid the foundation of independence, and enjoying the rights of equality with the sovereign powers of the world, Your Majesty announced Your high purposes to Your ancestors in a solemn oath, and promulgated new laws and regulations among Your subjects. It can not be denied that the laws are good and the regulations are excellent. If they were carried out, what anxiety need there be for a poor administration? But, how is it that the pure and the good have disappeared while the government is 'overrun' by the 'impure dregs' (of mankind)? He who cares neither for the realization of Your Majesty's sacred desires nor for the advancement of wise and good men, retaining office through shameless avarice of the salary—can such a person be a right man for the position of premier? Justice is unknown, and corruption runs riot. Great as well as small things, big as well as little offices are regarded as purchasable articles of a broker. This being so is the Home Department in the hand of a proper man? Confusion reigns in the administration of the law while unjust decisions have transformed jails into pitfalls. Could this be so if the Department of Law had a good man? The commander does not know his soldiers while soldiers disobey their commander. Important martial posts are assigned to men whose only merit is their honourable caste while the absolute ignorance of military science is unable to enforce the rules of discipline. Is the portfolio of war held by a right man? In the sphere of diplomatic relations sincerity and honesty have been neglected while ignorance of the rules of etiquette marks the intercourse with foreign legations and consulates. To be scared by threats and subjected to contempt and insult—could this be so were the office of foreign relations occupied by a right person? Unequal taxes and ill regulated currency are multiplying swindles and diminishing the national finance. Can this show that the financial management is in good hands? In the name of teaching the youths of the land, salaries alone are wasted, and empty shows are kept up in the place of substantial education. Does this mean that the interests of education are looked after by a proper person? Agriculture has lost profit and commerce is discouraged. Industry makes no progress while words and facts do not coincide. Are the interests of agriculture, commerce and public works represented by a proper man? The laxity of police discipline and guard in the Palace is such that crafty persons have access to Your Majesty while the loyal and honest are not permitted. Can it be said that police duties are under a capable management? Though called a bureau of advice the Privy Council is nothing more than a gate through which men are either advanced to, or dismissed from, offices. Can this mean that the function of the Council are properly discharged?

"These facts troubled us a great deal. In the decree Your Majesty said, "Were there right men in authority need we fear that politics would go wrong?" It is, therefore, plain that Your Majesty has already known, without being told by us, that the Ministers of State are not proper men. If they are not right persons, why does Your Majesty allow them to continue in office, causing anxiety day and night, and provoking popular dissatisfaction? We pray that Your Majesty will speedily dismiss the unworthy persons, filling their vacancies with wise and good men, entrusting to them their respective duties. If this were done why should Your Majesty be worried for the maladministration of affairs?"

The lengthy memorial closes with a prayer that His Majesty, may, in imitation of the political institutions of the West, consult the desires of the people, giving the popular voice a share in the management of the small and great affairs of the nation.

Truly the Korean patriots are outspoken men when they can thus tell their Sovereign that the whole of his administration is corrupt and thoroughly abominable. No wonder the political sky is overclouded in that country; such memorials can but presage a violent storm.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHINESE AFFAIRS.

According to a Peking telegram that appears in the N.-C. Daily News, the appeal of the Shanghai community through the Diplomatic Body for the extension of the Settlement will probably be successful.

Two Japanese sailors lodging in a Shanghai boarding house, while "in their cups" the other day, quarrelled, and then one stabbed the other. He has been arrested and awaits the return of the Japanese Consul from Soochow.

The Echo de Chine, a paper with strong Russian proclivities, has a paragraph headed "Manchuria," from its correspondent, which, says the N.-C. Daily News, reads:—

"The Russians are beginning to occupy militarily the provinces of Kirin and Heilungchiang. Their Cossacks are posted at intervals of sixty li (twenty miles) on the principal roads, and the engineers are working all the time on the railway."

The Inspector-General of Customs, Sir Robert Hart, Bart., G.C.M.G., etc., etc., has been granted six weeks' leave, and is spending his holiday at Peitaiho, the northern watering-place. Peitaiho, by-the-way, was horribly upset a few weeks ago by seeing a male visitor clad in correct evening attire. So shocking was the sight that "a leader" on the subject appeared in the P. and T. Times; we hope the poor man has recovered from the terrible wigging there inflicted.

Captain C. Oswald Liddell, whose approaching departure for home necessitated his giving up command of the S. V. C. Light Horse, was recently made the recipient of a handsome testimonial from the members of that corps. It took the form, says a Shanghai contemporary, of a Cup, of elegant design and inscribed:—"Presented to Capt. C. Oswald Liddell by past and present Members of the Shanghai Light Horse on his retirement after eighteen years' Membership, Shanghai, 29th June, 1898."

A Tientsin dispatch to the N.-C. Daily News states that the Viceroy Jung Lu recently ordered the establishment of a Bureau of Foreign Affairs with the view of relieving the Customs, or Haikuan, Taotai of some of his multifarious duties, that official hitherto having had sole charge of any matters involving foreign and native affairs. The new Bureau is to have its quarters in the Admiralty buildings on the Tientsin Bund, and the Chief and Vice-Commissioners are to be two expectant Taotais, Chang and P'an respectively.

Despatches received in Shanghai from Nanking report that city to be in a state of alarm in consequence of the distribution, by secret society emissaries, of innumerable placards calling upon the people to rise and assert their rights against the mandarins. The placards have found their way not only into the city of Nanking itself but have been penetrated into the Viceroy's yamén. Viceroy Liu is trying his best to find out the persons who have been causing the trouble.

A band of 150 robbers captured the town of Ch'ao-yang-chên, Manchuria, on the 31st May, and after burning the yamén and several shops owned by officials, confiscated all the arms and ammunition they could find and then held the town for ransom. After receiving 90 shoes of silver (Tls. 4,815) they left the place escorted by a band of musicians. The commandant of the town, along with his troops, made himself "scarce in the woods" during these proceedings.

There is a possibility of China's enacting Copyright and Patent laws in the near future, if the promise held out in a recent Imperial decree is carried out. This document, as usual, is very verbose, but the gist may be found in the following extract:—

We therefore hereby command that from henceforth if there be any subject of ours who should hereafter write a useful book on new subjects, or who should have invented any new design in machinery, or any useful work of art and science which will be of benefit to the country at large, such persons shall be honoured and rewarded by us in order to serve as an encouragement and exhortation to other of similar genius and talents. Or, perhaps, if it be found that such geniuses have also real ability to become officials, we shall appoint them to substantive posts as a reward, or grant them decorations or fine raiment in order to show the masses the persons who have gained honour by their talents and genius; while they shall also be allowed to enjoy the fruits of their labours by being presented with papers empowering them to be the sole manufacturers and sellers within a certain limit of time.

The Hawaiian ship Helen Brewer (Captain Mahony) with a cargo of 62,000 cases of kerosene oil for the Standard Oil Co., left New York on the 2nd of April, crossed the Equator on the 25th of April, passed the meridian of the Cape of Good Hope on the 19th of May, anchored at Anjer on the 21st of June, and arrived at Woosung on the 13th of July after a record passage of 102 days. It is reported that Captain Mahony wins a pool of $500, contributed by five ships which left New York together.

Rumours were current recently at Canton, according to a dispatch from that city, to the effect that Yunghsien, in Wuchou prefecture, Luch'uanhsien in Yülinchou sub-prefecture, and Yülinchou city itself (Kwangsi province), have all been captured by insurgents of the immediate vicinity, working in conjunction with the Sautien Hui or "Three-dots" society of Lienchou prefecture, Kwangtung province, on the south-west boundaries of Yülinchou. The name "Three-dots" is from the radical for water on the left hand-side of the character Hung, which was the surname of the famous Hung Hsin-chuan, Emperor of the Taiping rebels. In other words, says a Shanghai paper, the Three-dots Society is claimed to be composed mainly of the descendants of old Taiping chiefs, and their aim seems to be the restoration of the two Kwang provinces to the sway of young Taipingdom. Lienchou prefecture, Kwangtung, is nearly in the insurgents' hands. The Hongkong Daily Press translates the following from a Canton paper:—The gunboats Nganchin, Kuanglee, Taichi, Tsanto, Kungwou, and Tangkung have been sent to the rebellious districts in Kwangsi together with one thousand soldiers from Canton and six hundred soldiers from Lufêng. The situation is very serious and all business is at a standstill. There are about six thousand rebels, who are forcing the natives to come to their side, threatening that otherwise their houses will be burnt and they will be killed, so that the forces of the rebels are being gradually increased.

The N.-C. Daily News apprehends that the anti-Government movement now going on in Kwangsi and Kwangtung is really serious. It comes from the seat whence the Taiping Rebellion originated, and it has the prestige of that Rebellion over it. The Government of the Hukuang Provinces at Canton is utterly disorganised; the Viceroy, Tan Chunglin, is completely incapable, and his subordinates care for nothing but feathering their own nests as warmly as they can before the crash comes. The Rebellion is coming eastward from Kwangsi in a steady wave, as the Taiping Rebellion did before it turned northward; and the mandarins in the adjacent provinces are even more corrupt and incompetent than those who vainly strove to oppose the Taiping Wang. Those who remember what the former Rebellion was and the horrors that accompanied it must shrink with dread from the accounts of the successes of the present insurgents; nor is there anywhere to be seen a Tsêng Kuo-fan to lead the forces of the Government and roll back the rebel tide. Not wishing to be alarmists, we have so far said little about the movement in Kwangsi; but it is becoming too serious to overlook; and it must not be forgotten that a new element is introduced on this occasion, which was absent fifty years ago, in the proximity of the French to the scene of the trouble. There is no likelihood whatever of the French assisting the rebels; but their presence on the frontier, and their claim to a sphere of influence in Kwangsi and Kwangtung must complicate matters.

GERMAN NOTES.

Captain Rosendahl has been appointed Governor of Kiao-chou. The title of "Governor," says Das Echo, was adopted in order to be in harmony with the universal custom in this respect.

The Berlin papers say that Herr Kisaku Tamai, a well-known Japanese writer in Berlin, is about to publish a monthly magazine in that city, devoted to politics, trade, and industry, under the title of Ost-Asien.

Zola's affair has had the effect of causing friction even among Frenchmen living in Berlin, and of breaking up the principal French club in that city, dividing the members into two factions, one called the Semite and the other anti-Semite.

The ancient rose-bush at Hildesheim, said to be one thousand years old, is afflicted by a disease which seriously threatens its life. The local government has ordered a scientific investigation, for it is determined to do all that science can suggest in order to save, if possible, the cherished Rosenstock.

Herr Dr. von Miquel, Vice-President of the Cabinet, and Minister of State for Finance, recently celebrated his seventieth birthday. The anniversary has recalled the fact that he began his political carrier in Hanover as a very determined radical. Later, he became the leader of the National Liberal party of Germany, and in due course, as is not infrequently the case, developed into a conservative.

Regarding Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's speech, in which he advocated an Anglo-American alliance, Prince Bismarck said:—The importance of Mr. Chamberlain's recent speech depends upon whether he gave utterance to his private opinions or whether he spoke those of the British Government. Closer Anglo-American relations are no doubt feasible, but an alliance would be improbable and unserviceable to both. Besides, it is a mistake to call the Americans Anglo-Saxons. Theirs is a mixed blood—British, Irish, German, French, and Scandinavian. The Anglo-Saxon does not even predominate to-day.

Prince Bismarck, in a recent interview, condemned the American-Hispano war outright. He says it is due to systematic provocation, adding:—"The whole course of the Washington administration seems insincere. My views of war are well understood. I have always maintained that war is only defensible after all other remedies have failed. The result of the war cannot be wholesome either to America or Europe. The United States will be forced to adopt an intermeddling foreign policy, leading to unavoidable friction. She abandons her traditional peace policy, and, in order to maintain her position, must become a military and naval power—an expensive luxury which her geographic position renders unnecessary. America's change of front means retrogression in the highest sense of civilization.

The Crown Princess of Greece, with her consort, after an absence extending over many years, recently arrived in Berlin and was most royally received by her brother, the Emperor. This is her second visit to her native home since her marriage to the Crown Prince of Greece, ten years ago. The eventful war between Greece and Turkey, last year, came dangerously near overthrowing the Royal House of Greece, and for a time the relations between Athens and Berlin were anything but amicable. During those trying times, the Crown-Princess Sophie did much to smooth over difficulties. Her visits to the battle-fields and personal attention and care for the sick and wounded, enlisted the sympathy and admiration of the Greek nation, as well as that of her brother the German Emperor. He has appointed her chef of the Third Garde-Regament of Berlin, formerly the Empress Elisabeth's regiment. The appointment is regarded as a very high distinction. The Emperor recently declared that Princess Sophie demonstrated by her deeds that she is a worthy daughter of the Hohenzollern.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

We understand that Mr. Josiah Conder's plans have been selected for the new Club house of the Y.U.C.

Miss Kitada Usurai, the famous lady novelist, was married to Mr. Kajita Hanko, the artist, on the 13th inst.

In Kanagawa Prefecture, dysentery is becoming more and more prevalent. No fewer than 54 new cases appeared on the 17th inst.

News has been received at Shanghai privately by wire that the Americans are sending five hundred troops to Guam, and five hundred to Sulu.

On Wednesday a woman named Fumi, 37 years old, living at Ashibikicho, and her infant, 2 years old, were found to be suffering from dysentery, and were sent to the hospital.

The Doyo, or hot season, which is the object of the greatest anxiety to Japanese rice farmers, commenced on Wednesday. According to telegrams from different localities, fair weather is anticipated.

On Tuesday morning, at 1.40, fire broke out at a house occupied by a man named Sono Dennosuke, No. 10, Zaimoku-cho, Shiba. The flames spread to the surrounding property, and 15 houses were destroyed, and six damaged.

Three cholera cases appeared on the 15th inst. in Tokyo. The victims were two infants of a man named Hashimoto, living at Daikucho, Nihonbashi, and a woman named Hana, 57 years, living at Shimura, Kita-toyoshima-gori. They were sent to the hospital.

It may interest Freemasons in Japan to know that at the recent centenary festival of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, over which H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Grand Master, presided, £134,000 was subscribed towards the funds of the institution. Surely this must be a record.

A Japanese banto Tojo Kinnosuke, 32 years old, employed by Messrs. Raspe and Company, No. 299 Settlement, was arrested by the police authorities on Wednesday on a charge of embezzling yen 2,000 belonging to the firm. The case will come before the District Court.

A robber who escaped from Yokohama (Tobe) Prison on the 19th inst. was re-arrested at Yamada-yato, Ishikawa. It is said that after his escape he entered a house occupied by a man named Katsura Kinnosuke, No. 234, Tobe-machi, and stole some cloth and Japanese shoes.

Mr. Sumita Taro, the assistant-station master at Suma, on the Sanyo Railway, was run over and killed by a train on the night of the 15th inst., says the Kobe Chronicle. While handing over the train staff on the departure of an up-goods train shortly after 7 p.m., he accidentally slipped down on the rails, and the train passed completely over his body.

We learn that Commander Squire, formerly of the Royal Navy, has been appointed foreign adviser for administering the new harbour system in Yokohama. Commander Squire was formerly in the service of the Department of State for Communications, and afterwards held a post as Naval adviser to the Chinese Government. It is the intention, we believe, of the Japanese Authorities to appoint a captain in the Imperial Navy to the position of harbour-master at each of the treaty ports, and to attach to him a foreign assistant.

There are many in Hongkong and Singapore, says the Singapore Free Press, who will hear with deep regret, news of the death of Lieutenant and Commander Beauchamp St. J. Bellairs, who was recently in the Centurion in Capt. Login's commission. This fine young naval officer had obtained distinction for good service on the West African coast.

Papers from France bring news of the death of Mr. Adrien Pauly, who was massacred, with one of his companions, by natives of Liberia (Africa), while on an expedition of exploration in those regions. Mr. Pauly, a young man of great promise, was only 26, and a brother of Mr. Felix Pauly, until recently an official of the French Consulate at Yokohama. Mr. Pauly's countrymen, amongst whom he has numerous friends, will greatly sympathise with him in his cruel loss.

The German election results show that the new Reichstag will differ little from its predecessor. The Clericals are stronger than ever; the Socialists gain ten seats, but were severely defeated at Berlin and other strongholds.

The Manager of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank in Yokohama received on Monday the following telegram from the Corporation's Head office:—

"Subject to audit, the Bank dividend for the half year will probably be £1.5/- per share; 10 lacs to reserve fund; carried forward to next half year 4 lacs, written off property account 2½ lacs."

"The reserve fund will then stand at 90 lacs of dollars."

Captain Primrose, of the Taichiow, Captain Nicol (a pilot from Shanghai), and a fellow passenger, narrowly escaped being drowned at Nagasaki on the evening of the 8th instant. A small sailing boat in which they were going on shore was capsized in a squall. Fortunately the accident was witnessed from H.I.R.M. gunboat Otowa, and a boat was immediately despatched to the assistance of the men, all of whom were rescued. One of the rescued men handed one of the Russian sailors a sovereign in recognition of his services. On returning to the gunboat, says the Nagasaki Press, the sailor immediately handed the money to the Captain, as Russian sailors are not allowed to receive any compensation for acts of duty. This was duly remitted to the captain of the Taichiow, with a request that the money be returned to the donor.

A representative of Reuter's Agency has had an interview with Mr. Chauncey Depew in London. After dwelling with great satisfaction on the remarkable growth of friendly feeling between England and America, Mr. Depew referred as follows to the question of American colonial policy:—"To retain the Philippines would mean a colonial policy which would be incomplete unless it took part in the grab for China. This would involve us at once in the complications of the Eastern question, and would compel us to put ourselves to navy and army in a position to defend what we acquired and to meet force with force in any disagreements which we might have in that hemisphere with the Great Powers of Europe. My opposition to a colonial policy is the belief that it is contrary to the spirit of our constitution and detrimental to the interests of our country. European nations enter upon colonies first to provide new territories for congested populations and to provide foreign markets. Our country is yet only partly developed. We could support 300 millions of people as easily as we do 70 millions. By establishing military governments and creating a vast colonial civil list we should impose burdens on the industry and labour of our country without an equivalent. We do not need the Philippines for protection, because with Spain driven from the western hemisphere we are too far off to fear the interference of Europe, and our neighbours are too weak to cause us the least apprehension. The only powerful neighbour we have left is Great Britain, and the events of the last few months have paved the way for such a treaty of arbitration and general understanding between the United States and Great Britain as to remove from the domain of possibility or probability any hostilities ever occurring between us. With Cuba freed—the purpose and sole object of the war—and Spain and her medievalism removed from our sphere of influence the mission of the United Sates is clear for marvellous development and unprecedented prosperity. A colonial empire would prove for us a costly and dangerous experiment."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A GOOD SONG MISUSED.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—Listening, on the Fourth of July, to the distant sound of what passes for the national music of the United States, I was constrained to lament—not for the first nor the hundredth time—that my countrymen possess no worthy song of the people which they can fairly call their own. During the past century they have taken many melodies into partial and temporary favour, but among these there is not one of purely American origin that deserves to represent the true patriotic spirit of the Republic. With scarcely an exception, they are trivial and vulgar. "Hail Columbia," indeed, might be so modified as to acquire a certain breadth and dignity, but its character, such as it is, would be lost in the process, and it could no longer claim recognition from the multitude. In recent years, the popular fancy has been especially turned toward "The Star-Spangled Banner," the music of which, though not of the highest order, is very far from contemptible, and has the merits of boldness, declamatory force, and susceptibility to good harmonic treatment. But it is, unfortunately, a foreign production, and I do not think that the citizens of America can, or ought to, allow a jovial stave from an old English opera to stand permanently as the typical song of their nation.

We have, of course, all time before us, and when the right tune springs into existence it will be welcomed and cherished, no matter from what source it comes or how it may be conceived, as was the case with "God Save the King" in the older country. England waited long for that immortal inspiration. It was composed less than two hundred years ago, and its author had no expectation, so far as we know, that it would be adopted as the one supreme lyric of the land. Englishmen took it to their hearts because they could not help themselves. After all, there is perhaps no reason why Americans should be impatient. They are no worse off than the majority of their neighbours. At the most, only three European countries have genuine national songs,—and my own judgment would limit the number to two. By a genuine national song I mean a song of the people, for the people, and lovingly accepted by the people; not one written to the order of a monarch or stamped with a mere Government brevet of nationality. We have seen, in France, what becomes of an attempt to establish a patriotic air by imperial decree. America must bide her hour. I do not think she can ever hope to rival the British anthem. We cannot foresee what the future developments of music may be, but while the art remains in its present state, it can bring forth nothing to surpass the noble simplicity and majesty of "God Save the Queen." What England will do with her matchless hymn when she bids good-bye to royalty, is a question for sooth-sayers to speculate upon. She will never give up the tune, I am convinced, and a new arrangement of words will do it no harm. Some of the lines now on duty are quite too silly for utterance. With fresh and fitting verse it should live while the nation lasts, and if America outstays Britain on the face of the earth I trust we may have the luck to secure it as a heritage, unless we chance to get possession, by fair means, at an earlier date. When Mr. Chamberlain would again a-wooing go, he might do worse than tempt us by offering an equal share in the ownership of his country's song, with full condonation of the unauthorized seizure we have perpetrated, in order to force it into an illicit union with a set of stanzas entitled "America."

Our independent craving will not, however, be rightly satisfied until some Yankee minstrel is sufficiently endowed with the divine spark to sound the strain that shall hold us all captive. In the meantime, we must content ourselves with make-shifts, and the air borrowed for "The Star-Spangled Banner" may serve as well as another. It is good music, and will do us no discredit, provided we take care not to misuse it, and frankly acknowledge where it comes from. At present, we do misuse it; and the purpose of this letter is to protest against the ill-treatment to which it has been subjected for more than forty years. I have an impression that it was first distorted by the showy Frenchman Jullien, who introduced a false reading when he arranged it for the splendid orchestra he brought to the United States in 1853. Ever since his time it has been wrongly played and sung, and it may be that an error of such long standing, which has passed without remonstrance through two or three generations, is beyond hope of eradication. But at least attention can be called to it, and I shall be grateful for the opportunity of doing this in The Mail.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The defect which mars the true course of the melody, renders it inconsistent, at times, with the words to which it is joined, and destroys its finest climax, appears in the third bar and is repeated in the eleventh. It consists of an unnecessary and inappropriate transition from the natural key to what is technically termed the next sharp remove. Suppose that the air is given in the key of C;—ordinarily, and I believe invariably, the last note of the third bar, (and also of the eleventh) is sounded F sharp, and the strain modulates into the key of G, returning to C in the next bar. Modulations of any sort are unusual so near the beginning of a simple tune like this. They are always legitimate, undoubtedly, when employed for particular effects; and if the text or music of a song calls for marked emphasis at any point there can be no objection to a momentary change of key. But in this case, the words—

"By the dawn's early light"— have no exceptional significance, and require no such strenuous accentuation as the transition imparts; and the same may be said of the line accompanying the eleventh bar. As the song proceeds, however, a phrase of great and gathering force is reached, the culminating words of which—not only justify but demand a corresponding intensity of musical expression. This is supplied by using the note F sharp for the word "still," and shifting the key, for an instant, from C to G. A vigorous climax is thus produced; but if the identical device has been resorted to more than once before, without object or reason, its whole effect is sacrificed. It becomes, in fact, no climax at all, but a feeble and meaningless anti-climax. It may be likened to the miscarriage which an orator would bring upon himself if, after preparing to strengthen a vehement statement by various energetic artifices of attitude, gesture, and delivery, he should anticipate the proposed coup by prematurely discharging his rhetorical ammunition, twice over, and in the wrong place each time.

"Our flag—IS—STILL—THERE!"—

There should be no variation of key in "The Star-Spangled Banner" until the twenty-third bar, when it becomes essential. I am confident that musicians will accept this view, though it may be difficult to get the public out of the groove in which it has been running for nearly half a century. But every orchestra leader and band-master—not to speak of intelligent amateurs—can do something toward restoring the melody to its proper form, and I shall endeavour to secure coöperation at home, from those whose action will have the weight of authority. It ought to have been undertaken years ago; but this is one of the cases in which it can never be too late to mend.

I am, Sir, Yours obediently,

E. H. HOUSE.

Yokohama, July 13th, 1898.

MISSIONS IN JAPAN.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—In the monthly summary of the religious press, in your issue of July 9th, I was much struck with the translated remarks of Mr. Matsumura Kaiseki, from the Rikugō Zasshi No. 209, for they exactly coincide with opinions formed by myself after careful consideration of the question for some years past.

While there are undoubtedly many missionaries of both sexes whose sympathies are warmly in touch with the Japanese, it is also equally patent to the dispassionate on-looker that there are others—here I allude more especially to female missionaries and wives of missionaries—whose very remarks upon and attitude towards the race they or their husbands have come here to convert, show most unmistakably that they could never favourably impress the Japanese with the religion they profess. Although in these statements I am only generalizing, I could, if I chose, give particular instances confirmatory of these statements.

I imagine that the Japanese writer alluded to does not over-state the case in saying—"there are numbers of missionaries who, although knowing the Japanese language and customs, and after living in the country for 20 years, are unable to attract an audience when they preach. They are not open to advice, and are quite ignorant of the proper way to evangelize."

"They preach to us"—he continues,—"just as they would preach to Europeans and Americans. There is no appeal to the real sentiments of the people. . . . . They utterly ighore the fact that they are addressing audiences whose only ideas of religion are derived from Buddhist, Shinto, or Confucian sources. . . . In order to conquer an enemy, it is necessary to possess a minute knowledge of his peculiarities and weaknesses, etc., etc."

These remarks certainly appeal to one's common sense.

It has often been a matter of surprise to me that the supporters of missions to the Japanese seem totally to ignore the fact that the nation is quite as capable of bringing Christianity to its shores as it has shown itself eager to import Western arts, sciences, manufactures, etc., etc. Therefore, if the liberal supporters of Japanese missions are really desirous of Christianizing these people, and if their zeal is wholly without any admixture of motives in providing fat livings and comfortable sinecures for their male and female friends and protégés, why not—since the system that has now been in operation for thirty years is, to the eyes of all impartial observers, confessedly a failure, or if it can, by a great stretch of imagination, be termed a success to have, in that space of time, converted forty thousand out of forty millions of people, still a success totally disproportionate to the length of time and amount of money expended on the machinery that has been employed in achieving it—why not, I ask, try the experiment upon exactly opposite lines, as follows? First recall all the missionaries from Japan, and then utilize the money hitherto expended in their support here, in keeping a like number of intelligent Japanese men and women in various Christian centres in Europe and America, where they could master the principles of Christian theology on its own ground, and thus qualify themselves to return and convert their own country-people, for who can hope to understand or influence the Japanese as well as themselves?

By this means, one decided advantage would accrue to the Japanese, in that they would acquire the language of whatever Christian country they were located, and that would be a gain to them all their lives long, whereas the Japanese language that the missionaries spend about two years in acquiring after their arrival here, before they can begin their work of conversion, although drawing their salaries all the time, is comparatively useless to them when they return to their own countries.

In throwing out the above suggestion I am aware that I shall be raising a storm of dissent about my ears, but as any anticipated protests can only come from parties pecuniarily interested in upholding the system as it stands, they cannot be considered fair opponents in the argument.

I am Sir, yours, &c.,

IMPARTIAL OBSERVER.

July 13th.

STARVATION IN JAPAN.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—In your journal of the 7th instant is a paragraph stating that the misery in Iwate prefecture is beyond description. "The year before last the territory was devastated by tidal waves, and last year it sustained serious injury from noxious insects. No crop was raised during the two years, and this year, for about three months, the inhabitants of Waka district were compelled to live without grain or rice. They barely sustained life by feeding on pine bark. Death upon death occurred from starvation. The village council relieved the sufferers by the issue of loans to the amount of $2,000, but these were hardly sufficient for half a month's sustenance; and no further loans are practicable, neither for some reason is prefectural aid to be obtained. Meanwhile, says the Nichi Nichi, thousands of inhabitants are now busily engaged in gathering roots and bark, and even these are almost exhausted."

And again in your issue of to-day comes the following intelligence from Wakamatsu:—"Famine is prevailing in this neighbourhood. Commodities are appreciating, and many thousands of poor people are eating grass and roots. Deaths from starvation have taken place."

As a striking contrast comes, between these two reports, a long article in your paper of July 11th detailing the account of a banquet given in Sendai by some wealthy Japanese to the missionaries and other foreigners resident there for the purpose of initiating a more intimate social intercourse between the two nationalities. This of course is a very praiseworthy object, but as the state of affairs in Iwate and Wakamatsu must at the time have been well-known at Sendai, it seems to outsiders as if the wealthy Japanese, who, in common with all the nation, have ever in their mouths the watchwords "Patriotism" and "Japan for the Japanese" and the missionaries (who call themselves disciples of one whose text was ever "Charity"—"The poor ye have always with you," etc., etc., and who replied to the rich young man who asked what he should do to be saved? "Sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor!") might have been better employed than in holding elaborate discussions as to whether Japanese saké and Kirin beer should adorn the dinner-tables, and whether or no reverend gentlemen would countenance the presence of those beverages at the banquet. With fellow-creatures starving at right and left of them, more becoming would it have been if both heathen Japanese and Christian Missionary had voted "no banquet until the human beings who are striving to keep life in in them by grass and pine-bark, have food fit for man provided for them."

What is the Japanese Government about that it does not immediately bestir itself for the relief of these people? Well did the Japan Herald remark the other evening on this subject, "Out of starvation comes revolution." Witness the French revolution of a little more than a hundred years ago. Let the Japanese Government bear this in mind!

In the meantime, are these poor country-people to be let starve because their own people are slow to come forward to help them in their extremity? Let the Christian foreign community take the matter in hand, and start subscriptions for their relief. When men, women, and little children are starving, it is no time for Christians to say—"their own country should support them." It becomes the duty of every human being to help another—and those whose tables are loaded three times every day with all the delicacies that the country can produce, could surely spare something for their starving fellow creatures.

If you will initiate a movement for this purpose, you can count on a subscription from

Yours, etc., A. SAMARITAN.

July 18th, 1898.

[It is a pitiful state of distress, and we shall of course be glad to receive and forward any subscriptions sent by charitable persons.—Ed. J.M.]

THE RE-UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—The following paragraph, clipped from the Standard, of Chicago, sets forth one of the indirect and perhaps unexpected blessings of the present war between Spain and the United States:

It is well that we pause, in the midst of a foreign war, to seal with our affection the compact of brotherhood among all Americans. Domestic strife, please God, is forever past. Wheeler, the cavalry chief of the southern armies a generation ago, now wears the uniform of a major-general of the United States; and when a friend asked him how it seemed to be wearing the blue again, as he used to when a young man, he replied that it seemed as if he had been off on a long furlough, and was now back in the ranks. Back in the ranks! Yes, back, every one, under the one flag. The Sixth Massachusetts has been given an ovation with flags and flowers in Baltimore where a generation ago it was received with brickbats and clubs. It is reported that a home for Confederate soldiers in the South, which had flown the Maryland state flag ever since the war, hauled it down and sent up the Stars and Stripes when the old leaders accepted commissions in the volunteer army. This Memorial Day that we have just celebrated may become a historic one. It may mark the year when the old bitterness was finally and entirely buried, leaving only a true Anglo-Saxon reverence for the courage and devotion of those in whom tribute is still to be paid, so long as their name endures—the boys of 61.

It must, indeed, be a glorious sight, to see Federals and Confederates, Northerns and Southerns, marching and sailing together under the old flag, the Stars and Stripes of the re United States of America.

Yours, etc., ERNEST W. CLEMENT.

Tokyo, July 18th, 1898.

JAPAN ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The principal items of interest to one not directly affected by Conference proceedings, has been the reception of fraternal visitors and the practical division of the work into two parts. Among the visitors were Dr. Meecham of Union Church, K. Uchimura, editor of the Independent Magazine, Rev. H. Loomis of the Bible Society, Dr. Needham, an evangelist of note from America, Rev. M. Koibashi, of the Japan Methodist Church, and Revs. Alexander, Ishiwata, and Kumano of the Church of Christ, and Mr. Kita, prison evangelist. All addressed the Conference briefly and were responded to by Revs. Ukai, Soper, and Bishop Cranston respectively.

The division of Kiushiu from the rest of the work was next taken up, and, in spite of an adverse report by the Committee appointed to investigate the merits of the case, and an hour's warm discussion, the division was carried by 34 to 14. It now awaits only the approval of Bishop Cranston to complete the entire transaction. What conclusion the Bishop will arrive at after personal investigation is of course a matter of conjecture but I am safe in saying that the majority of the Conference expect he will approve. The work is separated by 400 miles of intervening territory now occupied, in part at least, by the M. E. Church South, so that on account of the expense incurred in attending Conference and the misunderstandings that naturally arise in administering work so widely divided, it is thought best to administer them as separate works.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Conference convened on Saturday, July 16th, at 9 a.m. with Bishop Cranston in the chair. After the reading and approval of the previous day's minutes, Mr. T. Hongo, of the Kyosei Orphanage, was introduced to the Conference. The motion to publish a memorial volume commemorating the 25th anniversary of the commencement of the work was lost. We are sorry to have to note this action, as such a volume would be invaluable in years to come. The classes in Conference studies were called, and after their reports had been received and marks received in examinations read, six were elected to Deacons' Orders and four to Elders' Orders. The Bishop, in accordance with the customary usage, delivered an address to the class in which he emphasized the reasons for probation for both laity and ministry and declared the Christian ministry to be men called of God to the work and not hirelings. The Bishop dwelt upon the qualifications of the minister emphasizing necessity for conversion, the witness of the spirit, the need of being wholly devoted to God and His work, and the conditions under which success and devotion were possible. At this point resolutions commendatory of the presence and past work of Dr. M. C. Harris were introduced, and he addressed the conference briefly, after which "Blest be the Tie that Binds" was sung and the conference severally shook hands with Dr. Harris and wished him God-speed on his homeward journey. He sailed on the Doric at noon for San Francisco. The usual routine of Conference business occupied the time until 11 45, when Conference adjourned. In the afternoon a "Layman's Meeting was held under the chairmanship of Prof. M. Ishizaka, at which Dr. Warley, of Foochow, China, delivered an interesting address on "Self-Support in China." In the evening a "Consecration meeting" was held. On Sunday K. Ishizaka led the "Love Feast" beginning at 9 a.m., and at 10 Bishop Cranston preached a masterly sermon from Acts 1:8. At three p.m. came the ordination service, which was very impressive. In the evening the "Temperance Anniversary" was fittingly observed with addresses by K. Miama, S. Nemoto and I. Ito.—Com.

(Woman's Conference.)

The Woman's Conference which closes its fifteenth annual session at 221 Bluff, Yokohama, this week, shows encouraging results of the work done in Japan. The W.F.M.S. of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, which works entirely among women and girls, maintains at the present time in Japan eight boarding schools, three of which are industrial and five literary. In these eight schools are enrolled six hundred and forty-five girls between the ages of eight and eighteen. Many of these girls are supported wholly or in part by scholarship-teaching for a time in one of these schools after graduation. In the industrial schools the girls are taught foreign and Japanese sewing, cooking, geta making, clay modelling, wood carving, knitting, crochetting, drawn work, embroidery, drawing, crayoning, and oil painting. In the literary school, they are given a thorough academic and college education, music and English being taught in all the schools. It is scarcely necessary to state that all these schools are managed on Christian principles and that the Bible is taught in all. The ten day schools, mostly of primary grade, have a total enrollment of over two thousand. There are now twenty nine foreign lady missionaries representing this society in this country.

In evangelistic work this society is in the front ranks. Six ladies are engaged in evangelistic work only; the others; are doing evangelistic work in connection with school work. About twenty native Bible women are working under the supervision of the foreign missionary ladies, and very good work is being done. Among the interesting questions up for discussion before the conference were the Sunday Question, the Work of Native Pastors' Wives and the Need of More Evangelists at large. Interesting papers were read on the following subjects—"Work among the Japanese in San Francisco," "The Foochow Jubilee," and "Glimpses from other Fields." A pleasant feature of this year's meeting was a musicale given by Miss Dickenson, of 262-A Bluff, to the ladies of the conference. About forty ladies were present, each one of whom contributed something musical, either vocal or instrumental, toward the evening's entertainment. The affair was a success and thoroughly enjoyed by all.—Com.

THE PORTUGUESE PRISONER AT KAYI-BASHI.

We have received the following report with the compliments of the Secretary of the Yokohama General Chamber of Commerce :—

Referring to the report of the International Committee, of May 20th, on the House of Detention at Kajibashi, in which mention was made of a Portuguese prisoner that was seen confined in that prison, and whose statement led the members of the Committee to fear that his case was a very hard one, the Committee applied to the proper authorities for information on his case, and find that on the 12th April, 1897, he was arrested at the instance of the Yokohama Local Court, on a charge of obtaining money by false pretences; on the same day another charge, also of obtaining money by false pretences, was made against him by the Tokyo Local Court. As to the former offence, he was convicted and sentenced, on 12th June, 1897, to 8 months' major imprisonment with 6 months' police surveillance and yen fine. Against this judgment he appealed to the higher Court and consequently was conveyed, on the 21st June, from Yokohama prison to the Kajibashi House of Detention. On the 1st October, 1897, the appeal was dismissed, whereupon he appealed to the Supreme Court. This appeal having also been dismissed on the 4th Nov. the original judgment became final, and took effect from that day. He was on the 10th November transferred from the Kajibashi House of Detention to the prison in Sugamo, and on 8th February following, he was again removed to Yokohama prison, which belongs to the district where his original sentence was pronounced. As to the second offence, he was sentenced the Tokyo Local Court on 21st Oct. to 10 months' major imprisonment, 6 months' Police surveillance, and 8 yen fine. Against this judgment he also appealed to the higher Court, and consequently was again removed, and still is in the Kajibashi House of Detention, awaiting his trial before the higher Court in Tokyo. It is expected that the hearing of this appeal will take place between the 15th and 31st instant. It should be added here that, according to the criminal code, if a convicted person takes an appeal, and the decision on appeal proves favourable to him, the term of punishment is reckoned from the date of the original judgment, while if the decision of the Appelate Court is unfavourable to him, the term of imprisonment begins to run from the date of the latter judgment. On the other hand, in case the appeal is taken by the Public Procurator, the term counts from the date of the original judgment, irrespective of the decision being either favourable or unfavourable to the person convicted. Consequently ——'s term of imprisonment for the first offence would have expired on the 1st July, 1898. And if the appeal now pending before the higher Court should be dismissed, and there be no further appeal, thus making final the original judgment for the second offence, he will have to serve only two months, since according to the criminal code the two sentences would in such a case run concurrently.

THE WEST RIVER REBELLION.

A telegram that appears in the China Mail under date of July 12th, says that the disturbances in the Province of Szechuan are widespread, and the riots have a decidedly anti-foreign tendency. Several English, American, and French Missions in the districts have been attacked, and some of the native Christians have been killed. Pere Fremy has been carried into captivity by the notorious Ssu mangu brigand, headed by the literati and four thousand armed followers. The Mission are willing to pay Tls. 60,000 ransom.

The Daily Press, of July 12th, printed the following telegram :—

Wuchow, July 9th.

The rebellion is in full swing. Tungyuan and Paklan are reported to be sacked. Soldiers have arrived from Canton and Kweilin. The absolute incapacity of the officials to deal with this matter is only equalled by the senseless state of "funk" (no other word describes it) of the inhabitants of Wuchow, who are leaving the place in large numbers.

The situation was further complicated by the action of the captain of the steamer Dashing, a vessel really Chinese owned but flying the American flag and chartered to take Chinese soldiers up to Tungyuan. She left on the evening of the 7th, and some disturbance arising on board, the captain shot the compradore of the vessel dead, and Mr. Woods, the vessel's local agent, who attempted to interfere, received a bullet through his hand. The vessel returned to Wuchow and the captain goes under arrest to Canton to-day, 9th instant.

Shanghai, July 11th.

The Protestant and Roman Catholic Mission at Shuinching, in Szechuan, have been destroyed in a riot. Yunchang is disturbed by brigands, who have captured a French priest, for whom they demand a myriad taels ransom. Several natives have been killed. Much property has been destroyed. The situation is critical. Chunking is quiet. The foreign consuls are on the alert.

The N. C. Daily News has the following telegram :—

Hongkong, July 15th.

Peilin and Luchuan have been sacked by the rebels, and Hengyi is reported taken.

Fifteen hundred more troops have left Canton, Kweilin, and Hoyuen for the scene of the rebellion. Wuchon is considered safe.

[Pe lin Luchuan and Hengyi are in Kuangsi, south-west of Wuchou, and not very far from the Kuangtung border. Kweilin is the capital of Kuangsi, and Hoyuen is a town about half-way between Wuchou and Kweilin.—Ed. N.-C. Daily News.]

JAPANESE SETTLERS IN AUSTRALIA.

Mr. Parsons, the Honorary Japanese Consul for South Australia, says an Adelaide despatch, has been negotiating for the sale of land in the Northern Territory, on the Victoria River, to Japanese capitalists, and is now engaged in endeavouring to induce them to send a large body of Japanese settlers there. The matter has been considered in the Cabinet, the information being forwarded to the local Government direct from the Japanese authorities.

Replying to a question put by Mr. Griffiths, one of the members for the Territory, in the House of Assembly, on June 28th, the Colonial Treasurer said that the Government would do their utmost to discourage the scheme for the importation of the Japanese into the country.

LATEST TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

THE GERMANS AT MANILA.

ADMIRAL DEWEY'S PATIENCE GETTING EXHAUSTED.

BLOCKADE STRICTLY ENFORCED.

GERMAN ADMIRAL PROTESTS AND SEEKS ADVICE.

(From our Correspondent.)

Shanghai, July 19, 2.52 p.m.;
(Manila, July 15).

Everything is still quiet here. The German ships have been acting in such an irritating manner that they caused Admiral Dewey to enforce a strict blockade of Manila Bay.

Admiral Dewey informed the German Admiral and his captains, when they protested against the American naval officers boarding German ships, that his patience was getting exhausted.

The second batch of U.S. troops are daily expected. When they arrive, Manila will be attacked, and it is expected that the city will capitulate after a few shots.

Later.

The relations between the American and German Admirals are becoming very strained. When the German cruiser Irene passed Mariveles to-day, Admiral Dewey

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

sent the Hugh McCulloch to stop her. A boat was then despatched to see what the Irene wanted to do. The German Admiral protested and demanded that German ships have the right to enter the harbour without search. Admiral Dewey replied that they had no right whatever.

It is reported that Admiral Diederich asked Captain Chichester, of H.M.S. Immortalité, how he would act if the Germans interfered at the bombardment of Manila. Captain Chichester replied that he thought that Admiral Dewey would know what to do to stop that.

FALL OF SANTIAGO.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Shanghai, July 15, 3.40 p.m.

News has reached here, through official sources, that Santiago de Cuba has surrendered to the Americans.

SERIOUS RIOT AT SHANGHAI.

TWENTY NATIVES KILLED.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Shanghai, July 19.

Serious riots have been taking place at Shanghai. The French authorities took vigorous action and some twenty natives were killed. Everything is now quiet, but during the prevalence of the disturbance business had to be suspended, shops were closed, and the foreign settlements were in a state of terrorism. The action of the French is highly commended.

(From the "Japan Times.")

THE WAR.

MILES IN COMMAND IN CUBA.

NO SURRENDER: FEELING IN SPAIN.

London, July 15.

General Miles has assumed command in Cuba. Popular sentiment in Spain is against any yielding, being encouraged by the outbreak of fever among the Americans.

FALL OF SANTIAGO.

AMERICAN TERMS MAGNANIMOUS.

London, July 16.

Santiago has surrendered, the Americans agreeing to the transport of all troops to Spain and the officers retaining their swords. The New York Herald states that the Government officials at Washington assert that President McKinley is not desirous of retaining the Philippines, but would be satisfied with Guam Island and some coaling stations, provided that Puerto Rico be ceded and Cuba declared independent, also that he will not demand a money indemnity.

SPANISH CONSTITUTION SUSPENDED.

IMPENDING ATTACK ON PORTO RICO.

SPANIARDS EVACUATE SANTIAGO WITH HONOUR.

London, July 18.

The Constitution has been suspended throughout Spain, the measure being regarded as the precursor of peace. The next move on the part of the Americans will be to attack Porto Rico and send a squadron to Spain. But it is understood at Washington that President McKinley favours imposing moderate conditions of peace. The Santiago garrison marches out with the honours of war. Piles of arms are being left which will probably be returned by the Americans when the Spanish troops shall have been transported to Spain.

EXPEDITION TO PUERTO RICO.

London, July 19.

The surrender of Santiago has been completed and the American flag hoisted there. Most of the warships are now at Guantanamo. Several expeditions are preparing for Puerto Rico. President McKinley has wired General Shafter the thanks of the American people.

THE FATE OF THE PHILLIPPINES.

The Times says that Great Britain would feel no jealousy whatever if the United States took possession of the Philippines.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS NOT OFFICIALLY ADMITTED.

COMMODORE WATSON'S SAILING ORDERS FOR SPAIN.

London, July 20.

The existence of peace negotiations is not admitted officially either at Madrid or Washington. American operations at Manila and Havana will probably be postponed until September, after the rains.

Commodore Watson sails at the end of the week for Spain.

AMERICANS AND CUBANS AT LOGGERHEADS.

London, July 21.

There is a growing tension between the Americans and Cuban insurgents. The latter are indignant because Santiago has not been transferred to them. American officers and men do not conceal their contempt for the Cubans, and an early collision is predicted.

THE DREYFUS AFFAIR.

COL. PICQUART ARRESTED.

London, July 15.

Colonel Picquart has been arrested for writing to M. Sorrien, offering to disprove the authenticity of the documents upon which Dreyfus was found guilty.

ZOLA SENT TO PRISON ONCE MORE.

London, July 20.

In the course of the trial at Versailles in connection with the Dreyfus case, Emile Zola and Perreux were each sentenced to a year's imprisonment and 3,000 francs fine.

EMILE ZOLA LEAVES PARIS.

Emile Zola has left Paris for Lucerne.

THE ECLIPSE STAKES.

London, July 16.

The racing for the Eclipse stakes has resulted as follows:—Velasquez 1, Batt 2, Goletta 3.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT FOR IRELAND.

London, July 18.

The Irish Local Government Bill has passed through Committee in the House of Commons.

RISING ON THE RUSSO-CHINESE FRONTIER.

London, July 19.

Advices from St. Petersburg notify the outbreak of a rebellion in the Chinese province of Kansu close to the Russian frontier.

ACCIDENT TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, while staying with Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild at Waddesden Manor, Bucks., slipped on a staircase, and fractured his kneecap.

ITALY AND COLOMBIA.

DESPATCH OF A SQUADRON.

London, July 21.

An Italian squadron has left for Cartagena, Colombia, to enforce the settlement of President Cleveland's award in Italy's favour in the case of Cerrute, an Italian subject having a pecuniary grievance against the Republic of Colombia.

(Received by the Fiji.)

REPORTED FALL OF MANILA.

A Hongkong despatch, dated the 14th inst., has reached the military authorities to the effect that "Manila has been captured." It does not state, however, by whom—insurgents or U.S. troops.

It is reported that the Spanish Minister in Tokyo has received a telegram from Madrid, dated 14th inst. to the effect that the Spanish Government has decided to exempt from customs duty provisions imported into Cuba from any foreign country. This decision has been intimated to the Powers.

(From Saigon Papers.)

THE SANTIAGO BATTLE.

Paris, July 5.

A New York telegram states that Admiral Sampson did not enter Santiago harbour, but that Admiral Cervera with six vessels having come out on Sunday morning, trying to escape, the Americans gave chase, hailing projectiles upon them.

The Spaniards fought heroically, refused to surrender, and ran their vessels ashore, where they burnt and blew up. 250 Spaniards were killed, 860 wounded, and 600 made prisoners, including Admiral Cervera, who who was wounded in the arm.—Daily Press.

(From Java and Sources.)

RAISING OF FREIGHTS.

Taipeh, July 21.

The Governor-General will sanction the application for the raising of coasting freights.

TORPEDO-BOAT ASHORE.

Hakodate, July 21.

Torpedo Boat No. 23 yesterday stranded off Fukuyama, and sustained injury in several parts of the hull. The crews and the torpedoes, however, were saved.

On the 16th inst., at 3 a.m., a fire broke out at a hotel in Otaru, Hokkaido, and destroyed 50 houses.

MAIL STEAMERS.

THE NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co	Em. of China	M. July 25
America	O. & O. Co.	Coptic 2	Tu. July 26
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Glenfarg 2	Tu. July 26
Hongkong	M. M Co.	Ernest Simons 3	W. July 27
Hongkong	C. P. R Co	Em. of Japan 4	Th. July 28
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Victoria 5	F. July 29
Hongkong	P. & O Co.	Risetta	M. Aug. 1
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Hohenzollern	W. Aug. 3
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Belgic	Th. Aug. 4

1 Left San Francisco on the 7th July.
2 Left Shanghai on the 21st inst
3 Left Shanghai on the 20th inst.
4 Left Hongkong on the 20th inst.
5 Left Hongkong on the 19th inst

THE NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	M. July 25
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	W. July 27
Hongkong	P. & O. Co	Rohilla	W. July 27
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Saikio Maru	W. July 27
America	P. M. Co.	Glenfarg	W. July 27
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	F. July 29
Tacoma, Wash....	N. P. Co.	Victoria	Sa. July 30
Europe, via S'hai.	M. M. Co.	Ernest Simons	W. Aug. 3
Hongkong	N. D. L.	Hohenzollern	F. Aug 5
America	O. & O. Co.	Belgic	Sa. Aug. 6

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHESS.

All Communications to be addressed to the CHESS EDITOR.

The Yokohama and the Tokyo Chess Clubs are closed during the summer months.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 376.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1—R to Kt 3	1—P takes R
2—Kt to Kt 6 mate
	1—K takes Kt
2—B to Q 6 mate
	1—Kt (Kt 7) takes Kt
2—R to Kt 3 mate
	1—Kt (R 6) takes Kt
2—R to Kt 5 mate
	1—B to Q 6
2—Kt takes B mate

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., Miss S., Marco, Schach and Miss W.K.

PROBLEM No. 380.

By M. FRIGL, Wien, Austria

Second Prize, British Chess Monthly Problem Tourney.

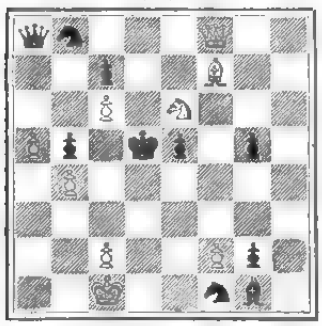
BLACK.



WHITE.

White mates in three moves.

GAME No. 410.

GAME PLAYED IN THE MATCH CAMBRIDGE v. GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

White—A. Fotheringham, Cambridge. Black—O. Hunt, Gloucester.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	18 Kt Q5	Kt xKt
2 Kt KB3	Kt KB3	19 PxKtdis. ch	Kt K4(e)
3 P Q4	PxP	20 Kt B4	Q K2(f)
4 QxP(a)	Kt B3	21 KtxKt	PxKt
5 Q K3	P Q3	22 Q Kt5ch	P B3
6 B Kt5	B Q2	23 PxP	K B2
7 Castles	KKt Kt5(b)	24 R K2	R Q3
8 Q K2	QKt K4	25 QxBP	R Qsq
9 BxBch	QxB	26 R K5q	R Q3
10 P KR3	Kt KB3	27 Q B8ch
11 Kt B3	B K2	(g)	K K2
12 B K3	P KR3	28 QRxP(h)	R Q8ch
13 Kt Q2	P KK 4(c)	29 K B2	RxRch
14 P B4	Kt Kt3(d)	30 KxR	QxR
15 PxP	PxP	Resigns.
16 BxKtP	Kt Ktsq
17 BxB	Kt(Ktsq)xB

NOTES.

(a) P to K 5 is preferable.

(b) A useless move.

(c) In the vain attempt to prevent P to B 4 Black has lost too much time.

(d) He should have taken the pawn, castled queen's side, and rushed a king's side attack afterwards.

(e) Kt to K 2 should have been played.

(f) If castles Q R, Black has still drawing chances.

(g) Q to B 5 would have won the game with safety and ease. The move is the result of a miscalculation which loses a rook.

(h) K R takes P would still have held good.

GAME No. 411.

The following pretty game was played in the recent championship tourney of the New Orleans Club. It was awarded the brilliancy prize:—

IRREGULAR OPENING.

White—M'Connell. Black—Buck.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P QR3	P Q4	14 Q Kt4	QKt B3
2 P Q4	B B4	15 B Kt5	P KR4
3 P K3	P K3	16 QxRP	QxQP
4 B Q3	Q Kt4	17 QR Qsq	QxKtP
5 Kt KB3	Q B3	18 R Q3	P KKt3
6 BxB	QxB	19 Q R2	Q K4
7 Q K2	PQR3	20 Q Q2	P Q4
8 Kt B3	B Q3	21 B R6	R Ksq
9 P K4	PxP	22 R K5q	Q B2
10 KtxP	Kt K2	23 Q Kt5	K R2
11 Castles	Castles	24 Q B6	KxB
12 KtxB	PxKt	25 Kt B5ch	Resigns
13 Kt R4	Q B3

GAME No. 412.

AN INFANT PHENOMENON.

The following game was played some little time ago at the Pittsburgh Chess Club, the director of the movements of the white pieces being Mr. W. D. Brereton, and of the black his son, who is a lad of only seven years, and who, in all probability, is the youngest chess player living. The play of the father might have been improved. The boy, on the other hand, took full advantage of the chances that were offered to him.

STEINITZ GAMBIT.

White—Brereton, sen. Black—Brereton, jun.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	12 Kt Q5	P Kt5ch
2 Kt QB3	Kt QB3	13 B KB4	BxBch
3 P KB4	PxP	14 KtxB	PxP
4 P Q4	Q R5ch	15 PxP	R Ksq
5 K K2	P Q3(a)	16 P KR4	KKt K2
6 Kt B3	B KKt5	17 B R3ch	K Kt-q
7 BxP	Castles	18 ■ Kt2(b)	KR Ktsq
8 PK R3	BxKtch	19 Kt K2(c)	Kt B4ch
9 KxB	Q B3	20 K Q2	RxB
10 K K3	P KKt4	21 PxKt	KtxP
11 B Kt3	B R3	22 K Ksq	Q K4

And Mr. Brereton resigned (d).

(a) Not so strong as 5 ..... P to Q 4, followed by ..... B to K Kt 5 ch and ..... Castles.

(b) Better was 18—P to Q B 3, followed by Q to B 3.

(c) An oversight, the king's bishop being en prise.

(d) Because he had no defence against ..... R takes Kt ch, followed by ..... Q checks.

NOTES.

Speaking of the Vienna International Chess Congress, Gunsberg, says:—The tournament will form a very severe test, in which the strongest players will have a better chance to counteract by superior experience and steadiness the advantage which a young player might obtain through the daring enterprise and imagination of his play. In a short tournament such an advantage is usually decisive, but in a long race the better stayer will overhaul the sprinter. We are not at all sure that such a contest, so discouraging to the young and rising player, promotes the best interest of the game. Pillsbury seemed in very good physical confidence as to his prospects. The total amount of prize money is £1,000. Play will proceed daily until two complete rounds have been played, in thirty-eight days plus a few days for adjourned games. The first prize is just under £250. The winner will well deserve his reward.

Mr. Lasker adhered to his resolution not to play in the Vienna tournament as the organisers insisted upon two rounds, although he was willing to compete in a one round tournament. He has at length again resumed activity on the chessboard. Recently at Leipsic he contested twenty-two games simultaneously against a strong team, winning nineteen games, drawing one, and losing two games. Three days later, Mr. Lasker played twenty-eight games simultaneously at Dresden, and he won twenty-four and drew four games. Evidently the champion has forgotten little during his brief retirement.

The Birmingham Weekly chess column, recognised both by La Stratégie and the Nuova Rivisita degli Scacchi as one of the best English columns, has the following pretty anecdote:—

My friend Brown is an expert club player, and when recently ruralising amid the bumpkins was delighted to find a simple, innocent couple who realised his ideal of Darby and Joan, and who, "pour surcroit de bonheur," actually played chess. Brown submitted that the Royal game was a great resource in a quiet hamlet like Daisy Knoll, and Darby declared that neither he nor Joan could possibly live without it.

"And when we are tired of playing; or when one is indisposed to play, we have problem-solving to fall back on, said Joan.

"Ah!" said Brown, more and more interested, "I perceive that you cultivate both branches of the noble art."

"Yes, indeed," said Darby, "and what could be more interesting than the solution of a good first-prize three-mover?

"Nothing," assented Brown. "But don't you find prize three-movers rather tall—I mean steep—I mean—" (Brown's club life has infected him with slang, and classical words come rustily). "I mean stiff-er-a-a-difficult? Yes, that's the word I was looking for—don't you find prize three-ers rather difficult?"

"O, no!" cut in the amiable Joan, "O, no, not at all. In fact, we have had so large an experience that instead of taking three moves, we frequently contrive to solve them in two!!!"

Poor Brown. Not only was he once more disillusioned, but he had a pain in his chest for three days in consequence of the desperate efforts he had been compelled to make in order to smother an involuntary ebullition of mirth, which would have completely ruined his reputation as a person having a decent and civilised respect for his seniors.

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Owari Maru, Japanese steamer, 656, H. Sakimoto, 16th July,—Yokkaichi, 15th July, General,—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Shiganoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,507, S. Kakimi, 17th July—Kobe, 16th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Rohilla, British steamer, 2,216, S. B. Lockyer, 17th July,—Hongkong via Nagasaki and Kobe, 9th July, Mails and General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.

Kweilin, British steamer, 1,088, J. Lamie, 18th July,—Taiwanfoo, 12th July, Sugar.—Butterfield & Swire.

Amagi Kan (11), Japanese Wooden-sloop, 926, Commander T. Taregaki, 18th July,—Yokosuka, 18th July.

Ise Maru, Japanese steamer, 771, J. Arakawa, 18th July,—Yokkaichi, 17th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mikawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,202, J. Nagao, 19th July,—Hakodate, 17th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Liv, Norwegian steamer, 2,003, Hansen, 19th July,—New York via ports, General.—Frazar & Co.

Hiogo Maru, Japanese steamer, 881, H. Walter, 19th July,—Yokkaichi, 18th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yeijo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,534, C. A. Anderson, 19th July,—Hakodate, 17th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

No. 15 Kannon Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,805, Y. Furukawa, 19th July,—Otaru via ports, 15th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Nestor, British steamer, 2,417, W. Asquith, 20th July,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe, 19th July, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Owari Maru, Japanese steamer, 656, H. Sakimoto, 20th July,—Yokkaichi, 19th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Suminoye Maru, Japanese steamer, 866, L. Muramatsu, 20th July,—Hakodate, 17th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Grafton (12), British Cruiser, 7,350, Capt. E. P. Jones, 20th July,—Yokosuka, 20th July.

Olympia, British steamer, 1,691, T. H. Dobson, 20th July,—Tacoma, Wash., and Victoria, B.C., 2nd July, Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Matsuyama Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,934, J. Nitei, 20th July,—Bombay via ports, Kobe, 19th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ching Wo, British steamer, 2,517, H. C. Harris, 21st July,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe, 20th July, General.—W. M. Strachan & Co.

Ikai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,907, T. Sakai, 21st July,—Kobe, 19th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kokura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,567, I. Higo, 21st July,—Kobe, 20th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Olympia, British steamer, 1,691, T. H. Dobson, 21st July,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Banledi, British steamer, 1,481, R. Farquhar, 21st July,—London via ports, General.—Cornes & Co.

Diomed, British steamer, 3,005, Thos. Bartlett, 21st July,—London via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

DEPARTURES.

On Sang, British steamer, 1,789, Young, 16th July,—Moji, Ballast.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Doric, British steamer, 2,936, Harry Smith, 16th July,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—O. & O. S. S. Co.

Sakura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,827, N. Mumezono, 16th July,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hiogo Maru, Japanese steamer, 871, H. Walter, 16th July,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kokura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,567, I. Higo, 16th July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Masagon, British steamer, 3,280, E. G. Andrews, 16th July,—London via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, F. W. Horton, 17th July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Owari Maru, Japanese steamer, 656, H. Sakimoto, 17th July,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Craigearn, British steamer, 1,948, D. Kirkwood, 17th July,—New York via ports, and Suez Canal, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Asagao Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,525, M. Hamada, 18th July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kinshiu Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,312, F. Brown, 18th July,—Hongkong via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kansu, British steamer, 1,158, A. Sommerville, 19th July,—Moji, Ballast.—Butterfield & Swire.

Ise Maru, Japanese steamer, 771, J. Arakawa, 19th July,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Rossia (28), Russia, Cruisers, 12,130, Capt. Domujiroff, 19th July,—Kobe.

Melbourne, French steamer, 2,033, D. Duchateau, 20th July,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Satsuma Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,157, G. Shimazu, 20th July,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Shiganoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 875, K. Kamiki, 20th July,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ficciola, German steamer, 875, Hop, 21st July,—Hongkong via Kobe and Moji, General.—M. Raspe & Co.

Yejio Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,534, C. A. Anderson, 21st July,—Otaru, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Shinagawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,001, K. Yamanouchi, 21st July,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mikawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,202, J. Nagao, 21st July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Rohilla, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. L. Berindougue, Capt. J. J. C. Watson, Mr. and Mrs. W. Thomson, Miss Thomson, Mr. G. D. Poli, Capt. Thompson, Mrs. T. B. Pulteney, Master A. Hutchison, Mr. G. C. Pakenham, Miss Pakenham, Mr. Mertens, Rev. and Mrs. Stamford, Mr. Bickel, Miss Chase, Mr. J. C. Wilkinson, Capt. F. Heiderish, and Mr. C. Rogers, in cabin; Sergt. Cronin, Mr. J. Malloy, and Mr. H. N. Pelerse, maid and infant, in second class; 4 Japanese, and 2 Chinese, in steerage.

Per British steamer Olympia, from Tacoma, Wash., via Victoria, B.C.:—Dr. E. P. Kelley, and Mrs. Kuhn, in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Doric for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. J. Ambrose, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Azbill, Miss Azbill, Mr. A. Barr, Mr. I. Behrens, Mr. A. Brown, Mr. I. W. Brown, Mr. W. Doney, Mr. H. Edgar, Rev. R. C. Fillingham, Miss Halstead, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Happer, Miss Alice E. Harwood, Rev. Dr. M. C. Harris, Dr. B. Harada, I.J.N., Mr. S. Heryngtet, Mr. K. Hideshima, Mr. I. Ichii, Miss Irwin, Miss Irving, Mrs. S. Isaacs, child and amah, Master Irwin Isaacs, Miss James, Mr. and Mrs. Jamieson and child, Mr. Hideo Kisaki, I.J.N., Mr. Francis A. Lander, Mrs. Levison, Mr. L. O. Levison, Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Liddel and three children, Mr. and Mrs. A. McLeod, Mr. Hideo Maouzo, Mrs. O. Mondfort, Mr. James Murphy, Miss Hessie Murphy, Mr. R. W. Mustard, Mr. K. Nakahama, Mr. and Mrs. Jay H. Neff, Mr. M. Okada, Miss Picket, Col. A. Saisho, I.J.N., Mr. H. Santo, Mr. M. M. Saricheff, Mr. M. Savey, Major B. Shimakawa, I.J.N., Mr. H. J. Such, Mr. Y. Suzuki, I.J.N., Mr. A. A. Thomas, Miss Torrey, and Mr. T. Wooyeno, in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Kokura Maru, for Kobe and ports:—Mr. S. Soga, Mr. A. Kubayama, Mr. J. F. Vernet, Mr. C. B. Harbey, Mr. W. E. Sabiabe, Mr. and Mrs. S. Kawamura, Mr. S. Kase, and Mr. Yoshida, in cabin; 100 Japanese, in steerage.

Per French steamer Melbourne, for Marseilles via ports:—Mr. G. W. Rogers, Mr. J. Clifford Wilkinson, Mr. A. Kleinwort, Mr. A. E. Blake, Mr. Sylvain Levy, Mr. S. Moosa, Mr. Alf. I. Hart, Mr. R. Hauff, Mr. M. H. Harlogh, Mr. A. R. Morris, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Buncombe, Mrs. Patrick Brady, Mr. Chung Tong, Mr. A. J. C. Rocha, Mr. J. A. C. V. Rebeiro, Mr. A. Pichon, Mr. Carrère, Mr. Vinson, Mr. Bordeneuve, Mr. Mallick, and Mr. S. Nagasaki, in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Satsuma Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—Dr. S. Nagayo, Commander K. Muda, I.J.N., Mr. Mertens, Mr. B. Kuysama, Mr. J. Brigg, Mr. T. B. Glover, Mr. Wm. Barrie, Mr. H. Shoda, and Mr. M. Shoda, in cabin; Mrs. K. Abe, Mr. T. Fukaye, Mr. S. Jisoji, Mr. M. Nagayo, Mrs. Y. Muda, and Master S. Muda, in second class; 80 Japanese, 2 European, and 2 Chinese, in steerage.

The following are the shipments of Tea and Silk, per British steamer Tacoma, for Tacoma, Wash., and Victoria, B.C.:—

TEA.

	CANADA.	CHICAGO AND WEST.	NEW YORK AND EAST.	PACIFIC COAST.	OTHER CITIES.	TOTAL PACKAGES.
Hongkong	—	—	—	51	—	51
Amoy	—	—	1,751	—	—	1,751
Colombo	—	1,191	793	864	—	2,848
Kobe	620	—	480	2	—	1,102
Yokohama	1,924	4,443	1,131	109	—	7,607
Total	2,544	5,634	4,155	1,026	—	13,359

SILK.

	NEW YORK.	HARTFORD.	TOTAL BALES.
Hongkong	160	—	160
Yokohama	—	—	—
Total	160	—	160

Per French steamer Melbourne, for Marseilles:—Raw Silk for Europe, 238 bales; Waste Silk for Europe, 173 bales.

PATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

The usual report of absolute stagnation still holds good. Nothing has been doing during the past week, and prices are only nominal.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

	PER PIECE.
Grey Shirtings—8½ lb., 38½ yds. 39 inches	$2 55 to 2 85
Grey Shirtings—9lb, 38½ yds. 45 inches	2.85 to 3.35
T. Cloth—7lb, 24 yards, 32 inches	1.80 to 2.00
Indigo Shirtings—12 yards, 14 inches	2.75 to 2.60
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches	2 00 to 3.75
Cotton—Italians and Sateens Black, 32 inches	PER YARD. 0 15 to 0.25

WOOLLENS.

	PER YARD.
Flannels	$0.30 to 0.50
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches last	0.28 to 0.41
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Medium	Nominal
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Common	Nominal
Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 24 yards, 32 inches	0.15 to 0.27
Cloths—Pilots, 54 to 56 inches	0.45 to 0.50
Cloths—Presidents, 54 to 56 inches	0.60 to 0.72½
Cloths—Union, 54 to 55 inches	0.50 to 0.85
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5lb, per lb	0 50 to 0 60

	PER PIECE.
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	7.75 to 9.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42-3 inches	0.60 to 1.00
TurkeyReds—2.0 to 3.0lb, 24/25 yards, 30 inches	1.25 to 2.20
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 4lb, 24/25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.52½

LUSTRE YARNS.

	PER PICUL.
Nos. 16 24, Singles	$35.50 to 38.50
Nos. 28/32, Singles	39.00 to 41.50
Nos. 38/42, Singles	43.50 to 45.50
Nos. 32, Doubles	42.00 to 43.50
Nos. 42, Doubles	47.00 to 50.50
Nos. 1/60, Plain	61 00 to 63.00
Nos. 2/80, Plain	75.00 to 76.30
Nos. 2/100, Plain	97.00 to 99.00
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	69 50 to 76.50
Nos. 2 80, Gassed	85.00 to 90.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	114.00 to 124.00

RAW COTTON.

	PER PICUL.
American Middling	$19.50 to —
Indian Broach	19.25 —
Chinese	21.00 to 21.50

METALS.

Nothing doing, the market still suffering from a large over-supply. Quotations nominal.

	PER PICUL.
Round and square 4 inch. and upward	3.85 to 4.10
Iron Plates, assorted	4.00 to 4.40
Sheet Iron	4.90 to 5.10
Galvanised Iron sheets	8.50 to 10.25
Wire Nails, assorted	5 90 to 6.10
Tin Plates, per box	5.75 to 5.95
Pig Iron, No. 1	2.08 to 2.10
Hoop Iron (¼ to 1¼ inch)	5.00 to 5.15

KEROSENE.

Nothing doing. Prices nominally at last week's rates.

American	$2 05 —
Russian	1.95 to 2.00
Langkat	— 1.85

SUGAR.

The market continues steady at prices, roughly speaking, at last week's level.

	PER PICUL.
Brown Takao	$5.40 to 5.60
Brown Manila	5.20 to 6.30
Brown Daitong	3.80 to 4.20
Brown Canton	4.15 to 5.80
White Java and Penang	6.90 to 7.25
White Refined	7.70 to 9.80

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

A fair demand continues, and purchases, while not large, have been steady. There is now a stock of 6,481 boxes in Yokohama. Quotations are as under:—

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra 9/11, 10/12 den	$930
Filatures—Extra 13/15, 14/16 den	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1, 10/12 deniers	900 to 910
Filatures—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den	940 to 950
Filatures—No. 1½, 10/14 deniers	880 to 890
Filatures—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den	910 to 920
Filatures—No. 2, 10/15 deniers	850 to 860
Filatures—No. 2, 13/18 deniers	890
Re-reels—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den	870
Re-reels—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den	850
Re-reels—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	830
Re-reels—No. 2½, 14 18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 3, 18/20 deniers	Nominal
Kakedas—Extra	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 1½	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2	Nominal
Kakedas—No. 2½	Nominal

WASTE SILK.

The market has been lifeless, purchases being nil, while there is a large stock, of nearly 3,000 piculs, on hand. Quotations nominally as under:—

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filature, Best	$115 to 120
Noshi—Filature, Good	105 to 110
Noshi—Oshu, Best	110 to 115
Noshi—Oshu, Good	100 to 103
Noshi—Oshu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Shinshu, Best	70 to 75
Noshi—Shinshu, Good	65 to 67½
Noshi—Bushu, Best	115 to 120
Noshi—Bushu, Good	100 to 110
Noshi—Bushu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Joshu, Good	60 to 65
Noshi—Joshu, Fair	55 to 57½
Kibiso—Filature, Best	95 to 100
Kibiso—Filature, Seconds	85 to 90
Kibisa—Joshu, Good	25 to 30
Kibiso—Bushu, Fair	20 to 22½

TEA.

The market continues active, large purchases having been made during the past week. The present stock exceeds a million pounds; some of it is of very inferior quality.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	$35 & upwards
Choice	33 to 34
Finest	31 to 32
Fine	29 to 30
Good Medium	27 to 28
Medium	25 to 26
Good Common	23 to 24
Common	20 to 22

EXCHANGE.

Silver ⅛ higher from London and sterling quotations from China ⅛ higher have caused rates on China to weaken, but otherwise there is no change.

Sterling—Bank T.T.	2/0½
— — Bills on demand	2/0 5/8
— — 4 months' sight	2 0½
— Private 4 months' sight	2/0⅝
— — 6 months' sight	2/0⅝
On Paris—Bank sight	2 55
On Paris—Private 4 months' sight	2.58½
On America—Bank Bills on demand	49½
— Private 4 months' sight	50½
On Germany—Bank sight	2.06½
— Private 4 months' sight	2.10½
On Hongkong—Bank sight	4/16 dis.
— Private 10 days' sight	5/16 dis.
On Shanghai—Bank sight	78
— Private 10 days' sight	79 to ¼
On India—Bank sight	153
— Private 30 days' sight	156
Bar Silver (London)	27 1/16

LOCAL AND JAPANESE SHARE LIST.

[MESSRS. BISSET & URE'S LIST.]

Yokohama, July 21st.

Yokohama Engine & Iron Works changed hands yesterday and to-day at yen 220, at which rate further shares can be had. This rate carries with it the dividend shortly to be paid by the Company. Sellers rule the market for Japan Breweries; old shares cum new ex application deposit paid can be had at yen 500, old shares at yen 275, and new shares cum deposit at yen 75. Oriental Hotels have ready sellers at yen 135. Nagasaki Hotels can be placed at yen 35; holders ask yen 50. North & Raes continue in strong demand at yen 200. Langfields are wanted at yen 230; yen 235 will procure shares. Hyogo Gas have sellers at yen 180. Kobe Club Debentures

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Brewery Co. have issued a circular letter to the effect that the resolutions regarding the increase of capital and the division of $100 shares into two $50 shares will not come into effect until after reformation of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company.

Yokohama Engine & Iron Works Ld., $50 ...	220 S.
Japan Brewery Co., Ld., $100..... x...	*
Grand Hotel, Ld., $100.....	650.50 Sa.
Club Hotel, Ld., $100 ..... x...	226 N.
Oriental Hotel, Ld., $100..... 3 ..	235 S.
Oriental Hotel, Ld. (Fdrs.), $100	450 S.
Nagasaki Hotel Ld., yen 100	35 Sa. & B.
North and Rae, Ld., $100	200 B.
Brett & Co., Ld., $50.....	20 N.
Langfeldt & Co., Ld., $100.....	230 B.
Hiogo Gas Co., Ld., $100..... 4...	180 S.
Japan Brewery Co., Ld. 7% Deb., $100.....	110 N.
Kobe Club 6% Deb., $50	51 S.
Yokohama United Club 5½% Deb., $100	102 B.
Brett & Co., Ld. 7% Deb , $100.....	100 B.
Oriental Hotel, Ld. 7½% Deb., $100	120 B.
Nagasaki Hotel, Ld. 7% Deb., $200	200 S.

* Old shares cum new yen 500 S., old shares ex new yen 275 S., new shares yen 10 paid yen ■ S.

Reserve Fund.—1, yen 110,000; 2, yen 50,000 Equalization of dividend; 3, yen 21,710.91; 4. yen 16,198.44.

N.E.—S. Sellers, B.=Buyers, Sa.=Sales, St.=Steady, N.=Nominal, W.=Weak, E.=Enquiries.

(FROM THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE OFFICIAL LIST.)

Tokyo, July 21st.

Five per Cent. Capitalized Pension Bonds	99 80
Redemption Loan Bonds	96 00
War Loan Bonds	96 00
Old Public Loan Bonds	90.50
Naval Loan Bonds	94.80
Tokyo City Loan Bonds.....	96 30
Japan Railway Company—paid up yen 50	60.00
Sanyo Railway Company—paid up yen 50	45.30
Kansai Railway Company—paid up yen 50	49.00
Kobu Railway Company—paid up yen 45	92 50
Kyushu Railway Company—paid up yen 50	61.20
Kyushu Railway Company, new—paid up yen 25.	32.00
Hokkaido Coal Mining Company—paid up yen 50	79 00
Hokkaido Coal Mining Co., new—paid up yen 28	45.00
Sangu Railway Company—paid up yen 50	73.50
Kawagoye Railway Company—paid up yen 50 ...	48.00
Zuzo Railway Company—paid up yen 50.....	23.00
Hantan Railway Company—paid up yen 50.....	28.00
Boso Railway Company—paid up yen 50	25.00
Sobu Railway Company—paid up yen 50	73 80
Narita Railway Company—paid up yen 50	46.40
Nishinari Railway Company—paid up yen 46	29 80
Toyokawa Railway Company—paid up yen 50.....	20.00
Hokuyetsu Railway Company—paid up yen 50 ...	25.00
Ota Railway Company—paid up yen 37.50	27.00
Seiwa Railway Company—paid up yen 12.50	7.50
Chugoku Railway Company—paid up yen 25	5 70
Kyoto Railway Company—paid up yen 25	5.50
Kozuke Railway Company—paid up yen 50	21 00
Nanao Railway Company—paid up yen 50	31.00
Nippon Yusen Kaisha—paid up yen 50.....	45.70
Tokyo Bay Steamship Company—paid up yen 25...	12.00
Domestic Transport Company—paid up yen 60 ...	30.50
Japan Transport Company—paid up yen 7.50	2 8.
Nippon Ginko—paid up yen 200	369 00
First National Bank—paid up yen 50.....	50.80
Third National Bank—paid up yen 50	55 00
Specie Bank—paid up yen 200.....	167.50
Specie Bank, new—paid up yen 75	193.00
Imperial Merchant Bank—paid up yen 25	20.10
Tokyo Tramway Company—paid up yen 50	253 0.
Yokohama Electric Light Co.—paid up yen 42	29 00
Shinagawa Electric Light Co.—paid up yen 31	9 50
Tokyo Electric Light Company—paid up yen 10...	42.00
Tokyo Gas Company—paid up yen 50	61.00
Doshin Kaisha—paid up yen 50	9 80
Tokyo Stock Exchange—paid up yen 50	126 00

Lovely Skin
Luxuriant Hair

The clearest skin, free from pimple, spot, or blemish, the softest, whitest hands, shapely nails, and luxuriant, lustrous hair with clean, wholesome scalp, are produced by CUTICURA SOAP, the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap in the world, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath, and nursery. The only preventive of pimples, blotches, red, rough, and oily skin, red, rough hands with shapeless nails, and baby blemishes, because the only preventive of the cause, viz.: inflammation and clogging of the PORES.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A. "All About the Skin," a 64-page book, post free.

Trade Mark on WALTER MACFARLANE & C° GLASGOW SARACEN FOUNDRY every Casting.

Macfarlane's Castings,

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"SHARP, CLEAN, AND FULL OF CHARACTER."

ORNAMENTAL CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

VERANDAHS, BALCONIES, BANDSTANDS, ARCADES, KIOSKS, CONSERVATORIES, ROOFS,

RAILWAY STATIONS, BARRACKS, FACTORIES, PUBLIC WORKS, MARKETS, &c.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PILLARS, BRACKETS, AND WIRE WAYS.

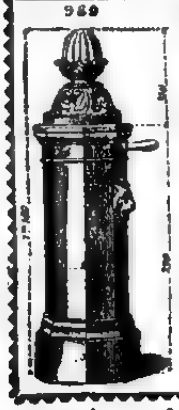
NUMEROUS HEIGHTS AND DESIGNS TO SUIT THE DIFFERENT REQUIREMENTS.

MACFARLANE'S GLASS ENAMELLED DRAIN AND SOIL PIPES, A SPECIALITY.

TWO GOLD MEDALS, CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

Illustrated CATALOGUES, Price Lists, and Estimates on application.

WALTER MACFARLANE & Co., Glasgow, Scotland.



WATERING APPARATUS

Non-freezing & Ordinary Hydrants and Street Washers.

Garden Watering Boxes and Apparatus.

Gun-Metal, Copper, and Cast-Iron Cocks and Valves.

E. GUESNIER, E.C.P.,

Engineer and Book Manfr.,

(Successor of ACHILLE CADET)

27, Rue des Taillandiers,

PARIS.

Hydropathic and Massage Apparatus supplied to the Vichy Co. Vapour Baths (Berthe system).

Apply to BOYES & Co., agents for M. OPPENHEIMER & Co., PARIS.

December 5, 1896.

A. SAVY & CO., ENGINEERS.

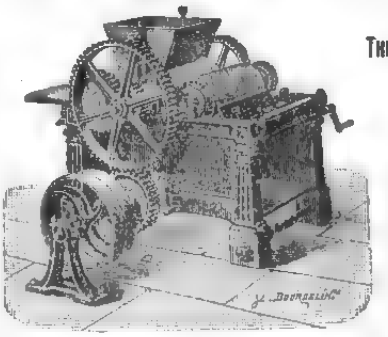
162, Rue de Charenton, Paris.

THE OLD G. HERMANN DEBATISTE WORKS.

ESTABLISHED 1830.

The Oldest and Largest Makers in the World of Chocolate, Cocoa, and Confectionery Plants.

Over 2,500 Chocolate Factories fitted up to January 1st, 1896.



GRINDING MACHINERY for all kinds of dry or wet substances, colours, printing inks, toilet soap, perfumery, and chemicals.

MIXING, CRUSHING, AND PULVERISING MACHINES FOR ALL MATERIALS.

Address Messrs. C. ROHDE & Co., YOKOHAMA.

November 21st, 1896.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LEA & PERRINS'

OBSERVE THAT THE SIGNATURE

Lea & Perrins

IS NOW PRINTED IN BLUE INK DIAGONALLY ACROSS THE OUTSIDE WRAPPER of every Bottle of the

ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

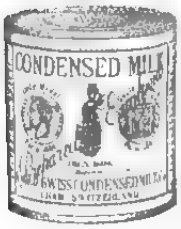
SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale by the Proprietors, Worcester; Crosse & Blackwell, Ltd., London; and Export Oilmen generally.

RETAIL EVERYWHERE.

46ins. May 8th, 1898.

MILKMAID BRAND CONDENSED MILK



The "Milkmaid" Brand is guaranteed to contain all the cream of the original milk. In the process of manufacture nothing but water is removed, nothing but the best refined sugar added.

Avoid low-priced brands from which the cream has been abstracted, and ask for the "Milkmaid" Brand, the best for all purposes.

Cheapest for Beef Tea and Kitchen Use.

LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT.

J. Liebig

Always look for the BLUE SIGNATURE. There are many imitations which have not the same flavour and are not so carefully manufactured.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

The Universal Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Headache, Heartburn, Indigestion, Sour Eructations, Bilious Affections.

The Physician's Cure for Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Gravel; the safest and most gentle Medicine for Infants, Children, Delicate Females, and the Sickness of Pregnancy.

Sold Throughout the World.

N.B.—ASK FOR DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

September 19th, 1897. 91m.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

THE FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

More Fragrant; More Lasting; and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ATKINSON'S ONLY AND BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Only genuine with "White Rose" Trade Mark.

Of all Dealers & of the Manufacturers—

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

January 1st, 1898. 1y.

NOT SO FAR AWAY IN CHICAGO U. S. A.

IS THE

Greatest Mail Order House in the World.

MONTGOMERY WARD & COMPANY,

111 to 120 Michigan Ave.

WHO ISSUE SEMI-ANNUALLY THE MOST COMPREHENSIVE

GENERAL CATALOGUE AND BUYERS' GUIDE.

Containing 624 pages (8½ by 12 inches), 14,000 illustrations, 40,000 dependable quotations, and Twenty SPECIAL PRICE LISTS, devoted to distinctive lines of GENERAL MERCHANDISE, viz.: FURNITURE, AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, WAGONS and CARRIAGES, DRUGS, MEDICINES, SEWING MACHINES, ORGANS, PIANOS, BOOKS on every subject, PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES, BOOTS AND SHOES, CLOTHING, CLOAKS, DRESSES, BICYCLES, GROCERIES, HARDWARE, CARPETS, DRY GOODS, WALL PAPER, and BARBERS' SUPPLIES.

Any one or all of these publications will be sent postpaid upon application to retailers in foreign lands, including our "Hand Book for Foreign Buyers." Send in your request, induce your neighbors, friends and relatives to do so, and learn of our limitless facilities for filling orders expeditiously at minimum prices.

Goods Guaranteed as Represented or Money Refunded.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

CHICAGO, U. S. A.

111 to 120 MICHIGAN AVENUE.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF MODERN TIMES

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

PERSONS suffering from weak or debilitatep constitutions will discover that by the use of this wonderful medicine there is "Health for all." The blood is the fountain of life, and its purity can be maintained by the use of these Pills

Sir Samuel Baker, in his work entitled "The Nile Tributaries in Abyssinia," says—"I ordered the dragoman Mahomet to inform the Fakir that I was a Doctor, and I had the best medicines at the service of the sick, with advice gratis. In a short time I had many applicants, to whom I served out a quantity of Holloway's Pills. These are most useful to an explorer, as, possessing unmistakable purgative properties, they create an undeniable effect upon the patient, which satisfies them of their value."

SIMPLE, SAFE, AND CERTAIN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

Is a certain remedy for bad legs, bad breasts, and ulcerations of all kinds. It acts miraculously in healing ulcerations, curing skin diseases, and in arresting and subduing all inflammations.

Mr. J. T. Cooper, in his account of his extraordinary travels in China, published in 1871, says—"I had with me a quantity of Holloway's Ointment. I gave some to the people, and nothing could exceed their gratitude; and, in consequence, milk, fowls, butter, and horse feed poured in upon us, until at last a teaspoonful of Ointment was worth a fowl and any quantity of peas, and the demand became so great that I was obliged to lock up the small remaining "stock."

Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the World. May 1st, 1897.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor, at 52, Main Street, Settlement, by Arthur Hellamy Brown, of No. 72, Bluff, Yokohama, Saturday, July 23, 1898.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 5.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, JULY 30TH, 1898. 明三年五十二治明 第五卷第四十三號 VOL. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 97
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 98
Music in Yokohama 99
A New Boarding-House in Sapporo 99
Formosan Regulations 99
The Emperor of China on "Squeese Fidjin" 99
Arrest of a Foreigner 99
The Fight at Santiago 100
The President of the Bank of Japan 100
The Political Situation 101
A Conservative Party 102
Reforms in Formosa 102
Formosa and the Codes 102
War Expenditures 103
Marquis Ito's Visit to China 103
Finance 103
Foreign Capital and Japanese Companies 104
The Toyo Kisen Kaisha 104
The Spoils System 104
Control of Elections 104
The Cabinet and its Political Supporters 105
Officers for the Navy and Army 105
The Ladrones 105
Artistic Competition 105
The Future of the Philippines 105
Japan and Siam 106
Suspension of a Magazine 106
Reuter 106
Japanese Torpedo Craft 107
A Model Despatch 107
Solitary Confinement of Suspects 107
Korean Affairs 107
Imperial Commercial Museum 107
The Temple Chion-in and its Debt 107
Mr. John Foster Fraser 107
Leading Articles:—
The Financial Situation 108
Notes on News 110
Japanese Facts and Comments 111
Some Korean Jottings 112
China News 112
German News 113
News of the Week 114
Locomotive Building in Japan 115
Correspondence:—
M. Boissonade and the Abolition of Torture 116
The Iwate Famine 116
Engines in Use on Japanese Railways 116
Missions in Japan 116
Urgency Ordinance Relating to Elections 116
Foreigners and the Revised Treaties 117
The Grand Hotel, Limited 118
Japan Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church 118
Naval Court of Inquiry 119
Latest Telegraphic News 119
Chess 120
Latest Shipping 121
Latest Commercial 122

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"FAISCE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, JULY 30TH, 1898.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THEIR MAJESTIES have postponed their trip to Kyoto indefinitely.

EARL MINTO has been appointed Governor General of Canada.

CHINA is experiencing considerable difficulty in suppressing the Kwangsi rebellion.

THE principal ships of H.M. China squadron are expected in Yokohama next week.

DYSENTERY is epidemic in Kanagawa Prefecture, and to a slighter degree in Yokohama.

MANILA has not yet fallen, despite the arrival of the second batch of American troops at Cavite.

MR. PAK YONG-HO has decided, it is said, on the advice of his friends, not to return to Korea.

COUNT MATSUKATA on the 25th inst. proceeded to the Palace, and had audience with his Majesty.

A GOODS and passenger car belonging to the Nankai Railway Company came in collision at Sumiyoshi station. Three passengers were injured.

OWING to dysentery, several schools in Kanagawa Prefecture have been closed until further notice.

DISCUSSIONS, more or less heated, continue regarding the appointment of a new Foreign Minister.

THE Cubans have presented a petition demanding the immediate establishment of the Cuban Republic.

MARQUIS ITO leaves for China this week. His tour will extend from Peking to Hongkong, if not beyond.

THE torpedo-destroyer Tatsuta left Hakodate on the 22nd inst. for Fukuyama, where Torpedo-boat 23 was stranded.

ON the 22nd inst. the Italian Minister, Count Orfini, left Tokyo for his villa at Hayama, Kanagawa prefecture.

BAR-GOLD, valued at yen 3,000,000, which the Government have purchased in London, arrived at Kobe on the 21st inst.

PRINCE CYRIL has left Kobe for Vladivostock, via Nagasaki. The Czar has telegraphed his thanks to the Emperor.

ON the 22nd inst. a case of cholera appeared at Nishi-Shinmachi, Tokushima, and the victim died the same day.

ON the 19th inst. at Uyeno park, Tokyo, the dead body of a man was found hanging on a tree. It was clearly a case of suicide.

MR. YANO, the Japanese Minister to Peking, has left for Japan to report concerning the Shashi affair and the general condition of China.

HIS Majesty the Czar of Russia has conferred the decoration of Alexander Nevsky, in diamonds, on H.I.H. Prince Kan-in Kotohito.

SPAIN has formally sued for peace through the French Ambassador at Washington. President McKinley will consult the Cabinet before replying.

TWO American sailors named Chambers and Frandt, who deserted from a sailing vessel at Hakodate, were arrested in Yokohama on the 20th instant.

THE hot weather has at last driven cricketers from the field in Yokohama, at least during the day. Matches are now arranged from 4.30 p.m. to sundown.

THE United States will fortify Honolulu, making it one of the strongest military posts in the Pacific. Barracks are to be erected to accommodate a large force.

THE dead body of an infant was found on the 20th inst. in the river near Ichujima, Fukagawa, Tokyo. It is supposed the child had been thrown into the water.

THE Insurgents both in Cuba and in the Philippines are said to be greatly dissatisfied with the American conduct of the campaign. Trouble is feared in both quarters.

THERE are indications of a general disturbed state of feeling in Spain. Troubles have broken out in Granada, and armed bands have appeared in other districts.

THE Osaka Watch Manufacturing Company held a general meeting on the 26th inst. to discuss the question of reducing the capital, or winding up. The latter course will be adopted.

ON the 26th inst. a telegram was received from the Japanese Consul at Townsville, Australia, to the effect that Japanese emigrants numbering 59, carrying passports to the northern districts, have landed in Queensland. The Governor of Queensland decided that Japanese without passports shall not be permitted to land hereafter.

THERE is a rumour that the Department of Justice will shortly be closed, and its affairs transferred to the Department of Home Affairs. A Department for Industries will shortly be established.

IT is stated that the Kobu Railway Company is intending to raise a foreign loan. The company is in consultation with Messrs. Illies & Co., Yokohama. The amount is stated as yen 200,000.

THE riots at Shanghai have subsided, though for nearly a week trade was hampered seriously, all the Ningpo men stopping work by order of their Guild, who own the Joss-house that originated the trouble.

A CARPENTER named Tanaka Tomijiro, 29 years old, living at Katamachi, Yotsuya, Tokyo, attempted suicide by drinking about an ounce of sulphuric acid at a house of ill-fame at Shinjiku. He is in a critical condition.

A NEMURO despatch, dated 23rd inst., has reached the head office of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha in Tokyo to the effect that there is no hope of saving the steamer Harima Maru, which recently stranded at Kaigarase.

MESSRS. NAKAJIMA, Rakuin, and other Eastern Liberals (Kwanto Jiyuha) who are endeavouring to make Mr. Hoshi, the Minister to Washington, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, are arranging a reception on his return from the States.

ON the 23rd inst., at 8.10 p.m., as a train on the Kobu Railway was passing Sendagaya village, Toyotama-gori, Tokyo, a man suddenly ran out from a side way and laid himself down on the rails before the engine. His head was completely cut into pieces by the wheels.

A YOUTH, named Uyeda Sozaburo, 17 years of ago, in the employ of a rice merchant in Saiwai-cho, Hakodate, embezzled yen 3,300 from the 130th National Bank. He was arrested just as he was about to abscond. Some rice brokers have also been arrested as accomplices.

THE Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, in introducing the Supplementary Naval Programme in the House of Commons, announced the intended addition of four new battleships, four cruisers, and twelve torpedo-boat-destroyers at a cost of eight millions. This addition, he explained, was necessitated by the Russian programme, the Admiralty considering it necessary to maintain the principle that the British fleet should be equal to those of any two other Powers.

As far as the import trade is concerned, the past week has offered no feature beyond the dullness which has characterised it for many weeks past. There have been some enquiries for yarns, but only a very few transactions have been done, and those at the lowest prices. Grey shirtings are absolutely stagnant, and so are fancy cottons and woollens. The metal and kerosene markets are both lifeless; sugar shows prospects of an improving demand. There is a slight fall of a few sen per picul in the prices of Manila's and Formosa's. As to exports, there is still a steady demand for raw silk from Europe, but American buyers are apparently keeping aloof. The effect is to reduce prices slightly all round. Settlements up to date since July 1st have been 2,204 piculs. In waste silk there is absolutely no business. Purchases of tea have been extensive, the lower qualities being chiefly enquired for. Prices remain at last week's level.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

More than one of the Tokyo journals write strongly in support of the suggestion that the Keishicho, or Metropolitan Police Board, should cease to have an independent existence. The idea has not been suggested, as might be supposed, by the recent indiscretion of Baron Sonoda, the late Chief of Police. It is a project several years old, though, of course, the Sonoda incident has brought it into unprecedented prominence. The celebrated Mr. Kawaji may be said to have been the founder of the Keishicho. He was its chief in 1877 during the Satsuma rebellion, and he it was that organized the corps of constables who did such splendid service with the old Japanese weapon, the sword, against the insurgents. Thenceforth, the Board of Metropolitan Police assumed a kind of military character, and an unwritten law came to be observed that its chief should always be of Satsuma extraction. People regarded it as an instrument, not for the commonplace purpose of preserving law and order, but for protecting the Cabinet, or, to speak more plainly, for carrying out the mandates of the Sat-Cho clique. Its record has not contributed to its popularity. It has been closely connected with the enforcement of the Peace Preservation Regulations, the Premonition Regulations, the Press Law, and the Law of Public Meeting and Political Association. In short, it has been the agent for enforcing ordinances that greatly curtailed the liberty of the subject, and the evil odour of the functions it has had to perform clings to it even after the repeal of all those objectionable pieces of legislation. The part played by it in the past is now compared to the part that the police in Russia have to play towards the Nihilists and the police in Germany towards the Socialists. Baron Sonoda's action is declared to have been quite consistent with the history of the Board, and it is asked why such a system of police should be necessary in Tokyo when the other two chief cities of Japan, Kyoto, and Osaka, get on excellently without anything of the kind. The Asahi Shimbun has been principally conspicuous in urging that the present opportunity should be seized to abolish the Board, and place the city police under the control of the Governor.

* * *

Not a single journal has come out as an open advocate of the project said to be entertained by the Cabinet, namely, the raising of the emoluments of members of the Diet from 800 yen annually to 1,800 yen. Even the organs of the Constitutional Party oppose it. The Yomiuri Shimbun, for example, declares that the scheme has no better object than to placate the discontented Peers, and thus remove a difficulty not unlikely to embarrass the Cabinet seriously, namely, the opposition of the Upper House to all Government measures. It is well-known that the various Orders of the Nobility, when electing members to represent them in parliament, are greatly influenced by a candidate's pecuniary circumstances, and deem it a point of propriety to return a man if it be certain that the stipend of 800 yen accruing to him as a member will materially assist him to make ends meet. Eight hundred yen is not a large sum, but it means 66 yen a month, and the possession or deprivation of 66 yen a month means to an ordinary Japanese the difference between a comfortable competence and penury. Hence it is that the Counts, Viscounts and Barons sitting in the Upper House are, in the main, the most impecunious representatives of their several Orders. That is not a desirable state of affairs. The nation wants able legislators in the Upper House, not needy pensioners, and it is held that to raise the salary from 800 to 1,800 yen would materially increase the dimensions of the abuse. As for the Lower House, the Tokyo journals think that the larger the salary given to a member the more numerous will be the men who regard a parliamentary career simply as a means of earning money by selling their votes. Probably the purity of the House would be best secured by abolishing the system of salaries altogether. It is noteworthy that among all the arguments penned upon this subject, not one embodies the contention so popular a few years ago, namely, that the salaries of all officials are too high, and that the members of the Diet ought to set a good example by cutting down their own emoluments. Neither is any allusion made to the fact that it rests with the Emperor solely to increase or decrease the salaries of the members, and that legislation by the Diet is not the Constitutional means of accomplishing that object.

* * *

The attacks on the Cabinet continue to be very vigorous though there are symptoms that the ammunition of the assailants is getting scarce. Some capital has been made out of the case of Mr. Okuzaki. It is alleged that he had been chosen for the post of Chief of the Local Government Bureau in the Department of Home Affairs, and that the Minister of the Department had actually conveyed to him an intimation in that sense, when the members of the Constitutional Party raised an objection and the Cabinet had to agree to another nominee. The Kokumin, taking that fact as its text, calls the Ministry a mere mawari doro (revolving lamp) in the hands of the Constitutionalists, and declares that the Emperor entrusted the duty of organizing a Cabinet and selecting officials to Counts Okuma and Itagaki, not to the Constitutionalists or any other political party.

* * *

The independence of the Army and Navy Departments continues to be a bitter pill to party politicians. Journal after journal denounces such a state of affairs as anomalous and unpractical. The opponents of the Cabinet never tire of casting in its teeth the fact that the alleged triumph of party principles is a mere show, since a ministry could not be organized without the aid of the so called "clan statesmen;" and the friends of the Government declare that administrative reforms cannot be more than idle talk if the two Departments standing most in need of reform are secured against all change. Then there is the question of reducing the Army. The Mainichi Shimbun—Mr. Shimada Saburo's organ—used to be the great advocate of that measure, but the Yomiuri Shimbun has now stepped into the breach. It points out, with much show of justice, that the finances can never be reduced to a state of order unless the prime cause of their disorder, the excessive dimensions of the Army, is corrected, and that since the Army is now placed entirely beyond Ministerial interference, the Cabinet need not entertain any vain hope of placing the monetary affairs of the State on a firm foundation. It is evidently appreciated that all the bloom is taken off the peach of party cabinets if their introduction is to be the means of putting the Army and Navy outside the Administrative sphere, and investing them with the character of an imperium in imperio.

* * *

One of the most singular articles recently published appears in the columns of the Jiji Shimpo. It is an exhortation to the Government to clear out the ranks of officialdom from top to bottom, and put in new men. Never mind whether they are clever or stupid; expert or clumsy. What is wanted is a fresh atmosphere in the official building. The administration has been in one groove for the past thirty years. It must be prised bodily out of the rut. If there are some officials now serving whose records show that they can not be conveniently dispensed with, let them be re-appointed after removal. But all should be temporarily removed. The nation wants to see a completely new face. Nearly all the high administrative posts are still held by Satsuma-Choshiu nominees, and their influence has permeated the banks, the commercial and industrial companies and almost every department of national life. A thorough purging of these elements is needed. The Jiji Shimpo is always courageous in its suggestions.

* * *

There are journals, too, which contend that the country has merely exchanged King Log for King Stork. Formerly clan nepotism (hambatsu) was the order of the day; now it seems likely to be replaced by party nepotism (tobatsu). The Yorozu Choho has a clever article on this subject. When a man's enemies and his friends concur in their verdict about him, says the Yorozu, it may be taken for granted that they are not altogether wrong. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun and the Chuo Shimbun, the Ministry's most implacable opponents, declare that it is not a party cabinet at all; the Mainichi Shimbun and the Yomiuri Shimbun declare with equal emphasis that it is not a party cabinet at all. They are both nearly right, for there is no such thing at present as a genuine party. The Constitutional Party consists of two sections cemeted together originally for the purpose of overthrowing the Sat-Cho Ministry. Having accomplished that object with unexpected ease, they would have fallen asunder incontinently had not a new cement been created by the prospect of dividing the spoils. But they have no cohesion for constructive purposes, and they can not have any until they formulate a programme of principles and become the champions of some definite cause. That is precisely what they shrink from doing lest the effort to agree should expose their disagreements. But they are making a fatal mistake. The nation can not respect and support them until it knows what they advocate and whither they are guiding it. Besides, they ought to know very well that nothing better could happen to them than the secession of some of their unwieldy numbers and the consequent formation of a strong opposition. The friction of opposition evolves the heat that welds a party together. Better to be a compact association with principles to rally to and an open enemy to fight, than a mob of heterogeneous elements hiding the seeds of disruption under a pretence of concord, and nourishing covert foes in the disguise of professed partizans.

* * *

Signs of uneasiness and apprehension are beginning to make themselves apparent in the ranks of the Constitutionalists. There are two sources of trouble. One is the pending general elections. It gradually becomes evident that although the Liberals and Progressists have amalgamated to form the Constitutionalists, their respective candidates are not unlikely to come into collision at the polls. That, however, is a danger with limited consequences. So long as the leaders of the two sections do not disagree, quarrels among a few of their followers, and even some disaffections, will not greatly matter. What is much more important seems to be a tendency on the side of the Party to dictate to the Ministry and to unduly control its freedom of action. Several journals discuss that danger. Their contention is that the General Committee of the Constitutionalists imposes its mandates on the Cabinet and plays the part of a veritable Jacobin Club. The organs of the Party write about the matter in a transparent but rather disingenuous fashion. They profess to think it impossible that such a false system should be inaugurated, but, at the same time, they take such pains to point out its disadvantages that their sense of the imminence of the danger is plainly betrayed. It is fresh in every one's memory that the conduct of the Progressists during their alliance with the Matsukata Ministry showed a singularly defective appreciation of the subordination which must be practised by a political party towards the men whom it has chosen as its representatives. If it has confidence in them, there is no reason to control them. If it has no confidence in them, there can be no such thing as cordial cōoperation.

* * *

Another piece of advice tendered by the same journal is that the method of choosing officials should be radically changed. In connexion with this subject our contemporary traces the history of the changes that the Governments' policy has undergone since the Restoration. At first, the ruling principle was that only men of learning should be drafted into the ranks of officialdom. Then learning

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

came to be interpreted in the sense of a knowledge of foreign science and languages. But, by and by, the disciples of the "classics" asserted their influence, and in 1881 and 1882, "learning" acquired the significance of familiarity with the philosophies of Confucius and Mencius. That creed impressed itself upon the school teachers, and the old-fashioned Chinese scholars triumphed. Not for long, however. In 1887, Rules for the Examination of Officials were promulgated, and according to their provisions, only a graduate of the University could become an official of high grade. All these measures were intended to keep the common people from invading the precincts of officialdom. After a few years, another change of principle was made. In 1893, the restriction as to graduates of the University nominally ceased to be operative; a distinct reform, but one that did not accomplish much in practice, for high officials continued to be chosen from the upper classes alone, common folks remaining as ineligible as ever. It is time to completely abandon a system based on invidious exclusiveness. The rules ought to be completely remodelled. All schools, whether public or private, satisfying a certain standard, should be entitled to the same consideration for their graduates. Moral qualifications should become the real test of eligibility for office, without any reference to social position or connexions. Another reform urged by the Jiji is that no one should be appointed to the upper ranks of officialdom unless he has a knowledge of the English language. Indeed, the Jiji goes so far as to say that a knowledge of English ought to be considered a sine quâ non in the case of a candidate for the Diet also, but it confesses thus such a system might be difficult to introduce at once.

MUSICALE IN YOKOHAMA.

Mrs. Mollison's Musicale on the evening of the 23rd was most successful. The programme, which we reproduce, speaks for itself. Herr von Koeber's inability to attend owing to indisposition was a great disappointment, but Mr. Junker on the violin, Mr. Schmid on the cello, and Messrs. Ellis and Mason at the piano were at their best. Miss Fiske also played charmingly. Mrs. Mollison was in splendid voice. It is unnecessary to speak of her singing, for we can add nothing to the high estimate that Yokohama and Tokyo have already formed of it. Neither need we make special reference to the other performers, since this is not a criticism but merely a note of thanks on behalf of those who were ■ fortunate ■ to enjoy the treat. Among them were the Governor of Kanagawa, the Superintendent of Customs, Mr. and Mrs. Otani Kahei and a small contingent of Japanese and foreign friends from Tokyo.

PART. I.

1. Trio .....Gade.
   Messrs. Junker, Schmid and Ellis.
2. Songs..Love is for ever. Sapphic Ode..Brahms.
   Mrs. Payne.
3. Violin Solo ..... —
   a. Adagio from G. Minor Concerto ...Bruch.
   b. Le Cygne .....Saint Saëns.
   Mr. Junker.
4. Piano Solo...Aus Holberg's Zeit .....Grieg.
   Mr. Ellis.
5. Violin Duet .....Bach.
   Miss Fiske and Mr. Junker.
6. Zwei Lieder, Herbstlied, Frühlingslied } Oscar Weil.
   Mrs. Mollison.
   Violin accompaniment by Mr. Junker.

PART II.

1. Trio .....Schumann.
   Messrs. Junker, Schmid and Mason.
2. Song .....Il libro Santo.....Ciro Pinsuti.
   Mrs. Walter.
   Cello accompaniment by Mr. Schmid.
3. Sonata for Violin and Piano .....Rubinstein.
   Mr. Junker and Mr. Ellis.
4. Cello Solo.....A Kol Nidre .....Bruch.
   Mr. Schmid.
5. Song .....To Anthea .....Hatton.
   Mr. Middleton.
6. Violin Solo ..... —
   a. Andante.....Mendelssohn.
   b. Perpetuum Mobile.....Ries.
   Mr. Junker.

A NEW BOARDING-HOUSE IN SAPPORO.

It may interest the public, especially Missionaries in search of cool summer quarters, to know that a Boarding house has just been opened in Sapporo, with food, beds, and all accommodations in foreign style.

The house is a new one, two storeys high, standing in quiet shady grounds on the edge of the town in a very pleasant part of Sapporo. Foreigners who have visited it describe the rooms as not only clean and fresh, but also bright and attractive. The boarding house is kept by a refined Japanese woman, Miss Shimizu Naka, who has lived for thirteen years with foreigners, six of these years having been spent in America, where she attended courses at Mrs. Lincoln's Cooking School in Boston. She has the reputation of being an excellent cook. The terms are 12 yen a week or 45 yen a month. This includes both room and board, but guests are asked to bring their own blankets, pillows, bed-linen and napkins. We are informed that Miss Shimizu speaks English, and that all necessary particulars may be obtained by letter addressed to her at Kita Ichi-jo, Higashi 6 chome, No. 12, Sapporo.

Our readers will perceive that this account amounts, in effect, to an advertisement, and might properly be relegated to our advertisement colums. But we adopt the somewhat unusual course of making editorial reference to the new boarding house, because the enterprise presents itself to us in something more than a mere business light. Sapporo has a delightful climate, and the opening of a good foreign boarding house there at reasonable rates can not fail to interest many who would like to enjoy the coolness of the northern island, but are deterred by the prospect of either having to pay 3½ yen a day at the hotel, or to rent a house and transport furniture and bedding thither at heavy outlay and with results questionable as to comfort. Hokkaido, we believe, will be the sanitorium of Japan one of these days, and everything that conduces to bring its advantages within the reach of people of moderate means is to be welcomed.

FORMOSAN REGULATIONS.

An Ordinance of the Formosan Government Office published in the Official Gazette of the 23rd instant embodies regulations for a school for the training of police and prison officials. The students are to consist of holders and non-holders of office, the two classes together embracing not more than 200 persons. Police students will study Police and Executive Laws, Regulations of Law Courts, Code of Criminal Procedure, Penal Codes, Opium Regulations, also the Formosan language, in addition to lessons in military discipline, shooting, and fencing. The students of the prison section are required to study laws of accounts, book-keeping, and the use of weapons for arresting prisoners, together with some of the matters mentioned above.

Another Notification of the same Office relates to the establishment of regulations for the control of vessels using ports on the Formosa coast. Two other Ordinances deal with rules for the transport of gunpowder and the transport of valuable articles by railway. The freight for gunpowder is to be 2 sen per picul per mile, and delivery must be taken within six hours of its arrival at the station; on the expiration of which time a fee of two yen per hour will be collected on every 3,500 catties. The second notification defines the charges for the transport of gold and silver and jewels, and other articles of great value, inclusive of paper money, stamps, and bonds of all descriptions. The charges per catty for 25 miles are 5 sen, for 50 miles 7 sen, and above 50 miles an extra payment of 10 sen is required for every additional 50 miles. All valuable articles are to be transported by passenger train with a special caretaker. In case of the transmission of considerable quantities, a car may be exclusively engaged on payment of 2 yen per ton per mile.

THE EMPEROR OF CHINA ON "SQUEEZE IDJIN."

Can it be actually a fact that the advisers of the Emperor of China are waking up and realising the true inwardness of things? Of late several Edicts have been issued from Peking that bear the impress of revolutionary ideas—revolutionary from the old standpoint of Chinese opinion. And if these documents have any value beyond the paper they are printed on, then China's rulers are actually on the eve of a long-desired reformation. But after the weary years that have gone by since reform was first hinted at in the councils of the Emperor of China, one feels almost justified in thinking that these seemingly benevolent, far-seeing, and statesmanlike documents are but chaff flung out by the wily mandarins of the Tsung-li Yamên to tantalize the palates of would be reformers. For ever have the promises of that august body been finer than its performance. According to the N.-C. Daily News, in an Edict of the 14th instant, the Emperor remarks that he hears that of late trade in the provinces has not been as flourishing as it should be, nor are opportunities give for expansion. All this is really owing to the want of unison between the official and mercantile classes. Furthermore, whenever a company of merchants fails and closes its doors, creditors stand aloof and dare not push their claims in the Courts owing to the rapacity and avaricious demands of the scribes and underlings in the yamêns. If this state of affairs be permitted to continue, it is obvious that it will be impossible for trade to either flourish or expand. We, therefore, take this occasion, in view of the present movement to regulate the commercial activity of the empire, to declare that it is of the utmost necessity to eradicate entirely this condition of affairs amongst yamên underlings throughout the country, and to command that the eradication thereof be commenced in earnest by all Tartar Generals, Viceroys, and Governors of the provinces. "These shall give instructions to their subordinates, the local authorities, to obey our commands, and that in all cases the latter should endeavour to give consideration and encouragement to all merchants, traders, artisans, and the like under them. Full protection should be given to these classes of our subjects, and whenever the failure of a merchant hong is brought to the notice of the said local authorities, the latter must take up the matter at once, give assistance to the aggrieved parties, and try to recover for them their just rights. The said local authorities are also now commanded to sternly repress all attempts of their underlings to extort from and otherwise hinder such creditors. In this way only can craftiness and dishonesty be punished and the honest and law-abiding be able to get their rights respected." This is very fine talk: it will accomplish very little, we fear, for it seeks to do away with a Chinaman's most cherished principle—squeeze-pidjin.

ARREST OF A FOREIGNER.

On the 22nd inst., a foreigner named M. Edwards was arrested by the police authorities of the Settlement station and sent in the District Court on a charge of fraud. The foreigner on the 6th ultimo arrived here, and took a room at no 121 Settlement. On the 11th he went to the Settlement Police Station, and told the authorities that he came from America to investigate the condition of business in Japan. He spoke in an important way and put on what are popularly supposed to be the manners of wealthy and distinguished persons. It is alleged that he fraudulently obtained goods of no great value from a Chinese tailor, the different drinking saloons, Clausen's Hotel, Messrs. Brett and Company, and Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, Ltd. On arrest he was taken to the U.S. Consulate, and thence to the Consulates of Great Britain, France, Germany, &c., but his nationality could not be discovered, and he will therefore be dealt with by the Japanese authorities.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE FIGHT AT SANTIAGO.

The detailed accounts of the fight at Santiago partially help to dispel the wonder created by the telegraphic news originally received. They show that the squadron under Admiral Sampson's command was more powerful than we had imagined. Our supposition, at the time when the intelligence of the battle came over the wires, was that the Brooklyn, the Texas, the Columbia, and the Minneapolis had been detached from the squadron in order to get ready for the proposed expedition to Spain, but now it appears that the Brooklyn and Texas were both with the Santiago Squadron, which consisted of the following :—

	Tons.	Speed.	Date.
Iowa battle-ship	11,410	16.1	1896
Indiana do	10,288	15.5	1893
Massachussetts do	10,288	16.2	1893
Oregon do	10,288	16.7	1893
Texas protect-cruiser.....	6,315	17	1892
Brooklyn do	9,271	21.9	1895

The armament of these six ships is 76 armour piercing guns, ranging from 6-in to 13-in, and 18 Quick-firers, ranging from 4-in to 5-in. It is unnecessary to consider the Quick-firers of smaller calibres, for they were evidently not in action. The Spanish ships were these :—

	Tons.	Speed.	Date
Viscaya.....Protec-Cruiser Almirante	7,000	20	1891
Oquendo ..... do Infanta Maria	7,000	20	1890
Teresa ..... do	7,600	20	1890
Cristobal Colon do	6,840	20	1896

These ships are all credited with a speed of 20 kinds, and, if they could really steam at that rate, they ought to have had a good chance of escaping from everything on the American side except the Brooklyn. But it is evident that they did not possess such high speed. The Cristobal Colon is said to have been the fastest, doubtless because she was the newest. The armament of the four was 28 armour-piercing guns, ranging from 5.5 in. to 11-in., and 26 quick-firers, ranging from 47-in to 6-in. Thus, in the matter of quick-firers the advantage was with the Spaniards—26 pieces against 18, the calibres practically equal—, but in the matter of armour-piercing guns the preponderance was greatly in favour of the Americans—76 pieces to 28, the calibres of the American guns being also a little larger. It appears that the Spaniards managed to plant only one shell in an American ship during the whole engagement, whereas their own vessels were absolutely riddled. How is that to be explained! Unfortunately, the accounts thus far to hand say nothing about the range. But we are not without means of making a conjecture. The fight took place with the vessels steaming at the top of their speed — not less than 16 knots—and yet within an hour the Spanish squadron was destroyed, Now however excellent the American gunnery may be—and it is evidently splendid—it is difficult to suppose that the destructive accuracy necessary to effect so much in so brief a period could have been obtained at a greater range than 4,000 yards. But at 4,000 yards every one of the Spanish quick-firers ought to have been effective, not indeed against the hulls of any of the American ships except the Brooklyn, but certainly against every exposed part of the vessels. The battle of the Yalu was fought at a range of about 3,000 yards, and the Japanese quick-firers, though they could not injure the hulls of the Chinese iron-clads, played terrible havoc with their crews, actually silencing their fire. What happened to the Spanish quick-firers? And then their 28 armour-piercing guns — six 11-in., two 10-in. and twenty 5.5-in.—could not these be pointed straight enough to get in more than one shell in an hour's cannonding? The difference of protection was not so great as may be supposed. The three first Spanish ships on the above list had almost as heavy armour as the Texas, and much heavier than the Brooklyn. For example :—

	Armour.
Viscaya ..... Almirante ... Oquendo ..... Infanta Maria Teresa	12" belt; 10½" gun-position; 3" deck.
Colon	6" belt; 6" gun-position; 3" deck.
Texas.....	12" belt; 12" gun-position; 2" deck.
Brooklyn	3" belt; 8", 5½", 4" gun-position; 2" deck.

The more we compare the squadron the less reason do we discover for the complete failure of the Spaniards to hurt the Americans. It will be exceedingly interesting to hear the accounts given by American naval officers. If downright bad shooting was responsible, it will be plain that the value of that nominally terrible engine of destruction, a modern war-ship, depends in an unexpected degree on the quality of its crew.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BANK OF JAPAN.

There is a rumour that Baron Iwasaki, President of the Bank of Japan, contemplates a visit to England. His object, according to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, is business, not pleasure. He goes, in fact, to sell Japanese Bonds in London. The particular Bonds designated by our contemporary are those that have been purchased during the past three months by the Bank of Japan under instructions from the Treasury. It has been more than once explained in these columns that Count Inouye, the late Minister of Finance, adopted the policy of relieving the pressure in the money market by devoting a portion of the Indemnity to the purchase of War Bonds and Consols. There is some uncertainty about the sum set aside by Count Inouye for the purpose. We always supposed it to be 15 million yen, but some vernacular journals have recently been speaking of 30 or 35 millions. However, we think we are right in putting it at 15 millions. Of course, the Treasury is not in a position at present to redeem 15 millions of the national debt as a final transaction. The operation partakes rather of the character of a loan. Fifteen millions are temporarily invested in Bonds, with the intention of selling them again as soon as a convenient market can be found. It is to sell these Bonds that Baron Iwasaki, according to the Nichi Nichi, contemplates a trip to Europe, since he finds it impossible to accomplish the transaction satisfactorily through foreign middle-men in Yokohama without paying a heavy commission. We should imagine, however, that if Baron Iwasaki intends to visit Europe for financial purposes, he has a larger object than the sale of the Bonds recently purchased by the Bank of Japan. This is an interesting subject. According to the Post-bellum Programme, the domestic loans—Railways Loan and Public Undertakings Loan—to be floated during the first three years (April 1st, 1896 to March 31st, 1899) covered by the Programme, aggregated 129,019,377 yen. Of that total the amount nominally floated up to the present has been 49,727,350 yen, leaving a sum of 79,292,127 yen to be floated this year. But that is not the whole story. When we say "nominally floated," we mean that out of the 49,727,350 yen drafted into the Extraordinary Revenue for the two years 1896-7 and 1897-8, only 11,727,350 yen was actually subscribed by the people in the form of a Railway Loan, the remaining 38 millions having been taken by the Treasury. In fact, the Treasury issued a loan and took it up itself, purchasing 12 million yen worth of Bonds with money temporarily borrowed from the Indemnity and depositing 26 millions' worth with the Bank of Japan as security for advances—so, at least, we understand the system pursued in this case. Of course all these Bonds—12 millions now included among the Indemnity assets and 26 millions lying in the Bank of Japan—must be sold eventually, in order to provide funds for the post-bellum programme. Hence it appears that the total sales of Bonds which ought to be effected during the current fiscal year—i.e. by March 31st, 1899—stand thus :—

	Yen.
Portion remaining to be floated of the three instalments of the Railway and Public Undertaking Loans ...	79,292,127
Bonds purchased and now held by the Treasury.....	28,000,000
Bonds purchased by the Bank of Japan during the past three months to ease the market	15,000,000
Total	132,292,127

It is not absolutely necessary, however, that any immediate sales should be made. The Government has now in its possession a sum of 214,575,749 yen remaining from the Indemnity, independently of the 12 million yen worth of Bonds standing in the Indemnity Account, and since the total disbursements to be made during the current year on account of military and naval expansions, railways, and other public works, are only 76,357,452 yen, and the amount to be drafted from the Indemnity in order to balance the accounts of State revenue and expenditure for the year is only 14,353,583 yen, it is evident that there are ample funds at the Treasury's disposal without any sales of Bonds. Still such sales will be necessary sooner or later, and it is very conceivable that the President of the Bank of Japan may deem it advisable to visit Europe with the object of concluding preliminary arrangements. For, in truth, the total sales of Bonds to be effected under the post-bellum scheme are very considerable. We have spoken hitherto of the loans to be floated during the first three years of the post-bellum period only, but if the whole period be taken into account, it is found—we omit wearisome details—that the Bonds, still to be sold aggregate 201,664,673 yen, the whole of which will, probably have to be negotiated abroad. It is a large transaction, which may well occupy the closest attention of the President of the Bank of Japan.

On the 21st inst., a quantity of dynamite was laid on the railway in a tunnel near Yamakita station. On a goods train passing, the dynamite exploded, but no great damage was done. The supposed offender has been arrested.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

Appearances of considerable agitation in political circles continue to present themselves. The situation resolves itself now into briefly this, that three sections of the Constitutional Party have each put forward a candidate for the portfolio of Foreign Affairs and are all believed to be insisting stubbornly upon their title to the nomination. The Tosa section, represented by Count Itagaki and Mr. Hayashi, are said to advocate the selection of Baron Ito Miyoji; the Progressist section, represented by Count Okuma, Mr. Ozaki, Mr. Ohigashi, and Mr. Oishi, want to secure the appointment of Mr Kato—now Minister in London;—and Mr. Matsuda, together with the Liberals that do not belong to the Tosa and Kwanto coteries, are calling out for Mr. Hoshi Toru. It is not unlikely that the story of this dispute, as submitted to the public, has been considerably exaggerated, for the newspapers recounting it have not hitherto shown themselves at all friendly to the Cabinet. But if what they say is true, the new political party's prospects are already beginning to be clouded. For it would seem that the union between the Progressists and the Liberals is of a very hollow character. They have not become fused into a homogeneous whole, but still retain their separate individualities, and insist upon an equal partition of the administrative power. For example, should Mr. Kato be appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Progressists would number five representatives in the Cabinet, namely, Count Okuma, Mr. Ozaki, Mr. Ohigashi, Mr. Kato, and Mr. Oishi; whereas the Liberals would only have three, namely, Count Itagaki, Mr. Hayashi, and Mr. Matsuda. That disturbance of the "balance" is said to be strongly objected to, and, of course, it is perfectly evident that if the two parties are determined to divide everything between them instead of uniting to discharge the duties they have undertaken, the stability of the Cabinet is exceedingly apocryphal.

The Nippon is singularly warm—even for the Nippon—about this affair. It devotes its whole issue of the 25th instant solely to a discussion of the complication under every conceivable phase. Seventeen days ago, it predicted that "the Ito section would again dash to the onset amid clouds of dust" (kendo chorai), and, taking advantage of disputes between the Liberals and the Progressists, would charge between them, "spurn away the Progressists and sweep away the Liberals into the camp of the Opposition." It now sees its prediction on the verge of fulfilment. The Nippon's dread of Baron Ito amounts almost to a nightmare, and is certainly a marked compliment to that gentleman's ability. It says that if he gets into the Cabinet, it will be like giving wings to a tiger. Steadily and surely he will draw the Liberals under his pinions, and the Progressists will find themselves isolated once again. Baron Ito ought to feel proud that he can inspire his enemies with such terror.

Mr. Ohigashi is roundly charged with fraudulent practices. Last year, he occupied the post of President of the Omi Railway Joint Stock Company, and during his tenure of office it became difficult to account for the disappearance of considerable sums of the Company's money. At an extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders, held in Osaka last October, it was decided that steps should be taken at once to examine the books, but that same night, the office of the Company with all the records perished in a conflagration. Of course such a timely event furnished fresh fuel for suspicion. It is said that proceedings have been actually instituted against the Minister and that his constituents have called on him to resign. But a great deal of confirmation will be needed before any credence can be given to the story. Experience shows that accusations of the most serious character are recklessly preferred during the heat of political conflict in Japan, and we do not remember that any one of the many charges trumped up by newspapers against prominent officials or politicians during the past twenty years was satisfactorily established. In Mr. Ohigashi's case it is only wise to suspend judgment.

It is alleged that Mr. Ohigashi Gitetsu, Minister of State for Justice, has decided to resign his portfolio. The resignation is not to be interpreted as in any sense an admission of the justice of the charges now so industriously circulated against the Minister. Indeed, Mr. Hatoyama Kazuo, in whose legal capacity and high character the public have full confidence, recently proceeded to Omi for the special purpose of inquiring into the affair of the Otsu Railway, and, on his return to Tokyo, presented a report declaring that no proof was forthcoming to substantiate any of the accusations. Mr. Ohigashi nevertheless thinks—so rumour says—that to retain the portfolio of Justice after such suspicions have been directed against him, however groundless they may be, would be an unjustifiable proceeding.

His Excellency's view may be very admirable under certain aspects, but it tends to establish a dangerous precedent. If a Minister of State is to cease to be eligible for office merely because his probity has been called in question, it becomes easy for any clique of intriguers to drive a man out of the Cabinet. We doubt whether any conceivable accusation is quite monstrous enough to be universally denied the hospitality of Japanese newspaper columns, and from the moment that a newspaper takes up a matter vigorously, there are always found plenty of people to believe it.

Mr. Ohigashi, according to the Chugai Shogyo, wants to be expeditious about effacing himself because he believes that the question of choosing his successor will require a good deal of adjustment. Mr. Hoshi Toru would be an excellent person to take the portfolio of Justice, and his appointment would relieve the strain of the present situation by removing from the field one of the three candidates whose friends are said to be "running" them so keenly for ministerial posts. But then there is the difficulty that Mr. Hoshi is a Liberal, and there is the other difficulty that the Department of Justice may be abolished altogether before many months have passed.

The curious feature of all this talk about Mr. Hoshi is that nobody seems to know whether he himself wants a portfolio. The Cabinet's enemies say that he is far too shrewd a man to throw in his lot with such an unstable ministry as the present, and the Cabinet's friends say that he is not at all likely to press his candidature inconveniently. At any rate he can not reach Tokyo before the middle of next month; so that the so-called political crisis now industriously discussed does not appear to be particularly imminent.

Another rumour circulated with much show of confidence is that Mr. Ozaki Yukio, Minister of State for Education, intends to resign. The reason assigned is that the Cabinet has recognised the desirability of giving the portfolio of Edution to some one connected with the Imperial University. But surely if that consideration exists now, it must have existed equally when Mr. Ozaki was appointed. The Chuo Shimbun—an Opposition organ—suggests that the University consideration is a mere prext, and that the real motive underlying the change is a desire to adjust the present political dispute by removing one Progressist member of the Cabinet and replacing him by a non-party man, thus establishing numerical equilibrium between the Liberal and Progressist sections of the Cabinet. There appears to be at least as much conjecture as knowledge in all this political talk.

Quite a number of newspapers agree in connecting the two-days' postponement of Marquis Ito's departure with the alleged political crisis. We imagine that they have no better grounds for the inference than the fact that Counts Okuma and Itagaki, Mr. Hayashi Yuzo, and Mr. Matsuda Masahisa all visited the Marquis at his villa to bid him goodbye, as was very natural.

The Nippon, which has more staying power than any other vernacular journal where an attack on officialdom is concerned, continues its campaign against the Cabinet with unabated vigour. It has succeeded in framing an indictment of no less than nine counts. We shall not weary our readers by reproducing them. The Nippon evidently proceeds on the principle of the dropping water and the rock, but it seems to have a special circle of readers.

Very conflicting statements are published about the so-called "political crisis," and very conflicting opinions are expressed. Some say that the trouble has been temporarily settled, Baron Ito having no desire to enter the Cabinet and Mr. Hoshi not being on the spot. Others allege that the dispute grows more acute daily, and all seem to think that Mr. Hoshi's arrival in Japan will be the signal for a final battle. The Mainichi Shimbun writes very significantly. As an organ of the Constitutional Party, it would not be likely to admit any damaging rumour that had no basis of fact. Hence, when it pens a leading article, lamenting that, while many important national problems await solution, the Cabinet wastes its time over these petty wrangles about the distribution of offices, we must assume that such wrangles are actually taking place.

The difference of opinion to which we have alluded relates to the question whether the Premier's position should be secondary and that of an ordinary Minister paramount, or vice versâ. It is a strange discussion, not very likely to interest our readers, we imagine. Journals that desire Count Okuma to retain the portfolio of Foreign Affairs take the former view, and those favorable to the appointment of a new Minister of Foreign Affairs, espouse the latter.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

A CONSERVATIVE PARTY.

Not very long ago it seemed scarcely possible that a conservative party of any strength should arise in Japan. A small group of men, headed by Viscounts Torio, Tani and Soga, did indeed detach themselves from the broad stream of liberalism that swept over the country, and sometimes the public heard a faint protest from them against the unwisdom of swallowing undiluted doses of the egoistic civilization of the Occident. But there appeared to be very little probability that the movement they represented would assume considerable dimensions. We begin to think, however, that recent events are not unlikely to call into practical existence whatever conservative instincts linger in the hearts of the Japanese. Baron Sonoda, for example, the former Chief of Police, has come out as an uncompromising conservative. His speech recently delivered under such indiscreet circumstances, shows that, though he is not sufficiently opposed to the spirit of the age to condemn the principle of party cabinets, he certainly does not think that the time has come for them, or that the present leaders of political parties are in any way fitted to be trusted with the control of the Administration. Something of that kind might have been expected of Baron Sonoda, for he is a sturdy exponent of Satsuma sentiment. We should not have predicted a similar attitude on the part of Viscount Nomura, however. The impression prevailed very generally that Viscount Nomura sympathised strongly with the platform of the former Progressists (Kaishin-to), and when he last held the portfolio of Communications, he was regarded as a kind of link between the cabinet and the political parties. But he has now stood forth as a most pronounced advocate of views corresponding with those held by Baron Sonoda. From an interview with him published in the Taiyo, we learn that he regards Marquis Ito as slightly distraught for handing over the government to the party politicians, and considers Counts Okuma and Itagaki to have been equally wanting in common sense when they accepted the responsibility of serving with men who are entirely lacking in administrative experience. Occidental nations, the Viscount thinks, long ago discovered the error of their old-time theory that the affairs of a State should be managed in accordance with a mere plurality of its nationals' voices. One might as well contend that a household's manner of life should be determined by the caprices of its domestics. The fact is that want of vertebræ on the part of her statesmen has brought Japan into a sorry plight. The watchwords of men like Marquis Ito and Count Okuma have been oriai, rōraku, and bihō (compromise, cajolery, and patchwork) and never yet was the heart of a nation won by such methods. Viscount Nomura would have the Cabinet apply all its ability sincerely and honestly to reduce administrative expenditures. Thereafter it should lay the Budget before the Diet, and if the Lower House, in a spirit of mere perversity, refused to vote the necessary supplies, it should be dissolved again and again. Japan has her own immemorial policy, of which Imperialism is the basis, and she ought not to subvert it in deference to any "crowd of clamourers" (wai wai no tomogara). That is pretty solid conservatism, and as it can not be doubted that Viscount Nomura and Baron Sonoda have many fellow-thinkers, a strong conservative party may spring into existence much sooner than any of us anticipated a year ago.

REFORMS IN FORMOSA.

An Imperial Ordinance issued on the 19th instant fixes the number of judicial officials (hokwan) and their emoluments in the case of the Formosan Courts of Justice. Hitherto there have been three kinds of courts in the island, the Chiho-hoin, or local courts, the Fukushin-in, or Appellate Court, and the Koto-hoin, or Supreme Court. Of these the first two alone are retained, and it is enacted that appeals from the Fukushin-in may be carried to the Taishin-in, or Supreme Court, in Tokyo. The Chiho-hoin in Formosa, though the literal translation of the term is "local court," does not correspond to the "local court" (Chiho-Saibansho) of Japan proper. The latter is a collegiate court, whereas the former is presided over by one Judge only. It consequently ranks with the Ku-Saibansho, or District Courts of Japan. The so-called "Appellate Court" of Formosa seems to stand on the same level with the Local Court of Japan, being presided over by three Judges. The number of judicial officials and their emoluments are thus fixed :—

APPELLATE COURT (Fukushin-in.)

	No. of officials.	Salaries. Yen.
Chief	1	3,000 to 4,000
Sectional chief	1	1,600 to 2,400
Judges	5	1,000 to 1,600
Chief Procurator	1	2,200 to 4,500
Procurator	1	1,000 to 1,600

LOCAL COURTS (Chihoho-in.)

Chief	3	1,400 to 2,400
Judges	15	600 to 1,600
Chief Procurator	3	1,200 to 2,200
Procurator	5	600 to 1,000

There is nothing definite as to the abolition of the Koto-hoin, but since no provision is made for officering it, its disappearance becomes a matter of course. Foreign readers of this Ordinance will be astonished to hear of judges receiving 50 yen a month in Formosa. A moderately competent translator can not be obtained now-a-days for such a salary.

There is a characteristic article in the Nippon with reference to this Formosan question. The breezy journal claims that the Government has been guilty of a veritably mean trick: it has secretly abolished the High Court (Koto-hoin) of Formosa in order to put an end finally to the Takano difficulty. Ex-Judge Takano can not continue any longer to call himself "Chief Judge of the Formosa High Court," since no such tribunal exists. That is a hole-and-corner kind of manœuvering which the Nippon finds altogether unworthy of the Government. We are disposed to take a different view of the matter. What surprises us is that any newspaper can be so curiously acute as to detect such profound iniquity. Where does the Nippon get its estimate of men and things? Does it honestly imagine that the Ministers of State in Japan are likely to descend to the wretched trickery it attributes to them? And does it think that to abolish an important part of the machinery of justice in a country merely for the sake of avoiding an altercation with an individual judge, is an act which any Cabinet could reconcile with its conception of public duty?

A point much worthier of consideration is the question whether appellate jurisdiction vis-à-vis Formosan courts of law can be conferred on the Supreme Court of Japan by an Imperial ordinance. The Supreme Court (Taishin-in), unless we are mistaken, has no competence to hear cases appealed direct from Local Courts in Japan. The intervention of a court of Appeal (Koso-in) is necessary. Doubtless the Government's idea is that the Fukushin-in of Formosa ranks with an Appeal Court in Japan. But does it? Can an important link be thus cut out of the judicial chain by the authority of an Imperial Ordinance? Formosa not being within the purview of the Constitution, its system of Law Courts may be organized without reference to the Diet. But the establishment of a connexion between that system and the system in Japan proper, where the Constitution holds, seems to be a more complicated matter.

FORMOSA AND THE CODES.

The Government has adopted in the case of Formosa the only course which seems prudent and practicable. A Notification issued by the Governor-General, acting, of course, under instructions from Tokyo, declares that all matters of a civil, criminal, or commercial nature shall henceforth be dealt with under the provisions of the new Civil, Criminal and Commercial Codes where Japanese or foreigners are concerned, but that in cases where only the Chinese or the natives of Formosa are concerned, the laws previously in force shall be applied until replaced by new enactments. This Notification was preceded, we believe, by considerable discussion. Many people were disposed to think that no distinction should be made between Formosa and Japan proper, and that the laws applied in the new territory as well as the tribunals applying them should be absolutely the same as those in Japan. Others thought that it would be unreasonable, if not impossible, to extend the provisions of the new Civil and Commercial Codes to the natives of the island and to the Chinese residing there. Happily the latter view has prevailed. We say "happily," because it seems to us almost absurd to imagine that laws like those of which Japan has now come into possession could be understood or observed by the aboriginal and Chinese population of Formosa. England makes no attempt to suddenly replace by new codes and a new judiciary the old laws and the old magistracy of the territories acquired by her in parts of the world lying beyond the pale of what is known as Occidental civilization. She proceeds on the principle that people must be educated before new and difficult literature is placed in their hands, and, on the whole, it seems to us that Japan might do worse than follow the same principle, as she seems to be doing in Formosa. That was the course advised by Mr. Kirkwood after his recent exhaustive investigations, and it is the course that commends itself to thoughtful minds. Meanwhile, we wonder how Judge Takano's advocates reconcile these happenings with their contention that Formosa falls, in every respect, under the purview of the Constitution.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

WAR EXPENDITURES.

The war between Japan and China lasted eleven months. During that time Japan maintained on Chinese territory beyond the sea two Corps d'armée, aggregating 120,000 men, and carried on campaigns in four different directions, keeping at sea all the time a fleet of some thirty ships. The total cost of these operations was 200 million yen, or 100 million dollars in gold. American financiers estimate that if the war with Spain lasts a year, the total cost will be from 600 million to 700 million dollars. The contrast is very striking. It must be assumed that the American estimates are based on accurate knowledge and sound calculations, but the history of the world furnishes no example of a Great Power's forecasting such an expenditure as 140 million pounds sterling on a war with a small Power. In the struggle with Russia forty-four years ago, the French and British troops landed at Eupatoria on September 14th, 1854, and did not evacuate the Crimea until July 12th, 1856. In fact, the War lasted two years approximately, and its cost is supposed to have been 120 million pounds sterling. We do not understand the American estimate.

Briefly speaking, the expenditures on account of the war are to be defrayed from new or increased taxes and from domestic loans. The taxes are these :—

1. Liquor Tax—namely $2 per barrel (31 gallons) of beer, ale, porter, and other fermented liquors, brewed, manufactured, sold or stored.

2. Special Taxes—(a) On bankers: a tax of $5 on capitals up to $25,000, and $2 on every additional $100. Thus a bank having a capital of 5 million dollars will have to pay a tax of ten thousand dollars. Savings banks having no capital stock are exempted. (b) On brokers, $50 per head. (c) On pawnbrokers, $20. (d) On commercial brokers, $20. (e) On custom-house brokers, $10. (f) On proprietors of theatres, museums, or concert halls, $100. (g) On circuses, $100. (h) On proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows, $10. (k) On bowling-alleys and billiard-rooms, $5 for each alley or table.

3. Tobacco Tax—12 cents per lb. on manufactured tobacco and snuff; $3 60 to $1 per thousand on cigars and cigarettes, according to weight; $12 to $24 per head on dealers in, and manufacturers of, leaf tobacco.

4. Stamp duties of various kinds—on bonds, debentures, certificates, bills of sale, cheques, bills of exchange, orders for payment of money, promissory notes, bills of lading, telephone and telegraph messages, deeds of conveyance, entries of goods, etc.

5. Insurance taxes—10 cents per $100 of amount insured on life policies, and one half of one per cent, on every $1 insured in the case of fire and marine policies.

6. Taxes on leases, manifests, mortgages, passage tickets ($1 on a ticket costing $30 or less to a foreign port); $3 on a ticket costing from $30 to $60, and $5 on a ticket costing more than $60), powers of attorney, warehouse receipts, medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics, sparkling wines (1 cent. per pint bottle, 2 cents per quart bottle), and packages of chewing gums or substitutes.

7. Excise taxes—on refiners, etc., of petroleum or sugar, ½ of 1 per cent. on gross receipts, and 1 per cent. on every seat sold in palace, parlour, or sleeping car.

8. Inheritance Taxes—from 75 cents to $1 per $100 on property inherited from $10,000 to $25,000. The tax is multiplied by 1½ on legacies from $25,000 to $100,000; by 2 for legacies from $100,000 to $500,000; by 2½ for legacies from $500,000 to $1,000,000, and by 3 for legacies exceeding a million. It will be a bad thing for any non-blood relative who has been adopted by a wealthy friend should the adopter die during the course of the war. A man inheriting a million dollars under such circumstances will have to pay a legacy duty of $125,000.

9. Taxes on mixed flour and on tea (imported).

This large schedule of taxes is expected to yield an additional revenue of 175 millions of dollars. For the rest, the Government is empowered to borrow, from time to time, such sums as may be needed, up to 500 million dollars at 3 per cent.

One of the most interesting features of the financial scheme is that the stock of silver bullion which had been gradually amassed in the Treasury's vaults is to be utilized at this juncture. The Silverites saw their opportunity and succeeded in getting a proposal introduced that the Treasury store of white metal should be coined into dollars at the rate of not less than four millions per month, the dollars to be paid out as such or to be held as security for the redemption of silver notes. The amount was subsequently cut down to a minimun of 1½ millions monthly, and it is calculated that about 5½ million dollars worth of silver notes will be issued yearly for the next five years under this arrangement. That is a mere flea-bite to the United States, but the measure has evoked a great deal of excited attack and defence. The amount is not considered so much as the principle, and since it is "doing something for silver," the enemies of the white metal object strongly.

MARQUIS ITO'S VISIT TO CHINA.

Marquis Ito has spoken frankly about his reasons for going to China and the course he intends to pursue there, and we find the statement very interesting. He thinks that within the course of the next four or five years China is threatened with sweeping changes, and that unless she awakes to the reality of the dangers threatening her, the crisis will find her quite helpless. It is true that she is beginning to send students to Japan who are expected to acquire knowledge and opinions that will serve to create a progressive atmosphere in their country. But there is not much to be hoped from such methods. Something far more drastic and practical is needed. What that something is may be categorically stated. In the first place, the Chinese Government must establish a great State Bank. The people of China have plenty of money. The Government has none, and, being entirely without credit, has no immediately available resources in times of emergency. The bank should be organized by competent foreigners, and the aim should be to collect a capital of about 60 million taels, and to undertake the issue of convertible notes, so as to place the finances of the State on a sound basis and to facilitate the circulation of money for tradal purposes. In the second place, really good schools for officers should be established. There are already, it is true, institutions called bubi gakudo and suishi gakudo (military and naval academies), but they appear to be virtually useless, and experience shows that China has no more urgent need than that of good, well-educated officers. In the third place, she must inaugurate a proper conscription system. At present the plan adopted for obtaining and training military men is, in every way, glaringly defective. There is a mixture of voluntary service and hereditary service, of old men and youths, and there is general contempt for the profession of arms, so that the people are entirely without patriotism or national spirit. Only one way of mending such an unhappy state of affairs suggests itself, namely, to introduce a proper system of conscription. Of course, improved facilities of communication are vitally important—railways, roads, steamers, posts, and telegraphs. But all that goes without saying. The terribly discouraging thing about China is that her best men all seem to have their eyes open to the right, but also seem powerless to accomplish anything in the face of the huge mountain of conservatism that casts its shadow over the land. The Chinese appear to be quite deficient in public spirit (Kōkyō-shin). The sentiment of individual gain (rikō-tekisesshin), of egoism, alone sways them. Such people can hardly be moved to undertake any great national reforms. Each man's moral horizon is limited to the confines of his own family circle. There are signs, Marquis Ito said in conclusion, that the Japanese also are beginning to develop the egoistic tendency. It is to be sincerely hoped that such a calamity will be averted.

FINANCE.

We wish to say a word about our estimates of State Revenue and Expenditure published in this issue. Last year we calculated that the expenditures of the State after the completion of the post-bellum programme would be 173½ million yen and the income 158 millions, the deficit being thus only 5½ millions, whereas now we are calculating on an expenditure of 189½ millions and an income of only 150. The explanation is simple. The basis of our former calculation was the ordinary expenditures for 1897-8, namely, 120 million yen, to which amount we added various items for the maintenance of the fleet, the aid of navigation, etc. But the basis of our present calculation is the aggregate of the ordinary and extraordinary expenditures for 1898-9, namely 146½ million yen. When we say "extraordinary expenditures," we do not refer to outlays on account of military and naval expansions: those are things apart. We refer to the extraordinary expenditures that appear in every Budget. It does not seem possible at present for Japanese financiers to confine the outlays of the State to regularly recurring sums. Every Budget contains ordinary expenditures and extraordinary. The latter, from their nature, ought to be temporary, but somehow if one item of extraordinary expenditure disappears, another comes to take its place, and we are driven to conclude that an allowance of from 20 to 25 million yen annually must be made in the estimates of every year on account of extraordinary outlays. The Budget—Count Inouye's amended Budget—for 1898-9 includes 25 millions of extraordinary expenditures, and we have now taken that amount as a permanent item of account, a difference of 25 millions being thus created at once between our former and our present estimates. Thus, again, we last year accepted the official estimate of 41 millions for the support of the Army and Navy, whereas we have now concluded that, owing to the rise in the prices of commodities, the proper figure should be 50 millions. We need not pursue the subject at tedious length. Our readers will easily appreciate the causes of the apparent discrepancy.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

FOREIGN CAPITAL AND JAPANESE COMPANIES.

Some days ago the Jiji Shimpo had a very liberal article on the subject of the introduction of foreign capital. It advocated the abolition of all restrictions as to the ownership of land, the working of mines, or the purchase of shares by foreigners, and it laughed at the chimera that if aliens obtained a majority of the shares in a Japanese railway they might exercise their propriety rights in a manner highly inconvenient to Japan in time of war. A second article closely bearing on the same subject, now appears in the columns of the same journal. Our contemporary's point is that the principal officials of commercial and manufacturing companies are neither sensible of the weight of their responsibilities not competent to discharge them; that the disasters by which various enterprises are overtaken must be attributed chiefly to want of ability on the part of these officials, and that, if any hope is entertained of getting foreigners to invest money in such concerns, it can not be realized except by selecting a very different class of men to manage their affairs. The Jiji seems to us to be very near the truth in this matter. In short, we suspect that our contemporary sees farther than it cares to admit. The unvarnished fact is that foreigners will never invest their money in a Japanese company unless they can have a guiding voice in the direction of its business. When we say "never" we speak comparatively. The time will surely come in the course of years, perhaps many, perhaps few, when Japanese business management will be trusted, and foreigners will regard shares in certain Japanese companies as a good investment. But at present they entertain the Jiji's view that the principal officials upon whose ability and zeal the success of a commercial or industrial enterprise largely depends, are just as likely to lack as to possess the necessary qualifications, and that if they put good money into a concern they must know exactly how it is employed and even exercise some control over its employment. There is much talk, for example, about railway companies borrowing foreign capital to extend or improve their lines. Well, they can get it no doubt, but not by the simple process of selling their shares to foreigners. The thing has to be contrived by a regular process of borrowing and lending, the company pledging itself to pay a fixed rate of interest and furnishing satisfactory security for the repayment of the money. The Japan Railway Company, for example, is understood to be in need of a considerable sum for the purpose of developing its system of roads, and no one doubts that the investment would prove profitable. But what security has the Japan Railway Company to offer to foreign capitalists? Its really convenient course would be to get foreigners to invest as ordinary shareholders. Foreigners will not do that, however, unless they can see that the traffic of the Company's lines is efficiently managed. Probably the Japanese think that the traffic arrangements on their railways are quite satisfactory. We assure them that no foreign expert thinks so. The faculty for properly organizing a railway service is not born: it is the outcome of training and experience, and we do not think that the Japanese have any divine dispensation enabling them to dispense with those aids. They have done excellently considering their lights. We have never hesitated to accord them full credit. But if they want the assistance of foreign money, they will have to show themselves a little readier to make use of foreign expert assistance. A Japanese railway with foreigners directing its traffic arrangements, thoroughly conversant with its affairs and able to submit clear statements of them to the public, would soon find foreign investors flocking to obtain the fine dividends that such enterprises may be made to yield in this country.

THE TOYO KISEN KAISHA.

There has been a good deal of talk lately about the probability of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha's projected trans-Pacific line of steamers being abandoned. People said that the Company had failed to obtain funds and found itself unable to make the last payment due on its steamers now building in England. There is reason to think, however, that rumour was entirely mistaken in this case. The amount of the third call on the Company's shares was 650,000 yen, and of that sum five hundred thousand has been collected without any difficulty, namely, 400,000 in Tokyo, 50,000 in Yokohama, and 50,000 in the provinces. It can not be supposed that there will be any serious difficulty in procuring the remainder of the money, whether from the banks or the shareholders. Indeed, a very different construction is now put on the talk about abandoning the enterprise. It is stated that some of the shareholders thought they saw an opportunity of realizing a million and a half of yen without opening the service, or taking any risks whatever. Their idea was that purchasers could easily be found for their three new steamers at prices a hundred thousand pounds sterling greater in each case than the contract figures. On what facts the idea was based we do not know, but it was of course chimerical, and therefore the project of making a deal with the ships has been abandoned. The steamers are the Nippon Maru, the America Maru and the Hongkong Maru. The first is expected to leave London for Japan on the 10th September; the second, on the 1st of October and the third on the 10th of November. According to the present programme, the service will commence from the 15th of December with the Nippon Maru from Yokohama. The shareholders will have to pay up the last instalment on the shares, namely, 520,000 yen, to defray runningexpenses, but no difficulty is apprehended on that score. Most of our readers probably remember that this Japanese company is to work in combination with the Pacific Mail and Oriental and Occidental S.S. Companies on the Yokohama-San-Francisco route, each company supplying three steamers. We believe that the idea is to have a regular weekly service each way.

THE SPOILS SYSTEM.

There has been so much talk about "office-hunting fever" (ryokan-netsu) and the "spoils system" since the present Cabinet came into power, that our readers are doubtless curious to know how much it all amounts to in practice. We have not published the names of the various newly appointed officials, because, in the first place, Japanese names have very little meaning for our readers, and, in the second, disjointed information on such a subject could not be of much use. We may now, however, sum up the symptoms of this fever, and the diagnosis will show, we think, that it has not been such a very serious malady after all. The party politicians who have obtained office in consequence of the accession of the Okuma Cabinet, and the posts obtained by them, are these:—

Vice-Ministers of State	6
Chokunin Counsellors	6
Private Secretary	7
Chief Secretary of the Cabinet	1
Chief of the Board of Metropolitan Police	1
Chief of the Bureau of Commercial Affairs	1
Chief of the Bureau of Local Administration	1
Chief of the Bureau of Hokkaido Affairs	1
Chief of the Hokkaido Administration	1
Vice-Chief of the Hokkaido Administration	1
Governor of Tokyo	1
Governor of Osaka	1
Local Governors	3
Total	32

Thirty-two is not a very formidable number of officials to displace on such an occasion as the recent change of Cabinet. Indeed, it would be more correct to say twenty-five, for the seven Private Secretaries can scarcely be counted. There has been much more talk about this matter than it merited. The four Heads of Bureaux and six Vice-Ministers certainly ought not to appear in the list if an ideal state of affairs existed, but there has been more or less disturbance of these grades of officials at every change of Cabinet in the past, and it is consequently unfair to hold the present Ministry guilty above all others when it has merely followed the example of all others.

CONTROL OF ELECTIONS.

The Ordinance published a few days ago with reference to the control of elections is probably the most drastic piece of legislation of its kind that has ever been enacted. Imprisonment, without hard labour, for a period of from one month to one year, or the imposition of a fine ranging from 10 to 100 yen, is not an excessive punishment for givers or takers of bribes. But does it not seem that legislators lack a sense of proportion when they extend the same punishment to persons who exercise or receive any kind of hospitality in connexion with elections, or who furnish any kind of conveyance, or avail themselves of furnished conveyances, for getting to and from the places of polling? It is a criminal offence, should it be regarded as a criminal offence, to give a voter a drink on a hot day, or a lift in a vehicle? Acts done in perfect innocence and out of pure good-fellowship may expose candidates or voters, under this Ordinance, to malicious and injurious prosecutions. Still more open to criticism is the article providing that imprisonment from 11 days to 6 months together with a fine of from 2 to 20 yen, shall be the penalty for publishing any false information about a candidate whether in a public speech, or in newspaper columns, or in circulars or placards. There would be an immense crop of criminal prosecutions under this Ordinance in any Western country. Everybody must sympathise heartily with the Government's desire to secure perfect purity of procedure at elections, but the danger is that this too drastic legislation may open the door to abuses quite as bad as those it is intended to correct.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE CABINET AND ITS POLITICAL SUPPORTERS.

Several of the Tokyo journals persist in representing the Cabinet as torn by conflicting opinions, and the Constitutional Party as on the eve of disruption. One fact emerges from the mass of rumours, namely, that in addition to the General Committee of which we recently heard so much, the Party has now organized an Extraordinary Committee of 15, whose duties will be to consult with the General Committee and to conduct investigations into administrative and financial question. All this elaborate mechanism of committees, if it suggests the multitude of counsellors in whom there is wisdom, gives also an impression of the plethora of cooks that spoil the broth. Moreover, there is yet another committee, namely, a subdivision of the Extraordinary Committee. It is called the Basic Committee (Kiso-iin) of Investigation, and it consists of Messrs. Suzuki, Taguchi, Haseba, Shigeoka, and Shimada. These names probably convey little meaning to our readers, but our reason for quoting them will be apparent when we say that Messrs. Taguchi and Shimada are staunch advocates of an increased Land Tax. To place such men on a "basic committee" is to invite a dangerous collision of views, unless the Party has decided to abandon the platform on which it climbed into power.

The situation still depicted by several journals is that Count Itagaki and his immediate followers are resolutely insisting on the admission of Baron Ito to the Cabinet as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and have declared their own tenure of office to be dependent on the success of their contention. The Chuo Shimbun goes so far as to allege that a Cabinet Meeting held on the 26th instant resolved itself into a violent discussion with accompaniment of table thumping and strident declamation. The Chuo is not altogether to be trusted in such matters. Besides, there is a pretty general agreement that Count Itagaki and his friends proposed Baron Ito's admission to the Cabinet from the outset. That fact is interpreted as a proof that the present conflict is crucial. But to us it suggests a different inference; for if Count Itagaki and his supporters agreed to the shelving of Baron Ito's claims when the Cabinet was organized, why should they suddenly adopt a different attitude now? We ourselves think that the Liberals were bound by every principle of political honour to carry Baron Ito into power with themselves, but that is another question.

The Minister of Justice, Mr. Oshigashi Gitetsu, evidently entertains no intention of adopting the course recommended as his duty or announced as his intention by so many astute and well-informed journalists: he is not going to resign. We applaud his decision. It would be illogical and hysterical that a Minister should go out of office merely because the tongue of false report had wagged over his name. Were that rule established, any clique of sufficiently unscrupulous newsmongers could drive any Minister out of office at any moment.

OFFICERS FOR THE NAVY AND ARMY.

It is said that great difficulties are experienced in procuring officers for the Army. Nor can we wonder that such should be the case, for the pay and emoluments seem to be totally inadequate. The monthly stipend of a Major of Infantry is reported to be 27 yen, and out of that he is supposed to keep a horse. We do not know whether the figure is correct, but even if it be approximately accurate, the thing amounts to a farce. Her officers are Japan's great strength. The rank and file fight well and support privations and hardships with creditable courage, but the officers are the fine feature of the service. Had China possessed a few officers of the Japanese type, she would have given a very different account of herself in the late war. A Major receiving 27 a yen a month and spending 13 of it on a horse, remains with exactly the pay now demanded by an able-bodied coolie for pulling a jinrikisha. He has to buy his uniform too. How he manages to live, we can not conceive. If Japan wants to have an efficient army, she must reconcile herself to a little expenditure. It will not do to place her staff officers on the same pecuniary level with the commonest labourers.

The Navy seems to be more fortunate. Some trouble was experienced last year in procuring a sufficiency of candidates for cadetships at the Edajima Kaiheigakko, but the naval authorities and their friends canvassed so successfully that no less than 1,093 students presented themselves at the recent examinations, there being only 130 vacancies. Tokyo sent 776 applicants, Sendai 48, Kanagawa 45, Hiroshima 130 and Kumamoto 94. There are now 295 cadets at the college, and 59 will graduate this year. At Tsukiji there is another educational institution belonging to the Navy, the Kaigun Daigakko (Naval College). The instruction given there is entirely technical, namely, in navigation, in gunnery, and in torpedoes.

THE LADRONES.

The Yomiuri Shimbun urges that Japan should purchase the Ladrones. After speaking of the Charleston's recent visit to the islands, the hoisting of the American flag, and the removal of the Spanish officials and garrison, our contemporary goes on to say that the islands are now without any government, that America does not want them, that they have always been a white elephant to Spain, and that Japan might find them very useful. The Madrid Government offered, it is said, to sell them to Japan several years ago, and Viscounts Enomoto and Aoki were for accepting the proposal, but it fell through owing to Count Inouye's opposition. Spain would probably welcome the transfer of the island to Japan now, opines the Yomiuri, forgetting, apparently, that America alone has to be consulted, the Ladrones being now her property. Some trouble is taken to repudiate the idea that Japan would use the islands as a naval station. She would employ them for fishing purposes only. In this context the Yomiuri makes a strange statement, namely, that the Department of Agriculture and Commerce is elaborating an improved system which, if successfully carried out, will increase the annual take of fish in Japan by 250 million yen.

ARTISTIC COMPETITION.

The public are likely to benefit more than might have been at first expected by the establishment of the new Fine Arts Institution, under Mr. Okakura. We described in a recent issue the broad facts connected with this enterprise, and explained that its projectors intended to take commissions for executing objects of applied art at prices much lower than those ruling in the general market. The Fine Arts School, of which Mr. Okakura was President from the time of its establishment until a few months ago, used to do work of that kind, but appears to have given it up when the troubles occurred which led to the retirement of Mr. Okakura last spring, and to the re-organization of the school under the presidency of Mr. Takamine. Mr. Okakura was followed in his retirement by a large majority of the skilled artists who had acted as instructors in the school, and with their assistance and cōoperation he recently started the Fine Arts Institution (Bijutsu-in), an important feature of which is the Seisaku-bu, or section of applied art, where commissions will be undertaken for all kinds of artistic work, decorative, pictorial, and what not. The Art School seems to have viewed with some alarm this enterprise on the part of the rival institution, and has now taken steps to organise a Kōkō kai, or art-work society, where designs will be made and executed by the graduates of the School. It is understood that Baron Kuki, Superintendent of the Imperial Museum, takes a lively interest in this Kōkō-kai, and has assisted to supply capital for it. The result of the competition should be highly advantageous to all persons desiring to procure objects of art, for they will now effectually escape the monstrous profits hitherto realized by middle-men upon all work of this kind.

THE FUTURE OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The question of the Philippines is again brought upon the tapis by vernacular journals. We find the old argument repeated, that their commercial and strategical importance to Japan forbids her to stand with folded hands while their fate is in the balance. Reference is also made to historical relations, but the point is too vague to be interesting. Four solutions of the problem are catalogued as exhaustive: the first that the islands should be declared independent; the second, that their neutrality should be guaranteed by the Great Powers, as is the case with Samoa; the third, that the United States should annex them, and the fourth that they should be partitioned. The second of these solutions is pronounced incomparably the best. Independence is hopeless, for the islanders are quite unable to maintain it, and partition would call into operation highly dangerous forces. The only practicable alternatives are annexation by America or guaranteed neutrality. It is advised that Japan should devote her energies to bringing about the latter solution, boldly taking the initiative in proposing it, if necessary; and that if the project be not feasible, she should throw all her influence into the scale in favour of annexation by the United States.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

JAPAN AND SIAM.

Japan seems likely to play her part as Oriental pioneer of Occidental civilization in the case of Siam. In olden times she used to carry on a very refined and magnificent kind of intercourse with that little kingdom. The King of Siam wrote his despatches to the Tokugawa Shogun on tablets of gold—not mean little strips of the precious metal, but fair broad sheets, a foot and a half in length and half a foot wide—which he enclosed in an ivory casket, the latter reposing in a box of sandal wood and the whole wrapped in fine brocade. The Shogun's reply did not receive quite such elaborate treatment, but it can not be said to have been unceremoniously manipulated, for it reposed in a silver box which, having been tied with a cord of crimson silk, was wrapped in purple habutae, and then deposited in a casket of Paulownia wood enveloped in a wrapper of silk damask. The correspondence thus nobly conducted breathed very fine sentiments of international liberality. Both sides were anxious to cultivate lasting relations of friendship so that their traders might enjoy the profit of maritime commerce, and while the King of Siam found a bond of union and a cause of peace and prosperity in the common reverence of the two nations for the mysteries of Buddhism, the Shogun took care to remind his royal correspondent that from the very creation of Japan the doctrines of moral philosophy had been handed down, and, at the same time, complacently advised him not to be too much startled at the civilization of Japan as seen by his envoys. Japan certainly was a highly civilized country in many respects in the seventeenth century, and we dare say there was more sincerity than flattery in the letter sent by the Siamese Minister of Foreign Affairs to Sakai, Uta-no-Kami, wherein his Excellency, speaking in the name of his six-titled Sovereign, declared that the inhabitants of all lands regarded Japan as differing from their own countries not less than the high heavens differed from the depths below in the superiority of its soil and the nobility of its people. Sakai called this "an elegant letter," as well he might. Probably he would have been pleased to receive many more of the same kind, but the postal service of that time left something to be desired, as may be inferred from the fact that Sakai deemed it highly satisfactory to learn that an epistle addressed by him some years previously to the Siamese Minister had safely reached its destination. At the same time, the Japanese ruler's conception of those that pursued trade and of their methods was not too flattering. He called them "abominable fellows, fond of gain and given up to greed," and he opined that international commerce consisted in the merchants of each side bringing to the other what was worthless and returning home with articles of value. The rulers of Siam in those times had an exalted idea of Japanese horses. War steeds were their great desire, and they got them in small numbers, accompanied by gold screens, suits of armour, swords and glaives. In return they sent to Japan brocades, "snow-white" gauze and calico (!), snow-white nightingale's feathers, elephant's tusks, and, above all, muskets and gunpowder. These last were the things desired above all by Japanese magnates, though it is not to be supposed that the Siamese manufactured either muskets or gunpowder: they merely acted as middle-men, sending to Japan articles imported by them from Europe. We have never been able to understand why the Japanese could not procure equally good muskets and powder through the Dutch at Deshima, but those that have investigated the subject—the principal of whom is Sir Ernest Satow—do not clear up that point. The skins of deer and sharks seem to have been the chief articles of common export from Siam to Japan—that is to say, the articles carried away by the junks—, and we find that Japan, on her side, had already established a reputation for her artistic productions, her chief sales to Siam consisting of gold-smith's work, screens, lacquered cabinets, porcelains, and so forth. All this mutually profitable intercourse came to an end in 1636, when the Government of Japan decided to confine its foreign relations to the Dutch and the Chinese, and adhered to the decision for 220 years. But Siam is now counted once more among Japan's commercial friends. The trade between the two countries is not very important. Of her own produce and manufactures Japan sold to Siam, in 1897, thirty-six kinds of goods, the largest item being coal (3,445 yen) and the value of the whole aggregating only 20,572 yen; and Siam sold to Japan ten kinds, the principal being rice (1,160,766 yen), the second in importance, timber (26,403 yen), and the whole aggregating 1,190,968 yen. It appears, too, that the export of timber has now been prohibited by the Government at Bangkok, so that rice and deer skins will hereafter be the only staples. The interesting point, however, is that Siam, inspired by Japan's example, thinks of qualifying for the recovery of her judicial autonomy. She intends to have civil, commercial and criminal codes, and the Japanase Government is understood to have promised that when her legal and judicial equipment is complete, her rights shall be recognised. There is talk of ten years—idle talk, we think. Japan began the work of codification in 1873, and has prosecuted it with at least as much diligence as the Siamese can be expected to exhibit, but she can not be said to have completed it yet after 23 years of effort. Talk of codes, indeed, but will there be a Kingdom of Siam two decades hence? Not unless the current of events in the East turns into a channel very different from that in which it has flowed during recent years.

SUSPENSION OF A MAGAZINE.

Count Itagaki's enemies are enjoying the pleasure of a crow at his expense. The Department of Home Affairs has ordered the suspension of a periodical—the Jitsugyo-Kioiku Zasshi, or Practical-Education Magazine—and since the Liberals have always been pre-eminently vehement advocates of freedom of speech, the fact that such an order should have been issued by the Liberal leader a few days after his assumption of office, is naturally considered very inconsistent. But that is a superficial view. The magazine has not been suspended because of the quality of its writing but because of a technical violation of the law. In fact under the present Press Law, a journal or magazine can not be suspended by an administrative order on any of the old grounds—writing matter prejudicial to public peace or good order, or disrespectful to officials, &c. The only recognised method is to proceed against it legally, and pending judicial decision, the circulation of the number containing the incriminated matter may be stopped. The periodical in question has been suspended because it violated the provisions of the Law. It is provided by the Press Law, as enacted by the Diet in its 1896-7 session, that a newspaper or periodical intending to discuss political subjects must lodge security money to the extent of 1,000 yen, if published in one of the three cities, and 500 yen if published outside their limits. If political subjects are not discussed, no security is required. It is for that reason, we may mention en passant, that so many periodicals have their place of publication in some of the suburbs outside the limits of Tokyo city. The periodical in question is one of those that have lodged no security. Ignoring that fact, however, it published an essay vehemently discussing current politics, and was therefore suspended.

In connexion with this incident it has been ascertained that books, magazines, journals, and other publications are divided into three classes for purposes of official examination at the Department of Home Affairs. Those of the first class are examined by the Minister himself, those of the second class by the Vice-Minister, and those of the third class by the director of a bureau. Newspapers and periodicals have hitherto belonged to the second class, and it appears that the magazine lately suspended did not come under Count Itagaki's eye at all. It was examined by the Vice-Minister, Mr. Suzuki, and he ordered its suspension for a manifest breach of the law. Vernacular journals say that newspapers and periodicals are hereafter to be examined by the Minister himself. A pleasant occupation for a Minister of State! We should say that it would take him all his time.

REUTER.

Reuter's agent in Yokohama recalls to our recollection the fact that Tokyo and Yokohama are separated by a great distance. He telegraphed to The Times on June 10th:—

> The Diet reopened to-day, when the Compromise Bill for the revising of land valuation was rejected, as was also the Government Bill for increasing the land tax, amid great uproar. The Diet will probably be dissolved.

Where did this "great uproar" occur? We who write were in the House of Representatives during the whole discussion and the voting on the two measures, and we can assure Baron Reuter's agent that so far from "great uproar" being a proper description of the circumstances attending the rejection of the Compromise Representation and the Land-Tax Bill, "remarkable calm" would be the correct epithet. In fact, it was to us quite a matter of surprise that such momentous decisions should have been taken amid such singular quiet. Even when the results of the voting were declared, the announcements did not awaken a tithe of the excitement and enthusiasm that would have been witnessed in an Occidental Parliament, and the House subsequently resumed the Order of the Day just as if nothing unusual or extraordinary had happened.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

JAPANESE TORPEDO CRAFT.

Japan's torpedo fleet will soon be quite a picturesque affair if the present system of naming be continued. Marquis Saigo has just christened five new torpedo craft, giving them the following appellations :—

Kagero (dragon fly)	Torpedo-destroyer.
Mochizuki (full moon) ...	do.
Oboro (the moon in clouds)	do.
Nagisa (sea-beach).....	do.
Chidori (peewit).....	Torpedo boat.

The first four of these were built in England, the fifth in Germany. We may add the names of the torpedo-boats already built under the post-bellum programme :—

Ikazuchi.....(lightning)	Torpedo boat.
Inazuma.....(thunder)	do
Shinonome...(dawn of day)	do
Murakumo. (clustering clouds)	do
Akebono.....(break of day)	do
Sasanami ...(ripples)	do
Yugori .....(evening mist)	do
Shiranui ...(dragon's lamp)	do

All the above were built in England; those whose names follow in Germany :—

Hayabusa.....(falcon)	Torpedo-boat.
Kasasagi.....(magpie)	do.
Manazuru ...(white-naped crane)	do.
Shirataka ...(white hawk)	do.

Many of these sweet-sounding terms belong to the vocabulary of pure old Japanese words (yamato-kotoba) which are fast passing out of daily use. It is curious that the venerable names should be resuscitated for the sake of such a particularly modern institution as a fleet of torpedo craft.

A MODEL DESPATCH.

We want to invite the special attention of our readers to the telegraphic despatch sent by Commodore Watson to his Government describing the destruction of the Spanish squadron at Santiago :—

At 9.30 a.m. to-day, the Spanish Squadron, seven in all, including one gunboat, came out of the Santiago Harbour in column, and were totally destroyed within an hour, except the Christobal Colon, which was chased 45 miles to westward by the Commander-in-Chief, Brooklyn, Oregon and Texas, and surrendered to the Brooklyn, but was beached to prevent sinking. None of our officers or men are injured except, on board the Brooklyn, Chief Fireman Ellis was killed and one man wounded. Admiral Cervera, the commanding officers, excepting that of the Oquendo, about 70 other officers and 1,600 men, are prisoners. About 350 are killed or drowned and 160 wounded, the latter being cared for on the Solace and Olivette. I have just arrived off Santiago in the Marblehead to take charge while the Commander-in-Chief is looking for the Christobal Colon.

(Signed.) WATSON."

There is a slight ambiguity in the two references to the Christobal Colon, the first statement being that she had surrendered and been beached to prevent sinking; the second, that Admiral Sampson was still looking for her. But it is not for the sake of the accuracy or explicitness of the information it contains that we call attention to the despatch; it is because of its extraordinarily quiet, matter-of-fact tone. The Commodore seems to be talking of events in which he had no personal concern whatever. Not the smallest scintilla of excitement can be detected in his language; not the faintest suggestion that credit is due to the gunners and seamen who achieved the singular feat of destroying four first-class cruisers, a gunboat and two torpedo destroyers in less than an hour's time. Commodore Watson is evidently made of the stuff that wins battles. It must be a pleasure to fight under such a captain.

SOLITARY CONFINEMENT OF SUSPECTS.

We are entirely in accord with the adverse criticisms recently penned in certain vernacular and local foreign journals on the subject of the solitary confinement of persons suspected of crime. The Japanese Code of Criminal Procedure authorizes an examining judge to order an unconvicted prisoner into solitary confinement, if he believes such a step necessary for the discovery of the truth. It is pleaded that the device is seldom resorted to, but, in common with the Kobe Chronicle, we doubt the correctness of the plea. At all events we can vouch for the fact that the solitary cell (anshitsu) is commonly spoken of as one of the terrors of preliminary judicial examinations. What may be truly pointed out, however, and should in justice be noted, is that the system did not originate in Japan. It was borrowed from France. The procés verbale and all the other stages of procedure in the preliminary examination of persons charged with crime were taken direct from France by M. Boissonnade and incorporated in the Japanese Code. It seems to us a mistake, therefore, to say, as the Kobe Chronicle says, endorsing a vernacular journal, that "no European country retains such a method of intimidating an accused person." France retains it, unless we are mistaken; or, if she does not retain it, she gave it up only very recently. But if a dozen Western nations pursued such a method, we should not be at all reconciled to it. It is a blot on Japan's system, and we sincerely hope that she will soon abolish it.

KOREAN AFFAIRS.

It appears that the Japanese Representative in Söul has been instructed to prefer two demands to the Korean Government; first, a sum of five thousand yen each on account of the sixty Japanese subjects who lost their lives at the hands of Korean mobs or assassins in the years 1895 and 1896; and secondly, the fulfilment of the old promise to grant a charter for the Söul-Fusan Railway to Japanese projectors. An answer to the former demand does not seem to have been yet obtained, and it is said that the Korean Government has asked for three days to consider the latter.

Details of the recent conspiracy in Korea are now to hand, but there is little to add to what has already been stated in these columns. The Independence Club took the lead in the affair, and succeeded in enlisting the sympathy of the Imperial Guards and of several high officials, including Ministers of State. It does not appear that an actual coup d'état was contemplated. The idea was to induce the Emperor to abdicate quietly in favour of the Crown Prince. By degrees the movement assumed such dimensions that it could no longer be concealed, and several of the ringleaders were arrested, others going into hiding. The Emperor evidently hesitates to resort to strong measures of repression, though he is encouraged thereto by the celebrated Madame Om, the Dame Margery of the Palace.

IMPERIAL COMMERCIAL MUSEUM.

We observe that Mr. Henry Satoh has been appointed Director of the Imperial Commercial Museum in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. Mr. Satoh is not a foreigner, as his manner of spelling his name might suggest. He is a Japanese, possessing a very exceptional knowledge of English, which he has utilized on many public occasions to the great advantage and convenience of Englishmen, Americans, and his own countrymen. He graduated some years ago—we believe—at the Tokyo Commercial College, and since that time has busied himself zealously with commercial and industrial affairs, so that his qualifications make him eminently suited for the post to which he is now appointed. There is plenty of work to be done at the Commercial Museum if it is to be changed from a species of curio display to an institution really beneficial to all concerned in the over-sea trade of Japan, foreigners and Japanese like. That is Mr. Satoh's aim, we understand, and if intelligence and industry can accomplish it, it will be accomplished.

THE TEMPLE CHION-IN AND ITS DEBT.

We related some time ago that singular statements had been made against the Sixty-first Bank, which has its head office in Kurume. The matter was connected with a debt of sixty thousand yen which the celebrated temple Chion-in in Kyoto had repaid to the Bank by instalments, spread over five years. Some months after the final instalment had been handed over last fall, a clerk of the bank lodged information that the debt had never been really due by the Temple, and that the whole affair had been plotted by the temple's factor and the Bank's manager. Several arrests were made in consequence of the disclosure, but the magisterial investigation proved that the real plotter was the informing clerk. The tables have therefore been completely turned, and Mr. Sassa Osamu, the manager of the Bank, is now proceeding against his accusers for malicious libel.

MR. JOHN FOSTER FRASER.

The last mail from the United States brings the news that Mr. John Foster Fraser, who will be remembered by many people in Japan as the leader of the "round-the-world" cyclists, has married an American lady. It appears that Mr. Fraser met his bride during the voyage from Yokohama to Tacoma. The three wheelmen having cycled across the great American desert and over the Rockies, a halt was called at Omaha and Mr. Fraser returned by train to the coast and was quietly married. The wedding took place at St. Mark's Church, Seattle, Washington, on June 18th, the bride being Miss Lawrence, the only child of Mr. Francis Lawrence, a well-known owner of gold and copper mines on the Pacific Coast. There was a week's honeymoon, and then Mr. Fraser continued his ride across the American continent.

There is some eagerness among London publishers to obtain the copyright of the book which Mr. Fraser is writing recounting his travels. The volume will probably be issued in the autumn.

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

IN order to obtain a clear idea of the present condition of Japanese Finance, it is necessary to consider some figures which we shall set down here, believing that they are not easily accessible to the general public.

The first questions that present themselves are, what was the total amount of the Indemnity received from China; what disbursements have already been made from it, and what sum remains available. The figures relating to these points are :—

A.—INDEMNITY ACCOUNT.

	Yen.
Total Indemnity received from China.	362,322,303
Total Disbursements from Indemnity up to March 31st, 1898 (i.e., up to the end of the 30th fiscal year).....	135,746,554
Total remaining available ...	226,575,749

With regard to the items of the disbursements summarized in this table, they stand thus :—

B.—DISBURSEMENTS FROM INDEMNITY UP TO MARCH 31ST, 1898.

	Yen.
a. War Expenditures.	78,957,164
b. Army Expansion.....	17,641,464
c. Naval Expansion	26,970,712
d. Public Works	6,218,166
e. Expenditures in Formosa	5,959,048
Total	135,746,554

We have next to consider the form in which the remainder of the Indemnity exists, that point being of importance with regard to its immediate availability :—

C.—FORM IN WHICH THE REMAINING PORTION OF THE INDEMNITY EXISTS.

	Yen.
a. Gold (the greater part of which was lying in London at the end of May last)	102,038,409
b Silver coins and bullion	38,897,548
c Miscellaneous	85,669,792
Total	226,575,749

Concerning the item "Miscellaneous" in this table, the exact details are not forthcoming. A portion of the total is, however, easily explained. A sum of 12 millions has been devoted to the purchase of Public Undertakings Bonds—to which we shall refer again presently—and another sum of 17,182,880 yen was subscribed to the Chinese loan. Hence, out of the total of 85,669,792 yen, shown as "Miscellaneous," a sum of 29,182,880 yen is in domestic loan bonds and Chinese loan bonds.

It will be expedient to say a word here about the War Expenditures and the sources from which they were met :—

D.—WAR ACCOUNT.

SOURCES OF REVENUE.	Yen.
a. War Bonds issued in Japan...	116,804,926
b. Surplus Revenue accumulated from previous years.....	23,439,086
c Donations.....	2,949,540
d Taken from Indemnity.....	78,957,164
e. Miscellaneous	3,079,409
Total Revenue	225,230,125
Total Expenditures.....	200,475,508
Surplus	24,754,617

The expenditures and assets in the matter of the War are embodied in a special account. Out of the surplus of 24¾ million yen here shown, a sum of 10,650,359 yen was transferred to the Extraordinary Revenue for the year 1896. It would appear, therefore, that a surplus of 14,104,258 yen still exists, though whether some further outlays may not become chargeable against it we can not tell.

The next point to be considered is the expenditures under the post-bellum programme and the sources from which they are to be met :—

E.—"POST-BELLUM" PROGRAMME OF EXPENDITURES.

	Yen.
a. Army Expansion	81,680,827
b. Naval Expansion	213,100,959
c. Railway Construction	107,818,194
d. Other Public Works	28,694,692
Total Expenditures.....	431,294,672

F.—SOURCES FOR DEFRAYING "POST-BELLUM" EXPENDITURES.

	Yen.
a. From Indemnity.....	196,705,938
b. Domestic Loans	213,392,022
c. Surplus of Ordinary Revenue	21,196,712
Total Assets	431,294,672

We now turn to the yearly disbursements under the post-bellum programme as originally planned, and compare them with the disbursements actually made :—

G.—DISBURSEMENTS UNDER "POST-BELLUM" PROGRAMME ON ACCOUNT OF MILITARY AND NAVAL EXPANSIONS.

ORIGINAL ESTIMATE.

	Army. Yen.	Navy. Yen.
1896-7	17,250,152	22,192,709
1897-8	21,318,653	60,660,965
1898-9	14,451,288	50,144,834
1899-0	10,632,216	34,517,397
1900 1	7,923,867	21,464,692
1901-2	6,883,440	15,922,018
1902 3	2,643,206	5,181,409
1903 4	578,009	2,410,660
1904 5	—	533,928
1905-6	—	72,347

SUMS ACTUALLY EXPENDED.

1896 7	8,437,261	4,043,287
1897-8	16,945,202	43,449,569

It will be seen that whereas, according to the original estimates, a total sum of 121,422,479 yen was to have been spent upon military and naval expansions from April 1st, 1896, to March 31st, 1898, the sum actually expended was only 72,875,319 yen, or 48,547,160 yen less than the estimate. Several minor causes doubtless contributed to bring about this difference, but the general explanation is that the Government found it impossible to carry on the work of expansion at the proposed rate, owing to the difficulty of procuring labour, skilled and unskilled, in the required quantity.

The late Minister of Finance, Count INOUYE, recommended a re-adjustment of the above annual allotments, so as to effect an approach to uniformity. The maximum expenditures for the two services are put down at 82 million yen, approximately, in 1897-8, and at 64½ millions in 1898-9, whereas the maximum in any other year is 45 millions. In fact, the time of greatest pressure ends in 1900, and the curve of expenditure, rising from zero in 1896, reaches its highest point abruptly in 1897-8, then falling with scarcely less abruptness to 29 millions in 1900-1. Count INOUYE would have levelled down these inequalities, and, without reducing the total outlay or extending the total period, would have eased the pressure in the years 1898-9 and 1899-1900. The exact figures of the projected change were never published. Even though no nominal alteration of the programme has been effected, however, from the experience of the past two years we may assume that the Government will find it impossible in practice to disburse the sums estimated for 1898-9 and 1899-1900.

Turning to the expenditures for railways and public works, we have the following figures :—

H.—DISBURSEMENTS FOR RAILWAYS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

ORIGINAL ESTIMATE.

	Railways. Yen.	Public Works. Yen.
1896 7	9,903,200	3,550,983
1897-8	11,162,463	10,851,220

ACTUAL EXPENDITURES.

1896-7	5,154,584	1,126,326
1897-8	14,165,854	9,356,332

Here we see that the original intention was to spend a total of 35,407,866 yen on railways and public works in the two years 1896-7 and 1897-8, whereas the sum actually expended was only 29,803,096 yen, a difference of 5,604,770 yen.

The next question we have to consider is that of domestic loans. It has been shown in Table F. that the total of such loans under the post-bellum programme was to be 213,392,022 yen. The loans were to take two forms: namely, Public Undertakings Bonds, to the extent of 135 million yen, and Railway Bonds to the extent of of 78,392,622 yen. The process of floating these loans and the success thus far achieved are shown in the following table :—

K.—DOMESTIC LOANS TO BE FLOATED UNDER THE "POST-BELLUM" PROGRAMME.

	Amount to be floated. Yen.	Amount actually issued. Yen.
1896-1897	12,874,422	49,727,350
1897 1898	67,556,810
1898-1899	48,588,145
1899-1900	19,206,678
1900-1901	15,362,790
1901-1902	14,527,269
1902-1903	15,631,373
1903-1904	7,937,000
1904-1909	11,707,535
	213,392,022

Hence, out of the grand total, there remains a sum of 163,664,672 to be still raised. Moreover, although the Table shows that 49,727,350 yen has already been floated, the fact is that only 11,727,350 yen was actually subscribed by the people in the form of Railway Bonds. The remaining 38 millions were subscribed by the Government. In other words, the Government, while nominally issuing Public Undertakings Bonds to the amount of 38 million yen, really played the part of lender as well as borrower, buying 12 million yen worth with money taken from the Indemnity, and 26 million yen worth with money obtained by depositing the Bonds in the Bank of Japan. It may therefore be said that out of the whole post-bellum domestic loan of 213,392,022 yen, only 11,727,350 yen has actually been subscribed.

The figures set down above may be conveniently summarized as follows :—

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

L.—Actual Expenditures thus far incurred under the "Post-Bellum" Programme.

	Yen.
Railways and Public Works	29,803,096
Military and Naval Expansion	72,875,314
Total	102,678,415

M.—Actual Assets hitherto realized under the "Post-Bellum" Programme.

	Yen.
Subscribed by people to Railway Bonds	11,727,350
Taken direct from the Indemnity	50,830,342
Taken from Indemnity and invested in Public Undertakings Bonds	12,000,000
Obtained by depositing Public Undertakings Bonds with the Bank of Japan	26,000,000
Obtained from Surplus Revenue and Miscellaneous Sources	2,120,523
Total	102,678,415

In attempting to form an accurate idea of the Treasury's circumstances at present, we find an element of uncertainty in the 38 million yen worth of Public Undertakings Bonds held by the Government, twelve millions of which were purchased with money taken from the Indemnity, and twenty-six millions' worth were used as security to borrow funds. Treating these for the moment as a settled account, and excluding from our calculation any funds accruing from surplus revenue, since the present difficulty of Japanese financiers is to make incomings cover outgoings and there is no apparent prospect of annual surpluses, we arrive ultimately at the following figures:—

N.

	Yen.
Expenditures still to be defrayed for Military and Naval Expansions	221,906,467
Expenditures still to be defrayed for Railways and Public Works	106,709,790
Total future Expenditure	328,616,257
Sum to be still taken from the Indemnity to meet above	164,951,785
Sum to be obtained by Domestic Loans	163,664,472
Total	328,616,257

[N.B.—If the Public Undertakings Bonds now understood to be lodged in the Government's name with the Bank of Japan and the Bonds held by the Treasury—as explained in connexion with Table K—are placed upon the market, the total domestic loans still to be raised amount to 201,664,472 yen.]

It has been shown (vide Tables A and C) that the portion of the Indemnity remaining (at the end of last May) was 226,575,749 yen, inclusive of a sum of 12 millions in Public Undertakings Bonds. Hence, if we deduct the amount (as shown in the last Table) still to be taken from the Indemnity to complete the post-bellum programme, it would appear that a surplus of 61,623,964 yen remains. Is that a genuine surplus? In other words, is the Government in a position to write off the 12 million yen worth of Public Undertakings Bonds now included in the Indemnity account, and to appropriate the final remainder—49,623,964 yen—to the general purposes of the post-bellum programme, thus reducing the total sum of future domestic loans to 140,040,508 yen? To answer that question it becomes necessary to know whether any calls have to be made on the Indemnity in connexion with the regular Budgets of State expenditures for the current fiscal year. Turning, then, to Count Inouye's Budget, we have the following figures:—

P.—State Revenue for 1898-9.

ORDINARY REVENUE.

	Yen.
Land Tax	38,566,902
Saké Tax	32,202,708
Other Inland Taxes	13,299,640
Customs	7,418,227
Stamps	5,526,388
Posts and Telegraphs	14,562,275
Miscellaneous	17,849,389
Total	129,425,529

EXTRAORDINARY REVENUE.

Domestic Loans	40,223,350

(N.B.—The sum that ought to be floated this year, under the post-bellum programme, is 79,292,028 yen, but as 39,068,678 yen of that total is part of the loan that should have been issued last year, and was not issued, it does not appear as an asset in this year's account, but, when floated, will be applied to the cost of works included in last year's programme but not yet completed.)

Drafted from Indemnity	36,223,350

(N.B.—This is the sum duly fixed by the post-bellum programme. It is not caused by any exceptional expenditure).

Miscellaneous	2,841,708
Total Extraordinary Revenue	79,199,179
Grand Total of Ordinary and Extraordinary Revenue	208,624,708

Q.—State Expenditures for 1898-9.

ORDINARY EXPENDITURES.

	Yen.
1. Administrative Expenditures	42,495,765
2. Military and Naval	43,481,509
3. Service of Public Debt
a. Interest	24,492,219
b Amortization	7,254,147
	31,746,366
Pensions and Rewards	3,739,298
Total of Ordinary Expenditures	121,462,938

EXTRAORDINARY EXPENDITURES.

	Yen.
Administrative, &c.	25,157,900
Military and Naval Expansion	64,596,122
Railways and Public Works	11,761,330
Total Extraordinary Expenditures	101,515,352
Grand Total of Ordinary and Extraordinary Expenditures	222,978,290

It appears from the above that the Expenditures for the current year exceed the visible revenue by 14,353,583 yen. There seems to be no way of defraying this amount except by a draft on the Indemnity. If we deduct this amount from the result arrived at in discussing Table N., we find that there is still a surplus of 35,270,381 yen in the Indemnity account. This is the surplus of which Count Inouye applied a part to the redemption of War Bonds and Consols through the Bank of Japan, and to the aid of manufacturers through the Industrial Bank.

In order to complete the materials enabling our readers to take a full view of the financial situation, we proceed to add a statement of the National Debt as it stood on March 31st, 1898, and of facts relating to its growth and amortization:—

R.—National Debt on March 31st, 1898

Consols	173,857,250
War Bonds	124,572,000
Public Undertakings Bonds	38,000,000
Pension Bonds (5 per cent.)	29,453,820
Railway Bonds	17,807,350
Naval Bonds	9,288,600
Hokkaido Railway Bonds	1,000,000
Old Loan	5,266,908
Total	397,245,928

S.—Method of Amortizations.—Amounts reduced yearly in each class of Bonds.

	Consols.	War Bonds.	Railway Bonds.	Public Undertakings Bonds.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
1898 9	446,631	—	5,406	—
1899 0	3,228,555	—	117,350	—
1900-1	2,062,408	1,059,050	74,050	—
1901-2	2,847,938	2,052,250	254,500	447,000
1902-3	2,112,416	1,536,450	328,750	1,399,256
1903 4	1,983,261	1,463,000	414,600	1,441,400
1904-5	1,981,213	1,461,400	521,600	1,521,150
1905-6	2,031,914	1,498,950	637,750	1,642,950
1906-7	2,090,858	1,542,250	766,950	1,984,600

This Table does not include the Pension Bonds, the Naval Bonds, or the Old Loan. The fact is that although the Budget includes a sum of 7½ million yen annually for purposes of amortization, the amounts yearly redeemed in each case are not definitely fixed, the Government having a measure of discretion. The dates of complete amortization are alone invariable, namely:—

T.—Years of Maximum Amounts and Complete Redemption.

	Maximum Year.	Year of Complete Redemption.
Consols	1897	1938
War Bonds	1898	1938
Railway Bonds	1905	1938
Naval Bonds	1889	1923
Public Undertakings Bonds	1907	1938
Pension Bonds	1881	1906
Old Loan	1872	1921

We may add here that the volume of Bank Notes in circulation on May 28th was 178,289,343 yen, and the gold reserve in the Bank of Japan, 62,973,203 yen.

The Table of National Expenditures for the current year shows that the appropriations for the Army and Navy aggregate 43½ million yen in round numbers. In that total there are included certain items which can not be properly regarded as "maintenance." Nevertheless they are items that find their way into the accounts year after year, and it seems unpractical and illogical to exclude them for purposes of future estimates. We may say, therefore, that the cost of maintaining the two services has already exceeded the estimate formed by the framers of the post-bellum programme. Their calculation was that when the sevices were raised to their full strength on the new basis, the annual expense of maintaining them would not exceed 41 million yen. To-day, it stands at 43½ millions. The growth of the ordinary expenditures on account of the two services has been very striking. Omitting the years 1894-5 and 1895-6, because, being years of war, the accounts relating to them are abnormal, we have the following figures:—

Ordinary Expenditures for the Army and Navy.

	Yen.
1893 4	17,457,972
1896-7	32,010,341
1897-8	39,022,012
1898-9	43,481,509

Our readers will understand, of course, that these figures have nothing to do with the temporary expenditures on account of military and naval expansion: the latter are entirely independent. What we have set down in the Table are the expenses regularly recurring year by year in the

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

ordinary routine. On the whole, therefore, it seems a reasonable estimate that when the services are brought to their full post-bellum strength, their cost to the country will be, not 41 million yen as originally calculated, but nearly 50 millions. The discrepancy arises from the operation of factors that could not have foreseen; but that is another question. We observe, further, that Japanese financiers persistently exclude from their accounts any item for the maintenance of the fleet. They can not suppose that it is enough merely to purchase or build ships once for all, and thereafter make no provision for the repair of injuries or the replacement of losses. If the fleet is to be kept up to the strength indicated in the post-bellum programme, an outlay of some 13 million yen annually on account of repairs and replacements must be anticipated. Hence our final conclusion is that Japan's Army and Navy will cost her about 63 millions yen annually if she carries her projects to completion. Roughly speaking, England spends 40 per cent. of her income upon her Army and Navy, whereas Japan will by-and-by be spending 49 per cent., supposing that her income does not expand.

Another source of inevitably increased expenditure is the salaries of inferior officials and employés. At present Japan's outlay on account of salaries is this :—

SALARIES, ANNUAL.

	Yen.
Chokunin Officials	1,384 922
Sonin Officials	10,211 674
Hannin Officials.....	10,942,513
Employés (Yatoi)	1,203,958
Soldiers and Sailors	2,920,092
Total	26 463,159

In the two upper grades the pay is considered tolerably sufficient. The salary of a Chokunin official averages about 250 yen a month, and that of a Sonin official, about 140 yen. But in the cases of Hannin and employés the emoluments are plainly inadequate. A Hannin official averages only 30 yen a month, and an employé only 12 yen. It is impossible to command the services of competent persons for such stipends. That, indeed, is the great difficulty at present. The Communications Department can not get good men to work for the bureaux of posts and telegraphs, and the public are miserably served. Count INOUYE proposed to appropriate an additional sum of 6,860,000 yen on this account. This was to have been distributed over four items, namely, (1) salaries of inferior officials and employés; (2) contingency expenses in offices of State; (3) travelling expenses for officials, and (4) miscellaneous. The exact details were under consideration when the Cabinet went out of power, but it is certain that Count INOUYE'S estimate was not excessive, and that a sum of fully 7 million yen must be included in future Budgets on this account.

The National Debt is another point calling for brief consideration. At present, the service of the debt involves a yearly outlay of 31¾ million yen, in round numbers—namely, 24½ millions for interest and 7¼ for amortization. If the present programme be carried out, Public Undertakings Bonds to the total amount of 163½ million yen will be issued by the close of the fiscal year 1904-5. But since, during that interval, amortization will have been effected to the extent of 50¼ millions, the actual addition to the Debt will be only 113¼ millions, and the charge for interest and amortization will be increased by 7 millions approximately.

There are still some other outlays to be considered, but we need not discuss them in detail, as their mere statement will sufficiently explain their nature. Compiling the whole, therefore, into a table, we obtain the following result :—

JAPAN'S FUTURE EXPENDITURES.

	Million Yen.
Budget for current year	146½
Add for maintenance of Army and Navy...	6½
Cost of Naval repairs and shipbuilding ...	13
Additions to Salaries, &c.	7
Increased outlay in connexion with the service of the National Debt.....	7
Grants in aid of Navigation.....	5
Prison Expenditures (transferred from Communes to Treasury)	3½
National Calamities Relief Fund	½
Interest on Restored Pension Bonds	½
Total Expenditures	189½

Turning to the Revenue, we find these results :—

JAPAN'S FUTURE REVENUE.

Revenue as per Budget for 1898-9	129½
Additional Customs Dues under New Tariff	8
Increased Return from State Industries ...	7½
Normal Increase of Yield from Taxes	5
Total Income	150

We see here a plain deficit of 39½ million yen annually. Nor do our figures cover the whole ground. In the Expenditures we have omitted any reference to Formosa, or to the outlays that the country will have to make in connexion with the operation of the Revised Treaties. Count INOUYE estimated the former at 11¼ million yen and the latter at 2½ millions, making a total of 13¾ millions. These outlays are not permanent, however. Formosa may be expected to become self-supporting by and by, and the preparations in connexion with the new Treaties are temporary. On the other hand, Count INOUYE'S estimates took no apparent account of the outlays (13 million yen) that will be required for naval repairs and shipbuilding to keep the fleet up to its new standard. We are strongly disposed to think that in including a sum of 13½ million yen in the permanent estimates, on account of temporary outlays like Formosa and Treaty Revision, Count INOUYE was looking forward to the ultimate diversion of that sum to the maintenance of the fleet. At all events, we can not escape the conclusion that an increase of annual revenue to the extent of 39 million yen is absolutely indispensable, and even that figure does not take into account the natural and inevitable growth of the various Departmental expenditures. Our conviction is that if English financiers had to deal with Japan's Budgets, they would apply themselves at once to find an increase of revenue to the extent of 40 million yen; and would, at the same time, warn tax-payers that a further, though comparatively trifling, call would probably be necessary to meet the natural growth of Departmental expenditures. Indeed, considering that the increased income from State Industries, which we have set down at 7½ million yen, as well as the normal increase (5 millions) of the yield from taxes will not be fully available for some years, it seems that to put the finances of the country on a really sound footing, an additional income of some 50 million yen should be provided. Several Ministers of Finance will probably wreck themselves over this problem before the situation is fairly and squarely forced. So long as—the House of Representatives being controlled by the agricultural interest—the Land Tax remains outside the sources of increased revenue, there can not be a just and satisfactory solution of the problem.

NOTES ON NEWS.

The troubles of the cotton-spinning companies seem to the coming thick and fast. The attachment of the Naniwa Company's factory and plant at the suit of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha has already been announced by telegram. The Asahi Company of Osaka seems to be in equally bad plight. It has not been able to declare any dividend for the first half of the current year, or to pay the interest on its borrowed capital, which amounts to a quarter of a million yen. It has therefore been obliged to hand over its Hiroshima branch factory as security for the interest. The Tokiwa Company, also of Osaka, is said to be threatened with an action by a foreign firm which procured machinery to the value of 160,000 yen by order of the firm. It would appear that the cotton-spinning industry in Japan has been developed too impetuously.

Marquis Ito says that he is sincerely anxious for the success of the present Cabinet. He has been so badgered and abused for handing over the administration to the party politicians, that if they make a failure he does not care to think what form the indignation of his critics may take. The enemies of the Marquis will probably snatch at that statement as a proof that he is running away to China to escape the reaping of the whirlwind. But no one has hinted at anything of the kind thus far. It is indeed most significant that no publicist has found anything but praise for Marquis Ito in this crisis. If to have avoided condemnation be any evidence that he chose a wise course, he may fairly feel satisfied. The Asahi Shimbun gives him a great send-off. Other statesmen, it says, have been content, on going out of office, to build detached villas and sit down to enjoy the fruits gathered while in power. But the Marquis, though approaching the confines of old age, preserves the spirit of a student, and is eager for new work and a fresh field of usefulness. He will find it in China. The Chinese know him, and, if they will listen to any man, he is the man. He will speak plainly and tell them that the basis of national strength is international intercourse. He may be able to get their politicians and students to visit Japan. They know themselves well enough, but they know nothing of others.

It is thought that signs of a change in the current of trade are becoming apparent. The excess of imports during this year has reached the enormous figure of 85 million yen, but it can hardly continue in the face of the extreme reluctance of Japanese middle-men to take over goods. There are enormous quantities of goods stored now in foreign warehouses. Probably such a plethora never before existed. But the demand for foreign rice, which alone is responsible for over 30 millions of the imports, has sensibly diminished, and since the climatic conditions at present suggest the probability of a fine crop, Japanese buyers are likely to hesitate before pledging themselves as to future shipments. Meanwhile, the apprehensions felt two months ago as to the pernicious effects of the war have not been realized. Sales of tea go on briskly; the silk trade is booming, and altogether a prospect presents itself that something like equilibrium may be established in the country's foreign commerce.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Count Itagaki seems to have thrown himself heart and soul into the cause of prison reform. He could not have taken up a worthier object. Some of the vernacular journals recommend him to make sweeping changes in the personnel of prison officials. It seems to us that such a step would be to begin at the wrong end. It is not the unfortunate officials that are to blame: it is the system. Until the Central Government takes the control of the prisons into its own hands, there can be no satisfactory reform. Count Itagaki may well be zealous about this matter. We do not mean simply that a reform of the kind is calculated to appeal to a man of his high instincts. We mean that he is directly responsible for the present unhappy condition of the provincial jails. But for the opposition offered by the Liberal Party under his leadership, the jails would have passed under the control of the Central Government years ago.

JAPANESE FACTS AND COMMENTS.

According to vernacular papers, a report dated the 22nd ultimo has been received from Mr. Homma, a representative in New York of the Central Tea Dealers' Council. It states that tea merchants in New York affirm that the demand for Japanese teas will not suffer any decrease or be affected by the new tax. Retailers have hitherto been enabled to realize large profits, and the imposition of the 10 cents tax will chiefly have the effect of diminishing their gains, the effect upon consumers in general being only slight. Japanese dealers need not entertain any anxiety.

The construction of Waterworks in Tokyo has been in progress for several years, and the supply for three districts—Kanda, Nihonbashi, and Shiba—was recently completed, while Shitaya, and Asakusa will also be provided for almost immediately. Azabu, Akasaka, Kojimachi, and Koishikawa have not made much progress, and Fukagawa, and Honjo are just completing their preparations for commencing work. The delay in the arrival of piping from abroad has considerably obstructed the progress of the enterprise. The whole work is expected to be completed by the end of the year, but the supply of water will not be undertaken, according to the Shogyo, until the end of next year.

Mr. Hosokawa Yujirô, a member of the Financial Association, is reported by the Keizai Zasshi to have pointed out, at the ordinary meeting of the Society in June, the disparity noticeable in statistics of currency in Japan compiled respectively by the Finance Department, the Bank of Japan, and the Tokyo Banks' Assembly Hall. He urged the necessity of securing uniformity in statistics of coin and paper circulation. The proposal was approved by the Association, and a special committee was appointed to investigate the matter. The coins and notes which at present are legal tender are—new and old coins, government and bank paper, convertible notes, subsidiary silver, nickel, and copper pieces, subsidiary old copper coins and notes of the lowest denominations. The new and old gold pieces are the standard coins, but with the system of convertible notes carried out as at present, the currency of the country consists chiefly of paper and subsidiaries, gold being seldom used. As for subsidiaries, their amount will steadily increase in consequence of exchanged yen pieces being converted into them. A portion of the 1 yen and 2 yen paper is to be withdrawn, and paper of 5 yen denomination will be substituted, another portion being supplied by subsidiary coins. The subsidiaries, therefore, are a factor not to be regarded with indifference. They will directly affect the prices of commodities, the circulation of money, and the expansion of trade.

Discussing the question of new sources of revenue, the Nippon advocates the increase of the saké tax, and the prohibition of the monopoly of alcohol and the brewing of mixed saké, the amount to be realized by the proposed measure being estimated at from 15 to 20 million yen. The taxation of sugar requires a special conference with the treaty powers, but if carried out, would secure at least 8 million yen more revenue. Lastly, Income and Trades Taxes may be made to augment the revenue by 7 million yen. If this be still insufficient to meet requirements, recourse may be had to quite a new form of taxation, namely, the imposition of taxes on house lots. The Government may also take steps to increase the Registration and Stamp Taxes, and will be justified in augmenting the Land Tax to a certain extent.

The Finance Department publishes figures concerning the trade for June, which show that the exports totalled yen 13,083,616, and the imports yen 29,195,516. The quantities of rice and coal exported from various ports during the first half of this year are as follows:—

Ports.	Coal. Tons.	Value. Yen.	Rice. Tons.	Value. Yen.
Shimonoseki...	181,835	1,269,300	40,320	255,440
Moji	403,383	2,786,610	47,880	294,588
Karatsu.....	13,920	69,600	—	—
Kuchinotsu ...	117,287	790,316	—	—
Moriuau	27,287	210,359	—	—
Otaru.....	8,150	56,300	—	—
Total	752,315	5,182,485	88,200	550,028

The import of rice during the same period is said to have aggregated yen 3,9524,404.

The Jiji comments on the steps taken by foreign firms with reference to native merchants who have been unable to take delivery of goods for which they had contracted. The imposition of a daily interest of three sen per 100 yen appears to have produced in the minds of Japanese merchants the impression that so long as they pay interest on their goods, they are not under obligation to take delivery until they deem fit. Thus they are inclined to keep their merchandise in foreign warehouses, affording greater security and advantage, until such time as a favourable market offers. In short, the recent action of foreigners, remarks the Jiji, will result in their "choking themselves with their own hands."

The Railway Bureau has determined, according to vernacular papers, to inaugurate a system of special delivery from the 1st August in Tokyo, Yokohama, Nagoya, Kyoto, Osaka, and Kobe. Special goods vans are to be run every night from Tokyo and Kobe, so that goods may be delivered to consignees in the towns mentioned within two days. There is no doubt that the new system will have the effect of decreasing, to a certain extent, the complaints hitherto raised against the Railway Bureau for delay in the transmission of luggage. Small parcels have hitherto been entrusted, in most cases, to the express companies for transmission, but as these companies had to wait till they accumulated goods enough to fill a van specially chartered by them the system proved by no means convenient. It is said this special system of transmission will also be adopted on the Tokai and Hokuroku lines so soon as necessary arrangements have been completed. The weight of parcels to be transported under the new system is limited to 50 pounds, but a whole car may be hired on special terms. The following are the general rules connected with the new system:—(1) Parcels for speedy transmission will be charged the following rates of freight:—For 100 miles, 40 sen; for 150 miles, 45 sen; for 200 miles, 50 sen; for 250 miles, 55 sen; for 300 miles, 60 sen; for 500 miles, 70 sen. (2) The articles enumerated below and others similar in nature will not be eligible for speedy transmission:—Raw silk, cocoons, silk textiles, raw hemp or flax, agar-agar, wooden boxes, straw braid, straw, leaf tobacco, weaving machines, children's cars, caps and hats, paper, living birds and beasts, and snake gourds. These articles, however, will be accepted at double rates. Dangerous substances and valuable articles will not be transmitted. (3) Articles for speedy transmission will be delivered at the residence of the consignee in the districts defined by the Transport Departments. For delivery beyond the limits of such a district additional fees must be paid. (4) Parcels of all descriptions must be properly packed, and two wooden tickets bearing the name and address of both the sender and consignee must be affixed.

At a meeting of the Old Schoolmates' Club connected with the Tokyo Semmon Gakko, Count Okuma is said to have spoken as follows:—"I have with pleasure received many kind expressions regarding myself from the managers of the Club, but these expressions have only made me blush. I have often entered the Cabinet, but my political career, I confess, has been a career of complete failure. Things have not turned out as I wished, and my past history has been a repetition of bunglings. Things, however, have now taken a different turn, and I have been called upon to organise a new Ministry. Despite the failures which my personal history shows, I am fully convinced that the ideal which I have hitherto entertained was noble and ought to be carried into effect sooner or later. In my ideal, the subject of education stands prominently. It is the foundation of the State and the key to the development of the people. The progress Japan has made up to the present is the result of education. Unhappily, however, the common education of Japan is crippled by a deficiency of teachers to the extent of over 8,000; while a similar drawback is also noticeable in middle school instruction. Of all policies that require immediate attention at present, the policy of education is the most important. I have determined to steadily carry this principle into practice."

According to the Nippon, the transactions of the various banks and companies in Yokohama during the 1st half of this year do not show any serious falling off as compared with the latter half of last year. The following comparative table may be of interest:—

	Dividend for the latter half of 1897. Per cent. per annum.		Dividend for the 1st half of this year. Per cent.
2nd	6 5	.....	6
74th	12	.....	6
Yokohama	6	.....	6
Yokohama Boyeki	7 5	.....	8
Wakao	1 25	.....	(none)
Sanshi (Sericultural)	11	.....	10*
Kigyo (Industrial)	7	.....	10
Commercial	10	.....	8
Musashi Commercial	9	.....	8*
Yokohama Savings	12	.....	12
Kinko Savings	6	.....	6
Yokohama Five Staples Exchange...	40	.....	20
Four Commodities Exchange	8	.....	(none)
Rice, salt, and other Miscellaneous Articles Exchange	(none).....		20
Merchandise Exchange	(none).....		(none)
Yokohama Fire Insurance Co.	4	.....	5*
Wharf Company	10	.....	10*
Electric Light Company	8	.....	8*
Central Warehousing Co. ...	10	.....	13
Commercial Warehousing Company	4.2	.....	6*
Japan Tobacco Company ...	(none).....		10
Yokohama Joint Stock Miscl. Merchandise Company ...	(none).....		(none)

* estimated.

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SOME KOREAN JOTTING.

The Sōul Independent of July 9th, contains but a brief note on the recent trial of Constable O'Neil, of the British Legation. The case was tried by Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Crown Advocate of Shanghai, who acted as Assistant Judge, and he had for jury Messrs. Kenmure, Emberly, Hodge, Murdoch, and Hay. The Governor of Sōul, Hon. Ye Chaiyen, was present throughout the trial. No pains were spared to get at the truth of the case, says our contemporary, and the witnesses, including the brother of the deceased, were subjected to the fairest and fullest examination. The result was that O'Neil was discharged after the jury had brought in a verdict of not guilty. The trial, which began at 9.30 a.m., concluded about 8 o'clock at night.

The tri-weekly English journal issued at Sōul very tersely dismisses a memorial that several Confucian scholars have been endeavouring to present at the new Palace gate. This document, says our contemporary, in fulsome terms of exaggerated eulogy and with many stale quotations from Chinese classics, prays His Majesty to marry again. The national calmities such as Tonghaks, Christianity, floods, droughts, famines, are all attributed to the fact that His Majesty remains a widower. In case His Majesty is not willing to marry again, the memorialists beg that Lady Um should be promoted to the position of Empress, following the example of certain Chinese emperors of great renown."

We in Japan have had more minute details of the recent plot to compel the Emperor of Korea to abdicate, than the Sōul Independent has been able to obtain. Indeed, on the 12th July, it was still only able to say, "we shall promptly inform our readers as soon as we have reliable news." But all the same, it read the Emperor a homily upon the subject, concluding in this fashion :—

> We hope the conspiracy just detected will open the eyes of His Majesty to the dangers of the situation. By dismissing his evil councillors and repealing bad laws our gracious Emperor will soon find out that the safety of his person and permanency of his dynasty can be best secured, not by battalions of hired bayonets but by the love and loyalty of his people. The surest means of eradicating conspiracies is to give no cause for their existence.

From an Imperial decree issued on July 5th, it will be noted that the Korean army is to be increased to "ten battalions for the time being." The decree continues :—"Until the Finance Department shall have ample means to defray the expenses for the enlarged army, the Household Department will for a few years bear the responsibility of its maintenance. Though circumstances have prevented Us from creating a naval force, its absence is a cause of regret. Let the Department of War take into mature consideration the question of a standing navy for Korea, its size, its organization and its means of support."

A vernacular paper published in Sōul reports that over $700,000 have already been spent in building the new Palace : and that at least $200 000 more are needed to finish it. Though The Independent cannot accept these figures with implicit faith, it says there is no room for doubting that the Palace is being built at a cost which the famished condition of the country does not warrant.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Sōul, July 16th.

Shortly after the 4th inst. it was noticed that the Imperial Guards around the Palace were strengthened very perceptibly. Rumours commenced to circulate that the Emperor was much disquieted. The outside world, however, had as yet no information of the reasons of the perturbation of those in and around the Palace. On the 9th and 10th inst. there were a number of arrests in high official circles, and reports that several who were very much desired had "skipped." One of the latter was General An Kyengsu, a man prominent in official and commercial circles. Among those arrested mention may be made of Min Yong-jun, the court favourite four years ago, and the most influential man in the kingdom at the time, a man whose mal-administration was the direct cause of the uprising of the Tonghaks and the war between Japan and China that followed. Pak Chun-yang, ex Minister to Washington and ex-Minister of several important Cabinet portfolios, a man whose official career has always, so report among his people hath it, been honourable and patriotic; two ex-Commissioners of Police, who manifested great zeal in reforms during the period they held office and who did great good to the people. Fourteen men, it is said, were wanted ; eleven of whom have been arrested and at once handed over to the Supreme Court for trial.

The cause of the arrests, it is now found, is due to a circular which might well be called "The Blue Day Book," issued by "The Young Men's Patriotic Association." This society,—if indeed it can be called a society, or has any existence outside of one or two men—flooded the city with circulars calling upon the people to ask the Emperor to resign in favour of the Crown Prince and to go into dignified retirement, inasmuch as the burdens he had carried during the past thirty-five years were too great and were endangering the sacred health of the Emperor. The Emperor, it is safe to say, fails to see things in the same light as this "Patriotic Association" does, and the probability is that the originators of the scheme, when found out, will rusticate on some of the outlying islands of the Korean archipelago, and they may congratulate themselves if they get off so easily.

The zeal manifested in rooting out this new danger to the peace of Daihan is interesting—almost pathetic. Any organization that has to do with young men is ferretted out and overhauled. It is therefore not surprising that the Epworth League, which in Korea is called "Young People's Society," was pounced upon as an institution endangering the welfare of the state. Its committee, it is needless to say, had no difficulty in explaining their position as a religious organization.

The Independent, with great boldness, points out the real cause of this dissatisfaction among the people, of which the circular may be taken as something of an expression. It says that the last two years not only failed to mark any advancement in the reforms inaugurated but witnessed a decided return to old ways of oppression and methods of extorting money : "Imperial inspectors, illegal taxes, monopolies, departmental agents, miners, soldiers, corrupt judges, grabbing magistrates, highway robbers, etc., have been busily engaged in making the very life a torment in this fair land."

The rains began the latter part of June, rather earlier than usual. There has been a heavy rainfall the last fortnight, though the weather is now more settled.

The Hon. Mr. Kato, the Japanese Minister, has been quite ill for some time with fever, if your correspondent is correctly informed. Mrs. Kato, likewise, has been confined to the house for the past several months.

The Independent "obtained through the mail" a copy of the circular of the "Young Men's Patriotic Association" which has caused such a rumpus in Sōul. It does not translate it in full, contenting itself with extracts. "His Sacred Majesty," says the circular, "has reigned thirty-five years. Inheriting the great estate of his ancestors, and appreciating the love of his people, our Emperor has "thirst" after a good government. But failing to secure the service of able ministers His Majesty has in control and manage everything in domestic and foreign affairs. He is constantly worried and anxious. * * * Crowds of evil men darken his vision and bewilder his mind. * * * The excess of sorrow and labor are endangering his sacred health. Can his subjects help feeling concerned about his person? In order to preserve the imperial health and to prolong the imperial life, His Majesty should resign his great office to the Crown Prince, to strengthen the foundation of the imperial family and to advance the welfare of the State. * * * Several persons desired to memorialize the Throne representing to His Majesty the universal wishes of the people. But crafty and evil men, by deceiving His Majesty, have falsely accused the good and loyal."

A good many "growls" have lately been indulged in over the slow progress of the Sōul-Chemulpho railway, and the Independent has been induced to insert, at the request of a friend of the Company, Kipling's famous quatrain :—

> Now, it is not good for the Christian's health to hustle the Aryan brown,
> For the Christian tries, and th' Aryan smiles and he weareth the Christian down ;
> And the end of the fight is a tombstone white, with name of the late deceased,
> And the epitaph drear : "A fool lies here who tried to hustle the East."

The Korean Emperor has been administering a snub to the Independence Club. While thanking them for a recent memorial, he caused to be written—"You should not discuss rashly the affairs of the Government without being in (official) positions."

This memorial, by the way, had been signed by 600 members of the Club. On receiving the above answer, these 600, together with 700 more, subscribed another memorial and sent that into the Palace. In this document they calmly tell their Sovereign that he doesn't quite know what he's talking about, and quote the saying of the great commentator Juhui, who declared : "Even a low common subject has it within his duty to make his sovereign good and great, and the people happy and prosperous"; and then added :—"It is also written in the Book of Odes, 'Ask wood-cutters or grass-mowers for counsels.'" Altogether the Club thinks it has scored off the Emperor.

A Korean newspaper of Sōul stated on the 15th inst. that Messrs. Min Yongjoon and Pak Jungyang were confined in cells, whipped and tortured. A note from Gen. Greathouse, the Adviser of the Law Department, informs the Independent that the story above mentioned is altogether groundless. "You can," says the General, "deny the story in toto, as there is not an atom of truth in it. The fact is Mr. Min is in a very comfortable and large room in the main court-building with open doors, etc. Mr. Pak has also a comfortable room in the yard near the main building with open doors." In regard to the rumour that the prisoners were maltreated, the Adviser has this to say :—"A moment ago I went to the rooms of each and asked the accused if they had been whipped or maltreated in any way, and they said 'No.' I showed the newspaper report and they said it was all untrue. Of course. I knew before I asked them there was no truth in the newspaper report, but thought it proper to investigate."

The Independent declares that the "Young Men's Patriotic Association" has turned out to be "an airy nothing" with "no local habitation."

The appointment of Mr. Cho Pyengsik to the position of the Vice-President of the Council of State has, it is said, excited much indignation among Koreans, and the Independence Club has naturally taken advantage of the occasion to send "a nasty letter" to Mr. Cho.

CHINA NEWS.

According to the P. & T. Times, Sir Robert Hart had been 12 years cooped up in Peking before he took a holiday last month at Pei-tai-ho.

Drowning fatalities are very frequent at Shanghai this year. The latest victim of the treacherous Whampoa is Andrew Harper, ship's cook of H. M. S. Phœnix, who slipped into the river from a sampan as he was stepping on to his ship's gangway after leave ashore.

Mr. J. S. Fearon, Chairman of the Municipal Council, has returned to Shanghai from Peking, and confirms the statement that the extension of the Settlement, as asked for by the foreign community of Shanghai, will undoubtedly be conceded. The matter is now in the hands of the British and U. S. Consul-Generals, who are expected to settle the matter with the local authorities. Failing them, it will go back to Peking for settlement.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Colonel Denby, the retiring American Minister at Peking, filled that post for 13 years—a long term indeed for his country's diplomatic service.

Naturally the incident caused the local poet to blossom forth. Here are two of his verses :—

For the men-of war sailors they (the mob) cared not a jot,
Volunteers and police incommoded them not ;
But like sensible men they determined to yield,
When the 12-BORE IRREGULARS came on the field !

It was not their costume, their size, or their gait ;
It was not their guns, which were often held straight ;
It was not the fifty refills in their pokes ;
'Twas the glare in the eyes of brave Councillor S———!

A foolhardy attempt, says the N. C. Daily News, was recently made by a European who was formerly employed as an officer in one of the local steamship companies, to row from Shanghai to the Kintoan Light-ship in a small boat. He was successful until he arrived opposite Block House Island when his boat capsized, and he was thrown into the water. Being a strong swimmer he kept himself afloat for nine hours, when he drifted on to House Island in an exhausted condition and badly sunburnt. The natives provided him with clothes and afterwards put him on board the Kintoan Light-ship, whence he will return to Shanghai.

A correspondent writing to a Shanghai contemporary from Paotung-fu, under date July 7, says :—

Yesterday at about six o'clock p.m. two captains and several soldiers belonging to a body of troops recently arrived from the province of Kansu went to the Roman Catholic Mission in the north suburb of this city and asked permission to enter and view the compound. On being refused admittance they made a row and beat one of the attendants, whereupon the Catholics seized the two captains and dragged them into the compound and shortly afterwards sent them to the yamên of the magistrate in the city. Not many hours afterwards more soldiers appeared from the camp to enquire about their comrades. On being told what had occurred they returned to the camp, secured an armed mob of other soldiers and returned to wreak their vengeance on the premises and the occupants. One Chinese preacher was badly wounded about the head and a French priest, Père Dumont, was beaten, seized, bound, and dragged to the camp, and the Mission premises were badly smashed up. The magistrate on hearing of the disturbance went to the camp and secured the unfortunate priest and took him off to the yamên. The French priests, three in number, are now stopping in the city. The occurrence has been reported to the French Minister at Peking and we are awaiting the outcome. No disturbance have occurred at the other Missions.

The Shanghai papers to hand by the French mail contain long accounts of the riots that arose in the French Settlement, Shanghai, in consequence of the French Municipal Council's resolving to efface the insanitary Ningpo Joss-House. The land on which it stands has long been wanted for urgent public improvements and the French offered a fair price as compensation. Every facility, and indeed encouragement, was offered to the parties interested to remove coffins or bodies, which it had been the disgraceful custom to deposit in the area named, pending removal to the parish or district in which the departed were born; but the notification was disregarded. Saturday June 16th, was the last day, and the French Municipality, resolving to take no half measures, set about the task of obliterating what has been held to be a pestilence-breeding institution. As we heard by cable, these proceedings evoked strenuous opposition on the part of the Ningpo men living in Shanghai, and landing parties from the French cruiser Eclaireur, the M.M. Oceanien, and the Italian cruiser Marco Polo came ashore to assist the local police forces. By Sunday morning things had come to such a pass that the marines had to fire into the mob with rifles and a machine gun, fifteen persons falling dead and many receiving injuries. This action struck consternation into the rioters and stone-throwers and for the rest of the day comparative quiet reigned. The French Consul General, in view of further developments then sent for help—in case of need—from the larger settlement, and in answer to the call the Volunteers turned out and were paraded on the race-course. At midnight there were altogether on duty 150 men from the Marco Polo, 90 from the Eclaireur, 50 police, and 110 Volunteers, in addition to a number of civilians ready to be called on at a moment's notice, while the bridges over the Yangkingpang were held by fully armed Sikh police. During Sunday several "expresses" were issued by the Ningpo Guild, advising the men to maintain peace and quietness, as the matter had been referred to negotiators—Lo Taotai of Soochow and Count Bezaure, the French Consul-General—and the Shanghai Magistrate also sent out a "six-metrical proclamation." This, as translated by the N.-C. Daily News, ran :—

The affairs of the Ningpo prefecture guildhouse,
Have been repeatedly conferred upon ;
It seems that the guildhouse can be saved entirely,
While some other arrangement must be made respecting the cemetery.
Now you people of Ningpo prefecture,
Ought to leave matters to your officials and gentry to settle.
By no means get excited and stir up trouble,
But let each man go about his avocations in peace,
As to those who are not concerned in this matter.
Be very careful how you congregate for the purpose of sight-seeing.
If there should be fighting you may be accidentally hurt,
And this trouble you have brought upon yourselves.
I have always known you Ningpo people
To be clear-headed and to know the principles of justice.
You know our Emperor is always anxious to bestow kindness on strangers from afar,
And you must hence act and conserve the Imperial wishes.
As for myself, your Magistrate, I love my people ;
I have never swerved from this principle.
I do not hesitate therefore to earnestly exhort you
To one and all give heed to my words.

By Monday night affairs had quieted down considerably, the troops were withdrawn, the volunteers thanked, and the N.-C Daily News was able to announce on Tuesday morning :—It was stated on the best authority last night that the trouble was settled on the basis of the temporary repairing of the wall of the cemetery, three months being allowed for the removal of the coffins and the handing over of the cemetery to the French Municipality.

GERMAN NEWS.

Professor Koch, that indefatigable investigator, recently paid a visit to German East Africa to study the subject of tropical malaria. Experimenting with cattle attacked by Texas fever, he found that he could infect sound cattle with ticks taken from diseased, and that by inoculating with the ova of ticks taken from diseased cattle he could confer immunity on healthy beasts. His further researches led to the following remarkable conclusions :—

Malaria offered many points of resemblance to Texas fever, and in the case of human disease mosquitoes probably played the part which ticks played in the cattle disease. It was found that wherever there were mosquitoes there was malaria, and wherever, as in the case of a small island on the German East African coast, there were no mosquitoes there was also no malaria. He had taken occasion to follow closely the course of cases of tropical malaria in which the use of quinine was dispensed with. He found that, contrary to the view hitherto accepted, the cases where quinine was not used showed that in malaria as in other fevers the readings of temperature followed a curve to a definite course. Moreover, it had been found possible by a microscopic examination of the blood of the patient to discover from the nature of the microbes it contained the precise stage of the development of the disease. This would be of the greatest importance, since everything depended upon the administration of quinine either shortly before the attack or very shortly after it. It would ultimately, he thought, be possible to administer quinine in a rational manner and so to avoid the injurious consequences of the quinine treatment. Quinine taken at the proper juncture undoubtedly stopped the malarial fever. It did so, not by killing the germs, but by arresting their growth. A rational and scientific employment of quinine, combined with the establishment of health resorts in the mountains, would rob tropical fever of many of its terrors. Professor Koch further discussed what is designated in German Schwarzwasserfieber. According to his view this fever is not connected with malaria at all, but is the result in all probability of the quinine treatment. In any event, there was no case of this fever in which it could be safely asserted that quinine poisoning was not present.

As to the possibility of securing immunity from malaria, he called attention to the fact that whole native tribes seemed to be proof against the infection. But if a natural immunity existed it was reasonable to hope that an artificial one might be created. It had been observed, for example, that persons who had suffered from malaria and had made a gradual and slow recovery without the aid of quinine often acquired entire immunity from the disease. In order that progress should be made in combating the ravages of malaria, it was indispensable that doctors trained in bacteriology and in the use of the microscope should be sent to East Africa. The administration of quinine by non-professional hands was a great mistake. If science were one day to cope successfully with this disease it would facilitate the prosperous development of some of the most fruitful districts in the world.

At the recent elections in Germany the Socialists polled about two millions of votes. In 1871, the number was only 101,927. The figures are very significant. Whatever we may think of the Socialist doctrine, the movement seems to be steadily gaining strength in Germany at all events.

It is curious to observe that the alarm felt in Germany about the contingency of a large addition to the Socialist members of the Reichstag was based, not on the advantage that the Socialists themselves might take of their strengthened position, but on the capital which the Government might make out of it for the purpose of uniting other factions to bring about a retrogressive constitutional change. The Socialists, people said, are able and persistent critics in the interests of justice and liberty, but if they become a numerically powerful phalanx in the Reichstag, the Government might be able to work on the fears of other sections so as to secure the abolition of universal suffrage.

The presence of a strong German force in Manila Bay is regarded by at least one German journal as an indication that Germany means to have a point d'appui in the Philippines. That forecast is based on the supposition that America will not annex the islands, but that they will pass under the control of a native republic. If would then be necessary, we read, to establish a firm barrier against the lawlessness of the natives. With reference to this interesting subject, we quote from The Times Berlin correspondence of June 16th :—

The comments of the German Press upon the concentration of German naval forces in the neighbourhood of Manila afford interesting material for a study of the methods of certain German journals. The Post complains that the intentions of the German Government are misrepresented, and speaks of "falsifications on the part of English telegraph agencies in the transmission of news." I must really beg leave to point out that the suggestion of German territorial designs in the Philippine Islands was first made by German and not by English or American journals or news agencies. In The Times of Wednesday I quoted the Berlin Marine-politische Correspondenz, which quite openly advocated the occupation of a harbour in the Philippines. In these circumstances, it is simply puerile on the part of the Post and its Berlin contemporaries to complain that the intentions of the

Digitized by Google UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN Original from German Government are being misrepresented abroad.

It is worth nothing and remembering that the Post to-day disclaims all "desires for conquest and occupation" on behalf of the German Government. The aim of that Government, we are assured, is "only to protect effectively its subjects in foreign lands and to maintain with energy German interests that are in any way menaced." The North-German Gazette, however, does not offer any explanation of the "naval demonstration" before Manila on its own account, it simply quotes a telegram of the Cologne Gazette from Madrid, which says that, according to trustworthy information, all the conjectures of the Spanish Press and of political circles in Spain regarding an intention on the part of Germany to abandon her neutrality in the question of the Philippines are entirely unfounded. "In official Spanish circles the arrival of German ships of war at Manila is regarded as quite natural since great German interests there demand protection."

Instead of any disclaimer directly inspired from Berlin, the German official telegraph agency publishes the following despatch from Washington:—

"Articles in foreign journals which ascribe to Germany the intention of intervening in the Philippine Islands awaken in the minds of the authorities here the belief that some power or other is secretly endeavouring to sow dissension between the United States and Germany with the object of promoting its own interests. The declaration of the Emperor with regard to the neutrality of Germany is recalled, and it is acknowledged that it is impossible to doubt the sincerity of that declaration. The Department of the Secretary of State has received an official communication to the effect that the rumour that Germany would raise the question of the Philippines is unfounded. The German ships of war, it was further stated, had gone to Manila for the sole purpose of protecting subjects of the German Empire and German property."

Why, one must again ask, does not the official telegraph agency condemn the statements of the Berlin Marinepolitische Correspondenz instead of attacking "foreign journals?" The Marinepolitische Correspondenz, which is notoriously in touch with German official circles, and in particular with the German Admiralty, used the following words:—"For the same reasons which justificed us in demanding the cession of a harbour from China we must claim one from the 'Republic of the Philippines,' which, to all appearance, will be the issue of the present development of affairs."

The Cologne Gazette says that should Rear-Admiral Dewey leave Aguinaldo to complete the work of conquest alone in the Philippines, "he would forfeit his legitimate excuse for an intervention of his own in the development of the future fortunes of the islands." The same journal, speaking of the Government of the United States, writes:—"An Administration which is so corrupt and at the mercy of the most pernicious personal influences as that of the Union will hardly be able to repair the ravages which have been wrought by Spanish neglect and by priestly rule in the course of centuries. The citizens of the most free Republic do not yet seem to realize the enormous burdens which the military occupation of colonies and their protection by a navy impose upon a State. The Americans are not even prepared to protect their own coasts against a naval Power of any importance." The contingency contemplated in Berlin seems to be that if Manila falls, and if the Americans are not able to undertake responsibility for the safety of German life and property, Vice-Admiral von Diedrichs will land a force from the German ships. That step once taken, German interests would assume a new complexion.

A demonstration of the absurdity of the duel in Germany has been afforded by a case which was tried the other day before a Berlin Court, remarks a Berlin correspondent of an English paper. A law student named Hans von Flemming, who had already once failed to pass his examination for the Bar, again presented himself last February before the examiners for the viva voce examination. The chief examiner, the President of the Judicial Senate, Dr. von Coing, informed him in the presence of three other candidates that he had again failed. Upon this Herr von Flemming, with a contemptuous smile took up his books and immediately left the room, loudly slamming the door behind him," instead of waiting, as etiquette prescribed, for the announcement of the result of the examination of his three fellow students. On the following day he appears to have repented of his fit of temper and called upon Dr. von Coing in order to ask the President of the Senate to use his influence with the Minister of Justice to obtain permission for him to come up for the examination a third time. Dr. von Coing replied that "the unbecoming behaviour" of the student on the previous day rendered such an application out of the question. Herr von Flemming thereupon admitted that "he had, it was true, intended to show his disrespect to the examiners," but at the same time he refused to admit that his behaviour had been improper. Dr. von Coing replied that, whatever the opinion of the student might be "no gentleman would have behaved as he had done." Regarding the words of the President as a personal insult, Herr von Flamming, after some preliminary attempts at negotiations, sent his cousin, a lieutenant in the army, with a challenge to Dr. von Coing, who very properly put the matter in the hands of the Public Prosecutor. The result of the trial was that Herr von Flemming was sentenced to four months' incarceration in a fortress.

The German Emperor has conferred upon the Berlin police a decoration to be worn on their helmets, with the inscription "Steadfast in Loyalty" and the dates 1848 and 1898, and has at the same time presented his portrait in oils to the Berlin President of Police.

The British Consul General at Hamburg, in his report for the past year, mentions that German export trade to South Africa, which passes chiefly through Hamburg, was less in 1897 than in the preceding year. The decline is attributed to the continued prevalence of the cattle plague and to the long drought last year in South Africa, which had the effect of reducing the crops considerably and diminishing the consuming power of the population. The decrease in the shipments from Hamburg to the Cape Colony, and also to the Transvaal, last year was especially noticeable in the export of chemicals, iron manufactures, machinery, and beer. But though there were complaints as to the trade with the Transvaal, the business between Hamburg and the latter has developed in a remarkable way during the past seven years. In 1891 the Transvaal imports to Hamburg were valued at only £1,956, and in 1896 at £33,048; while the German exports to the Transvaal increased from £2,150 in 1891 to £304,053 in 1896. The imports are gold and silver ore, and sheep's wool, while the main exports are prussiate of potash, rifles and ammunition, explosives, machinery, iron manufactures, furniture, beer, and cigars, as well as a number of other German industrial products. The chief promoter of trade between Germany and South-East Africa has been the Hamburg East African line of steamers, which is supported by a Government subsidy granted on condition of the company running its steamers monthly to this part of Africa. In addition reduced rates are granted on the German State railways to goods consigned on through bills of lading from inland towns in Germany via Hamburg and forwarded by this line of steamers. These arrangements have been mainly instrumental in introducing German goods to the South African Republic, and other parts of South-East Africa.

The list of honours which have been bestowed by the German Emperor on the tenth anniversary of his accession is a very long one and presents several interesting features, says The Times. As if to emphasize the feelings of confidence and of personal gratitude which he entertains towards the aged Chancellor, Prince Hohenlohe, the Emperor has decorated him with the star of a Grand Commander of the Order of the House of Hohenzollern. The highest Prussian Order, the Black Eagle, which Prince Hohenlohe has long possessed, has been conferred upon the Ambassador in St. Petersburg, Prince Radolin, who was formerly Chief Marshal of the Court of the Emperor Frederick; upon the Minister of the Royal House, Herr von Wedel, and upon Chief President of the Province of West Prussia, Dr. von Gossler, the former Minister of Public Instruction. At the head of a list of honours conferred upon officers of the navy there further appears the announcement that the Black Eagle has been bestowed upon Admiral von Knorr, the chief in command of this branch of the service. Many of the other distinctions which are announced have a personal interest in being bestowed upon men of greater or less eminence who have been closely associated with the career of the Emperor. Dr. Hinzpeter, who was one of his Majesty's tutors, is promoted a step in the official hierarchy and becomes a privy councillor of the first class. Dr. Vogt, the director of the gymnasium at Cassel, where the Emperor was educated, receives the Order of the Crown of the second class, and Dr. Guessfeldt, who first attracted the Emperor's attention to the charms of Norway as a holiday resort, and the painter Professor Saltzmann, who, like Dr. Guessfeldt, always accompanies the Emperor on his voyages in northern waters, are respectively decorated with the third class of the Orders of the Red Eagle and of the Crown. A certain political significance may, perhaps, be attached to the bestowal of the title of Excellency upon Count Dönhoff-Friedrichstein, one of the few Conservatives who voted for the ratification of commercial treaty with Russia and braved the wrath of the Agrarians when they endeavoured to oust him from his seat in the Reichstag.

But perhaps the most interesting and significant act of the Emperor on the present occasion is his announcement that he recognizes the high importance of technical education by nominating Professor Slaby, of the Technical College at Charlottenburg, Professor Launhardt, of the Technical College at Hanover, and Professor Intze, of the Technical College at Aix-la-Chapelle, to be life members of the Upper House of the Prussian Diet. While Professor Slaby was delivering his lecture at Charlottenburg this morning he was interrupted by the receipt of a telegram from the Emperor, which he proceeded to read to his class. It was in the following terms:—

"In recognition of the importance which technical knowledge has acquired at the end of our century, and in profound respect for the exact sciences in general, I wish to confer upon the Technical College of Charlottenburg a seat and a vote in the Herrenhaus, and nominate you as the most fit person to be its representative.—William, I.R."

Professor Slaby, addressing the students, expressed his sense of the significance of the step which the Emperor had taken in conferring upon the technical colleges the rights of representation in the Upper House of the Prussian Diet, a privilege which the Universities had long enjoyed. On the invitation of their teacher the students enthusiastically gave three cheers for the Emperor.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The 15th of August will be observed at the Chinese Legation, Tokyo, as the birthday of His Majesty the Emperor of China.

On the 26th inst. at 2 p.m., a sand-hill in Ishikawa, Nakamura, collapsed, and one of the coolies working at its foot was killed by the falling sand.

Mr. Asada, Governor of Kanagawa Prefecture, on the 27th inst. visited Miura, Kamakura, and Kozu to investigate facts concerning the dysentery epidemic prevailing there.

A private letter from an American naval officer at Manila says that the thermometer there has never gone above 92°, and the climate is perfect.

It is understood at Washington that Mr. N. W. Mohrer, late Consul-General of the United States at Kanagawa, will be one of the board of

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Commissioners to be sent to the Hawaiian islands by the U.S. Government to frame the laws for the new U.S. possession.

On the 22nd inst. at 11 p.m. fire broke out at Tago, Saunobe-gori, Awomori Prefecture. Over 200 buildings, including the post office, schools, and police station, were destroyed.

The P. & O. steamer Japan brought to Kobe £750,000 in gold bars for the Japanese Government. The bars were transferred at Hongkong from the P. & O. steamer Coromandel.

Lieut. Gaunt, of H.M.S. Narcissus, acting Governor at Wei-hai-wei, has been promoted to the rank of commander. By-the-way, his government of England's latest "out-post" is described in a Shanghai paper as being of the variety known as "benevolent despotism."

The Police Inspectors in Kanagawa Prefecture, yesterday, held a conference in connection with the dysentery epidemic and methods of disinfection. The epidemic is becoming more and more serious. On the 26th inst. 28 cases appeared, and 5 of the patients died.

A well-known resident of Shanghai has passed away in the person of Mrs. P. O'B Twing. Of her allotted seventy years, she passed half, with brief intervals, in Shanghai, having arrived there first in 1863. In 1884 she went home, returning in 1888, and since then never left the place.

The fifty-fourth annual commencement of the University of Michigan was held at Ann Arbor on June 30. Six hundred and seventy-four degrees were conferred. The commencement oration was delivered by Prof. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, of Cornell, who spoke on "The Old World in the New." Mr. Riota Kodama received the doctor's degree of the university.

A motion was heard in chambers on the 13th inst. in H.B.M. Court, Shanghai, before the Chief Justice, Mr. H. Browett appearing for the officers and super-cargo, and Mr. H. C. Parkes for twenty-nine of the crew of the British vessel Amarapoora, the application being for the sale of the vessel to satisfy portage bills amounting to $15,000. The Court ordered an appraisement and sale.

A fire broke out on the 23rd instant at 8.20 p.m. at a shed belonging to a merchant named Murata, No. 9, Kobunacho, Nichome, Nihonbashi, Tokyo. The conflagration spread at once to the surrounding buildings, and destroyed one godown and 26 houses, besides partly damaging nine houses. The fire is said to have been caused by a spark from a tobacco pipe carelessly left by workmen.

On the arrival at Kobe of the American ship Baring Brothers, from Yokohama, on Monday the police flag was noticed to be flying, and on being boarded it was ascertained that six of the crew were in irons on the deck, having, it is stated, been mutinous on the passage down. The vessel left Yokohama on the 12th instant, says the Chronicle, and the trouble seems to have arisen a few days after she had been at sea. The men were brought before the American Consul and duly tried.

Work on the Hitachi Maru, a steamer of 6,000 tons built at the local Mitsu Bishi Dockyard to the order of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, is approaching completion, says the Nagasaki Press, and the vessel will shortly be ready for her trial trip. Captain Going, who has been appointed to the command of the vessel, together with a crew of 85 men, arrived here on the 17th inst. from Yokohama by the Kobe Maru. The trial trip will probably take place on the 25th inst., after which the vessel will leave here on the 30th inst. for Yokohama on her maiden trip.

The Times displays a fine healthy optimism when it writes, regarding the protest of the Executive Committee of the Navy League against leaving the native city of Kowloon outside of British jurisdiction, "The dangers apprehended are not perhaps altogether imaginary, but they seem to be of a kind which a little judgment and firmness on the part of the local authorities will meet. They have only to show the Mandarins of Kowloon City that they do not intend to stand any nonsense. When those worthies realize that we are in earnest, all further difficulty of a serious kind will be at an end." Oh! will it?

Sir William Robinson, late Governor of Hongkong, has expressed the following view to a representative of Reuter's Agency regarding the extension of Hongkong:—"The Kowloon arrangement," he said, "is an admirable one, and will be of great benefit to the Chinese as well as the European inhabitants of Hongkong. Now we can look for lines of railway to Canton, up to the Yangtsze Valley, to Peking, and so on. In fact, as I said, Kowloon might be made the Clapham Junction of the East. We must, however, have European management. Kowloon City, which has hitherto been a nest of gamblers and robbers, will now be cleansed and properly policed, to the great advantage of Victoria." But according to the terms of the lease, as published in The Times, this will not be so. Kowloon City is to become an Alsatia of disagreeable proportions.

"The expensiveness and lack of durability of rubber-water and ice-bags has led to much fruitless research to discover an efficient substitute for rubber. Professor Jacobsohn," say Popular Science News, "announces that the Japanese rice-paper articles of the kind are a distinct advance in the technique of the care and comfort of the sick. They are made of several layers of the soft, flexible rice paper used for so many purposes in Japan, with resin between, finished on the outside with a coat of Japanese lacquer. He exhibited some air-cushions thus made, at the meeting of the Berlin Society of Internal Medicine, demonstrating that the cushions were absolutely air-tight, flexible, 'feather-light,' remarkably enduring, bearing a permanent weight of 150 kilograms, folding into extremely small compass when not in use, and costing less than a sixth of the corresponding rubber articles now in use."

We take the following from a Chicago paper:—"Col. Edmund Rice who had command of the Columbian Guards at the Exposition in Chicago, reached Washington this morning, coming straight from Tokyo, where he has been military attaché since the inauguration of President McKinley. As soon as he heard of the declaration of war he telegraphed the Secretary of State to be relieved and applied for active service. While on the sea, and without his application or knowledge, the President nominated him for Inspector-General, and he was immediately confirmed by the Senate. While he appreciates the compliment, Col. Rice says he does not want that sort of duty. He prefers a fighting command, and has asked the Secretary of War to assign him to some regiment—the worst in the front. It is likely that Rice will be gratified, for he is a favourite with Gen. Miles and his abilities are known and appreciated by the President and the Secretary of War."

LOCOMOTIVE BUILDING IN JAPAN.

With regard to the question of locomotive building in Japan, referred to by Mr. R. F. Trevithick in a letter published in our correspondence columns, our readers will probably be interested in the following quotations from an essay contributed by Mr. Trevithick to the Institution of Mechanical Engineers in April, 1895:—

PARTICULARS OF BUILDING AT KOBE WORKS.—Two frame-plates of mild Siemens Martin steel were obtained from England, planed on both sides, and shaped on edges to tracings sent from Japan; all holes and gaps for horn-blocks were drilled or cut out in Kobe. Four steel plates forming the radial axle box guides were sent out from England, flanged and bent to required radius in conformity with tracing supplied from Japan, as to foreign makers for het locomotives. The remainder of the material required for constructing the frame was supplied from the store, out of the ordinary stock of iron plates, bars, and angles.

Four straight axles, two of best Yorkshire iron and two of best Siemens-Martin steel, and eight steel tires, were sent out from England as supplied from forge or steel works; all turning and fitting were done in Kobe. The wheels, eight in number, were forged in Kobe from scrap iron, and formed the crucial job in smith work. All tires now used on these railways are of steel; they are made in England, sent out as received from the steel works, and bored out and finished as required in Japan.

The valve gear, spring gear, brake gear, draw-bar hooks, and attachments were made in Kobe, almost entirely from scrap iron. Springs were made from steel out of stores. The buffers were made partly of Yorkshire iron plate, and partly of scrap iron.

The piston-rods were made of round steel supplied from store, but the cross heads were made of scrap iron. The low-pressure piston of steel was sent out from England as received from the steel works; all turning and fitting were done in Kobe. The high pressure piston, being of cast-iron, was made in Kobe. The slide bars were made of steel bars out of stock. The connecting rods and coupling rods were forged from 6-inch square bars of best Yorkshire iron; the crank pins from 6 inch diameter round bars of same quality.

The cylinders, axle-boxes, and all other fittings of cast-iron or brass were cast and finished complete in the Kobe shops.

The boiler was made of plates, bars, and angles of best Yorkshire iron supplied from store, all flanging, &c., being done in the shops. The foundation ring and fire-hole ring were made from scrap iron. All copper tube plates used in Kobe for boiler making or repairs are ordered from England of best quality; the flanging is entirely done in Kobe, after which the tube and rivet holes are drilled. The dome with its seating was obtained from England, though not specially ordered for this engine. All boiler mountings were made in Kobe. Tanks, coal, bunkers, &c., were made of best Staffordshire plates and angles from stock. Besides the dome and its seating, the only finished pieces from abroad put into this engines are one Bourdon pressure-gauge, and one vacuum-brake ejector, one vacuum-brake duplex pressure-gauge, and one vacuum-oil sight feed lubricator. All boiler tubes used in Japan are of course imported; likewise the bulk of the piping, both copper and iron, required in a locomotive; and india-rubber springs, &c.

It will thus be seen that in this job the builders have done nearly every part of the work it was possible for them to undertake unless possessed of iron works. The workmanship, both in detail and in the engine as a whole, leaves nothing to be desired, and compares favourably with that of the best engines imported. The significance of this result is emphasized when it is understood that it is entirely the product of Japanese labour led by Japanese foremen, no foreign foremen being employed in the Kobe workshops.

The position of the compound system for locomotives in Japan is at present merely that of trial. The view entertained after the first fifteen months' working of No. 221 compound, that there was no reason to believe it would prove costly in maintenance, has been confirmed by subsequent experience. On 2nd October, 1894, after sixteen months' running with a mileage of 35,573, the engine was sent to the repairing shop for wheel turning, and a few other small repairs were then executed. On 6th October it was again put to work, and by 31st May 1895 had brought its mileage up to 57,473. It has not been found that any of the non-compound engines do better.

The Government Railways led the way by building this compound locomotive. Two private railways shortly afterwards followed suit by each purchasing one or two four-cylinder compound locomotives on the Vauclain system from the Baldwin Locomotive Works, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and finally in August 1894 the Japan Railway put in traffic a couple of two-cylinder compounds built by Messrs. Neilson and Co., of Glasgow. The Baldwin engines, for which possibly too much was claimed, have not quite realized all that was expected of them, nor have they in any way disparaged the locally built engine.

It will thus be seen that a locomotive has been built in Japan, which in first cost and efficiency will bear comparison with imported locomotives; and also that Japan, possessing cheap labour and coal, may not at no distant date find it unnecessary to

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CORRESPONDENCE.

M. BOISSONADE AND THE ABOLITION OF TORTURE.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—Although I receive here the Japan Weekly Mail, I have not read in it the two articles of the Daily Mail:—A Singular Story, and Torture in Japan (7th and 9th May). But one of my friends in Tokyo sent me both, as he thinks that I have something to say about the subject.

I quite agree with you as to the inaccuracy of the passages you quote from Mr. Chamberlain's Things Japanese regarding the abolition of torture in Japan.

So far from "Mr. Mutsu's having been the patient undergoing the torture when I made my irruption into the room from which I heard heavy groans," Mr. Mutsu, on the contrary, was at that time my best and most powerful supporter in my efforts towards the abolition of this inhuman practice.

The facts run as follows:—The said scene took place on the 15th April, 1875 (8th year of Meiji) and my first memorandum to the Minister of Justice (then Mr. Oki Takato) for the abolition was of the following day. It contained truly, as says Mr. Chamberlain, my resolution to resign my office, if I failed to obtain satisfaction.

The translation was not so speedy as the original and was given only after one month (20th May). Many months elapsed without the case coming to an issue.

Then I interested in the case Mr. Inouye Ki, at that time Secretary of the Sein itself, whose enlightened mind and generous heart were well known to me. On the 31st of March, 1876, I handed to him, with the copy of my first memorandum, a new one discussing and refuting the more or less specious reasons alleged amongst the judicial officers for the maintenance of torture.

At the same time the institution of a Japanese Senate (Genro-In) was just decided, with Mr. Mutsu as Great Councillor.

Mr. Inouye Ki submitted to Mr. Mutsu, in their respective qualifications, the two memorandums, and this latter distinguished officer took up the case so heartily that he caused the Senate to examine it in its first sitting. Thus the Japanese Senate inaugurated its political life by voting the abolition of torture. Mr. Mutsu, whom I had never seen before, invited me the same evening with Mr. Inouye Ki to his villa (of Mukojima), and made me acquainted with the full success of our joint efforts.

As the Genro In had only consultative power, it was necessary to obtain a decision from the Supreme Council (Sein). It was given by a Notification of M. Sanjo, Daijo Daijin, on the 10th of June of the 9th year of Meiji (1876).

On the 28th August of the same year, a more explicit Notification was issued by the Minister of Justice, M. Oki Takato, thus running:—

"No sentence can be pronounced against an accused person without full proof of crime. The kind of proofs admitted are: 1st, The free confession of the accussed; (2nd to 8th other evidence)."

At last, as some foreign newspapers of Yokohama frequently expressed doubts about the true abolition, a new Notification of the Daijo Daijin seemed necessary: it was issued on the 8th October of the 12th year of Meiji (1879). It ran as follows:—

"From the Notification No. 86 of June of the 9th year of Meiji (1876), the procedure with torture has ceased; the laws, ordinance and notifications concerning the infliction of torture are repealed."

Thus the indisputable date of the abolition is the 10th June of 9th year of Meiji (1876).

It is my duty to attribute the greater part of this just and humane step to the late very much regretted Messrs. Mutsu and Inouye Ki and to the much respected Count Oki Takato. I may add, as justifying all aforesaid, that on the occasion of my departure from Japan, in February, 1895, Mr. Shimada Saburo, then Vice-president of the House of Representatives, took the opportunity of an entertainment given to me by the Journalists of Tokyo to publicly recall that event and my initiative towards it; he was specially aware of it (as he said himself) being then Secretary of the Genro-In; and thus he broke the silence which had always been kept not only by myself, as was proper, but also by the Japanese and foreigners, for other reasons. Mr. Chamberlain, hearing it for the first time, asked me to give him a note on the subject, in view of a new edition of his Things Japanese: but it is so much against my disposition to occupy the public with myself or my affairs that I neglected to comply with his request. I regret it sincerely, because I have caused the learned and kind Mr. Chamberlain to suffer a contradiction from the Japan Mail and from myself. Please excuse, dear sir, the prolixity and incorrectness of my English and believe me.

Yours sincerely. G. BOISSONADE.

Antibes, 18th June, 1898.

THE IWATE FAMINE.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—In response to your appeal for help for the poor sufferers in the Iwate district, I am requested by the Directress and members of the Yokohama Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society, to forward you a donation of yen 50.00, which please find enclosed.

I remain, yours faithfully,

ANNA J. DIACK,

Acting Hon. Treas.,
Yokohama Tonic Sol fa Choral Society.

ENGINES IN USE ON JAPANESE RAILWAYS.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—No one disputes the right of an Editor to select the items of news which are to appear in his paper, but he owes it to his readers to take every reasonable precaution to avoid giving them spurious information; but when, for his own purposes, he describes the work of any individual, does so wrongly, and has his attention drawn to the fact, there should be additional reasons for putting matters right in the event of being asked to do so.

The Editor of the Japan Times evidently holds a different opinion on this point. Thus, the Japan Times of 2nd inst. contained an article on "Engines in use on Japanese Railways," in the course of which reference was made to home-built engines (the 9 built at Kobe), but after using that expression it qualified it by remarking, it would be more correct to say the engines were "Composed at Kobe."

The expression "to compose a locomotive" is not English, but from the context it would appear the idea intended to be conveyed, was that finished pieces were imported and afterwards put together in Japan.

As nothing could be further from the truth than this, and since the locomotives referred to practically owe their existence to myself, I felt justified in asking the Editor of the Japan Times to afford me the opportunity of publicly contradicting the misstatement.

Whether, because dislike to admit fallibility weighed more with him than securing a fair record of the manufacturing achievements of his country, or because some one had informed him of the unimportant part Japanese experts took in the work; I know not, but certain it is no room was found for my letter.

As your paper has always set an example of fair play in matters of this sort, I trust you will kindly give me the opportunity of stating:

1st. That nine Locomotives have been built at the Kobe works, not composed.

2nd. That the mode of procedure adopted in their construction was just what would have been followed had they been built abroad.

I would further add that no one with the slightest practical knowledge of locomotive construction could have failed to understand from a truthful statement of what was done at Kobe in this matter that the engines were built, not "put together," in the sense of assembling pieces previously prepared abroad; and the methods followed are described in the 1895 April Proceedings of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers and also in the Engineer of 19th March, 1897, pages 283, 284, and 290; and I do not doubt that reliable information on the subject would also have been given by the Railway Department to any one requiring it.

Hence, there is very good reason for supposing the Japanese expert who wrote the article I have referred to, fell into much the same error as did the Jackass in Æsop's Fable; i.e. he did not understand that donning the lion's skin would not convert a bray into a lion's roar.

Yours truly, K. F. TREVITHICK.

Kobe, July 18th, 1898.

MISSIONS IN JAPAN.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—Voltaire used to say concerning the Holy Roman Empire, as continued by Austria, that it was neither holy, nor Roman, nor empire! Anyone who reads "Impartial Observer's" letter in the Mail can instantly see that he is neither as a judge "impartial," nor as a man a competent "observer." He recommends the sending of Japanese Christians to Europe and America to study Christianity and then return to their country to carry on the Gospel. If this man was a real "Observer" he could have seen that this policy has been followed by many Missions for many years. When the writer was in the States some years ago, and had an opportunity of visiting several religious colleges and seminaries, almost in every one of them he saw one or two Japanese young men studying for the Christian ministry. Since then several Missions have passed resolutions to encourage this policy.

"Impartial Observer" thinks that as Japan was successful in introducing western civilization unassisted by others, therefore she is amply able to import the Christian religion also if she thinks it conducive to her spiritual or intellectual or material well-being: ergo: no missionaries are needed. Has ever a sober man, let me ask your intelligent readers, who has studied the philosophy of the development of religion either among civilized or savage races for the last six thousand years, written in such a superficial manner?

Missionaries in Japan through much toil and labour have laid the solid foundations of a grand edifice of which Christendom has every reason to be proud and not ashamed. This foundation has been dug and filled up notwithstanding the bitter opposition of those who ought to have been on their side and aiding them, and of whom "Impartial Observer," in all probability, is one. And when this edifice is completed no body of men, I am sure, would be more ready and glad to put down their heavy burdens and retire while with Simeon Chanting:—"Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." But to abandon their position before their task is finished would be unpardonable cowardice.

In conclusion, allow me to say that I am not opposed to a fair criticism of the Missions in Japan; on the contrary, I believe that a just, sober, broad and penetrating, even if caustic, criticism is always productive of good. And heaven knows that the conduct of many missionaries is open to severe criticism. But when an ignoramus constitutes himself a final tribunal, and then drivels like a babe, he deserves a good spanking.

Very truly yours, * * *

Yokohama, 25th July, 1898.

URGENCY ORDINANCE RELATING TO ELECTIONS.

(Translated by the Japan Times.)

The following Ordinance relative to Election control has been promulgated as an urgency measure:

Imperial Ordinance No. 170.

Art. I.—Any voter for a member of the House of Representatives, candidate or canvasser, discovered carrying on the occasion of an election a fire-arm, edged instrument, sharpened bamboo, cudgel or any other article sufficient to inflict personal injury shall be liable to minor confinement for a term ranging from 1 day to 2 years or to the imposition of a fine ranging from 5 to 200 yen, besides confiscation of the incriminating objects.

When deemed necessary Police officials or gendarmes may cause the articles mentioned above to be kept in their custody.

Art. II.—When in connexion with the election an act coming under any of the following clauses has been committed either before or after the election, those guilty of it shall be sentenced to minor confinement for not less than one month, and not more than one year, or to the imposition of a fine ranging from 10 to 100 yen. Be it provided, however, that when a person accepting a bribe or one who has consented to accept such has made confession within 20 days he will be exempted from the charge.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

1. Those who have either directly or indirectly offered or proposed to offer to electors or canvassers money, substances, promissory notes or other things of profit, or public or private posts; or those who have canvassed and pursuaded others to have such an offer or proposal of an offer accepted.

2. Those who have entertained or treated others by way of feast, pleasure-trip or under whatever pretext, or who have accepted such treatment; those who have offered ships, carriages, houses or any such thing to carry persons to and from the place of election or of polling, or those who have accepted such offer; those who have paid for other person's travelling or lodging expenses, and those who have accepted such payment or those who have made promise of such payment and those who have accepted such promise

3. Those who by availing themselves of considerations of irrigation, tenantry, credit on money matters, contributions and other connexions of interest of electors or shrines, temples, schools, companies, associations, corporated cities, towns, or villages with which the electors are connected, have attempted to persuade the electors, and those who have responded to such persuasions.

Art. III.—Those who have committed an act coming under any of the following clauses shall be sentenced to minor confinement for a space of time not less than 2 months and not more than 2 years, together with a fine of not less than 5 yen and not more than 100 yen.

1. Those who have in connexion with the election used violence or intimidation towards others or have tried to abduct them.

2. Those who have interfered with facilities of communications towards electors or have by fraudulent means interfered with the exercise of their franchise.

3. Those who by availing themselves of considerations of irrigation, tenantry, credit or money matters and other relations of interest pertaining to electors or temples, shrines, schools, companies, associations, incorporated cities, towns, or villages with which those electors are connected, or have tried to intimidate electors.

Art. IV.—Those who with the purpose of obstructing the election have published false information in regard to the candidates by means of public speeches, newspaper paragraphs, circulars, placards, or other process whatsoever, shall be sentenced to minor confinement ranging from 11 days to 6 months with the imposition of a fine ranging from 2 to 50 yen. With regard to newspapers or magazines, however, only editors shall be held responsible.

Art. V.—The votes of those who have been punished either according to the present Regulations or otherwise in connexion with the election of members of the House of Representatives, even when such punishment occurs after the date of election, will be null and void. Provided that the foregoing clause shall not apply to the voting of those have been punished in connexion with an act committed subsequent to the date of election. This proviso shall also apply to cases where confession has been made in accordance with Art. II.

Art. VI.—Those who have been punished in accordance with the present Regulations shall come under Arts. 99 and 101 of the Law of Election of the House of Representatives.

Art. VII.—The time-limit of an offence coming under the present Regulations shall come under Art. 104 of the Law of Election of the House of Representatives.

Art. VIII.—The present Regulations shall go into effect from the date of promulgation.

Art. 99 above mentioned relates to the invalidation of election; Art. 101 relates to the suspension of franchise or right of eligibility for the period of of 3 to 7 years; Art. 104 provides that punishments for offences relating to the election shall expire within six months.

FOREIGNERS AND THE REVISED TREATIES.

How we Stand with Regard to Japanese Courts.

(SPECIALLY WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

Many foreigners are probably enquiring with some degree of anxiety what will be the provisions under the new Treaties relating to the jurisdiction of Japanese Courts over foreigners in Civil Cases. The question divides itself into three heads: (1) Cases where a Japanese sues a foreigner; (2) cases where a foreigner sues a Japanese; and (3) cases where one foreigner sues another. The Naichisakyo-Jumbi-Kwai Zasshi explains the general provisions of Japanese law concerning the first subject as follows:—

According to Japanese law, courts of Jurisdiction are divided into two sections—General Forum and Special Forum. These may, with regard to actions raised by a Japanese against a foreigner, be explained as follows:—

GENERAL FORUM.

Article 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the General Forum of a person is determined by his residence. A Court where a person has a general Forum is competent to try all actions brought against such person in so far as no exclusive forum is established for any particular action.

Thus, when mixed residence takes place, foreigners can generally be sued in the Court mentioned in this Article. Article 13 of the same Code provides that, "The general forum of a person who has no residence in Japan is determined by the place of his abode, and, where no such place is known, or where it is abroad, by his last residence in Japan. In such forum, however, actions against a person who has his residence abroad can be instituted in respect only of such legal relations as have arisen in Japan."

By this article, the questions, in which Court (1) a foreigner who has no residence in Japan, (2) a foreigner whose abode is unknown or is in a foreign country, and (3) a foreigner who has his residence abroad, but with whom legal relations have arisen in Japan, can be sued, are determined. It is still an unsettled question, owing to the defect of the law, where the foreigner referred to in the last class (3) can be sued if he has never resided in Japan.

SPECIAL FORUM.

(II) Special Forum include Exclusive Forum and others The chief difference between the Exclusive Forum and the General Forum or the other Special Forums is that in the former the law does not permit any agreement between the parties as to a change of tribunal, while in the latter such agreement is permissible (v. Arts. 29 and 31 of the code of Civil Procedure).

The various kinds of Exclusive Forum may be enumerated as follows:—

(a.) Forum relating to Immovables.—Article 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, "With respect to immovables the Court within whose district the immovables are situated is exclusively competent for all actions relating thereto, in particular for petitory and possessory actions, as also for partition actions and for actions for the fixing of boundaries."

"For actions relating to predial servitudes the Court within whose district the servient tenement is situated is exclusively competent." The court mentioned in this article has jurisdiction over foreigners concerning actions which may arise relating to the rights of immovables enjoyed by foreigners by the new Treaties

(b) Forums relating to actions for nullity of marriage or for adoption, dissolution of adoption, divorce, disavowal or acknowledgment of children, interdiction, quasi-interdiction, etc. Concerning these actions, the new Law of Procedure in Actions concerning the Personal Status (which come into force on and after July 16th, 1898) provide for an exclusive Court for them.

(c.) Forums relating to summary procedure (Tokusoku-tetsuzuki) and execution. These are made exclusive Forums by Articles 383 and 563 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(d) Forum relating to revivor. Paragraph 1, Article 472 of the same Code provides that "The Court exclusively competent for these actions is the Court which has rendered the decision attacked."

(e) Forum relating to Bankruptcy. Art. 28 of Law of Constitution of the Courts of Justice provides that "The District Court shall have general jurisdiction in bankruptcy."

(f.) Forum relating to cases raised against the judgment of exclusion in respect of Public Summons (Koshisaikoku.) This is an exclusive Forum by Art. 774 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

OTHER COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION.

Plaintiffs may by Art. 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure choose between the following courts and the courts mentioned under the heading of General Forum, such as the court of the place where the defendant is residing.

(a) Forum relating to claims respecting rights of property Paragraph 1, Article 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

"Against students, servants, business assistants, artisans, apprentices, and other persons residing in a place under circumstances which point to a stay of long duration, actions respecting claims relating to rights of property (saisanken) can be instituted in the Court of such place."

Paragraph 1, Article 16 of the same Code provides that:

"Against persons whose business transactions are directly concluded from an establishment in which a manufacture, a trade, or some other business is carried on, actions which relate to such business operations can be instituted at the Court of the place where such establishment is situated."

Article 17 of the same Code provides that:

"Actions in respect of claims relating to rights of property against debtors who have no residence in Japan can be instituted in the Court within the district of which any property of such persons or the property claimed in the action is situated. In the case of debts owing to such persons the residence of the debtor (garnishee) and where a thing stands as security for the debt, the place where such thing is shall be taken to be the place where the property is."

Thus an action respecting a claim relating to right of property against a foreigner residing in a certain locality of Japan under circumstances which from their nature point to a stay of long duration can be instituted in the Court of such locality. Where a foreign company has its residence in a certain locality of Japan, and at the same time has a business establishment in another locality of Japan, an action can be instituted against the company in the Court of the place where such establishment is situated.

(b.) Forum relating to obligations. Article 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

"Actions brought to establish the existence or non-existence of a contract, or for the performance, rescission, revocation, or cancellation thereof, or for indemnification for non-performance or insufficient performance, can be instituted in the Court of the place where the obligation giving rise to the suit is to be fulfilled."

Article 19 of the same Code provides that:

"Actions by partnerships, companies, or other associations of persons against their members, at also by members against each other, arising out of claims based on such membership, can be instituted in the Court where the partnership, company, or other association has its general right of action or appearance."

Article 20 of the same Code provides that: "Actions arising out of inlawful injuries can be instituted against those responsible in the Court within whose district the act was committed."

As an example of the above-mentioned Article 18, it may be said that where a foreigner has entered into a contract with a Japanese and promised its performance in a certain locality of Japan, an action against him on account of the contract can be laid in the court of the place where the contract was to be performed.

ACTIONS BETWEEN FOREIGNERS.

A little consideration shows that the above is simply the application to foreigners of the present Japanese law relating to Forums, foreigners being governed by the same law as Japanese when the new Treaties come into force. Professor Terao Toru, an instructor of Private and Public International Laws in the Imperial Japanese University, gives his opinion, in his work on Private International Law (perhaps the best work on the subject written in Japanese), on this matter, as well as on cases where a foreigner sues another foreigner in Japanese Courts. An epitome of some essential points of his opinions may be interesting. He says:

All actions raised by foreigners against Japanese are at present tried by the courts of the place where the foreign settlement in which the plaintiff resides is situated, irrespective of the residence of the Japanese defendant. But when the new Treaties come into force, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure will be applicable to such cases, and will not only be applied to cases in which the legal relations giving rise to the action occurred in Japan, but also to cases in which the legal relations occurred in foreign countries. There is, however, a special provision in the Code of Civil Procedure relating to actions raised by foreigners against Japanese. It is Art. 88 of the same Code, which provides that:

A foreigner appearing as plaintiff or as accessory intervener on the side of the plaintiff shall, on demand of the defendant, furnish him with security for costs.

No obligation to furnish security for costs arises:—

(1) Where by treaty, or by the laws of the State to which the plaintiff belongs, a Japanese in a similar case would not be bound to furnish security;
(2) In cross-actions;
(3) In suits on documents (shōsho-soshō), or on bills of exchange or promissory notes;
(4) In actions instituted in consequence of a public summons.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The action is, on the application of the defendant, to be deemed withdrawn, if security has not been furnished before the decision is rendered (Art. 90 of the same Code).

With regard to cases where the plaintiff and defendant are both foreigners, the Consul of the State to which the defendant belongs has, according to the present Treaties, jurisdiction over the cases, and consequently there is no provision concerning it in the present Code of Civil Procedure. Provisions relating to such cases, with the necessary amendment of the Code, will, however, be introduced when the new Treaties come into force. But even if such amendment does not take place, Professor Terao proceeds, it is safe to conclude that actions between foreigners will naturally come under the jurisdiction of Japanese courts when the new Treaties become operative. In support of this he quotes the actual provisions of the Treaties and Laws as follows:—

(1) By Article 2 of the Civil Code foreigners can enjoy all private rights except those prohibited by Treaties and laws. Assuming that an action were not tried and decided by the Japanese Court on account of its having arisen between foreigners, the rights of foreigners given by the Japanese law would be only nominal, for no right actually exists unless it can be maintained by right of action. As the right of action is the most important right of foreigners and its enjoyment is not prohibited by Japanese law, it must be concluded that it is permitted to foreigners.

(2) The new Treaties (Art. I of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty, and some others) provide that foreigners enjoy the right of action just as Japanese enjoy it. No distinction can be made between the right of action arising between a foreigner and a Japanese, and that arising between two foreigners.

(3) Actions arising between foreigners of non-Treaty States are at present tried by a Japanese Court, and it may therefore be inferred that all foreigners will undoubtedly depend on the jurisdiction of Japanese Courts when the Consular Courts are abolished.

It need hardly be added that since actions between foreigners in Japan come within the jurisdiction of Japanese Courts, the forums applicable to them are the same as those applicable to cases in which a Japanese sues a foreigner.

POWERS OF COURTS.

Reference must be made to the question of the jurisdiction of Japanese civil tribunals in virtue of the subject matter of dispute. The fact that a foreigner is concerned in such cases involves no difficulty, seeing that, as shown above, all cases, whether a foreigner is concerned or not, come under the purview of Japanese law. The law governing such cases is that of the Constitution of the Courts of Justice. Its 14th Article provides that:—

In civil actions, the Local Courts (Kusaibansho) subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure with respect to counter-claims, shall have the following jurisdiction:

(1) Over claims in which the amount involved or the value of the object in dispute does not exceed 100 yen.

(2) Over the following actions without respect to value:—

(a) Actions between lessors and lessees with respect to entering into or giving up possession, or use or occupation, repairs of any dwelling house or other building, or with respect to the detention of a lessee's furniture or effects by a lessor.

(b) Actions which concern only the fixing of boundaries of immovable property.

(c) Actions concerning possession only.

(d) Actions between employers and employed with respect to engagements for one year or any shorter period.

(e) Actions between travellers and hotel or restaurant keepers, or between travellers and carriers with respect to:—(1) Payment for their board or lodging, or for the carriage of themselves or of the luggage accompanying them; (2) The luggage, monies, or valuables, deposited by them with such persons for safe keeping.

Article 26 provides that:

In civil actions, the District Court shall have the following jurisdiction:—

1. In first instance:
   Over claims other than those which come within the competency of the Local Courts, or within that of the Appeal Court by Art. 38 provided.
2. In second instance:
   (a) Over appeals (koso) from judgments (hakatsu) of the Local Courts,
   (b) Over complaints (Kokoku), in so far as the same are provided for by law, against rulings (kettie) and orders (meirei) of the Local Courts."

Article 37 provides that:

The Appeal Courts shall have the following jurisdiction:

1. In appeals from judgments of the District Courts rendered in first instance;
2. In appeals, on ground of error in law, against judgments of the District Courts rendered on appeal from judgments of the Local Courts;
3. In complaints, in so far as the same are provided for by law, against rulings and orders of the District Courts.

Article 38 provides that:

The jurisdiction both in first and second instance in civil actions against members of the Imperial family shall belong to the Appeal Court at Tokyo. With regard to the procedure in first instance to be followed in this case, the procedure in first instance in District Courts shall be applied.

Article 50 reads:

The Supreme Court shall have the following jurisdiction:—

In last instance:

(a.) Over Appeals on ground of error in law against the judgments of the Appeal Courts, other than those rendered by virtue of Art. 37 2, and those rendered in first instance in the cases in Art. 38 mentioned.

(b.) Over complaints, in so far as the same are provided for by law, against rulings and orders of the Appeal Courts.

Thus, for example, a case, whether it is raised by a Japanese against a foreigner, or vice versa, or by one foreigner against another, comes under the jurisdiction of the Local Court if the value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed 100 yen, and an appeal, if any, is to be lodged in the District Court. The revision, if any, lies with the Superior Appeal Court of the District Court. If the value is more than one hundred yen, the case must be lodged in the District Court, and may be taken on appeal to the Superior Appeal Court, and thence to the Supreme Court.

These laws, which are now in operation, will continue in force, if not abolished in the meantime, when the new Treaties become operative.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LIMITED.

HALF-YEARLY MEETING.

The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of this company was held on Monday afternoon at the Hotel. Mr. J. F. Lowder presided, and there were also present Dr. C. H. H. Hall, Paymaster McDonald, Mr. B.C. Howard, Mr. R. Howie, and Mr. C. K. M. Martin.

Mr. Lowder said he did not think they would deem it necessary, on a hot day like that, that he should read the report. He suggested that it be taken as read.

Paymaster McDONALD moved, Mr. HOWIE seconded, and it was agreed, that the report be taken as read.

Mr. LOWDER introduced the election of directors, remarking that both Mr. Walter and Mr. Howard, who were retiring, were eligible for re-election.

Mr. HOWIE moved and Paymaster McDONALD seconded that both gentlemen be re-elected.

Referring to the election of auditor, the Chairman said they could congratulate themselves that Mr. Keil, whose services to the company had been inestimable, was available for re-election.

On the motion of Paymaster McDONALD, seconded by Mr. HALL, Mr. Keil was re-elected.

It was agreed, on the motion of the same two gentlemen, that the remuneration to the directors should be the same as last year, and the meeting then terminated.

The Profit and Loss Account, and Statement of Assets and Liabilities for the half-year ended the 30th June, 1898, accompany this Report.

The net profit for the half-year, including balance brought forward from the 31st December, 1897, and after providing for general expenses, Directors' and Auditor's fees, bonus to Manager, interest, and writing off bad and doubtful debts, amounts to... YEN.	36,384 08
Which it is proposed to apply as follows.—
In payment of a dividend of 10 per cent. for the half-year	25,000.00
Redemption of Debentures	5,000.00
Balance to be carried to new account ...	6,384 08
	36,384 08

It is not considered necessary to write off anything for depreciation for the half year under review.

Messrs. Walter and Howard retire from the Board by rotation, but offer themselves for re-election.

The office of Auditor becoming vacant, the Directors have much pleasure in recommending the re-election of Mr. Keil for the current year.

According to the Articles of Association, the amount of the Directors' fees for the current year will have to be decided at this meeting.

It is proposed that the dividend shall be payable on the 26th day of July, when the warrants will be issued.

J. F. LOWDER, JAMES WALTER, } Directors.

Yokohama, 13th July, 1898.

STATEMENT OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES ON JUNE 30TH, 1898.

LIABILITIES.

	YEN
Capital 2,500 Shares at $100	250,000.00
Debentures	20,000.00
Bills payable	12,453.51
	282,453 51
Balance Profit.....	36,384 08
	318,837 59

ASSETS.

Chartered Bank of I.A. and China ...	33,663 57
Cash in hand	441 17
Fire Insurance Policies.....	1,364.56
Ground (Estimated Value, Oct. 1897, Y. 85,000)	60,000 00
Buildings (Estimated Value, Oct. 1897, Y. 170,000)	137,959 92
Furniture (Estimated Value, Oct. 1897, Y. 53,900)	49 958.23
Electric Light Plant	11,309 96
Steam Launch.....	6,135.28
Wines in Stock	5,307 08
Provisions in Stock	3,608.93
Bills receivable	9,088 96
	318,837 59

Dr.

To General Expenses			28,648.73
„ Fire Insurance			1,760 41
„ Interest			399 96
„ Directors' and Auditors' fees			1,150.00
„ Bad Debts written off.....			34 55
„ Bonus to Manager			500 00
„ Balance, Profit .....Y. 25,900.00
Redemption of Debentures.....	5,000 00
Carried forward to new Account	6,384 08	Y. 36,384 08	36,384.08
			Y. 68,877.73

Cr.

	YEN.
By Balance brought forward from Dec. 31st 1897	1,353.29
„ Working Account	66,028 71
„ Rent Account	1,155.00
„ Share Transfer Fees	38.00
„ Share Warrant Fees	3 50
„ Sale of old Material	299 07
	68 877 73
July 1st, 1898. By Balance	6,384.08

E. & O. E.

Yokohama, June 30th, 1898.

J. F. LOWDER, JAMES WALTER, } Directors.

I have examined the foregoing accounts and compared them with the vouchers of the Company and certify them to be correct.

O. KEIL, AUDITOR.

Yokohama, July 11th, 1898.

JAPAN ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Routine work and an investigation concerning the character of one of the members of the Conference occupied the time till Friday noon. Then, too, the extreme difficulty in making appointments, considering the nature and the present state of the work, has made the work of the "Cabinet" unusually difficult. It is commonly said in the United States at such times, "round pegs are made to fit into square holes, and vice versa." But here the difficulty seems to be to make one peg fill three holes. It is practically impossible to man our work properly with the forces now on the field. Then, too, our Missionary Board has lately passed rules requiring all missionaries to acquire a good working knowledge of the language, teachers not excepted, and this rule is working to the disadvantage of some parts of the work. All familiar with mission school work well know that a man cannot do full work in the school room and, at the same time, acquire a knowledge of the language. In consequence, some of our very best school workers have asked for an opportunity to comply with the requirements of the board, and to be consistent this request must be granted. It was extremely difficult to man the outposts before; now to properly do so and to do full justice to the school work is impossible. The "Cabinet" laboured long at this tangle of school and evangelistic work, and while no one claims that perfection has been attained, the results on the whole are satisfactory. The division of Kyushin from the rest of the work was approved by Bishop Cranston, so that next year we will meet as separate bodies. The wisdom or unwisdom of this step time alone will reveal, though looked at from our standpoint it seems now a wise measure. Complimentary resolutions including the work of Bishop Cranston, the efforts of the Yokohama Church to entertain the conference comfortably, and the courtesy of the press of the city were adopted by a rising vote. The work of the secretaries was properly eulogized and after a brief address by the Bishop, in which he fittingly portrayed the true ideals and possible attainment of the Christian ministry, the appointments were read and the conference adjourned sine die.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Now comes the task of making out estimates for the work for the ensuing year. This of course falls to the lot of the missionaries and will probably occupy two more days. When these estimates shall have been approved by the home board, the work is finished, in so far as the appropriations are concerned, for another year.—Com.

NAVAL COURT OF INQUIRY.

A MATE'S BEHAVIOUR.

A Court of Naval Inquiry was held on Tuesday at H.B.M.'s Consulate into the conduct of John B Mollison, chief mate of the sailing ship Hougomont, on the voyage between New York and Yokohama. The charge was one of insolence and insubordination. Mr. R. G. E. Forster, Acting Consul-General, presided, and the assessors were Messrs. S. de B. Lockyer, master of the P. & O. steamer Rohilla, and Evan Thomas, master of the Rockhurst. Mr. F. J. Lowder prosecuted.

Charles Lowe, master of the Hougomont, said he was sent from England to New York to take command of the Hougomont in succession to Captain McNeill. When he arrived he found accused on board in the capacity of chief mate. Before he had been on board ten days the relations between them became strained, and on several occasions the chief mate was insolent and overbearing to him.

Charles Stewart, third mate of the Hougomont, said the chief mate's attitude towards the captain was "indifferent." He was witness of a fracas between the captain and the accused on the 10th May. It was about 4.50 a.m. Witness heard accused shouting, "Mr. Stewart, come and help me put the Captain in irons; he's drunk." The Captain was decidedly not drunk, and witness had never seen him in liquor. When witness came up he saw some scuffling going on. Both men were on the deck, and the mate was on top of the Captain. Witness parted them. After that the accused did no more work on board. Witness, had heard the accused say to the master that he did not come there to act as a boatswain. He said this in an insolent manner.

John Wheylan Thompson, an American citizen, said he was a passenger on board the Hougomont. He noticed the chief mate's demeanour towards the captain. He was sometimes so insolent that the Captain was forced to get up and leave the table.

Mr. Emory Emmond, another passenger, characterised the accused's attitude to the Captain as studiously offensive. When the Captain put on or took off sail the mate used to have "a broad sophistic smile on him suggestive of superior knowledge." Witness had seen the altercation between the Captain and the mate with regard to the accusation of drunkenness. The Captain was a very sober man, and there was no ground for the mate's accusation.

Mr. Lowder said he considered the complaint had been established, and therefore subject to the Court he did not consider it would be necessary to call the second mate of the Hougomont. He had been sent for, but had not yet arrived.

Mr. Forster said the Court thought the evidence was perhaps desirable. The witnesses for the defence might be heard meanwhile.

George Charles Martin, steward, said he had never heard accused using expressions of disappointment that he had not been made master of the Hougomont. He did not know how to describe accused's bearing towards the Captain; witness was not in the cabin much except at meal times. He remembered hearing a discussion at the cabin table on the subject of negroes. The mate would have it that everyone that was black was a negro.

Mr. Forster—I don't like to interfere with your line of defence, but this has not much to do with the case.

Accused—I held that it was a matter not of race but of colour.

Mr. Forster—But is that very important?

Accused—It is, sir.—(Laughter.)

Proceeding, the witness said the passenger Thompson agreed with the mate. He said everyone who was black was a negro.—(Laughter.)

Accused—Did the Captain leave the table in anger?

Witness—It was not very noticeable. He often left before the others.

Proceeding, witness said he heard one day loud voices.

Mr. Forster—What was it about?

Witness—Between ourselves I should say it was Holy Stone?

Mr. Forster—What?

Witness—Holy Stone. They were holy stoning the deck.

Mr. Forster—What do you mean by "between ourselves?" Do you mean in confidence to the Court or what?

Witness—No, sir. I mean in the fo'c'stle.

William Smith, apprentice on board the Hougomont, said he had never heard accused make any disparaging remark around the deck about the Captain. As far as he had seen the accused's behaviour seemed to be much the same as that of any other mate. He had heard on two occasions the Captain using language that was not at all gentlemanly. One occasion was when the passenger Thompson tied the Captain's pillows to the bars of the poop sky light. The other occasion was when he sent the mate to his room. He had also seen the Captain seize accused by the throat.

John Armstrong, able seaman, a man of colour, said on the morning of the 9th May he heard the accused calling "Mr. Stewart, come and help me put this man below." His voice sounded as if he were in distress and wanted help.

James Barrett, able seaman, said he had heard the Captain tell accused he would break his neck. (The Captain used a vigorous adjective.) He had never heard accused say that the owners had put him there, and the Captain should not put him out.

Donald McIntosh, able seaman, also spoke to the threat of breaking of accused's neck, and said he (witness) was several times struck by the Captain.

The remaining witness for the prosecution, Walter Cecil Hodd, second mate of the vessel, was called and examined by the Court, but his evidence was of little interest. In answer to accused he said he should not call accused a careless officer.

This concluded the case, and accused then made a rambling statement, in which he said the Captain had acted towards him as if he were a boy instead of an officer of experience. He had been second officer in steamers and chief officer on sailing ships before; and, having been in ship-wrecks twice, had been commended by the Court of Inquiry and rewarded by the underwriters for his good conduct. Before Captain Lowe came aboard he had got on very well with the others, but since, the latter had been at no pains to make his life easier.

Mr. Lowder submitted that the allegations had been amply proved. He might point out that it was within the power of the Court to deal with the accused's certificate but the Master did not wish in any way to interfere with his chance of obtaining his livelihood, and would be perfectly satisfied if he were severely reprimanded, ordered to pay costs, and dismissed the ship.

Written judgment was delivered after tiffin. After setting forth the facts at length, the document proceeded. "The Court having regard to the circumstances above stated, finds as follows: That, having heard and carefully considered the evidence given before this Court touching the complaint above recited made by Charles Lowe, master of the British sailing ship Hougomont, official number 106,093, against John B. Mollison, chief mate of the said vessel, finds that the truth of the facts stated in the said complaint has been fully proved, and that the said John B. Mollison was guilty of acts of insubordination and misconduct of board the said vessel when on a voyage from New York to Yokohama, and more especially on the morning of the 9th May, 1898, in falsely accusing the master of being drunk and calling on the third mate to put him in irons. The Court considers that had it not been for the expressed wish of the master they would have felt themselves called on to deal with the certificate of the accused. In view of the master's request for leniency the Court only adjudges that the accused be severely reprimanded and be discharged from the said vessel. The Court, therefore, in pursuance of the powers vested in it by Section 483 of 59 and 58 Victoria c. p. 60, orders that the said John B. Mollison shall be discharged from British sailing ship Hougomont, and that the sum of £64-10-10d., being the cost of the proceedings before the said Court, be paid by John B. Mollison, being one of the parties thereto, and he is hereby ordered to pay the said amount accordingly."

LATEST NEWS FROM MANILA.

FORMATION OF A REPUBLIC: AGUINALDO ELECTED PRESIDENT.

FALL OF MANILA IMMINENT.

(From our Correspondent.)

Manila, July 18, via Shanghai, July 22.

The second batch of U.S. troops arrived at Manila Bay on the 16th.

The Filipino Cabinet has been formed with General Aguinaldo as President.

The California battalion has been sent to Paranaque, as the rebels have been unable to capture Manila unaided.

Admiral Dewey is not expected to attack Manila immediately, and it is extremely likely that he will await General Merritt's arrival next Tuesday.

There are 4,000 Spanish regulars in Manila now and their officers declare that they are fully able to defend Manila.

The American troops are totally unprovided with suitable clothing for this climate and the authorities are purchasing clothes from Hongkong.

The Americans anticipate difficulties eventually with the insurgents.

The Japanese residents have been advised to retire to the warships Naniwa and Akitsushima.

(From the "Japan Times.")

THE WAR.

SPANISH GOVERNMENT AND THE SURRENDER OF SANTIAGO.

GENERAL TORAL TO BE COURT-MARTIALLED.

London, July 22.

The Spanish Government denies authorizing the surrender of Santiago. In consequence General Toral is to be cited to give explanation at a Court Martial.

MADRID GOVERNMENT DESIRES PEACE.

SPANIARDS AND AMERICANS FRATERNISE.

The Morning Post publishes a telegram from Madrid stating that the Ministers have unanimously arrived at a decision in favour of peace and that Spaniards and Americans are fraternizing at Santiago.

ATTACK ON SPAIN NOT PROBABLE.

London, July 25.

It is authoritatively stated at Washington that President McKinley will not sanction an attack on the Spanish coast, except as an extreme measure to terminate the war.

THE POWERS AND THE PHILIPPINES.

The Daily News correspondent at Berlin telegraphs that the Powers, except England, have arrived at an agreement not to allow the Philippines to be annexed.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

DESPERATE STRUGGLE EXPECTED AT PUERTO-RICO.

London, July 26.

General Miles, with 4,003 men and five batteries of artillery, has started for Puerto-rico. The entire First Army Corps will start next week. The Spaniards are preparing for a vigorous defence.

WATSON'S SQUADRON TO AWAIT RESULT.

The sailing of Watson's squadron for Spain has been postponed until after the Puerto-rico campaign.

THREE SPANISH GARRISONS SURRENDER.

General Shafter has sent an officer to accept the surrender of the garrisons at Guantanamo, Baracoa and Sacualagrand.

SPAIN SUES FOR PEACE: FRANCE AS INTERMEDIARY.

DISORDER IN SPANISH TOWNS.

CUBANS DEMAND A REPUBLIC.

London, July 27.

The Cubans have presented a petition demanding the immediate establishment of the Cuban Republic. There are indications of a general disturbed state of feeling in Spain. Troubles have broken out in Granada, and armed bands have appeared in other districts. The Americans are reported to have landed at Ponce, Puertorico, on Monday. Spain has formally sued for peace through the French Ambassador at Washington. President McKinley will consult the Cabinet before replying.

DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN AMERICANS AND INSURGENTS.

London, July 22.

General Garcia, leader of the insurgents in Cuba, has written to General Shafter, of the U.S. Forces, stating that the action of the United States is not regarded as friendly to the Cuban natives, and the latter will no longer act in concert with the U.S. troops.

AMERICAN DEMANDS.

The principal points which America will demand in the event of peace proposals, are the cession of Puertorico, and the possession of a coaling station in the Ladrones. At Washington, nothing has yet been decided about the Philippines.

ANOTHER FIGHT OFF CUBA.

On the 18th inst., another engagement took place off Manzanillo. Three merchant steamers and five Spanish gun boats were destroyed. A hundred Spanish were killed, while no American was either killed or wounded.

THE AFRICAN QUESTION.

SPECIAL SECRETARIAL APPOINTMENT.

London, July 22.

The British Government has decided to appoint an additional foreign under-Secretary whose duties will probably be to deal specially with African questions.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales is progressing satisfactorily in regard to the injuries to his knee caused by an accident at Baron Rothschild's house. The doctors have decided not to operate, but is said that the limb will be weak for a long time.

THE BRITISH NAVY.

KEEPING PACE WITH RUSSIA.

London, July 25.

The Right Hon. Mr. Goschen, in introducing the Supplementary Naval Programme in the House of Commons, announced the intended addition of four new battleships, four cruisers, and twelve torpedo boat destroyers at a cost of eight millions. This addition, he explained, was necessitated by the Russian programme, the Admiralty considering it necessary to maintain the principle that the British fleet should be equal to those of any two other Powers.

THE QUEEN'S PRIZE.

Lieutenant Yates, of the Third Lanarkshire regiment, has won the Queen's Prize at Bisley.

THE AMERICANS IN HAWAII.

HONOLULU AS A MILITARY POST.

London, July 27.

The United States will fortify Honolulu, making it one of the strongest military posts in the Pacific. Barracks are to be erected to accommodate a large force.

THE GOVERNOR GENERALSHIP OF CANADA.

EARL MINTO APPOINTED.

Earl Minto has been appointed Governor General of Canada.

(From the Fiji Shimpo.)

MINING CONCESSION.

Peking, July 21.

Sole mining rights in the province of Pechili have been granted to Mr. Detring, a German.

SECOND BATCH OF U. S. FORCES.

Hongkong, July 21.

A Manila telegram just to hand states that the China, American steamer, arrived at Cavite on the 16th inst. and three other steamers on the following morning. These steamers brought the second batch of the American forces to the number of 5,000 volunteers. The bombardment of Manila city will shortly be undertaken by them jointly with the forces of the first batch.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE PHILIPPINE REPUBLIC.

Hongkong, July 22.

The Philippine Republic has been established, and Emilio Aguinaldo was elected President.

REBELLION IN KWANGSI.

Peking, July 14.

The rising in Kwangsi province is growing more turbulent. Several local fortresses have been destroyed by the rebels. Britain has despatched a warship to Wuchow to protect its subjects resident in the vicinity.

THE MINISTERIAL CHANGES.

Söul, July 22.

The Vice-Premier has been relieved from office, the vacancy being filled by Kim Yei-ju (?). Kim Pyong-si and Phong-ho have been appointed Premier and Minister of Education respectively.

MINING CONCESSION.

Söul, July 22.

The Korean Government granted the mining concession to Germany in conformity with her request the day before yesterday. The application of Great Britain will probably also soon be acceded to.

REBELS PACIFIED.

Shanghai, July 27.

The rebels in Kwangsi have almost been pacified. About a thousand of the ring leaders have been beheaded.

(From the "Kobe Herald.")

THE SITUATION IN SHANGHAI.

Shanghai, July 21st, 3 27 p.m.

The strike of Ningpo men is suspended, but no permanent settlement has been arrived at.

A FRENCH CRUISER IN COLLISION.

The French cruiser Jean Bart collided with the Hawaiian ship Helen Brewer to-day at Woosung. The latter was at anchor at the time. Both ships were damaged.

(From the "North-China Daily News.")

PROGRESS OF THE CHINA REBELLION.

Hongkong, 17th July.

The rebellion in Kwangsi is serious, the Triad Society being concerned in it.

The intention of the rebels is to go westward and take Nanning (in Kwangsi), then northward to Kuellin (the capital of Kwangsi).

Trade receives a serious blow, as several of the towns in the most prosperous districts of Kwangsi have been sacked.

Troops have gone west from Kao chou (in Kwangtung) to head the rebels off north of Pakhoi.

The panic continues at Wuchow.

HONGKONG FINANCIAL RELIEF.

Hongkong, July 21.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies agrees to the proposition for an increased issue of notes by the Hongkong and Shanghai and Chartered Banks.

A NEW AMERICAN POSSESSION.

Hongkong, 21st July, 8.17 p.m.

The Americans have occupied Weeks Island, near the Ladrones.

[Weeks, or Marcus, Island is N.E. of the Ladrones and S.E. of the Bonin Islands.]

TROUBLE THREATENING IN MANILA.

Aguinaldo is getting restive under the American restraint. U.S. Consul Williams requests U.S. Consul General Wildman to go over to influence the rebel leader. The insurgents are quarrelling among themselves.

AGUINALDO CONSOLIDATING HIS GOVERNMENT.

Aguinaldo has established a Cabinet, the members taking the oaths of office in the presence of a gathering of five thousand insurgents, with fireworks and rejoicings.

(From the "Shanghai Mercury.")

PRIESTS BRIBING REBELS.

Hongkong, July 21 5 13 p.m.

It is reported that the priests in Manila are bribing the rebels

A REBEL DEFEAT.

The rebels have suffered a defeat near Malate.

(From Japanese Sources.)

FIRE IN TOKYO

Tokyo, July 28.

On Thursday morning at 2.10 fire broke out at a house in Tokyo, and destroyed 3 houses, 4 being also partly damaged.

MARQUIS ITO.

Gifu, July 28.

Marquis Ito to day went to the Yoro waterfall.

AGRICULTURAL PROSPECTS.

Yamagata, July 28.

The weather having been favourable for some weeks, farming prospects are generally good.

MR. YANO.

Nagasaki, July 28.

Mr. Yano, Minister to Peking, arrived to-day by the steamer Hiogo Maru. He will leave for Kobe to-morrow at 4 p.m.

RUSSIAN TROOPS.

Nagasaki, July 28.

Russian troops numbering 864 arrived here to-day from Odessa en route to Vladivostock.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHESS.

All Communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor.

The Yokohama and the Tokyo Chess Clubs are closed during the summer months.

Solution of Problem No. 377.

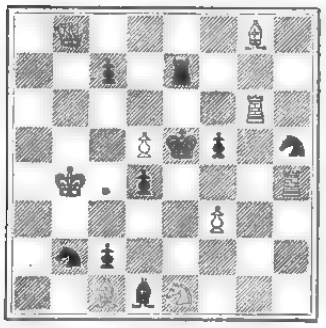
WHITE.	BLACK.
1—B to Kt 6	1—P takes Kt
2—K to Kt 4	2—P to Q 4
3—Q to K 7 mate
	if 2—K to K 5
3—Q to B 5 mate
	1—K takes Kt
2—Q to B 5	2—K takes P
4—Q to K 6 mate
	if 2—P to K 3
3—Q to Q B 5, mate
	if 2—P to K 4
3—Q to Q 7 mate

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., and Marco.

Problem No. 381.

By Walter Pulitzer,
Author of "Chess-Harmonies."

BLACK.



WHITE.

White mates in two moves.

Answers to Correspondents.

C. B. (Hongkong)—Thanks for score! Very useful.

Our valued friend Mr. O. Balk of New Zealand sends us a correct solution of Problem No. 362 by Mr. Mason of Tokyo, which he considers a very pretty composition although not difficult. No. 351 by Mrs. Baird, which our solvers will remember, caused them so much trouble at the time, was solved by the ex-champion in about 5 minutes. "I consider," writes Mr. Balk "that the black P at B 3 gives the key-move almost at a glance." And further, "I played over the two correspondence games between Jordan and the Kobe boys. The finish of the game won by the former made me think of that wonderful shell of the Olympus which went right through the Reina Christina from stem to stern, bursting boilers and killing officers and men by the score!"

The Vienna Tournament.

PILLSBURY LEADING—TARRASCH A GOOD SECOND.

At the time of going to press we have received the result of 17 rounds and part of the 18th. The score is as follows:—

	WON.	LOST.		WON.	LOST.
Alapin	10½	6½	Pillsbury	13	4
Baird	4	13	Schiffers	6	11
Blackburne	8	9	Schlechter	9½	8½
Burn	9	8	Showalter	7	10
Caro	5	12	Steinitz	10½	6½
Halprin	7½	9½	Tarrasch*	12½	3½
Janowski	11½	5½	Trenchard	3	14
Lipke	9	8	Tschigorin*	10	6
Marco	7½	9½	Walbrodt	8	9
Maroczy	9½	7½

* Adjourned game in hand.

Game No. 413.

Steinitz Beats Tschigorin.

In the First Round, Steinitz vanquished Tschigorin in a Queen's Gambit Declined. The Russian has a novel and original defence to this opening—2—Kt to QB 3—which has proved quite satisfactory in many games. It will be noticed that Steinitz did not have any advantage in the early part of the game, and while the St. Petersburg champion weakened his position by his 14th, 15th, and 16th moves, yet his defeat is due to the veteran's powerful play, of which this game is a fine example.

QUEEN'S GAMBIT DECLINED.

White—Steinitz. Black—Tschigorin.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P Q4	P Q4	23 Kt x B	R P x Kt
2 P QB4	Kt QB3(a)	24 R R8ch	K B2
3 P x P	Q x P	25 R(Q 9) x R	R x R
4 Kt KB3	P K4	26 R x R	Kt x R(K)
5 Kt B3	B QKt5	27 B x P	Kt K3
6 P x P	Q x Qch	28 B x P	Kt x BP
7 K x Q	B Kt5	29 B B-q	P R3
8 P KR3	B x K Kt	30 P R4	P x P
9 KP x B	Castles ch	31 P x P	Kt Q4
10 K B2	Kt x P	32 B B8	P Kt3
11 B K3	P QR3	33 B B4	Kt(Kt 5q) K2
12 P B4	Kt QB3	34 K Q2	K Q2
13 B B4	Kt Q5ch	35 B x Kt(K7)	Kt x B
14 K B5q	Kt K3(b)	36 B B7(h)	K Q3
15 P Kt4	P QKt4ch	37 K K3	K B4
16 R Q-q	P QB4(d)	38 K B4	K Q3
17 B B-q	K R K-q	39 P Kt3	K B4
18 B Kt2	P B4	40 B x P(i)	Kt x Bch
19 P Kt5	Kt Ktsq	41 K x P	Resigns
20 Kt Q5	Kt K3(e)
21 P QR4(f)	P x P
22 R x P	P QR4

Notes by One of the Judges.

(a) P to K 3 is the accepted move. The text-move is more aggressive, and is of the nature of an offensive rather than a defensive play.

(b) Weak move, as it gets the Kt out of play, P to B 3 is probably better.

(c) Of course, P to Kt 5 wins the BP, yet the play made weakens the Queen's side, and enables White to gain a move.

(d) Kt to QB 3 followed by exchange of Rooks gives better chances for a Draw.

(e) Forced, for B takes Kt and Kt takes B is threatened.

(f) A powerful move, opening the QR file and winning a P.

(g) If K takes R, then B to Q 5.

(h) This is really the winning move, as it holds the Kt.

(i) K to K 5 will also win. The play is brilliant and wins easily.

Game No. 414.

How Tarrasch Beat Baird.

RUY LOPEZ.

White—Tarrasch. Black—Baird.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	21 Q B2	Q KKt5(e)
2 Kt KB3	Kt QB3	22 P KR3	Q Kt3
3 B Kt5	P QR3	23 R Kt3	Q R4
4 B R4	Kt B3	24 Q B6	R Q8ch
5 Castles	B K2(a)	25 K R2	P KKt3
6 Kt B3	P Q3(b)	26 R x R	Q x R
7 B x Ktch	Kt P x B	27 R Q3	Q x P
8 P Q4	P x P	28 B Q2	B x KRP
9 Kt x P	B Q2(c)	29 R Q8	B x P
10 P KB4	Castles	30 K x B	P KR4
11 P K5	P x P	31 K Kt3	R x R
12 P x P	B KKt5	32 Q x Rch	K R2
13 Q Q3	B QB4	33 P K6	Q B4
14 B K3	B x Kt(d)	34 P K7	P R5ch
15 B x B	Kt Q4	35 K x P	Q B7ch
16 Q Kt3	Kt x Kt	36 K Kt4	P B4ch
17 B x Kt	B K3	37 K Kt5	Q Kt6ch
18 K R-q	Q Q4	38 K B6	Q R5ch
19 Q R4	Q R Q-q	39 B Kt5	Resigns.
20 R B3	Q B5

Notes by Gunsberg.

(a) Kt takes P is the accepted play. Black has already a cramped position.

(b) It is questionable whether or not he had better given up the P than to make this defence. P to QKt 4, while it weakens the Q side, is in every way better than the move selected.

(c) From the position at this stage of the game it is somewhat amazing that Black could keep up the fight for thirty moves.

(d) In a hurry, so it seems, to reduce his fighting force.

(e) Notice how the Queen goes bobbing round.

Notes.

In speaking of the Vienna Tournament, The B. C. M. remarks:—"We have the curious spectacle of a contest in which nearly all the world's strongest players are taking part, but the world's Champion is not one of them."

A new and enlarged edition of Mr. Walter Pulitzer's famous "Chess-Harmonies," says the Literary Digest, is in press and will be ready in a few weeks. The first edition of this work elicited praise from problematists, Chess-journals, and the lovers of the "poetry of Chess," the world over. The new edition will contain a number of problems not in the first book, and, as Mr. Pulitzer has increased in wisdom, his Chess-genius has made many discoveries during the years since "Chess-Harmonies" was published. The new book is full of delightful surprises, interesting studies, and all that which evinces originality of idea and beauty of construction. We most heartily recommend "Chess-Harmonies" to our many friends who are interested in the Problem-Art.

The score in the Australian Championship match when the mail left, stood thus:—Mr. Jacobsen, 2 wins; Mr. Jones, 0; drawn, 1.

A short match of five games up is being played at Simpson's between Messrs. Teichmann and F. J. Lee. The first game was drawn, and the second won by Mr. Lee in 41 moves.

There is a general desire to form a new British chess association, and the matter is being seriously discussed North and South. Many chess players feel the need of a commanding central organisation, whose authority on all matters in which the interests of chess are concerned shall be beyond question. Besides, such an association would be responsible for the management of any international or other leading events, and would generally look after the interests of the game and its adherents. The evils and abuses of the present unregulated state of the chess world are generally admitted, and various attempts have been made in the direction now indicated, but with only very partial success.—Times Weekly.

MAIL STEAMERS.

THE NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Tacoma, Wash....	N. P. Co.	Tacoma 1	M. Aug. 1
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rosetta 2	M. Aug. 1
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Hohenzollern 3	M. Aug. 1
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Belgic 4	Th. Aug. 4
Hongkong	M. M. Co.	——	W. Aug. 10
America	O. & O. Co.	Gaelic 5	Su. Aug. 14
Canada, &c.	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of India	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Glengyle	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	Th. Aug. 18

1 Left Tacoma on the 19th July.
2 Left Nagasaki on the 27th inst.
3 Left Hongkong on the 27th July.
4 Left Hongkong on the 26th July.
5 Left San Francisco on the 26th July.

THE NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Tacoma, Wash....	N. P. Co.	Victoria	Sa. July 30
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Arizona	Tu. Aug. 2
Europe, via S'hai.	M. M. Co.	Ernest Simons	W. Aug. 3
Shanghai	N. Y. E.	Kobe Maru	W. Aug. 3
Hongkong	N. D. L.	Hohenzollern	F. Aug. 5
America	O. & O. Co.	Belgic	Sa. Aug. 6
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rosetta	W. Aug. 10
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of India	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Gaelic	M. Aug. 15

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Saikio Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,652, G. W. Conner, 22nd July,—Shanghai via ports, 16th July, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kamakura Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,797, Treunt, 23rd July,—Nagasaki, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Nagato Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,149, S. Tsuji, 23rd July,—Otaru via ports, 19th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, F. W. Horton, 24th July,—Kobe, 23rd July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Empress of China, British steamer, 3,003, R. Archibold, 25th July,—Vancouver, B.C., 11th July, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Japan, British steamer, 2,795, T. Leigh, 25th July,—London via ports, Kobe, 24th July, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Coptic, British steamer, 2,744, Inman Sealby, 25th July,—San Francisco via Honolulu, 7th July, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Ernest Simons, French steamer, 2,260, Maubeuge, 25th July,—Marseilles via ports, Kobe, 24th July. Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Indrapura, British steamer, 2,510, Horsfall, 26th July,—New York via Suez Canal and way ports, Kobe, 24th July, General.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Erato, German steamer, 2,377, Ostermann, 26th July,—Hamburg via ports, Hongkong, 20th July, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Dante, Dutch steamer, 1,302, Th. Kupke, 27th July,—Iloilo, 15th July, Sugar.—Tai Tak Tong.

Glenfarg, British steamer, 2,350, F. Selby, 27th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 26th July, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Rōjun Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,010, A. E. Moses, 27th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 26th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, Geo. A. Lee, 28th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 27th July, Mails and General.—C. P. R Co.
Victoria, British steamer, 1,991, J. Trueb idge, 28th July,—Hongkong via ports, Kobe, 27th July, Mails & General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

DEPARTURES.

Fame (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 280, Lt. H. A. Gillett, 22nd July,—Kobe.
Grafton (12), British Cruiser, 7,350, Capt. E. P. Jones, 22nd July,—Kobe.
Arthur Fitger, German ship, 1,696, K. Denker, 23rd July.—Kobe, Pig Iron.—Sale & Co.
Inaba Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,709, C. Bainbridge, 23rd July,—Marseilles, London and Antwerp via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Kwetlin, British steamer, 1,088, J. B. Harris, 24th July,—Moji, Ballast.—Butterfield & Swire.
Ching Wo, British steamer, 2,517, H. C. Harris, 24th July,—London via Shanghai and way ports, General.—W. M. Strachan & Co.
Empress of China, British steamer, 3,003, R Archibald, 25th July,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Liv, Norwegian steamer, 2,003, Hansen, 25th July,—Kobe, General.—Frazar & Co.
Amagi Kan (11), Japanese Wondensloop, 926, Commander I. Tategaki, 25th July,—Yokosuka.
Nagato Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,149, S. Tsuji, 26th July,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Matsuyama Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,934, J. Nirei, 26th July,—Bombay via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Rohilla, British steamer, 2,216, S. B. Luckyer, 27th July,—Hongkong via Kobe and Nagasaki, Mails & General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.
Coptic, British steamer, 2,744, Inman Sealby, 27th July,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General. —O. & O. S.S. Co.
Glenmark, British barque, 1,257, Wm. Johnson, 27th July—Portland, Oregon, Ballast.—T. M. Laffin.
Saikio Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,652, G. W. Conner, 27th July,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Sikh, British steamer, 1,736, J. Rowley, 27th July, —New York via ports, and Suez Canal, General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.
Rockhurst, British barque, 1,400, E. Thomas, 28th July,—Astoria, Oregon, Ballast.—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Empress of China, from Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. F. S. A. Bourne, Mr. B. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bruce, Mr. Benedikter, Mr. Bush, Mr. Coombs, Mr. Walter M. Cabot, Mr. W. E. Dunn, Rev. F. Flynn, Mr. K. Fukushima, Mr. W. S. Cayton Green, Miss Gaskin, Dr. Halstead, Mr. Hochapfel, Mr. A. L. Herringer, Mr. J. H. Stewart Lockhart, Miss Leete, Mr.. Matona, Mr. Robert R. Macaulay, Mr. Mano, Mr. Nakahara, Mrs. A. V. Payne, Mrs. Perry and Misses Perry (three), Mr. and Mrs. Powell, Miss Richardson, Miss H. I. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Seaman, Mr. Sakaguchi, Mr. Sakato, Mr. Takatsuji, Mr. K. Tanaka, Mr. and Mrs. Toms, Miss Toms, Miss Rita Toms, and Bishop Wilson, in cabin; 7 in second class; 80 in steerage.

Per British steamer Japan, from London via ports:—Mrs. Cooke, 2 children, and servant, and Mr. de Dyke, in cabin.

Per British steamer Coptic, from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. T. Hubbard T. Smith, Mr. Mark A. Shaw, Mrs. Mark A. Shaw, Mr. A. Segawa, Rev. and Mrs. D. L. Gifford, Mrs. J. T. Van Ryn, Mrs. Lieut Parmenter, Miss Irwin, Mr. Shimamura, Mr. Trentzel, Mr. La Roche, Mr. Lyman Tiffany, and Mr. G. Stanton Tiffany, in cabin. For Kobe:—Mr. and Mrs. James Flood, in cabin. For Nagasaki:—Mr. S. N. Syromantinkoff-Sigma, in cabin. For Shanghai:—Mr. Chas. S. Coy, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Barbier and and child, Mme. Pelagie Krilloff, Mr. H. W. Daniel, and Mr. E. T. Clarke, in cabin. For Hongkong:—Mrs. E. S. Joseph, Mrs. Nellie Beatty and child, Miss Brooksbank, and Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Vos, in cabin.

Per French steamer Ernest Simons, from Marseilles via ports:—Mr. Kamiya, Mr. Matsugata, Major A. Cracey and servant, Mr. Magnay, Mr. A. S. Hamilton, Miss Teamen, Mr. van Poesfen, Mrs. Otani, Mr. and Mrs. Lombard and servant, Mr. Schumaker, Mr. and Mrs. Price and 2 children, Mrs. Mackenzie and child and servant, Mr. Okuboni, Mr. B. H. Drummond, Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp, Mr. Barlow, Mr. C. Kockstock, Mr. and Mrs. Kichman, 2 children and amah, M. le Comet d'Ursel and servant, Lady Hemby and valet, Mr. and Mrs. Wright and valet, Colonel Denby, Mr. W. H. Bell, Mr. G. A. Singston, Miss von Stranch, Mr. Briest, Mr. Dolliot, Mr. J. A. Beaudenbung, Mrs. A. Ficque, Mr. Tanaka, Mr. Kobayashi, and Mr. A. Kleinwort, in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, from from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. G. J. Chapman, Mr. E. P. Frost, Mr. Polishwalla, Mr. Nowrowalla, Miss A. M. Baker, Lieut. E. H. Shewell, Mrs. Prynne, Lieut. Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Jolly, Mr. Kalff, Lieut. Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. Faga, Mr. G. Richarme, Mr. K. Fritsche, Miss Steger, Miss A. G. Waters, Mr. and Mrs. N. Schmucker-H.E. Baron Czikann de Wahlborn and valet, Mr. H. C. Field, Mr. H. H. Bennett, Mrs. Dabelstein and infant, Mrs. and 3 Misses Campbell, Mr. E. A. Probst, Mr. C. J. Dudgeon, Mr. and Mrs. Slevogt, Mr. J. E. Denham, Mr. A. D. Brent, Mr. G. H. Purcell, Mr. and Mrs. Melchers, governess and 2 children, Mr. Bland, Mr. G. Kremsir, Mr. and Mrs. N. P. Wilkinson and child, Mr. A. Rhode, Count Berstoff, Mr. P. A. Schlumberger, Mr. C. Holmes, Mrs. Murai, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Ovisen, Mr. F. Abenheim, Mr. A. D. Brent, Mr. R. J. Ackland, Mr. C. Weber, Mr. J. Komor, Mr. and Mrs. Slevogt, Mr. N. Russell, Mr. J. E. Denham, Mr. T. Kushan, Mr. I. de Bridgny, Lieutenant S. Fletcher, Mr. Bevis, Mr. and Mrs. Hood and two Misses Hood, and Mr. E. H. Tuska, in cabin; Mr. E. Belselman, in second class. In Transit:—Lieut. Brown, R.N., Mr. T. H. Lyle, Surg. C. L. Bunton, Mr. A. K. Rhoden, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Yick Quon, Lieut.-Colonel and Mrs. Stoker, Mr. Mr. R. Difendorfer, Rev. E. Jones, Captain John Onspensky, Mrs. Kurai's child, Rev. and Mrs. Doughty and 4 children, Mr. J. A. Summers, Mr. E. J. Sanford and daughter, Dr. J. Fryer, Mr. A. R. Greaves, Miss Dudley, and Mr. Geo. Flood, in cabin; 10 in second class; 305 Chinese, 10 Japanese, and 7 Asiatic servants, in steerage.

Per British steamer Victoria, from Hongkong via ports:—Mrs. J. Trueb idge and child, Mr. Aitken, Mrs. Sherwood, Miss Day, Mr. A. H. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Moller, and Mrs. Edwards and child, in cabin; Mr. Winterbottom, wife and child, in second class; 141 Chinese, and 88 Japanese, in steerage.

DEPARTED.

Per Japanese steamer Inaba Maru, for London via ports:—Mr. E. J. Cowan, Mr. F. E. Fernald, Mr. H. Edgell, Mr. H. Fabor, Mr. B. Gudrej, Mr. R. S. Setlna, Mr. K. Fukuchi, Mr. S. Iwashita, Master S. Iwashita, Mr. K. Kano, Mr. Katto, Commander A. Nakamma, I.J.N., Mr. M. Naruse, and Mr. J. Jenkins, in cabin; Mr. Young, Mr. Hwong Pan Sing, Mr. N. Ikeuchi, Mr. S. Shibagaki, Mr. Y. Ohara, Mr. C. Wilkinson, Mr. T. Kurebayashi, and Rev. J. H. Worley, in second class; 40 Japanese, and 2 Chinese, in steerage.

Per British steamer Empress of China, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. R. de la Poer, Mr. L. F. M. Dumont, Mr. H Schwer, Miss Crerar, Mrs. R. Finch, Colonel the O'Gorman, Lieut. and Mrs. Bagnall-Wild, Mr J. W. Dearden, Mr. A. J. Madar, Mr. H. P. Madar, Mr. P. Th. Pietzcker, Mr. D. Earnshaw, Mr. and Mrs. H. Ivison, Mr. S. Isaacs, Mr. Chas. Weber, Mr. M. Russell, Master J. Kuhn, Mr. E. H. Tuska, Mr. H. M. Bevis, Mr. G. W. Middleton, Lieut. and Mrs. Boghiloff, Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, Mr. J. F. C. Edwards, Mr. J. Badge, Mr. F. E. Wilkinson, Mr. J. Kuhn, Mrs. A. Kuhn, Mrs. J. Kuhn, Mr. A. Kuhn, Miss C. Kuhn, Mrs. Awdry, Miss Poore, Mr. A. Barnerman, Mrs. Chas. Denby and infant, Mrs. Jas. Flood and infant, Mr. E. W. Frazar, Mr. Y. Izumi, and Rev. Fulkerson in cabin; Mrs. Denby's servant in steerage.

Per British steamer Coptic, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. J. A. Thomas, Mrs. H. E. Parmenter, Miss Irwin, Mr. J. M. Machaels, Mr. A. H. White, Mr. J. B. Stiven, Mr. C. S. McKinley and European servant, Miss Imhof, Miss L. Zuffluh, Mr. P. L. Gerbard, Mr. C. S. Burr, Miss L. Kidwell and native servant, Rev. M. S. Vail, Rev. J. C. Davidson, Mrs. J. T. Smith and daughter, Miss F. Lynwood, Rev. A. Oltmans, Rev. B. C. Waworth, Rev. H. B. Price, Mr. T. Nakagawa, Mr. Chas. S. Coy, Rev. R. S. Hope, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Barbier and child, Mme. Pelagie Krilloff, Mr. H. W. Daniel, Mr. E. T. Clarke, Mrs. E. S. Joseph, Mrs. Nellie Beatty and child, Miss Brooksbank, Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Vos, and Mr. S. N. Syromantinkoff Sigma, in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Saikio Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—Mr. M. Kawahara, Mr. H. W. Lee, Chief Eng. K. Matsuzawa, I.J.N., Mr. S. Yezaki, Mr. H. Iwasaki, Mr. G. Bay, Mr. Baessler, and Mr. A. Johnsfood, in cabin; Mr. K. Nakayama, Mr. K. Oda, Mr. T. Miyajima, Mr. Paul Pabarookoff, Mr. J. H. Thomson, Mr. K. Iwahara, Mrs. G. Tanikawa, Mrs. T. Soyejima, and Mr. and Mrs. Iriye, in second class; 60 Japanese, and 1 Chinese, in steerage.

Per British steamer Rohilla, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. T. Kato, Mr. W. Tetley, Miss Watkins, Mr. Tsang Sin Wing and servant, Mr. J. Mulloy, Sergt. Cronin, Mr. Chan Joo Shung, Mr. Lee Sue Kam, and Mr. Ah Jong, in cabin; 17 Chinese, 1 child and 2 infants, in steerage.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

There are some inquiries for yarns, but at very low prices and on a very limited scale. For grey shirtings the market is still quite dull, and the same remark applies to fancy cottons and woollens.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

	PER PIECE.
Grey Shirtings—8¼ lb, 38½ yds, 39 inches	$2 55 to 2 85
Grey Shirtings—9lb, 38½ yds, 45inches	2.85 to 3.35
T. Cloth—7lb, 24 yards, 32 inches	1.80 to 2.00
Indigo Shirtings—12 yards, 44 inches	1.75 to 2.60
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches	2 00 to 3.75
Cotton—Italians and Satteens Black, 32 inches	PER YARD. 0.15 to 0.25

WOOLLENS.

	PER YARD.
Flannels	$0.30 to 0.50
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches heal	0.28 to 0.41
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Medium	Nominal
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Common	Nominal
Mousseline de Laine—Chape, 24 yards, 31 inches	0 15 to 0 17
Cloths—Pilots, 54 @ 56 inches	0.35 to 0 50
Cloths—Presidents, 54 @ 56 inches	0.60 to 0.74½
Cloths—Unions, 54 @ 56 inches	0.50 to 0.85
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 3½, per lb	0 50, to 0 60
	PER PIECE.
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	7 75 to 9.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42-3 inches	0.60 to 1.00
Turkey Reds—2.0 to 3.0lb, 24/25 yards, 30 inches	1.25 to 2 20
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 4lb, 24/25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.52½

COTTON YARNS.

	PER PICUL.
Nos 16 24, Singles	$15.50 to 38.50
Nos. 28/32, Singles	39.00 to 41.50
Nos. 38/42, Singles	43.50 to 45.50
Nos. 32, Doubles	42.00 to 43.50
Nos. 42, Doubles	47.00 to 50.50
Nos. 2/60, Plain	61 00 to 63.00
Nos. 2/80, Plain	75.00 to 76.30
Nos. 2/100, Plain	97.00 to 99.00
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	69.50 to 76.50
Nos. 2 80, Gassed	85.00 to 90.00
Nos. 2, 100, Gassed	114.00 to 124.00

RAW COTTON.

	PER PICUL.
American Middling	$19.50 to —
Indian Broach	19.25 —
Chinese	21.00 to 21.50

METALS.

The market is absolutely lifeless.

	PER PICUL.
Round and square 4 inch. and upward	3.85 to 4.10
Iron Plates, assorted	4 00 to 4.40
Sheet Iron	4.90 to 5.10
Galvanized Iron sheets	8.50 to 10.25
Wire Nails, assorted	5.90 to 6.10
Tin Plates, per box	5.75 to 5.95
Pig Iron, No. 1	2.08 to 2.10
Hoop Iron (1 to 1½ inch)	5.00 to 5.25

KEROSENE.

The market is still quiet, and no movement is expected till next month.

American	$2.05	—
Russian	1.95 to	2.00
Langkat	—	1.85

SUGAR.

The market is quiet, but there are indications of an improving demand. For Manilas prices have ranged 5 to 10 sen lower, and Formosas have declined 10 sen. In white refined prices are unchanged.

	PER PICUL.
Brown Takao	$5.30 to 5.50
Brown Manila	5.10 to 6.20
Brown Daitong	3.80 to 4.20
Brown Canton	4.15 to 5.80
White Java and Penang	6.90 to 7.25
White Refined	7.70 to 9.60

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

A steady demand exists in Europe, but American buyers show no disposition for purchases. Prices are slightly lower all round. The settlements since the 1st July has been 2,203 piculs, against 1,081 for the corresponding date last year. The total visible supply is 6,760 piculs.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra 9/11, 10/12 den.....	$970
Filatures—Extra 13/15, 14/16 den.....	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1, 10/13 deniers	880 to 890
Filatures—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den	920 to 930
Filatures—No. 1½, 10/14 deniers.....	865 to 875
Filatures—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	900 to 910
Filatures—No. 2, 10/15 deniers.....	845
Filatures—No. 2, 13/18 deniers.....	880 to 890
Re-reels—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	850
Re-reels—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	830
Re-reels—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	810
Re-reels—No. 2½, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 3, 14/20 deniers.....	Nominal
Kakedas—Extra	850
Kakedas—No. 1	825
Kakedas—No. 1½
Kakedas—No. 2	790
Kakedas—No. 2½

WASTE SILK.

The market is quite lifeless, business being nil and quotations merely nominal. The stock on hand is put at 3,170 piculs.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filature, Best	$115 to 120
Noshi—Filature, Good	105 to 110
Noshi—Oshu, Best.....	110 to 115
Noshi—Oshu, Good	100 to 105
Noshi—Oshu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Shinshu, Best	70 to 75
Noshi—Shinshu, Good	65 to 67½
Noshi—Bushu, Best	115 to 120
Noshi—Bushu, Good.....	100 to 110
Noshi—Bushu, Medium.....	90 to 95
Noshi—Joshu, Good	60 to 65
Noshi—Joshu, Fair	55 to 57½
Kibiso—Filature, Best	95 to 100
Kibiso—Filature, Seconds	85 to 90
Kibiso—Joshu, Good	25 to 30
Kibiso—Bushu, Fair	20 to 22½

TEA.

Purchases have been large, chiefly in the lower grades. There have been numerous large arrivals, and a stock of over 11,000 piculs is on hand. The total settlements up to date are 148,939 piculs, against 161,416 piculs at the corresponding period of last year.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	$35 & upwards
Choice	$13 to 34
Finest	31 to 32
Fine	29 to 30
Good Medium	27 to 28
Medium	25 to 26
Good Common	23 to 24
Common	21 to 22

EXCHANGE.

Silver has further declined ¼ in London, and quotations for sterling are ¼ lower from China, causing higher rates on China with a firm tendency in other rates and closing for the mails per steamers Empress of Japan, Victoria, and Glenfarg as under.

Sterling—Bank T.T. .....2/0¼ to 1/16
— — Bills on demand ...	2/0⅝
— — 4 months' sight	2/0½
— Private 4 months' sight	2/0⅜
— — 6 months' sight	2/0⅜
On Paris—Bank sight	2 55
On Paris—Private 4 months' sight ...	2.58½
On America—Bank Bills on demand..	49½
— Private 4 months' sight...	50½
On Germany—Bank sight	2.06½
— Private 4 months' sight...	2.10½
On Hongkong—Bank sight.....4½% dis.
— Private 10 days' sight.....	6% dis.
On Shanghai—Bank sight	78½
— Private 10 days' sight ...	79½
On India—Bank sight	153
— Private 30 days' sight ...	156
Bar Silver (London)	27½

WATERING APPARATUS

Non-freezing & Ordinary Hydrants and Street Washers.
Garden Watering Boxes and Apparatus.
Gun-Metal, Copper, and Cast-Iron Cocks and Valves.

E. GUESNIER, E.C.P.,
Engineer and Cock Mnfr.,
(Successor of ACHILLE CADET)
27, Rue des Taillandiers,
PARIS.

Hydropathic and Massage Apparatus supplied to the Vichy Co. Vapour Baths (Berthe system).

Apply to Boyes & Co., agents for M. Oppenheimer & Co., Paris.

December 5, 1896.

SKINS ON FIRE

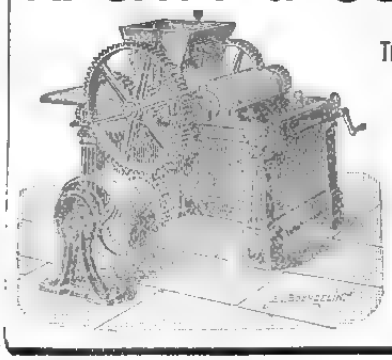
With torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, and pimply humours, instantly relieved by a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a single anointing with CUTICURA (ointment), the great skin cure, followed by a full dose of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, greatest of blood purifiers and humour cures.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A. ☞ "How to Cure Every Skin Humour," post free.

BABY'S SKIN SCALP and Hair Purified & Beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

A. SAVY & CO., ENGINEERS.



162, Rue de Charenton, Paris.
THE OLD G. HERMANN DEBATISTE WORKS.
ESTABLISHED 1830.
The Oldest and Largest Makers in the World of Chocolate, Cocoa, and Confectionery Plants.
Over 2,500 Chocolate Factories fitted up to January 1st, 1896.
GRINDING MACHINERY for all kinds of dry or wet substances, colours, printing inks, toilet soap, perfumery, and chemicals.
MIXING, CRUSHING, AND PULVERISING MACHINES FOR ALL MATERIALS.
Address MESSRS. C. ROHDE & CO., YOKOHAMA.

November 21st, 1896.

Trade Mark on WALTER MAC. GLASGOW SARACEN FOUNDRY R.CRANE & Co every Casting.

Macfarlane's Castings,

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"SHARP, CLEAN, AND FULL OF CHARACTER."

ORNAMENTAL CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
VERANDAHS, BALCONIES, BANDSTANDS, ARCADES, KIOSKS, CONSERVATORIES, ROOFS,
RAILWAY STATIONS, BARRACKS, FACTORIES, PUBLIC WORKS, MARKETS, &c.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PILLARS, BRACKETS, AND WIRE WAYS.
NUMEROUS HEIGHTS AND DESIGNS TO SUIT THE DIFFERENT REQUIREMENTS.

MACFARLANE'S GLASS ENAMELLED DRAIN AND SOIL PIPES, A SPECIALITY.

TWO GOLD MEDALS, CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

Illustrated CATALOGUES, Price Lists, and Estimates on application.

WALTER MACFARLANE & Co., Glasgow, Scotland.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LEA & PERRINS'

OBSERVE THAT THE SIGNATURE

Lea & Perrins

IS NOW PRINTED IN BLUE INK DIAGONALLY ACROSS THE OUTSIDE WRAPPER of every Bottle of the

ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

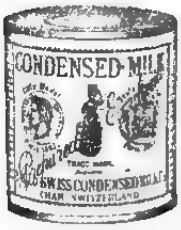
SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale by the Proprietors, Worcester;
Crosse & Blackwell, Ltd., London;
and Export Oilmen generally.

RETAIL EVERYWHERE.

46ins. May 8th, 1898.

MILKMAID BRAND CONDENSED MILK



The "Milkmaid" Brand is guaranteed to contain all the cream of the original milk. In the process of manufacture nothing but water is removed, nothing but the best refined sugar added.

Avoid low-priced brands from which the cream has been abstracted, and ask for the "Milkmaid" Brand, the best for all purposes.

LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT

is a perfect tonic; it braces up the system to resist Neuralgia, Colds and Influenza; it keeps the healthy well, and strengthens Invalids. A perfect essence of Beef; its effect upon the system is lasting, not transitory like alcoholic stimulants. In the Kitchen it provides the essential features of good Cookery—appetising flavour, nourishment and digestibility.

Note this Signature in BLUE on every Jar.

J. Liebig

AVOID INFERIOR SUBSTITUTES.

DINNEFORD'S

The Universal Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Headache, Heartburn, Indigestion, Sour Eructations, Bilious Affections.

The Physician's Cure for Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Gravel; the safest and most gentle Medicine for Infants, Children, Delicate Females, and the Sickness of Pregnancy.

MAGNESIA

Sold Throughout the World.

N.B.—ASK FOR DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

September 19th, 1897. 9tm.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

THE FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

More Fragrant; More Lasting; and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ATKINSON'S ONLY AND BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Only genuine with "White Rose" Trade Mark.

Of all Dealers & of the Manufacturers—

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

January 1st, 1898. 1y.

THE

GENERAL CATALOGUE AND BUYERS' GUIDE

ISSUED SEMI-ANNUALLY BY

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.

THE GREAT MAIL ORDER HOUSE.

Chicago, U. S. A.

IS THE MOST COMPLETE IN THE WORLD

It has more than 14,000 illustrations, about 40,000 quotations of prices, weighs 2¼ pounds, and contains over 600 pages. Everything you wear or use is listed in it; and the prices quoted place you in a position to buy from us in large or small quantities, at wholesale prices. We do not sell this General Catalogue and Buyers' Guide; we give it away. To introduce to you our immense facilities we will send free of charge to you or any other foreign resident our "Buyers' Guide," and our "Hand Book for Foreign Buyers," which gives all information necessary to put you in touch with our methods. Send us your address and we'll do the rest.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

111 to 120 Michigan Ave., Chicago, U. S. A.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF MODERN TIMES

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

PERSONS suffering from weak or debilitatep constitutions will discover that by the use of this wonderful medicine there is "Health for all." The blood is the fountain of life, and its purity can be maintained by the use of these Pills

Sir Samuel Baker, in his work entitled "The Nile Tributaries in Abyssinia," says—"I ordered the dragoman Mahomet to inform the Fakir that I was a Doctor, and I had the best medicines at the service of the sick, with advice gratis. In a short time I had many applicants, to whom I served out a quantity of Holloway's Pills. These are most useful to an explorer, as, possessing unmistakable purgative properties, they create an undeniable effect upon the patient, which satisfies them of their value."

SIMPLE, SAFE, AND CERTAIN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

Is a certain remedy for bad legs, bad breasts, and ulcerations of all kinds. It acts miraculously in healing ulcerations, curing skin diseases, and in arresting and subduing all inflammations.

Mr. J. T. Cooper, in his account of his extraordinary travels in China, published in 1871, says—"I had with me a quantity of Holloway's Ointment. I gave some to the people, and nothing could exceed their gratitude; and, in consequence, milk, fowls, butter, and horse feed poured in upon us, until at last a teaspoonful of Ointment was worth a fowl and any quantity of peas, and the demand became so great that I was obliged to lock up the small remaining "stock."

Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the World. May 1st, 1897.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor, at 51, Main Street, Settlement, by Arthur Bellamy Brown, of No. 7-c, Bluff, Yokohama.—Saturday, July 30, 1898.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 6.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, AUGUST 6TH, 1898. 明治三十一年八月六日發行 每週金貨拾錢 VOL. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 125
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 126
Some Legal Questions of the Day 127
The Ningpo Joss House 127
The American Terms of Peace 128
The Philippines Problem 128
Reuter's Agent 128
House of Peers 128
A Curious Theory 128
Political Notes 129
Silver Yen 129
The Prison Question 130
Death of Prince Bismarck 130
Formosa 130
Formosa Railway Company 131
Import of Iron from China 131
Tokyo Street Railways 131
Telephone Expansion 132
Marquis Ito and China 132
Japanese Judges 132
Prices 132
Hyogo Warehouse Trouble 132
Presentations to Dr. Macdonald 133
M. Boissonade 133
Postal Complications 134
Cotton Spinners 134
The Recent Disaster in the Harbour 134
More Insubordination on the Part of Students 134
Block in Deliveries of Imports 134
The Barley Crop 135
Tea-Preparing Machine 135
A New Tax 135
The Mitsui Ginko 135
Terrible Affair in Yokohama Harbour 135
Leading Articles:—
Prince Bismarck 136
Chinese Affairs 137
News of the Week 137
Synod of the Church of Christ in Japan 138
Board of Home Missions of the Church of Christ in Japan 139
Correspondence:—
Missions in Japan 140
Three Contrasted Public Notices 141
A Misstatement Corrected 141
Testimonial to Dr. D. Macdonald 142
The Fatality in Yokohama Harbour 142
Latest Telegraphic News 144
Chess 145
Latest Shipping 146
Latest Commercial 147

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"FAISCE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same: and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, AUG. 6TH, 1898.

DEATH.

AT 242, Kita Shinagawa, on the evening of 31st July, the Baroness ITO FUSA-KO, wife of His Excellency Vice-Admiral Baron T. Y. Ito, Vice-Minister of Imperial Marine; after a long and painful illness.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE young King of Spain is confined to his bed with an attack of measles.

PRINCE BISMARCK died last Saturday night—full of years and honours.

PRINCE CYRIL of Russia did not land at Nagasaki owing to a severe attack of toothache.

THE week has seen no diminution in the heat, despite the thunderstorms of the past few days.

COASTING steamers are lying idle at Shanghai owing to the firemen striking for an increase of pay.

THERE has been some abatement of the dysentery epidemic in Kanagawa Prefecture this last week.

A TELEGRAM of the 7th ult. says the tea market is still active in America and good business is being done.

A MAN named Inagaki Minakichi, 23 years old, living in Sone, in Shikigori, killed his wife with a knife, and committed suicide. The facts were reported by Dr. Wheeler and a Japanese physician, and now being sifted.

price of rice is the familiar reason alleged for the act.

THE Yokohama Cricket Club's baseball team easily defeated a nine from Tokyo last Saturday, the score being 9 runs to 12.

MR. LAFFIN'S speedy cutter Mary has won the first race for the Diamond Jubilee Cup, presented by British residents.

THE swimming and diving competitions of the Yokohama Amateur Rowing Club was held on Wednesday evening, and some fair sport resulted.

THE Industrial Bank has decided to build an office near the Peer's Club, Yurakucho, Kojimachi, Tokyo. The cost will be about yen 110,000.

THE Emperor William was deeply affected at the news of the death of Prince Bismarck, and abandoned his tour to Norway, returning to Germany.

MR. OISHI, Minister of State for Agricultural and Commercial Affairs, is reported to have just been married to a young lady of 24 whose name is not reported.

IT is said that Mr. Hoshi Toru's prospects of becoming Minister of State for Foreign Affairs have been destroyed, Count Okuma opposing the idea most strenuously.

CHINA'S advisers are said to be at last growing anxious at the increasing arrogance of the Russian Embassy in Peking in regard to the claims it puts forth.

IT is rumoured that Mr. Yano, Minister at Peking, will be appointed to another post, and Mr. Komura, Vice-Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, will take the vacancy.

H.M.S. Powerful, on the run from Wei hai-wei to Yokohama, carried out some speed trials with highly successful results, an average of over 18 knots being maintained.

IT seems probable that the American terms of place will only include the session of one of the Ladrone Islands, the Philippines Archipelgo returning to the Spanish Crown.

PREVIOUS to his departure for China, Marquis Ito, went to the palace to bid farewell to the Emperor and Empress, and it is reported that Her Majesty gave the Marquis a handsome present.

THE Nile force has established a depot twelve miles below Shabulka. The Khalifa is concentrating his forces at Omdurman, and has announced that he will lead his army in person.

THE Washington Post states that President McKinley will call an extra Session of Congress with the view of passing special legislation to maintain an active army of one hundred thousand men.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, who received an injury to the knee while staying at Waddesdon, Lord Rothschild's seat in Buckinghamshire, is progressing favourably towards recovery, but it is said that he will be permanently lamed.

THE Budgets of the Departments for Home Affairs, the Army, Education, and Agricultural and Commercial Affairs, which have been delayed, have at length been completed, and will be submitted within a few days.

ON Wednesday afternoon a man named D. Dupuis, 39 years old, lodging at the Hotel du Commerce and employed as a hotel runner, drank a large dose of opium with the presumed object of committing suicide. He was seen in that state by Dr. Wheeler and a Japanese physician, and now being sifted. He was afterwards sent to the General Hospital, where he is making favourable progress towards recovery.

THE Osaka Alkali Manufacturing Company has held its general meeting, at which a loss for the half-year was declared of yen 28,852. This, added to the loss of the previous half-year, makes yen 45,582 on the whole year's working.

ON 30th ult. a telegram from Chemulpo, Korea, announced that H.I.H. Prince Henry of Prussia arrived the previous day by the warship Deutschland from Kiao-chou Bay. It is reported that he will stay for some time at Vladivostock.

General Merritt is busily engaged in making final arrangements to attack Manila. The remaining transports from San Francisco were expected on the 29th July. There was to be no American or rebel advance on the doomed city until those reinforcements arrive.

THE New York Herald announces that steps are being taken in New York to promote the object of an Anglo-American League. A committee has been appointed to take action towards the establishment of a powerful national organization.

A COOLIE named Mishima Tojiro has been arrested on a charge of stealing 2 bags of cotton piece-goods belonging to Messrs. Strachan & Co., on the 23rd ult. while transporting them to the Railway Station. He is alleged to have sold the goods for yen 36. Some persons suspected of being accomplices have also been arrested.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY, in consultation with the Cabinet, has determined to accept the offer of Spain to open peace negotiations, but the war will continue unabated until more tangible terms are proposed. It is stated that the President's minimum terms include the complete independence of Cuba and American protection, the absolute cession of Puertorico and the Ladrones, and a port and coaling station in the Philippines.

IN the House of Lords on Monday Lord Salisbury, replying to Lord Kimberley, regarding British interests on the Yangtze, said the Chinese were well disposed towards British enterprise, but it had been suggested that they had been threatened by other Powers to give them the preference. Hence, on the 22nd July, Sir Claude Macdonald, British Minister at Peking, was authorized to inform China that Britain would support her against any Power committing an act of aggression upon her in return for her permitting British subjects to construct or support railways or public works.

As far as imports are concerned, stagnation is still the characteristic. There are only a few enquiries for cottons and woollens, and those at unremunerative prices. The metal market is lifeless. Sugar is steady, with an advance in prices of about 5 sen in brown, except Manilas; Formosas are 10 to 15 sen dearer. There is an improved inquiry for white refined. Turning to exports, the waste silk market is still quite destitute of life. In raw silk things are fairly active, the demand being chiefly from Europe, though more enquiries at better prices have been coming from America the last few days. Settlements since July 27 have been 1,029 piculs. There are 5,457 piculs in stock. There is a good demand for tea for common and medium grades. Prices have ruled firm, with no change in last week's quotations. The third crop is

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

The Cabinet's affairs still continue to occupy the attention of the vernacular press. It must now be confessed that never since the commencement of the Meiji era did the Tokyo newspapers engage in such a crusade against a newly organized Ministry. The latest material for criticism is furnished by the action of the Basic Committee of the Constitutional Party. For the sake of readers who may not have closely followed the course of events, it will be well to explain that the business of the Constitutional Party used to be discharged by a General Business Committee of four members. The four men who happened to be on the Committee at the time of the organization of the Cabinet, received portfolios, and a question immediately arose whether they ought to remain on the Committee after becoming Ministers. They themselves maintained that they ought, but the idea provoked much opposition, some alleging that members of the Cabinet could not possibly find time to discharge their duties as members of Committee, and others asserting that if the Party's Business Committee consisted of Ministers of State, the Party would cease to have any control over the Cabinet. It is a strange notion that a political party should see any necessity to exercise direct control over a Cabinet whose personnel consists of the party's leaders, but such is the notion of the Constitutional Party. After a somewhat acute dispute, the objectors finally carried the day, and the Ministers had to resign from the Committee. That was the first open indication of the Party's distrustful attitude towards the Cabinet. Then followed another step. The Party appointed another Committee, an Extraordinary Committee, of 15 members, for the purpose of investigating administrative and financial questions; and the Extraordinary Committee, in turn, selected five of its members, and nominated them a Basic Committee, for the purpose of formulating bases of administrative reform. Now, on the face of the matter, there is no apparent reason why a political party should not appoint as many committees as it likes for whatever purposes it pleases. But in this case it must be remembered that the Cabinet had already appointed an Administrative Reform Investigation Committee under the presidency of Count Itagaki. Hence, when the Constitutional Party appoints a similar committee on its own account, the action must be interpreted either as a declaration of want of confidence in the Cabinet, or as a resolve to ignore the Cabinet's Committee and dictate an independent programme of reforms.

* * *

While the public watched these doings with wondering eyes, an announcement appeared in a leading newspaper (the Asahi) that the Party's Basic Committee had drawn up a list of eleven principal reforms and nineteen minor reforms, which would be submitted to the Extraordinary Committee immediately for approval. The major reforms were very drastic—abolition of the Departments of Education and Justice, of the Metropolitan Police Board, and of the office of Chokunin Counsellor; reduction of the number of appeal courts and of prefectural offices; selection of District Headmen by public vote instead of their nomination by the Government; the granting of equal status to private and public schools; the amendment of the civil service examination system—all excellent measures in themselves no doubt, but of such a sweeping nature that their adoption by the Party Committee without the Cabinet's previous consent, could only be interpreted as a complete ignoring of the Cabinet's discretion.

* * *

The publication of this intelligence created at once consternation and astonishment: consternation on the side of the Constitutional Party, for the Committee had never intended to take the public into its confidence at such an early stage; and astonishment on the side of the public that such a dictatorial attitude should be assumed by the Party towards a Cabinet of its own representatives. It was remarked that the severance of the cooperative relations between the Matsukata Cabinet and the Progressists had been precipitated by precisely a similar incident, namely, a breach of confidence in publishing an interview with the Premier which the interviewers had engaged to keep secret, and it was predicted that an impasse had been created, inasmuch as the Committee had now pledged itself to a course along which the Cabinet could not possibly follow it. The comments of the leading journals varied according to their political complexion. Some—the Yorzuo Choho, for example—saw in the affair a deliberate attempt at mischief-making on the part of discontended politicians who had failed to obtain any of the "spoils," and a conspiracy on the part of the so-called "Satsuma Faction," headed by Mr. Haseba Junko, to create a split in the ranks of the Constitutionalists, and thus bring about a large secession by way of preliminary to the organization of an opposition party. Others—as the Kokumin—pointed out that the much vaunted and long desired regimen of responsible Cabinets was now proved to be an utter farce, since a Cabinet deprived of all the power properly belonging to it, ceased to have any responsibility. Others—as the Nichi Nichi—severely criticised the Constitutional Party, charging it with inability to distinguish between private and public interests. Others—as the Yomiuri—attacked the proposed reforms themselves, and cried out that, with several international problems of the gravest character to be solved, the time was quite unsuited for raising a discussion about such petty issues. Others—as the Hochi Shimbun—utilized the occasion to formulate a long indictment against the Cabinet and the Constitutional Party, accusing the latter of inconsistency and complete ignorance of the proper rôle to be played by a political party towards a Cabinet composed of its own leaders. In short, the general view is that unless the Constitutional Party radically alters its arbitrary and distrustful attitude, an impossible situation will be created. The Mainichi Shimbun, however, suggests an explanation at once simple and thorough. It says that the Basic Committee has not really formulated any programme as a committee, but has merely catalogued the various reforms presenting themselves to each of its members, and that it has now, in its collective capacity, to consider the feasibility of the projects. In reply to that explanation, it is alleged that Mr. Kataoka Kenkichi, on behalf of the Committee, actually carried the programme to Count Okuma and submitted it for his opinion and that the Count promised to state his views after mature reflection. We do not perceive that such action on the part of Mr. Kataoka imparts to the proposals any hard-and-fast character. On the contrary, the desire may have been to consult the Premier before the Committee definitely formulated its opinion. However, we are here endeavouring to reflect the views of the vernacular press, not to traverse them, and very excited, perturbed views they are.

* * *

The third article which the Government proposes to tax is salt. But the salt industry of Japan is already in a precarious condition. Representations introduced in both Houses of the Diet last session indicated that unless some improved methods of manufacture can be adopted, Japanese salt will soon cease to be a paying article of manufacture. The sum and substance of Mr Taguchi's contention is that unless the Land Tax be resorted to, the necessary increase of State revenue can not be obtained.

* * *

In the eyes of Englishmen nothing can look stranger than that a prominent member of a political party should differ from its leaders on an important subject and yet retain his connexion with the party. Mr. Taguchi Uchichi, the editor of the Keizai Zasshi, is in that predicament. He holds unswervingly to his opinion that without increasing the Land Tax no possibility exists of placing the finances of the State on a sound footing, whereas the last Cabinet's attempt to increase the Land Tax was the proximate cause of the Ministry's fall, and of its replacement by the Kenseito, Mr. Taguchi's party. The latest number of the Keizai Zasshi contains an exhaustive and interesting statement of Mr. Taguchi's views on this important subject. The saké-brewers, it is said, have declared that they can pay an increased tax of 3 yen—that is to say, they can afford to pay 10 yen per koku instead of the present charge of 7 yen—if the Government takes two steps. Those steps are, first, to interdict the brewing of unrefined saké in quantities less than a hundred koku; and secondly, to impose upon alcohol such an import duty as shall prevent it from competing with Japanese saké. Both of these measures are pronounced impossible by Mr. Taguchi. To understand his argument it is necessary to explain that unrefined saké is the great drink of the peasant classes, and that a large quantity is brewed privately. Saké brewed for domestic consumption, not for sale, is exempted from tax, but there is a restriction, namely, that the quantity brewed must not be less than 10 koku. One would suppose that the restriction should be differently formulated: that it should take the shape of a prohibition to manufacture more than a certain number of koku under the title of "for domestic use." But experience has evidently furnished reasons for fixing the minimum, not the maximum. The professional brewers now propose that the minimum should be raised to 100 koku, or 3,970 gallons. It is evident that few, if any, families consume such a large quantity of saké as 3,970 gallons per annum, and it is further evident that a family which can afford to brew so much for its own use would not drink the unrefined variety. "Unrefined saké," or "muddy saké," as it is commonly called, is essentially the beverage of the lower orders. People do not drink it from choice but for economy's sake. Hence, the measure proposed by the professional brewers would have the practical effect of putting a complete stop to private brewing, and would place the whole business in professional hands. We do not, for our own part, see why private brewing should be allowed at all, unless—which can scarcely be credited—unrefined saké, a highly deleterious beverage, is considered necessary to the health and comfort of the peasant class. Mr. Taguchi, however, seems to take it for granted that domestic brewing must not be stopped, and that it would be intolerable were the minimum limit fixed at more than 20 koku. Next, with regard to imported alcohol. It costs 25 yen a koku, and from one koku of alcohol 5 koku of mixed saké can be manufactured. The new Tariff will enable a tax of 40 per cent. to be levied upon alcohol, so that the cost of mixed saké will stand at 7 yen a koku. Evidently refined Japanese saké, costing 24 yen a koku—namely, 14 yen originally and 10 yen of tax—must very soon be driven out of the market if it has to compete with mixed saké, which many people like just as well, at only 7 yen. To place the two on an equal footing, alcohol must be subjected to an import duty of 500 per cent., or 125 yen a koku. Hence, Mr. Taguchi argues that under any circumstances the import duty on alcohol will have to be very greatly increased. Again we must say that we do not perceive the relevancy of the argument, for if the saké brewers are satisfied, nothing more need be said. However, the general inference is that the Government can not adopt with regard to home brewed saké and imported alcohol measures such as will put an end to the former and drive the latter out of the competition. If they can not, the calculation is that the demand for saké brewed by dealers will not increase from 4 million koku—the present consumption—to 6 millions and that the yield of a ten yen tax would be only 40 million yen instead of 60 millions, as hoped by the Government. In other words, by raising the tax from 7 yen to 10, the resulting increase of revenue would be 10 million yen instead of 30 millions. One imagines that the official appraisers and calculators understand all these things very clearly, but Mr. Taguchi thinks they do not, and he compares them, with

* * *

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

some seeming confusion of ideas, to a blind man who has fallen into the hell of hunger (gakido) and doesn't see the viands with which he might appease his appetite—in this case, the Land Tax.

* * *

As to the second source of revenue contemplated by the Government in preference to increasing the Land Tax—namely, a tax on sugar,—Mr. Taguchi's demonstration is very plain. He says that sugar manufactured in Japan must be sold for 25 sen per catty in order to cover expenses, whereas the best refined sugar can be imported at from 12 to 13 sen a catty. Hence, even with things as they are now, the home-manufactured article must ultimately be driven out of the market. There is consequently a strong inducement to impose a heavy import duty on the imported article. But how is it to be done? Under the new Tariff the duty will be 10 per cent.—an impost quite insignificant in this context,—and the Anglo-Japanese Revised Treaty provides that if Japan finds it necessary to levy an additional tax on home-manufactured sugar, she shall be at liberty to levy an import duty of the same amount on foreign sugar. In short, the Treaty binds her to begin with her own sugar, which is already on the point of being driven out of the market, and which will certainly disappear if its price be raised fifteen or twenty per cent.

* * *

The Fiji Shimpo's opinion about the formation of a political party to oppose the Constitutionalists is very much to the point. Such a party is greatly needed, it thinks, but to organise it with the National Unionists for basis would be to court certain failure. The members of the National Unionist Party may be very able and very trustworthy men. But they are inseparably connected with the now obsolete system of clan cabinets, and are therefore hopelessly disqualified for a place in popular favour. There is not the most shadowy use in talking any longer about the unconstitutionality of party cabinets or the mistake that Marquis Ito made in handing over the Administration to the Kensei to leaders. Baron Sonoda's views are wholly out of date. To expect the country to revert to the old system is as rational as to look for frost in the dog-days or sparks of fire in rain-drops. If the National Unionists are to form the nucleus of an opposition party, they must cease to call themselves National Unionists. Moreover, if there is to be a new party, it must have a leader able to stand up against Count Okuma, and there is no such leader in the country except Marquis Ito. Count Okuma and Marquis Ito are the two champion politicians of the era. There are no others in the same rank with them. Marquis Ito, however, can not be expected to take the field against Count Okuma at present. That is quite evident. There is nothing for it, therefore, but to wait until the proceedings of the present Cabinet furnish some principle to form the basis of a new political association.

SOME LEGAL QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

At a recent meeting of the Kokusaiho-gakko (International Law Institute), held in the Hall of the Japan Red Cross Society, the following legal questions, which we translate from the Gaikojiho, were investigated:—

1. Is it lawful for a belligerent State to cut submarine telegraph cables?

2. May a belligerent State establish a hospital in the territory of a neutral State, for treatment of the wounded?

3. Is the Act prohibiting foreigners from becoming principal officials (jinyaku) of a railway company a breach of the Treaties?

The first question was discussed in a written communication from Mr. S. Takahashi, who is now staying in England. In his private letter to Mr. T. Ariga, a member of the Institute, Mr. S. Takahashi mentioned that when the same question was discussed by the Japanese Naval Department in connection with the war between China and Japan, the majority held the negative opinion, but he advanced the affirmative. The question is now receiving great attention in England, and Mr. Holland, the eminent jurist, is of the positive opinion, but there are many who hold the opposite view. The magazine deals with the opinion of Mr. Ariga only. It says that, owing to its importance, the question has not yet been decided in the International Conference for the Protection of Marine Telegraph Cables, though there have been frequent discussions. Art. 15 of the Convention for the Protection of Marine Telegraph Cables of the 14th March, 1884, sets down that no article of the convention imposes any restrictions whatever on the free actions of belligerents. A French doctor who attended the conference, stated the following four cases:—

(a.) Cables which connect different localities of the same State. In this case the hostile and belligerent State may intercept communication and destroy the cables.

(b.) Cables which connect a locality of one of the belligerent States with a locality of the other belligerent State. In this case belligerents can do as they please with the cables.

(c.) Cables which connect one of the belligerent States with a locality of a neutral State. In this case the belligerent State may intercept the cable communications; and the hostile and belligerent State may, after occupying the locality, even destroy the cable if it is necessary to do so for the purpose of war. The same right also extends to men-of-war which blockade the coast of the hostile state.

(d.) Cables which connect two neutral States. In this case, a belligerent State has under no circumstances the right to intercept communications or cut the cables. In all the above cases the same principles apply both to Government cables and to private cables.

Mr. Ariga suggests that the question may have arisen again in Great Britain in connection with the Hispano-American war. According to a French magazine, the submarine cable between Spain and Cuba passes the territory of the United States at Key West, but its owner is a British company, and it is the sole line between Great Britain and the Bahama Islands and British Guiana. If it is cut by the United States, Great Britain must suffer a loss of great political and economical consequence.

The second question was raised upon the fact that a Naval Hospital established at Yokohama by the Naval Department of the United States of America continues to exist even after the Hispano-American War has commenced, and a naval officer of the United States, who was wounded at the battle at Manila, is now receiving medical treatment there. It was unanimously decided that the fact of the Naval Hospital continuing to exist is a breach of Japan's neutrality, because no belligerent State can perform in a neutral country any act which has any connection with war, and the medical treatment of wounded soldiers has a distinct relation to war.

With regard to the third question under discussion, it was decided that the prohibition was a breach of the Treaties. The details of the discussion are to be reported separately by the magazine.

THE NINGPO JOSS HOUSE.

On July 19th, the N. C. Daily News published a series of documents sent to it by the Secretary of the French Municipality, which, it says, throw some useful light on the dispute in reference to the Ningpo Joss-House. The first—we quote our contemporary—is an extract from the Minutes of the French Council's meeting on the 11th of May last, at which it was decided to ask the French Consul-General to expropriate, as authorised by the French treaty of 1844 and the proclamation of 1849, the lots on the French Concession in dispute, 186 and 191. This was the opening of the ball. The next is a letter of the 18th of May from the Chairman of the French Council, M. Baird, to the Count de Bezaure, explaining that the lots in question were wanted for the erection of a School and a Hospital, there being no other ground available, asking him to proceed to their expropriation, and adding that the Municipality would deposit in a bank at the disposition of the holders of the title-deeds the assessed value of the property, Tls. 41,375. Then follows an extract from the minutes of the meeting of the French Council on the 1st of June last, at which an ordinance from the French Consul-General was read, calling on the proprietors of the two lots in question to present themselves within eight days at the Consulate-General to prove their titles. This ordinance, dated the 23rd of May, was communicated to the occupants of the two lots in question by the Secretary of the French Municipality.

No. 4 is an extract from the minutes of the 22nd of June. The Secretary announced that he had written to the Representative of the Ningpo Joss-House, telling him that in conformity with the Consul-General's ordinance of the 23rd of May, he had to prove his title to lots 186 and 191 at the Consulate-General. Up to the 21st of June, the answer of the Representative of the Ningpo Joss-House was, that he had no title-deeds for these lots. No. 5 is a letter of the 23rd of June from the Secretary of the French Municipality to the Representative of the Ningpo Joss-House acknowledging a letter of the latter in which the fact that there were no title-deeds forthcoming was conveyed. The sixth and last document is a letter, dated the 1st of July, from the Secretary of the French Municipality to the Representative of the Ningpo Joss-House. It says:—

"Sir,—The Representatives of the Association known as the "Ningpo Temple" who have been, for several years, occupants of lots 186 and 191 on the cadastral plan of the French Concession at Shanghai, not having, as is learnt from your written information, any title-deeds for the said lots, I am instructed to inform you that, in accordance with the terms of the Treaties, the French Municipality has lodged with the Consul General of France a claim to repossess these lots which are necessary for the accomplishment of certain works of public utility which will be especially of advantage to the Chinese population of the French Concession, and which are as follows:—

"A School for the education of young Chinese;

"A Hospital where medical attention will be given gratuitously to poor Chinese residents;

"An Abattoir for the provision of wholesome meat for the inhabitants of Shanghai.

"The Consul-General having admitted the claim of the French Municipality, the latter assumes from this day the right of proprietorship over lots 186 and 191,

"The agreed indemnity will be paid to the rightful claimant after an understanding between the Consul-General of France and the Chinese authorities."

These documents, says the Shanghai journal, give a clear and intelligible account of the negotiations which would undoubtedly have ended peaceably and amicably had not the Taotai exhausted the patience of the Count de Bezaure and the French Municipality by his procrastination and indecision. As we have already said, these papers clear up one or two doubtful points, and answer some of the objections that have been made by pro-Chinese advocates, and we cannot but commend the action of the French Municipality in making them public. They might well have been made public even sooner, though few have doubted that our French neighbours were acting well within their rights in the steps they have taken in reference to this old bone of contention, the Ningpo Joss-House.

The new engines of the Yokohama Electric Light Company in Takashima-cho have been completed and passed the Government examination. The company will start work with them on or about the 4th inst.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE AMERICAN TERMS OF PEACE.

The telegraph insists in asking us to believe that the United States Government proposes to limit its acquisitions in the Far-Eastern Pacific to "one of the Ladrone Islands." It is very difficult to credit such a statement. "One of the Ladrones" can only mean Guahan, or Guam. The group consists of fifteen islands; a northern section of ten, all of which are uninhabited; and one, Guahan, the largest and southernmost, has the sole town in the colony, namely, San Ignacio de Azalia, with its fortified harbour of Umata. What possible use could the United States have for Guahm? It lies away out in the Pacific, nine hundred miles eastward of the Philippines and four hundred miles south of the Bonin Islands. The climate, indeed, is not bad, the mean yearly temperature being about 81° F., and the variations of temperature not very great; but the total population is only some 8,000, and the total area of the 15 islands is only 417 square miles. We can scarcely suppose that the United States Government thinks of establishing a naval base in such a remote quarter of the world at such an immense distance from any sphere of American interests. In fact, the project appears to us to be one of the most unaccountable ever formulated. America does not want a naval station in the Pacific three thousand miles eastward of Hawaii. If this war is to end by placing her in possession of two insignificant groups of islands, one two thousand miles and the other five thousand miles away from her shores, and both in the tropics, she will certainly come out of the struggle a great deal weaker than she went into it. As mere territorial acquisitions, Hawaii and the Ladrones are practically worthless. America's reason for annexing Hawaii was understood to be the necessity of having a half-way house to the Philippines. Hence, if the Philippines are not to come into her possession, Hawaii assumes the character of a white elephant. The programme suggests a strange shrinking from the consequences of her own acts, and even from her just responsibilities. For she can not leave the Philippines to their fate. She has effectually broken the power of Spain there, and rendered the islands uninhabitable for Spaniards or any other Occidentals unless means of preserving law and order are organized under Western control. It is not to be supposed that any of the foreigners now settled in the islands will remain there contentedly, or can hope to remain there in security, if a republic is established under Aguinaldo, or if the Spaniards, in their greatly weakened condition, have to renew a struggle which plainly overtaxed their strength even before this war with America. The stepping aside of America would assuredly mean the stepping in of some other Power, perhaps of two or three other Powers, and that is a contingency for which America will not secure the thanks of the world. But the crowning curiosity of the whole affair is contained in the idea, "one of the Ladrones." One out of 15 tiny islets having an aggregate area of 417 square miles! What is to become of the remaining fourteen? Spain certainly does not want them. Even with Guahan in her possession she has never drawn any revenue from the Ladrones, and would have been glad to dispose of them to any Power at any time during the past twenty years. Japan might be able to make something of them, but it would not be much, and at any rate, that is another question. We trust that the conditions of peace telegraphed by Reuter may prove to be incorrect.

THE PHILIPPINES PROBLEM.

Vernacular journals continue to harp on the subject of the Philippines, but all symptoms of a disposition to oppose occupation by the United States seem to to be now disappearing. The Chuo Shimbun, after noting the alleged consensus on the part of the Continental Powers of Europe to protest against the transfer of the islands to America, and England's contrary attitude, and after pointing out that all England's acts are plainly dictated by a desire to bring about an Anglo-Saxon alliance, declares that such an alliance should have Japan's support, since it would certainly make for the peace of the Orient. The Chuo adds that the Japanese Representative in Washington has received instructions which, though not, of course, publicly declared, are understood to indicate a line opposed to that taken by the Continental Powers of Europe. The Kokumin also has something to say on the same subject. It thinks that Japan should endorse the annexation of the Philippines by America, but should endeavour to obtain a quid pro quo in the shape of tariff concessions with regard to this country's textile fabrics, porcelains, and so forth. It is a great opportunity for Japan, our contemporary thinks, and she must not lose it by devoting her whole attention to party disputes.

REUTER'S AGENT.

We observe that an attempt is made by the Japan Gazette to defend the accuracy of Reuter's agent in Yokohama. The latter telegraphed to London that "the Compromise Bill for the revising the land valuation and the Government Bill for increasing the land tax were rejected amid great uproar." We have denied that there was any uproar in connexion with the rejection of these Bills, and our denial is founded on actual observation, for the editor of this journal was present throughout the debate and is, therefore, in a position to speak with absolute confidence. The Japan Gazette, however—or probably Reuter's agent speaking through the columns of the Japan Gazette—quotes from the Japan Times' report to show that there was an uproar. The matter is very simple and has already been explained in these columns. There certainly was an uproar, but not in connexion with the rejection of the Bills. At the commencement of the sitting a difference of opinion arose between the President and certain members with reference to a point of procedure. The dispute waxed very hot, and a disgraceful scene occurred, but order was restored after a time, and the House then proceeded to discuss and vote upon the two Bills, which were rejected in the quietest and calmest manner possible. If Baron Reuter's Yokohama agent considers that a disturbance about a point of procedure prior to the discussion of two Bills warrants him in saying "the Bills were rejected amid great uproar," he only affords another example of the want of discernment that has caused the public to complain so loudly of Reuter's telegraphic service.

HOUSE OF PEERS.

An interesting analysis of the political divisions of the House of Peers is given by the Fiji Shimpo. The total number of members at present is 320, of whom some fifty are Princes and Marquises, sitting in their own right and never taking any active part in the proceedings. Among the remaining members not more than 240 or 250 ever attend the sittings, and several of them are divided into four sections, the Sanyo-kai, the Konwa-kai, the Kenkiu kai, and the Chawa-kai. The third of these sections consists chiefly of men of Choshiu extraction and ex-officials who lost their posts on the occasion of the recent change of Cabinet. These members, some fifty in all, are inveterately hostile to the present Cabinet and may be expected to oppose it on every possible occasion. Then there are the men of Satsuma extraction, ex-governors of prefectures and superannuated officers of the Army and Navy. These folks do not feel at all satisfied with the turn that events have taken. They regard the party politicians as bucolic upstarts (debiyakusho), and harbour an ill-defined sense of resentment against progress in general. Their strength is about 30, and they too must be counted hostile to the Cabinet. Then come the members of the Chawa-kai, headed by Baron Ozaki and Messrs. Funakoshi and Ohara. These also, seeing that the times are leaving them in the lurch, and that, if they are ever again to emerge from the obscurity of retirement it will not be under the régime of party cabinets, are enemies of the present Ministry. Thus the undoubted opposition numbers fully 100 members. On the other side are the great majority of the Counts, Viscounts and Barons, elected by their respective Orders. They regard party cabinets as an unavoidable outcome of Parliamentary institutions, and are disposed to vote with the present Ministry. The members of the Konwa-kai, headed by Viscounts Tani and Soga, are also more or less favourable to the Cabinet, and the same may be said of the Sanyo-kai, led by Prince Konoye. The supporters of the Cabinet thus muster about 100 strong, that is to say, are numerically equal to its opponents. Everything depends, therefore, on the action of 30 or 40 independents whose political complexion can not be predicted.

A CURIOUS THEORY.

Mr. Shimamura, who has returned from Hawaii, where he held the post of Japanese Representative, is credited with a very singular theory. He thinks it probable that as Asiatic labour is essential for the successful cultivation of sugar, which may almost be called the sole staple product of the islands, the United States Government, will not, after annexation, place any obstacle in the way of Japanese immigration. Nevertheless, annexation will have a very injurious effect on the Japanese labouring in the islands. There are twenty thousand Japanese employed on the sugar plantations, and they send home from five to six hundred thousand yen every year. That excellent result is attributed by Mr. Shimamura, not so much to the industry and thrift of the men, as to the severe measures now adopted to check idleness. Those measures will cease to be applicable after the islands have passed under American control, and Mr. Shimamura thinks that the saving will then come to an end.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

POLITICAL NOTES.

Whether the newspapers exaggerated the significance of the action recently taken by the Extraordinary Committee of the Constitutional Party in formulating a number of sweeping reforms for the Cabinet's adoption, or whether the Committee itself finds that to press its views would produce serious consequences, there is now an evident disposition to minimize the importance of its action. Baron Kusumoto, leading member of the Party's General Committee, has given interviews to the representatives of two leading journals within the last two days, and has addressed to each practically the same language, namely, that the programme of reforms suggested by the Extraordinary Committee endorsed by the General Committee, and submitted by him on behalf of the latter to Count Okuma, is not by any means intended as a hard-and fast pronunciamento, whose adoption is essential to the continuance of amicable relations between the Party and the Cabinet. Baron Kusumoto's explanation is marked by a good deal of difficulty. He wants to reconcile two seemingly irreconcilable positions, namely, that while the Committee intends its programme to be something more than a mere suggestion, and while it does not expect its reforms to be pooh-poohed, it has no intention of fighting if they do meet with that fate. In short, the Committee is represented as having jotted down its ideas in a light-hearted sort of way, hoping much that they may be adopted, but by no means irrevocably pledged to push them in the teeth of the Cabinet's opposition. The conclusion at which we arrive, as outsiders, is that a mistake was made. The Extraordinary Committee, though it never really had any intention of presenting an ultimatum to the Cabinet or otherwise embarrassing it, nevertheless went to work with such a needless display of formality and took so little care to keep its opinions private, that it ultimately found itself occupying in public eyes a position which it had never intended to assume. However, the upshot of the matter is that this particular incident is not destined, apparently, to create any serious trouble.

One interesting result of this commotion has been to demonstrate the somewhat brittle character of the tie that holds the Constitutional Party together. It has been noticeable for some time that the Mainichi Shimbun, which, as the organ of Mr. Shimada Saburo, ought to be in touch with the present cabinet, and the Hochi-Shimbun, which used always to be a staunch supporter of Count Okuma, adopt a decidedly captious tone towards the present Ministry. In fact, if they are genuinely friendly, they manage to conceal the sentiment most successfully. The Yomiuri Shimbun, however, was believed to be quite staunch in its allegiance until this affair of the Committee occurred. But now we find it insisting that the Committee's proposals must be forced upon the Cabinet, and that the consequence of the latter's refusal to accept them must be the defection of the whole Party. There is, it is true, a saving clause. The Yomiuri does not think that the Extraordinary and General Committees have any right to arrogate the position of representing the whole Party. Steps ought to be taken to ascertain the views of all the provincial sections, and a general meeting should then be held to formulate a programme for the Cabinet's compulsory adoption. Evidently if such a course as that advocated by the old Progressist journal were adopted, Cabinet Ministers would be nothing more than subalterns of the political party whose support they enjoy. The thing would be absurd and hopelessly unpractical under ordinary circumstances. But the circumstances are not at all ordinary here. The plain truth is that party politicians are beginning to be terribly distressed for lack of principles, and when any chance of supplying the deficiency comes in sight, they clutch at it with more avidity than judgment. Principles to fight for would come to them like manna in the wilderness of their vacuity.

The abolition of the Metropolitan Police Bureau seems likely to be become the first bone of contention under existing circumstances. Several ardent reformers, notably the Nippon, have persuaded themselves that the Board was never intended as an instrument for protecting the citizens of Tokyo, but served wholly, and was always destined to serve, as a species of semi-military bulwark for the Clan Statesmen. Therefore, they maintain that it ought to be swept out of existence, the more so since the special system of municipal government for Tokyo, Osaka, and Kyoto has been abolished. But Count Itagaki is understood to scoff at the notion of abolishing the Board. He says, indeed, that he is thinking of organizing a replica of the Tokyo Board in Osaka. Here is a pretty definite difference of opinion.

Contemptuous tolerance is the tone now adopted by the Jiji Shimpo towards the Cabinet. It declares that it could overthrow the Ministry by a stroke of its pen. But it refrains, because the too sudden discomfiture of the present administrators would be bad for the prospects of party Cabinets in general. None the less the Ministry is doomed: the forces of destruction, generated by itself, are steadily working out its ruin. Such language on the part of the Jiji is the more remarkable when we recall that, twice in recent issues, it addressed to the Constitutional Party solemn warnings against the serious results that would be entailed by its disruption, inasmuch as its failure would put back the hands upon the clock of political progress, and create for the advocates of suspending the Constitution precisely the opportunity they are longing to find. If the Jiji Shimpo regards that as a catastrophe and desires to avert it, the supercilious character of its present utterances can hardly be called consistent.

Mr. Hoshi Toru's prospect of becoming Minister for Foreign Affairs seem to have disappeared. As long ago as the 30th ultimo, a strong note of disapproval was struck by the Yomiuri Shimbun, which insisted that if ever Mr. Hoshi was needed at his post, the present is the time of greatest need, and that in quitting Washington merely for the purpose of playing for his own hand in domestic politics, he was sacrificing the interests of the nation to his own personal ambition. The Shogyo Shimpo, a non-partizan and thoroughly sober journal, took up the subject a few days later and treated it in exactly the same way, adding a very outspoken censure of Count Okuma for sanctioning Mr. Hoshi's departure from his post, and urging that he should be at once superseded. Finally, the Jiji Shimpo endorsed these criticisms in the most emphatic language, and now several vernacular journals assert that, the proposal to appoint Mr. Hoshi having been brought forward at a regular meeting of the Cabinet, was resolutely opposed by Count Okuma, who pointed out that, in order to discharge the duties of Foreign Minister satisfactorily the holder of the portfolio must not only enjoy the confidence of foreign States, but also possess political influence at home, qualifications which Mr. Hoshi can scarcely be said to have.

It is expected that this decision will effectually alienate the sympathies of the Kwanto section of the former Liberal Party, and that its disaffection will be openly announced within a few days. We can not think that such an event would be any loss to the Constitutional Party. Mr. Hoshi Toru is a very able man. He has proved himself to possess qualities that should make his services valuable to any Cabinet. Among his supporters of the Kwanto section, also, there are some members who have earned a good reputation in the Diet. But if the Kwanto section is not bound to the Constitutional Party by any bond stronger than the hope of obtaining a portfolio for Mr. Hoshi Toru, its recession would be a source of strength rather than of weakness.

SILVER YEN.

The silver yen may be said to have passed finally out of existence. It ceased to be legal tender nine months ago, and it lost its exchangeable value on the 31st of July, becoming thenceforth mere bullion. The Nippon notes that since the coin first came into being in Japan, the aggregate quantity struck was 162,077,072 yen, to which must be added trade dollars totalling 3,056,638 yen. It is calculated by the Authorities that 26,150,471 yen worth of these coins remained unexchanged on July 31st, an amount exceptionally large when judged by the history of similar currency changes in other countries. Where are all these coins? The bullion value of the yen to-day is only 87.1 sen, so that there is a loss of 12.9 sen on every yen which its holder failed to present for exchange before July 31st. The generally received supposition is that, during the war with China, large quantities of silver yen were sent from Japan to pay the troops and defray expenses incidental to the campaigns in Manchuria, Liaotung, and Shantung. Coins shipped in that way would not have appeared in the customs returns, and, passing into the hands of the Chinese, have probably remained circulating in the Middle Kingdom, their holders totally oblivious of the new currency arrangements in Japan. It is not necessary indeed, to assume the existence of any oblivion, for to be able to convert the coins into gold pieces having no utility in Manchuria and China as tokens of exchange would not have tempted their holders to send them over to this country for such a purpose. But that explanation does not apply to 4 or 5 million yen worth supposed to be still held by Japanese in Japan. The loss on 4 millions, at the present rate of exchange, is 516,000 yen, and who the careless sufferers are it is difficult to conceive.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE PRISON QUESTION.

It is confidently alleged that despite Count Itagaki's very earnest advocacy of prison reform, the preliminary most essential to any success in that direction, the transfer of the communal jails to the control and support of the Central Government, can not be accomplished before the fiscal year 1899-1900. The difficulty is financial. An addition of 3½ million yen to the State's annual expenditures is more than the Treasury cares to sanction, considering that the reform is not indispensable. There is, therefore, to be a species of compromise. Count Itagaki is to have his way in Tokyo, immediately, and the rest of the country is to wait until the sun of financial prosperity emerges once more from the clouds. The cost of rebuilding the Tokyo House of Detention and the Ichigaya Prison is estimated at 600,000 yen, and it is expected that the site of the present Municipal Police Board will be utilized.

We do not vouch for these details, but they appear credible. If they are correct, the fact is very regrettable, nor can we refrain from saying that it will redound little to the reputation of the first party cabinet to have postponed this most desirable reform. In truth, it is to the opposition of the political parties that we must attribute the long delay which has occurred in improving and unifying the prison system. The Meiji Statesmen would have carried out the reform long ago had they succeeded in obtaining the consent of the House of Representatives. So far back as 1892, a Bill for transferring the Prison expenditures from the charges of the communes to those of the State was presented to the Diet, but the Lower House professed to see in it a device to block the pet project of the political parties, namely, reduction of the Land Tax. On the one hand, an addition of 3½ million yen to the annual calls upon the Treasury would plainly furnish an argument against the expediency of diminishing any of the taxes, and, on the other, by relieving the burdens of the communes to that extent, the Government would be in a better position to oppose a reduction of the Land Tax. The House, therefore, rejected the measure, and rejected it session after session. Now, again, it is to be rejected by the first party cabinet in order to avoid the alternative of augmenting the Land Tax. We sympathise with Japan's financial difficulties, though we attach little importance to them, but we are bound to say that the representatives of the agricultural interest have constituted a solid obstacle to the progress of reform ever since the first session of the Diet.

It seems pretty certain that Count Itagaki will have to limit his scheme of prison reform to the three principal cities—Tokyo, Osaka, and Kyoto—and the five Open Ports. This is another of the blessings that Treaty Revision must be credited with conferring on the Japanese people. Were not the operation of the Revised Treaties so close at hand, it is very doubtful whether, under existing financial conditions, the present Cabinet could have been persuaded to devote funds for the purpose of prison reform even on the limited scale described above. However, a bill providing an appropriation sufficient for the three Cities and the five Ports is now said to have been drafted.

The most objectionable features of the communal jails, in Count Itagaki's opinion, are that no arrangements can be made for separating first offenders from hardened criminals. It is not even possible to separate suspects and convicts. The result is that the jails, instead of being houses of correction, become nurseries of crime. No less than 56 per cent. of the prisoners now undergoing punishment are recidivists, and out of the 9,900 persons released on the occasion of the late Empress-Dowager's decease, 4,900 have had to be incarcerated again. Another palpable abuse is that the system is calculated to deter competent men from taking service as wardens. The head wardens are wretchedly remunerated, and can never rise any higher in the official scale. The career is such that no able man could think of embracing it.

We may mention in connexion with this that there is talk of foreign legal experts being employed, one in each of the three cities and open ports, to advise the Japanese judges when Consular Jurisdiction is abolished. We regard the rumour as extremely apocryphal, but give it for what it may be worth.

DEATH OF PRINCE BISMARCK.

Karl Otto, Prince von Bismarck-Schönhausen, was born at Schönhausen on April 1st, 1815. After studying at Göttingen, Berlin, and Gerrefswald, he entered the army, and afterwards became a lieutenant of the Landwehr. Turning his attention to politics in 1846, he became a member of the Diet of Saxony. His views from the first were anti-democratic; in one of his speeches he actually argued that all great cities should be swept from the face of the earth, because they were the centres of democracy and constitutionalism! In 1851 he entered the diplomatic service, and was successively minister to Vienna (1852) St. Petersburg (1859), and Paris (1862). Recalled to Prussia in the latter year, he was made Minister of the King's House and of Foreign Affairs. In this position he exercised the power of an autocrat, treating the House of Deputies in the most cavalier manner, and visiting with heavy punishment all who expressed views, in the press or otherwise, hostile to the Government. The opportunity soon came for Bismarck to carry out his pet scheme of making Prussia the head of Germany. Aided by an alliance with Italy, he attacked Austria, and in a campaign of a few weeks' duration Prussia defeated that Power, Bismarck obtaining in recognition of his services the title of Count and a valuable estate in Luxemburg. This was the opening incident in the unification of Germany. Provinces and kingdoms were at once annexed; to their great indignation the free towns received Prussian garrisons; and at the close of the year Bismarck had succeeded in concluding with Bavaria, Baden, and Wurtemberg, which could not be treated so cavalierly as the smaller States and cities, treaties of alliance for offensive and defensive purposes, the King of Prussia having the chief military command assigned to him in case of war.

In 1867 the North German Confederation, comprising 22 States with a population of 29,000,000, had been organised, with the King of Prussia at its head, a Federal Council composed of delegates of the different states, and a Diet or common Parliament elected by universal suffrage. At this time signs began to be forthcoming of approaching trouble with France. The Luxemburg question was the first to be raised. Germany strenuously opposed the proposed cession of the province to France, and eventually the dispute was settled by the Grand Duchy being declared neutral territory, and its fortresses dismantled. Both Powers, as Powers are apt to do when meditating war, expressed the most pacific intentions, but both went on adding to their armaments. The final rupture was brought about, as everyone knows, by the offer of the Spanish Crown to Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern. The French Government naturally took umbrage at this, and demanded explanations from the Berlin Cabinet. Count Bismarck explained that the King of Prussia had given his consent to the Prince's acceptance of the Crown only as head of the Hohenzollern Family, and not as the head of the Government. A few days later the withdrawal of the candidature of the Prince was announced, but despite this France declared war against Prussia. The details of the war need not be recapitulated: Bismarck, after the capitulation of Paris, dictated the terms of peace to the French national assembly setting at Bordeaux, and on January 18th, 1871, he saw King William of Prussia crowned Emperor of Germany in the Palace of Versailles. The same month he was made Chancellor of the German Empire, and two months later received the title of Prince. The later public life of the Prince was more of activity in his own country than of international importance. Early in the seventies he greatly incensed the Roman Catholics by promoting legal measures directed against the freedom of the Church, and resulting in the expulsion of the Jesuits. The Prince presided over the congress of representatives of the Great Powers which sat at Berlin to consider the Eastern question, and recast the Treaty of San Stefano in 1878, and his later foreign policy was to secure the friendship of Austria and prevent Russia from falling into the arms of France. In neither of these respects has the result been ideal; the Franco-Russian alliance is an accomplished fact and Austria is too disunited to be a valuable ally to any one. Bismarck's home politics had chiefly for their aim the defeat of the Social Democrats, and extension of German trade and commerce. He tried his hand at colonising, but with no great success. Since his retirement into private life in 1890 he has been an interested spectator of political affairs, but it must be confessed that the last few years of his life have taken off much of the heroic and revealed the Iron Chancellor as a querulous old gentleman. Bismarck's life was twice attempted, the first time in 1866, and the second in 1874. The culprit on the latter occasion he declared was an agent of the clerical party.

FORMOSA.

A few days ago a cablegram from Formosa said that several hundreds of rebels had made act of submission, and that the complete pacification of the north-eastern portion of the island was considered to have been practically accomplished. That was good news. But unfortunately another telegram comes on its heels, saying that two officials have been assassinated by insurgents, and that another military expedition will soon be sent from Taipeh to break up the truculent bands. The two items of news are not necessarily contradictory, for the assassinations took place in the north-westerly part of the island—Shinchiku and its neighbourhood—whereas the process of pacification was going on at Gilan, in the north-east. Still the latest intelligence is decidedly discouraging.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Meanwhile a novel kind of ceremony has been held by the Governor-General in Taipeh. On the 17th of July, his Excellency invited all the old men in the neighbouring districts to a Kyôrô-kai, or entertainment for old-age. No less than 314 persons, all over 80 years of age, attended—a fact which speaks remarkably well for the climate of Formosa and the habits of the people. Including the relatives and friends who accompanied the veterans, 700 folks had to be entertained. There were theatricals and music for their amusement, and the Governor-General read an address which appears to have been most happily worded. Refreshments were provided on an ample scale, and there was a distribution of gold-foil fans decorated with the figures of the old man and the old woman of Takasago, silver foil fans inscribed with the ideograph "congratulation," cakes of all sorts and desks of shitan wood for folks of 100 years and upwards. The affair is said to have been a brilliant success, causing unbounded satisfaction to all the people.

FORMOSA RAILWAY COMPANY.

It seems that the affairs of the Formosa Railway Company are now in a decidedly parlous state. The company is said to have been relying entirely on the prospect of obtaining a loan of fifteen million yen from Messrs. Peacock and Company, and with that end in view has induced the Governor-General of Formosa to grant several postponements of the time originally fixed for commencing operations, the 1st of October being the last date agreed upon. But the negotiations with the English firm are reported to have fallen through, and it is quite hopeless to attempt any sale of the Company's shares or debentures in the open market abroad, for Japanese finance is now regarded with doubtful eyes, and even Government five-per-cent. securities would not be purchased by foreign capitalists at par. The Yomiuri Shimbun, from which we take these particulars, adds that several locomotives ordered by the Company from Europe arrived recently in Kobe, and that, money to pay the customs dues on them not being forthcoming, an application for grace had to be made to the Department of Finance.

IMPORT OF IRON FROM CHINA.

It is alleged that the Viceroy Chang's iron-smelting works are likely to become a source of supply to Japan. Their yearly output is now said to be 15,000 tons, and the manufacturers claim for the iron a quality quite equal to that of English metal, offering it, however, at cheaper prices than the latter. They see no reason why a market for half of their production should not be found in Japan. We need scarcely say that the prospect provokes some severe criticism from Japanese journalists, who wonder when the long-talked-of iron foundry will be in operation in this country.

TOKYO STREET RAILWAYS.

Apparently there is at length a prospect of street railways being built in Tokyo. There has been no lack of enterprise on the part of the citizens in this matter, but officialdom has always managed to be obstructive. The first tramway was laid in 1883, and proved so successful that the Tram Company, 1893, applied for permission to convert their lines into electric trams. The Authorities hesitated—for what reason we do not know—, and presently another company was formed under the auspices of Mr. Amenomiya. It called itself the Tokyo Denki-tetsudo Kaisha (Tokyo Electric Railway Company), and its promoters worked hard to obtain a charter, being well persuaded that the enterprise would be very lucrative. Other capitalists, however, entertained the same view, and a third company was organized by Mr. Fukuzawa Sutejiro. It called itself the Tokyo Densha Kaisha (Tokyo Electric-car Company), and it seems to have convinced the officials that it had as good a claim as either of the rival associations. One of the chief causes of delay at that time appears to have been uncertainty on the party of the Authorities as to whether this enterprise ought not to be made a State, or at any rate, a municipal affair, instead of being abandoned to private speculators. While the question still hung in abeyance, the war with China broke out, and was followed, as our readers know, by a perfect fever of speculation. No less that sixty-four companies were organized for the purpose of constructing street railways, some being for electric lines, some for electric hawser-cars, some for underground roads, some for overhead railways, some for atmospheric cars, and so forth and so on. The excitement and competition reached their height while Count Kabayama was Minister of State for Home Affairs, it being understood that he was in favour of leaving the work to private enterprise. Much perplexed to choose between the innumerable schemes put forward, the Authorities appear to have adopted the plan of deciding what they wouldn't have rather than what they would have. Thus they eliminated electric-hawser cars, electric railways, gas engines, kerosene engines, and overhead lines, and they also made up their minds not to sanction any extension of the horse-trams. But before this process of elimination had been completed, the speculative fever began to cool and money grew scarce, so that, in the end, there remained in the field only two companies, the Tokyo Denki Tetsudo Kaisha, of Mr. Amenomiya, and the Densha Tetsudo Kaisha, of Mr. Fukuzawa. These two now joined forces and made a joint application for permission to lay a line worked by electricity on the reservoir principle—so, at least, we understand the term chikudenchi shiki,—and there was every indication that they would succeed in obtaining a charter. In the meanwhile, however, the Tokyo City Assembly had begun to think that the business was too good to be left to private individuals. A committee of 15 was appointed to investigate the matter, and the majority decided that the work should be taken up by the Municipality. A report in that sense has been prepared and will be submitted to the assembly when it next meets. There is little doubt that the committee's recommendation will be endorsed, and that an atmospheric railway (kuki-assa-tetsudo) will be the scheme adopted, as it is considered much safer than an electric line, and can be built for 4½ million yen, or 3 millions less than the electric railway would cost.

The story has a close resemblance to that of the waterworks. In 1887 a private company, promoted by Messrs. Shibusawa Eiichi and Masuda Ko applied for permission to construct waterworks in Tokyo. They asked for a moderate Government guarantee, they proposed a rigid system of official supervision, they formulated a moderate scale of charges, they undertook to hand over the waterworks and all the plant in good order to the Municipality gratis at the end of thirty years, and they engaged to finish the work in six years. Had the Government consented, Tokyo would have had a fine supply of water five years ago, and the city would now be within twenty years of coming into possession of a valuable property without paying anything for it. But the Government considered that such a work ought to be done by the Municipality ab initio. The Municipality did undertake it at last, and we know the result. Tokyo will have to remain two years longer without waterworks, and in the meanwhile the streets in some section or other of the city are always impassable. The Government may, have been right in principle, but the Tokyo Municipality has displayed remarkable incompetence from a business point of view. The progress of the waterworks is ludicrously slow, and foreign observers are forced to conclude that if the method of conducting the work supplies any test of the ability of Japanese engineers, there is a very wide margin for improvement. Will the electric railways be another example of perfunctoriness and inertia?

TELEPHONE EXPANSION.

Telephonic communication between Tokyo and Osaka is said to be on the verge of establishment. The interval was divided into three sections, the work on which was assigned to the experts of Tokyo, of Nagoya, and of Osaka respectively. The Tokyo section—from Tokyo to Hamamatsu—is said to have been already finished; the Nagoya section is on the verge of completion, and the Osaka section will be ready by the middle of this month. It is expected, therefore, that the through service will be commenced from Sept. 1st. In connexion with this, it may be mentioned that the subscribers to the telephone exchange in Tokyo now aggregate 3,800, and that arrangements are in progress to enable an additional 1,500 to subscribe. The number seems very small, but the blame for that rests, we believe, not with the citizens of Tokyo, but with the Authorities. During the past three or four years the demand for telephone accommodation has so far exceed the capabilities of the Authorities to keep pace with it that persons who had subscribed in the early days and obtained installations in their houses, were offered considerable sums to surrender their places on the list to other people. Measures to afford additional accommodation for 1,500 subscribers in the course of a twelve-month are spoken of as a noteworthy effort, but it is hard to sympathise with such an estimate where a city of 1½ million inhabitants is concerned.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MARQUIS ITO AND CHINA.

Marquis Ito says that in visiting China he is keeping a promise made some time ago to Marquis Li. After the Shimonoseki conference in 1895, the Viceroy asked the Japanese Premier to come to China, and he replied that he should do so as soon as he found himself out of office. The time has now come. With regard to his reason for taking Korea en route, the Marquis says that although he has paid several visits to the Occident, he has never had an opportunity of personally inspecting the conditions of the Orient. His only visit to China—in the spring of 1885, when the Tientsin Convention was concluded—was made for official purposes, and he had no leisure to look beyond the conference chamber. He will now endeavour to make good the deficiency. It is not his intention to thrust any views of his own either upon the King of Korea or upon the Chinese statesmen. If they address any questions to him, he will speak his mind frankly, but he does not go upon a mission of any kind.

At Kyoto the Marquis has had an opportunity of conversing with Mr. Yano, the Japanese Representative in Peking. Mr. Yano denies that Li Hung-chang has lost his influence. He is as powerful as ever. But the dead mass of Chinese conservatism refuses to take any visible impression from the impact of agencies which would make themselves felt elsewhere. At the same time, Mr. Yano is convinced that China's sentiments towards Japan have undergone a very marked change. She no longer regards this country as a renegade upstart, but has begun to think seriously that the progressive route chosen by Japan is the only course to safety for an Oriental country. The Emperor, according to Mr. Yano's estimate, is an able and patriotic man. He and the Empress Dowager have now definitely embraced liberal views. They read the newspapers; lose no opportunity of conversing with men of progressive views; are steadily, and with all prudent celerity, issuing proclamations and inaugurating measures to bring about a new era; have decided that Japan is the best and most convenient model to take, and are about to enlist the services of Japanese experts for re-organizing the army, the navy, and the police.

All this must be highly satisfactory to Count Okuma. When Count Okuma accepted the portfolio of Foreign Affairs in the Matsukata Cabinet of 1896, he had formed, and immediately began to put into practice, a most definite policy with regard to China. His views, at that comparatively early period, had assumed precisely the complexion of Lord Salisbury's views at present. He saw that the only chance of preserving China's independence was to induce her to adopt a progressive policy, and he believed that no people were better qualified than the Japanese to assist her towards that goal, inasmuch as not only were they bound to her by ties of history, of neighbourhood, of consanguinity, and of common Oriental interest, but also they had themselves recently trodden the difficult path of the new civilization, and were therefore specially qualified to help another nation over its obstacles. Count Okuma held these opinions very earnestly, and was most anxious that China should be induced to regard Japan in the light of a friend genuinely anxious for her welfare. If was on those lines that Mr. Yano's instructions were modelled, and no one could have been more likely to work in consonance with Count Okuma, for Mr. Yano had always been a staunch political partizan and private friend of the Count's. It is an interesting coincidence that Count Okuma, on resuming the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, should find not only that the course of events has fully vindicated the wisdom of his policy, but also that his views, under the able exposition of Mr. Yano, have already borne good fruit. Mr. Yano has undoubtedly made a great success in Peking and, although he deserves promotion, it is to be hoped that he will resume in China the duties he has hitherto so well discharged. No diplomatic post outside Japan is of such great importance at present as the Peking Legation.

JAPANESE JUDGES.

The extensive sifting of the judicial sheep from the judicial goats that was effected by the late Minister of Justice, Mr. Sone, is said to have been insufficient, and there is an expectation that the present Minister, Mr. Ohigashi, who is about to make a tour of inspection of all the provincial courts, will contrive another weeding out after his return to Tokyo. The judges who were induced to retire at the instance of the last Minister are supposed to have been too old-fashioned or too ill-instructed to administer the new Codes, but one wonders how the Judges themselves were induced to take that view of their capacities, and what means Mr. Ohigashi will adopt to effect the further clearing that he is said to contemplate. The Minister of Justice has no competence to remove Judges. Unless they resign of their own accord, or are pronounced unfit for the discharge of their duties by a council of their own colleagues, they hold their office for life. Japanese Judges, however, appear to be remarkably amenable to persuasion. Indeed, there is this idiosyncracy about a Japanese official that, if competent experts pronounce him unfit for his post, he resigns quietly and uncomplainingly in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred.

It is nevertheless alleged that great discontent exists in judicial ranks. Mr. Sone's drastic measure is not condemned on its merits, but there is a strong objection to the procedure adopted by him. When he sought the Emperor's permission to accept the resignations of the Judges, the fate of the Ito Cabinet was already sealed, and the fact that its tenure of power had virtually terminated was well known. The Judges, it is said, think that, under such circumstances, the consummation of the measure should have been deferred until the next Cabinet had assumed the direction of affairs. They are especially discontented about the men that have been appointed to the Judiciary in lieu of those removed. The new nominees, they assert, have no qualifications except their political connexions. These facts are published by the Fiji Shimpo and may therefore be considered credible, we presume.

PRICES.

There is a distinctly marked tendency to a decline in the prices of commodities. The Bank of Japan has conducted investigations in the case of forty staples, with the result that, taking 100 as the average figure in 1887, the figures for July and June of the current year and for June, 1897, stand thus:

	July, 1898.	June, 1898.	June, 1897.
Average price of 40 staples.....	168	174	159

Out of the 40 articles, 14 showed no change in July as compared with the preceding month, and 4 showed an appreciation. Those that remained stationary were, ginned cotton, floss silk, firewood, bran, cut tobacco, tea, bean-sauce, oil, nails (imported), leather, lining stuffs (silk), silk, glass (panes) and hemp. The four articles that showed an increase were sugar, eggs, white cotton cloth, and lacquer (juice). Taking the average of the first six months of the current year as 100, the figure for July was 96.36.

The history of the gradual appreciation of commodities during the past twelve years—commencing with 1887, the year when the normal state of affairs was first disturbed, and taking the average of the same 40 staples throughout—is shown by the following figures:

1887	103
1888	107
1889	112
1890	117
1891	109
1892	115
1893	117
1894	126
1895	135
1896	145
1897	161
" January	170
" February	173
" March	176
" April	179
" May	177
" June	174
" July	168

It thus appears that the maximum was reached in April of the current year, since which month there has been a steady decline. Rice, we should explain, is not included in the table. Rice is behaving somewhat strangely at present. It recently declined in price, apparently because harvest prospects were regarded as exceptionally fine, but it has again gone up, though there is nothing in the weather to damp previous hopes.

HYOGO WAREHOUSE TROUBLE.

There appears to be no prospect whatever of an amicable settlement of the Hyogo warehouse complication. The creditors are said to be very willing to compromise the matter if the defaulting merchants show any genuine desire to redress the wrongs they have committed. But neither the actual perpetrators of the frauds, nor yet the directors of the Warehouse Company, seem to be inspired by any earnest wish of the kind. The directors are shilly-shallying, and the principal defaulter, Mr. Yonezawa, has retired to Harima, leaving his clerk and employés to bear the brunt of the fight. Several suits at law have, therefore, been instituted, and it is thought that a criminal prosecution may yet be undertaken.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

PRESENTATIONS TO DR. MAC DONALD.

Among the passengers for Canada by the steamer Empress of Japan on the 30th instant were Dr. D. Macdonald, Mrs. Macdonald, and Mrs. Perry, Mrs. Macdonald's sister. Dr. Macdonald is returning home for a brief spell of well-earned rest. We understand that he has resigned his position in the mission to which he belonged, and that when he returns to Tokyo, which will probably be next spring, he will be entirely free to practise his medical profession. Dr. Macdonald has obtained the highest kind of popularity in Tokyo during his many years of residence there, not merely for the sake of his skill and self-denying benevolence as a physician, but also because of a manner of life more eloquent than any direct propagandism of the cause he has at heart. When the news of his intended visit to Canada became known a desire was expressed in many quarters to prepare some slight testimonial of the feelings entertained by the community towards him. Subscriptions were according invited for that purpose, and it was finally decided that the testimonial should take the form of a purse. On the evening of the 27th ultimo, the Committee appointed to make the presentation assembled at the house of a friend in Tsukiji, and Sir Ernest Satow, H.B.M.'s Representative in Tokyo, handed to Dr. Macdonald an envelope containing a cheque for 1,466 yen. (We publish elsewhere a list of the subscribers).

Sir Ernest Satow, in making the presentation, said that he might confidently claim to be echoing the sentiments of the British community of Tokyo when he expressed high admiration of Dr. Macdonald's professional career and sincere esteem for him as a man. At all times and in all places the Doctor had been found where duty called him, and his services had been rendered in a manner which, while proving his professional skill, endeared him to all that came in contact with him. The community could not part with him even for a brief interval without a sense that they were about to suffer a serious loss, but, on the other hand, they felt that he had well earned the rest he was now about to enjoy, and they hoped soon to see him once more at his post in their midst. They trusted that Dr. Macdonald would accept, as a very slight recognition of their esteem and his sterling worth, the testimonial which they had met this evening to present to him.

Dr. Macdonald, who was evidently much moved, replied that he could not convey in words any adequate idea of his gratitude for undeserved kindness. His life in Tokyo had been made pleasant by the genial friendliness of the community, and his discharge of his professional duties had been rendered very easy by the confidence and consideration he found on all sides. He had always deprecated the idea of any monetary testimonial, especially in these hard times, and since his services had already been sufficiently remunerated. But it was too late to urge any objections of that kind now, and he accepted with infinite pleasure and thankfulness this renewed token of the community's kindness.

After the presentation, refreshments were served, and then the whole party which included Mrs. Macdonald, Mrs. Perry, and some other ladies, joined hands and sang "Auld Lang Syne."

On Wednesday, 27th instant, a number of the Tokyo Masons assembled at the Lodge in Tsukiji for the purpose of presenting a Jewel to Worshipful Brother Dr. D. Macdonald, who was about to proceed to Canada on leave. Dr. Macdonald has been one of the most zealous, popular, and highly esteemed members of the Lodge, and the Brethren unanimously decided to mark their sentiments towards him by the presentation of a Jewel. The Worshipful Master, Mr. E. L. James, made the presentation, and said:—

BRETHREN—The purpose for which we have met this morning is, I am sure, a source of heartfelt pleasure not only to each of us now present, but also to every member of the Tokyo Lodge. It is to show our esteem and affection for our Worshipful Brother Dr. Macdonald and to mark our sense of his devotion to the Craft, his faithful and able discharge of his duties as Master of the Lodge, and his sterling qualities as a man and a Mason, by asking him to accept from us a Past Master's Jewel. Speaking in the voice of the Lodge, I will now read a short Address which has been prepared in his honour:—

WOR. SIR & BROTHER,—On this the occasion of your bidding farewell to Japan for a season, to revisit your native land, the brethren of the Tokyo Lodge, with whom you have been so intimately and pleasantly associated for some years past, deem it a pleasing and fitting opportunity to ask you to carry away a small masonic emblem as an expression of their high appreciation of the efficient and dignified manner in which the duties of the chair have been discharged during your years of office just closed, and likewise as a slight recognition of the value your bright example and sterling qualities as a man and Mason have been to the cause of the missionary in demonstrating all those true and admirable tenets of the Craft—charity, self-denial, and brotherly love—in your daily walk in life.

With this object and in this fraternal spirit the brethren, Worshipful Sir, have invited you here to-day, deputing me to ask you to receive from them a I. P. M. jewel, and I am but giving utterance to the genuine sentiments of every member of the Lodge in saying that a similar decoration has never adorned a worthier brother nor one more loyal to the Craft or held in higher esteem by his fellowers.

WOR. SIR,—I assure you we are all one at heart in wishing you a very happy holiday, also that you may realize loving reunion with your kindred and friends in the Home land, and that in due time you may return to us again for long years of useful service with robust health of body and mind and conscious always of the approval of the Great Architect of the Universe whilst you carry on with your characteristic benevolence of heart His Great Mission to suffering Humanity in that self-denial calling of your choice.

In these expressions we are mindful not to forget the tender partner of your life work, for whom as a true Mason's wife, nothing we can say would adequately convey our regard and esteem.

Dr. Macdonald replied in brief but fervent terms, expressing his keen appreciation of the kindness shown towards him by the Brethren and the honour they had conferred on him, and assuring them that any success achieved by him in the discharge of his duties had been due, not to merit on his own part, but to their loyal and able cöoperation. Letters having been read from many absent members expressing regret for their inability to attend and hearty sympathy with the presentation, the Brethren adjourned to the Hotel Metropole for luncheon.

We learn from a gentleman who has just returned from Guam, that on Saturday, July 10th, four American transports passed Guam bound to Manila. One, probably the China, entered the harbour of St. Louis de Apra, but did not anchor, her intention being merely to ascertain if any vessels were there. She and her companions then left, steering to the westward.

M. BOISSONADE.

The difference between M. Boissonade and some of the local foreign journalists who "champion" the interests of their nationals in Japan is well illustrated by the Kobe Chronicle's comments on that gentleman's letter, recently published in these columns. The Kobe Chronicle claims that "this great reform (the abolition of torture) was due to the action taken by M. Boissonade." M. Boissonade says:—"It is my duty to attribute the greater part of this just and humane step to the late very much regretted Messrs. Mutsu and Inouye Ki and to the much respected Count Oki."

We should not have thought of re-opening this question had not the Kobe Chronicle taken M. Boissonade's letter as the text of an attempt to prove that we have been wrong about the main issue. M. Boissonade writes:—"I quite agree with you as to the inaccuracy of the passages you quote from M. Chamberlain's Things Japanese regarding the abolition of torture in Japan." That is enough for us. M. Boissonade is the judge in this matter. His verdict is final. Since, however, even his verdict is perverted by the Kobe Chronicle to its own purposes, we shall add a word here. M. Boissonade, as we have shown, "attributes the greater part of this just and humane step" to three Japanese officials, whereas the story told in Things Japanese and endorsed even now by the Kobe Chronicle is that the step was "entirely due to the personal initiative of M. Boissonade de Fontarabie," and that his "firm stand brought the immediate disuse of a practice so shocking to humanity." Being familiar with the Kobe Chronicle's adroit habit of evading the responsibility of its contentions by escaping through some side door, we shall deal with the question of "initiative," for our contemporary is quite capable of making the whole issue turn upon that point. M. Boissonade's words are:—"The said scene"—i.e. the scene alleged to have induced him to interfere vigorously in the cause of the abolition of torture—"took place on the 15th of April, 1875, and my first memorandum to the Minister of Justice for the abolition was on the following day." Observe that. M. Boissonade's "first memorandum" was penned on April 16th, 1875. Now on August 25th, 1874, that is to say, nearly eight months before the date of M. Boissonade's first memorandum, the following Notification was issued by the Department of Justice and translated in the columns of the Japan Weekly Mail of August 29th, 1874:—

NOTIFICATION NO. 19 OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

From ancient times it has been the practice to use torture in investigating criminal cases. But it would be an outrage if an innocent person should be made to appear guilty owing to the use of undue severity. Therefore recourse to torture shall in future be discontinued.

Provided that, in cases where the process of examination might otherwise present difficulties, torture may be employed for the occasion, but should such necessity occur, the circumstances must be noted, and a report of all instances of the kind must be made to the Department of Justice at the end of each month.

(Dated) August 25th, 1874.

Thus the question of "initiative" is effectually disposed of. The general use of torture in criminal investigations was publicly interdicted eight months before M. Boissonade, according to his own

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

showing, took any action whatever in the matter.

One word remains to be added. The main object of the Kobe Chronicle's most disingenuous writing—we purposely avoid any stronger term—is to convict the Japan Mail of an effort to belittle the debt that Japan owes to her foreign employés, and to deprive them of the credit justly belonging to them. We have not the slightest intention of attempting to refute such a contemptible charge. Readers of the Japan Mail will be amused by it. But if the Kobe Chronicle has any desire to be just, or any genuine solicitude for the interest of Japan's foreign employés, we recommend it to publish M. Boissonade's letter in full. M. Boissonade is one of Japan's real benefactors, and his memory will be handed down with honour and affection through many generations of Japanese. The fine instincts that he obeys when relating his share in such incidents as the abolition of torture, are infinitely better calculated to earn credit and respect for this country's foreign employés and for foreigners in general, than the very paltry methods of the Kobe Chronicle.

POSTAL COMPLICATIONS.

Quite a little storm has been caused by an attempt on the part of the Government to obtain funds for improving the provincial postal service. The amount required in 300,000 yen, and it was calculated that one half of the sum might be procured by lowering from 5 per cent to 3½ per cent. the commission allowed to sellers of post-card. But when the Government's resolve in that sense was announced, it at once provoked acute opposition. Many of the wholesale dealers in such articles—the men who purchase them in large quantities from the Government, paying ready money down—claim that they would actually suffer a heavy loss if they continued the business on the new terms, and there can be no doubt that if the authorities insist, considerable inconvenience would be caused to the public. Five per cent. seems a very moderate commission when we remember the rate of interest now commanded by money in Japan. A considerable interval must elapse before the wholesale dealers receive the sums paid by them on receipt of the cards from the Government, and, inasmuch as they have to divide the profit with the retail dealers, their own share must be very paltry. It is alleged that the average retail-dealer sells about 15 yen worth of cards monthly, and that his present profit on the transaction is only 31 sen, which does not nearly compensate him for his trouble.

COTTON SPINNERS.

Thirty cotton-spinning companies of the Keiban districts sent representatives to Sakai on the 30th ultimo, for the purpose of holding a conference to determine what steps should be taken to relieve the present depressed condition of the industry. They came to the conclusion that the amount of production must be diminished, but they could not agree about the method of diminution, some being in favour of stopping night work at the mills, and some advocating an increase of the number of holidays. A committee was finally appointed, with instructions to investigate the subject, and present a report in two weeks.

THE RECENT DISASTER IN THE HARBOUR.

It will be observed from our report of the inquest on the body of Miss Simons that the chief responsibility for the lamentable accident is thrown upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We can not appreciate the justice of such a finding. The facts of the case are now pretty clearly known. It appears that the cargo-boat, having been towed by a steam-tug to the entrance of the harbour and there cast off, hoisted small sail and proceeded on her way to Kanagawa. When the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's launch was approaching the bow of the Victoria, those in charge of the launch noticed the cargo-boat, and saw that she was sailing on a beam wind, the breeze being from the south. They judged from this that she intended keeping on a course that ought to have taken her across the bows of the Victoria. Hence, when the launch was steered along the side of the Victoria, and when her whistle was blown before rounding the latter's stern, the officer in command of the launch and the steersman seem to have entertained no doubt whatever that they were leaving the cargo-boat behind them, and that she would be crossing in front of the Victoria as they emerged at the stern of that vessel. Their calculation would certainly have been correct had the cargo-boat held on the course she was observed to take, but for some unexplained reason she appears to have changed her direction so as to pass under the stern of the Victoria. Even under these unexpected circumstances a catastrophe was not inevitable. Indeed, it would seem that the collision would not have occurred had not the cargo-boat made a third change of course after sighting the launch. There was nothing in the state of the sea or the position of the ships in harbour to embarrass the cargo-boat or limit her choice of a course, and if it be held that the launch was steered too close to the Victoria, the same must be said of the cargo-boat, for, if one was in a wrong place, so was the other. Had the launch been in charge of inexperienced or incompetent men there might be grounds for assuming that the fault lay with her. But we have ascertained that her steersman is one of the most experienced harbour navigators in Yokohama. He has been in the employment of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for two years, and before his engagement by the Company had served Messrs. Martin and Company, the well-known firm of Stevedores, for fourteen years, during the whole of which time his duties were to navigate launches and tugs up and down the Bay and in the harbour. We are informed that he had been selected by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on account of his excellent record, and that he had always been an entirely sober, trustworthy man. There was also a competent foreigner, Mr. Pope, in command of the launch, and two men were stationed on the look-out, one in the bows, the other at the stern. In short, the arrangements seem to have been above criticism, and certainly the Company can not be accused of understaffing its launch. The facts are difficult to reconcile with the finding at the inquest.

MORE INSUBORDINATION ON THE PART OF STUDENTS.

The Ordinary Middle School in Oita Prefecture has been the scene of a serious display of insubordination by the students—another of the displays that reflect so much discredit on the educational system of Japan. As usual the trouble had its origin in an objection on the part of the students to one of those placed in authority over them, this time the Principal himself, Mr. Takeda Yasunosuke. The nature of the objection is not stated: it seems to have been of a general character. On the 9th of last month, matters culminated in a strike. The whole of the 4th and 5th year students, together with a portion of the 3rd year lads, absented themselves from their class-rooms, and attempted to secure the cöoperation of the remaining students by threatening severance of intercourse and even personal violence. Things continued thus until the afternoon of the 16th, when a party of five-and-thirty of the malcontents proceeded to the school, and, laying hands on a student who appears to have taken the lead in discountenancing their methods, beat him severely. The police had been observing the attitude of the students for some days, and a party of constables were actually on their way to the school at the time of the above occurrence when an appeal for help reached the station from the principal. They found the riotous students armed with sticks and bamboo poles, making a decidedly forceful demonstration. Seventeen were arrested and the others were handed over to their parents and sureties, but it seems that the truculent lads escaped with a reprimand. The boy who was beaten did not wish to proceed against them, some interchange of apologies and explanations having taken place. Meanwhile we find no intelligence as to the settlement of the question between the principal and the recalcitrant students, who are said to have numbered 210.

It appears to us that there is only one explanation of these frequent cases of insubordination at schools in Japan. Japanese students have no natural antipathy to discipline. Their old-time principle that a learner must not tread within three feet of his teacher's shadow, is operative still, though not, perhaps, so actively at it used to be. The experience of foreigners who have taught in Japanese schools is, we think, tolerably uniform. They have found the lads quiet, attentive, anxious to learn and, on the whole, less disposed than English boys to set authority at naught. If that statement be correct, and we believe that it will be generally endorsed, the unavoidable conclusion is that the fault lies with the teachers. How, indeed, can it be otherwise! The miserable emoluments of teachers and instructors in Japanese schools render it altogether hopeless to expect that good men will choose such a career. None but mediocrities turn to school-teaching. It is regarded as a veritable last resort for men whose abilities and attainments give no promise of success in other professions. No wonder that the students quickly discover and rebel against the incompetence of their teachers. Their own careers are in question. What surprises us is that the object lesson inculcated by these often-repeated experiences of students' revolts is not appreciated by Japanese publicists. Of course the natural impulse is to condemn the student. To foreign onlookers especially there is something so intolerable in the notion of school-boys arrogating to themselves any voice in the management of the school or the choice of instructors, that an outcry is immediately raised against the presumption and truculence of the student. Well, insubordination in every form is ugly. Nihilism is very ugly in Russia, and so is Social Democracy in Germany, but no thinking man can persuade himself that the Nihilists and Social Democrats are solely responsible for their rebellious tendencies. Neither is the Japanese student solely responsible for his. On the contrary, the chief responsibility, we believe, is to be sought in the incompetence of his teachers. They do not deserve respect and therefore can not command it. But the public and the educational authorities remain practically insensible to this state of affairs, and in the meanwhile the student earns an undeserved reputation for want of moral balance—a reputation that reflects injuriously on the whole Japanese nation.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

BLOCK IN DELIVERIES OF IMPORTS.

Vernacular newspapers say that the quantity of imports now lying in Yokohama awaiting delivery to the Japanese on whose account they were imported represents a sum of twenty million yen, and that the delay in taking delivery threatens to ruin some of the foreign importers. Appealed to by the Foreign Chamber of Commerce in Yokohama, the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce asked for time to investigate the matter before giving a reply, and the result of the investigation is said to be a conclusion that while the responsibility rests chiefly with the Japanese, the foreigners also are more or less to blame. The latter verdict seems to be based upon an idea that some of the foreign importers behaved with dilatoriness after receiving the orders, and ultimately "rushed" them through with undue haste so as to anticipate the operation of the new Tariff. The value of that argument is not quite apparent, but we give it for what it may be worth. At all events, the Tokyo Chamber has decided, it is alleged, that the best exit from the deadlock will be to get a trustworthy Japanese bank—presumably the Specie Bank—to guarantee the ultimate taking over of the goods on condition that an interval of from six months to a year be allowed.

THE BARLEY CROP.

The barley crop this season, having now been harvested, is declared to be an exceptionally good yield. The figure is 19,599,842 koku, being 7.19 per cent., better than last year's crop, and 9.2 per cent. better than an average crop. The following figures are given for the past decade :—

	Koku.
1889	15 316,897
1890	16,712.965
1891	18,078.373
1892	15 941,276
1893	16,625 229
1894	19 809 915
1895	19 526 123
1896	17,325.317
1897	18,192.051
1898	19,599 842

TEA-PREPARING MACHINE.

Vernacular newspapers report an invention likely to be of considerable interest to persons engaged in the tea trade. It is a machine which takes the newly plucked leaf and performs all the necessary operations preliminary to packing—rolling, roasting and "polishing," the last being a process which we do not clearly understand, unless it be an alternative term for "facing." The machine is supposed to manufacture 200 kwan (1,666lbs.) of tea in 24 hours, and it requires only one man to tend it and a boy to oil it. The saving of labour claimed for it is 66 per cent., but that seems a moderate estimate if it accomplishes the work attributed to it, for certainly three men and three boys could scarcely manipulate 1,669lbs. of tea in 24 hours. The inventor of the machine is said to be Mr. Mochizuki Hatsutaro, of Shizuoka. His biographer seems to have been reading the stories of Palissy and Cellini, so curious is the resemblance between Mochizuki's career, as narrated by Japanese newspapers, and that of those celebrated mediæval artists. For fifteen years he toiled to work out his idea, spending all his substance on the attempt, and breaking up the woodwork of his house to obtain timber for his experiments, just as Palissy burned his furniture in the enameller's kiln. Finally, having been reduced to the condition which the Japanese describe as kirei-ni bimbo, or "beautifully indigent," he was assisted by Mr. Ito Koyemon, a tea-manufacturer of Ise, who supplied funds for the construction of a timber machine. This attempt ended again in failure, wood proving unsuitable for the purpose, and the object might never have been attained had not another and more competent capitalist, Mr. Yamaguchi Tetsunosuke, come to the rescue. Thirteen hundred yen were now expended in getting an iron machine made at the Tanaka Foundry. It has been tested by the Dōshō-shæ, with the results described above, and the issue of a patent is now expected.

A NEW TAX.

It is stated that one of the new taxes talked of as a means of augmenting the revenue is a tax upon silk garments. The talk is vague, and the amount estimated as the proceeds of the tax is not mentioned, but the idea is very strongly opposed by some journalists, especially the Shogyo Shimpo. They say that the project is very old-fashioned; that it has been discussed again and again, and that no financiers ever found any tangible reason to have recourse to it. The Shogyo does not think that the tax would bring a revenue of more that from one to two million yen, and is sure that the trouble of collecting it, and the annoyance caused, would be immense.

THE MITSUI GINKO.

With this issue we publish the half-yearly balance-sheet of the Mitsui Ginko. The figures speak for themselves, showing that they do a steady increase of business in all departments. The capital is yen 2,000 000, and the reserve funds now amount to yen 2,944,234 482. Towards this sum 360,000 was added this half-year. The profits for the period were yen 438,156.453, from which a dividend of yen 280,000 was declared.

TERRIBLE AFFAIR IN YOKOHAMA HARBOUR.

ONE LADY KILLED AND ANOTHER INJURED.

An extremely lamentable affair occurred in Yokohama harbour about 12.30 on Friday, involving the death of one lady and serious injury and mutilation to a second. The launch of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—the Spindrift—had taken passengers on board the Empress of Japan, and, with a party of ladies and others who had come to say good bye, was making its way to the side of one of the company's lighters where the launches sometimes pause to enable friends to give a last wave of the handkerchief to those on board the big liners as they leave the harbour. The launch, before rounding the bow of the Victoria, which lay in her course, blew her whistle to warn any craft that might be coming up on the other side. Unfortunately this signal was either unheard or disregarded by a large Japanese sailing junk which was under tolerably fast way, and before anything could be done on the part of the launch to avoid it, a collision took place, the bow of the junk crashing into the other craft on her starboard side. A number of ladies were standing on the deck of the launch, and one of these, Miss M. E. Simons, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, No. 221 Bluff, was struck in the chest by the junk's bow with terrible force, and rendered insensible on the spot. Another lady, Miss Belle J. Allen, of 13 Tsukiji, Tokyo, received shocking injuries, one ear being almost completely torn from her head. Dr. Louis Ottofy, of Vivanti Buildings, Main street, a dentist who has newly arrived in Japan, happened to be on board at the time, and, possessing some knowledge of what to do in such cases, at once endeavoured to restore respiration by artificial means, in the hope that the effect of the blow had not been so serious as it proved. The efforts, however, were unsuccessful, and when the terrible wound had been revealed it was at once evident that the case was hopeless. In fact, if death was not instantaneous it must have followed a very few minutes after the infliction of the shock. The launch was at once directed to the Hatoba, Dr. Eldridge was sent for, and was quickly on the scene. Both ladies were taken to his house, but it was at once apparent that Miss Simons was beyond all medical skill, and her body was afterwards conveyed to 221 Bluff. Miss Allen received treatment at the doctor's, and she is progressing favourably. The ladies had been to bid farewell missionary friends who were going to America, and the tragic affair will be as great a shock to these latter as it will prove to their many acquaintance in Yokohama and Tokyo. Both had been in Japan for several years, and the deceased was shortly expecting a visit home on furlough.

A TRIBUTE.

Both young ladies were Ohio girls; were educated at the same State university—the Wesleyan, at Delaware; and had been, since their college days, the most devoted of friends. Miss Allen was instrumental in Miss Simons' conversion and probably led her to the Mission field, where she came in 1889 then a girl of only 24. Yesterday Miss Allen, true as she had always been, attempted to save her loyal co-worker, otherwise, it is believed, she would have entirely escaped. After leaving school Miss Simons taught art for a while, a work for which she was eminently well fitted and when she came to Japan, it was to take the position of art instructer in the Nagasaki girls' school. Here she remained about four years, till 1892, when she was transferred to Yokohama and put in charge of the day school work of the mission, in which work she continued until the present year, making her home at 221 Bluff. The handsome buildings at this place were of her own design. To say that she was one of the most conscientious missionaries in the field does not half express her fidelity to the work; and to her personal friends she was just as loyal.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

PRINCE BISMARCK.

WITH the dying century the men that have made it the most memorable in the history of the world are taking final leave of the scene where they played such a mighty part. Not many weeks ago the news of Mr. GLADSTONE'S decease reached us; to-day the telegraph tells of Prince BISMARCK'S death. There have been few greater figures in European annals than these two men, though their fame rests on very different bases. BISMARCK was born less than three months before the battle of Waterloo and the restoration of the French monarchy, which it was his destiny afterwards to strike permanently in the dust. While he was still a baby in arms France passed through the terrible ordeal of the NAPOLEONIC collapse, when the soldiery of eleven nationalities invaded her territories, when eleven hundred thousand armed men ground her under their heel, and when, in addition to the enormous indirect losses entailed by the tide of invasion, she had to pay an indemnity of sixty million sterling. Before BISMARCK was four years old, this indomitable nation had risen from the ashes of its humiliation and stood once again in the front rank of great Powers. There is nothing more wonderful than the recuperative energy of France. An unparalelled display of that extraordinary capacity was the first object-lesson that the Prussian lad studied, and the teaching was not forgotten in later years. His boyhood and youth were passed among influences that might have made of him a GLADSTONE rather than a BISMARCK. For while he could not but share the sentiment of profound satisfaction with which their deliverance from French tyranny animated the German people, it rested with his own disposition to determine whether he should sympathise with the revolutionary movement that overthrew the Bourbons and established the right of free speech and personal liberty in France, or with the stern conservatism of the METTERNICH régime, when political association and political speech were interdicted, when the press was sternly muzzled, and when the idea of making the people contented by granting their reasonable demands never presented itself to German statesmen as a practical policy. There can be no doubt about the complexion which BISMARCK'S mind assumed amid these surroundings. He acquired, and throughout his life practised, the principle that free exercise of the subject's mind is an obstacle to the growth of a State's greatness, and that while it is a Government's function to superintend and direct every phase of the national life, it is the people's duty to obey unreasoningly. His career as a student, that time of splendid youth and limitless aspirations, began just when Prussian ambition was becoming a potent factor of the time. We talk in these later days with wondering contempt of the series of likin stations that check the course of commerce along the great rivers of China, but we need only look back to young BISMARCK'S studentenjahre at Göttingen to see twenty-seven custom houses on the Rhine alone, and a multitude of petty States whose forty millions of inhabitants, speaking the same language and born of the same stock, would have been a great power in Europe had not their mutual jealousies paralysed their strength. To knit together that loose congeries of principalities, to place Prussia at the head of the confederation, and to crush her rival, Austria—these were the political aims that BISMARCK carried with him from the university. They gathered strength during his subsequent service as an officer of the Landwehr, and when, at 31 years of age, he took his seat in the Diet of Saxony, he had already taught himself that as an army to be effective must implicitly obey one chief, so a State to be internationally powerful must entrust the unchallenged direction of its affairs to a Sovereign. BISMARCK, we can scarcely doubt, reached that conclusion by a process of the most matter-of-fact reasoning. There was no transcendental element in his logic. But he knew well that the masses are swayed not by reason but by sentiment, and he therefore stood forth as the champion of that marvellous doctrine, the divine right of kings: the doctrine which he enunciated to the General Diet in the memorable words:—"The Prussian Sovereigns are in possession of a crown, not by grace of the people, but by GOD'S grace; an actually unconditional crown, some of the rights of which they have voluntarily conceded to the people—an example rare in history." If BISMARCK induced himself to believe that theory, he also entertained a very rooted conviction that the Prussian monarchs should exercise their divine rights through the agency of a gifted statesman. He lived to see his theory caried to extreme limits in the practice of the present EMPEROR, whose faith in the protecting providence of Heaven is one of the curiosities of the century, but he lived also to find his own tenure of office incompatible with that other conviction as to the indispensability of the gifted agent.

Circumstances, it is said, create the men to deal with them. BISMARCK would certainly seem to be a striking illustration of the proverb. There was something singularly picturesque about his sudden début on the stage of a troublous time. His huge stature, his immense physical strength, the wildness of his youth, the uncontrollable energy of all his acts and utterances, his uncompromising opposition to Liberalism, his sweeping condemnation of every concession to popular demands, his splendid ability, and his iron resolution—it seems impossible that anything but a great historical crisis should have given birth to such qualities. And history will never forget how they were exercised; how they made Prussia great and Germany tranquil; how they won triumph after triumph over adversaries hitherto regarded by the world as invincible; and how they raised Germany from a mere geographical expression to the supremacy of Central Europe. Students of the time have asked whether BISMARCK could have achieved such wonderful results had not fate enabled him to profit by the cöoperation of a VON ROON, a VON MOLTKE and a DREYSE. It is hard to assess the exact share of credit belonging to each of the actors in the wonderful drama, but assuredly BISMARCK towers head and shoulders above all the great men whom Prussia's fifty years of patient effort produced. The splendid agents that worked out her purposes, equally with the vast accumulation of forces they found ready to their hand, were created by the spirit that nerved her throughout that long interval of preparation, and could never have existed without that spirit. The honour, therefore, belongs primarily to the German nation, but no German will deny, we imagine, that by far the greater part belongs to BISMARCK. The century may well be proud that such a name is inscribed on its annals. It is true that BISMARCK'S latter years were passed in comparative obscurity, and that he did not always bear with the magnanimity of true greatness the neglect which a youthful EMPEROR showed towards his veteran abilities. But these small flaws in the magnificent jewel will not survive the touch of death. The German people will remember him only as the splendid instrument of their greatness. It has been often asserted that BISMARCK was hostile to England. Certainly his acts prove that he would at any moment have sacrificed England for Germany's sake. But that should not be a reproach even in the eyes of Englishmen. Germany's position in Central Europe is one of immense difficulty, and there is very little room for altruism in her treatment of other States. At the same time, BISMARCK could never have been a possibility in Anglo-Saxon politics during the present century. He was the representative of a type of statesmen who, however great their potentialities, however large their sphere of usefulness under certain circumstances, could not stand among the conditions that exist in England and America. We believe that, a hundred years hence, a statesman of his creed and methods will be impossible anywhere in Europe. But he suited his time, and in welding together the Teutonic fragments into a German entity, prosperous and powerful, he established a lasting claim on the gratitude not of his country alone, but of the whole civilized world.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHINA AFFAIRS.

The telegram published in Thursday's Japan Mail is explained by the following note, taken from the columns of the N.-C. Daily News:—"It is reported from Peking that M. Pavloff, the Russian Chargé d'Affaires, has sent in to the Tsung-li Yamên another very strongly worded protest against the Imperial Railways of North China being allowed to carry out their contract with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank." According to our Shanghai contemporary, the official classes in Peking are beginning to feel very anxious at Russia's evident intention of securing paramount influence in the councils of the Chinese Empire.

Dispatches received in Shanghai from Changsha report the finding of valuable gold quartz in a small township called Taohuaping, in the district of Pingchiang, Hunan.

A Chinese paper reports that Japan has asked for a special settlement at Foochow in the section south of Nantai bridge and ending at its southern end. Hearing of this, the British authorities demanded the extension of their settlement to the end of the northern part of the bridge. The matter is said to be in the hands of the British Minister, who is pressing the Tsung-li Yamên to consent.

The North-China Daily News, commenting upon the appointment of Mr. F. S. A. Bourne as Consul and Assistant Judge at Shanghai, says:—He undertakes the duties of Assistant Judge, Consul in charge of the Land Office, and Assessor at the Mixed Court. Mr. Bourne is a very able man and a hard worker, but even he will find it physically impossible to cope with all these duties. Have the powers that be any clear idea of what Shanghai is, and of the extent of the duties that her Majesty Consulate-General and Supreme Court have to fulfil?

During a violent thunderstorm at Shanghai on Saturday, July 23rd, lightning struck the cupola of the new Municipal Hall, shivering the heavy wood-work and throwing large fragments on to the verandah of the Secretary's house, breaking some of the windows, but not damaging the building. The rainfall was very heavy, being 2.95 inches, of which 2.85 inches fell in the first 50 minutes. The thermometer sank from 95° to 76°.

Rumour is a busy jade in China, especially where Peking affairs are concerned. The other day it was announced with all the pomp of detail and comment that the Emperor had pinned on Li Hung-chang's breast the decoration of the Double Dragon, a Chinese order hitherto confined solely to foreigners. Now it appears that the Emperor has not done anything of the kind.

Shanghai is still suffering from its washermen's trouble, though its case is not so bad as Yokohama's. In this context, a Wuhu correspondent of a contemporary writes:—

It is a curious reversal of the ordinary dependence of the outports upon Shanghai, that since the Ningpo Joss House riot in the French Concession, foreign clothing has been sent up river to the laundry owned and supervised by the Customs Staff at Wuhu, owing to the closing of the washhouses at Shanghai, and the intimidation of the laundrymen!

The French priest M. Fleury, who was captured by a band of brigands in Central Szechuan a fortnight ago, during a plundering riot, is still in their hands. The Chunking correspondent of the N.-C. Daily News says that the man responsible for the whole affair is named Yü Man-tze. Yu has for many years been under a ban, and he now knows well that the mandarins, constantly and vigorously pressed by M. Haas, French Consul, are bent upon capturing him. His career of crime is a long one, and the Roman Catholic Christians have suffered severely from his during lawlessness. Further on, this correspondent adds:—No one will be greatly surprised if M. Fleury's captivity emboldens France to make heavy reprisals, and it is easy to believe that the incident is capable of giving rise to complications in which other powers than China and France would be potentially concerned. The wish of Jêo Tantai, as expressed to the local fathers, was to buy the captive's liberty, but this has been definitely put aside, not less at the instance of M. Fleury himself who, we learn, is bearing himself heroically, than at that of M. Haas and others.

A notification has been issued by Capt. King Hall, R.N. and Mr. Consul Hopkins, Commissioners for Wei-hai-wei, that no sale of land on the island of Liukungtao or within the Inner Zone on the mainland, made since the 24th of May last, will be recognised as legal, until it has been referred to the British Commissioner or Administrator for approval.

The lively Tientsin correspondent of the N.-C. Daily News tells the following pretty story of the new Viceroy. He calls it Jung Lu's enterprise—well, we want new names for things occasionally. "The new Viceroy, Jung Lu, has taken over the seals of office as you know. He has taken some other things as well. Some hundred miles to the N.E. of Tientsin are gold mines which a company has been working with some success for several years. This worthy gentleman appears to look upon them as legitimate booty pertaining to his position, or as perquisities of his office: at any rate, he has notified the Directors that their services are no more needed" or words to that effect," and that he will take charge, and has done so. Will the shareholders get anything is a question of some importance. This is one of the mountains in the way of China's progress. It is to be hoped that the Emperor will hear of it and interfere for some degree of justice."

A recent visitor to the new German station at Kiaochou Bay, says a China paper, is delighted with it as a future watering place, a commercial port, and a naval station. The coal found is equal to Cardiff, and no one, he learns, is more delighted with this German acquisition than Prince Henry of Prussia.

Referring to the recent lowering of the brokerage rate in Yokohama to $\frac{1}{16}$ per cent., Mr. G. A. Matthews writes to a Shanghai contemporary:—"For my part I have long been of opinion that a sliding scale should be arranged for bill brokerage, ranging from $\frac{1}{16}$ per cent. on small transactions to say $\frac{1}{2}$ per mille on large amounts."

It is good to hear occasionally of the biter being bitten. An instance is recorded in a recent issue of the N.-C. Daily News. It says:—As the Kiangfoo was coming down the River on her last trip, thirteen thieves got on at one of the stations, and attacked the passengers with the intention of robbing them, just as the next station was reached. Capt. Bassett mustered all hands and attacked the thieves in turn, capturing eight of them, five escaping in the boats that came alongside at the station. On arriving at Shanghai Capt. Bassett handed over his captives to the French police, who recognised five of them at once as well-known old river-thieves.

True to the traditions of the Palace, the Emperor of China, before starting the reformation of his Army, has ordered Prince Ching "to go through the old records and see what our Imperial ancestors did in this respect and transcribe their actions for our perusal." Meanwhile, His Majesty has received a memorial from Wu Ting-fang (Ng Choy) his Minister to the United States, Spain, and Peru, urging speedy reformation of the Manchu and Chinese regiments in Peking and in the provinces, and that they should be armed and drilled with modern arms of the newest and best description, without exception, etc. The Emperor has commanded the Ministers of the Grand Council to join with the Princes and Officers of the Peking Field Force as well as with the Captains-General, etc., of the Eight Banner Corps, to deliberate over the memorial and report thereon.

From the N.-C. Daily News:—A Nanchang, capital of Kiangsi province, dispatch states that the gentry and literati of that city have selected a Committee amongst their number to go to Japan for a tour of inspection of the schools and colleges in that country in order to study the educational question there. On the return of the Committee it is intended to remodel the present schools and colleges of Nanchang upon the former. The schools and colleges in the various prefectures, sub-prefectures, departments, and districts of Kiangsi will then take those of Nanchang as models. The Committee, it is expected, will be able to start for Japan in August.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Three cases of dysentery appeared in Yokohama on Wednesday.

The Rev. E. R. Fulkerson has been appointed by the Secretary of State of the United States Vice-Consul of the United States at Nagasaki.

The report that there is a serious outbreak of plague at Amoy is stigmatised by the China Mail as "hysterical tomfoolery." Amoy has no more than the usual hot season sickness.

Owing to the heavy rain of Wednesday night, the tunnel on the railway between Okitsu and Shizuoka was badly damaged and trains on the Tokaido will be suspended until this afternoon, when the repairs are expected to be completed.

At Amboyna, says the Sourabaya Courant, shocks of earthquake continue to be felt. A series of shocks well nigh destroyed the town a few months ago. Since then shocks, mostly slight, have been continuous. These shocks are not volcanic at all, and are accounted for by a subsidence of the land. It appears that the coral formation on which Amboyna rests is dislocated. It is supposed that, right under the town, the coral formation is parting and crumbling away. Every time a fresh piece drops a shock happens. These shocks are always vertical. The crust under Amboyna grows thinner, so that it is considered that Amboyna will shortly sink into the deep. The shocks experienced at present are preceded by dull sounds, like that from a heavy object falling into water. Then follows the shock, which is more or less severe, according to the greater or less loudness of these sounds. It is now ascertained that two great hollows are extending underground there, so that it is only a question of time for Amboyna to be swallowed up in an abyss. It is proposed to remove the town and station to a neighbouring island.

At the inquest on the body of Herbert Ernest Tuck, stoker of H.M.S. Victorious, drowned in Nagasaki harbour on the 27th ult., the following verdict was rendered, by a jury consisting of Messrs. Baker, Stone, and Carnduff:—"The deceased accidentally came to his death by drowning in the harbour of Nagasaki, and the accident was caused by the sampan [in which the deceased with eleven other liberty-men had taken passage for the shore] being overcrowded, and by the recklessness of the men who had taken passage in her." The jury added a rider to the effect that in their opinion if someone had been in charge on board the ship to see that standing orders in regard to the overcrowding of boats by marines were carried out, this accident would not have occurred. The Nagasaki Press observes in this context:—From the evidence given, it appeared that blame could not reasonably be attached to the Japanese boatman whose boat was overturned. It is true that he was carrying passengers in excess of the number allowed by the regulations; but the fault really lies in the absence of proper care on board the warship. Liberty-men, it appears, may, if they choose, go ashore at their own expense in a sampan instead of in the ship's boat provided for the purpose. But, even so, the authorities on board the ship should certainly exercise supervision to see that no boat carrying liberty-men leaves the ship's side in a dangerously overloaded condition.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SYNOD OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN JAPAN.

The twelfth regular meeting of the Synod was held—July 14th to 19th—in Van Schaick Hall of the Ferris Seminary, 178 Bluff, Yokohama.

The meeting was opened with a sermon by the retiring Moderator, the Rev. Mr. Yamamoto, pastor of the Shiloh Church of Yokohama. The text was 1 Cor. 15; 57,58, and the sermon a plea for an earnest faith based upon the truths and principles of Christianity. Many are prone to be content with a purely numerical increase of believers and churches. But this is not the sort of success that we should seek to attain. What we need to aim at is the promulgation and establishment of the fundamental truths of the Gospel. Again, there are some who are inclined to rest in a sort of idealistic faith. Christianity, they say, is a spiritual religion. We need not concern ourselves about the form either in doctrine or in Church organization. One form is as good as another, and all forms are imperfect and inadequate. Hence, keep fast hold of Christ, sit at His feet, look always to Him, and all will be well. The preacher admitted that in this position there is a large element of truth, but at the same time declared it to be a dangerous one. Christianity is not a system of purely spiritual ideas, or notions. It is not subjective only, but also objective. As a system, it rests upon certain well defined and firmly established truths. It is, therefore, important that each Church should formulate these truths for itself and hold fast to them. The Church of Christ in Japan has a short, simple, and evangelical creed; upon this creed we Ministers should unite; upon the truths embodied in it we need to lay the greatest emphasis; we should see to it that they are taught, and as far as possible accepted, in the Churches over which we have charge, because we believe these truths to be essential to an intelligent and Scriptural faith. The discourse was an able one and was listened to with interest by all present.

The sermon being ended, the Synod at once proceeded to the election of officers. The Rev. K. Ibuka was chosen Moderator, and the Rev. Mr. Yamamoto, Clerk, instead of Mr. Wada, who asked to be relieved of the office.

Reports of Committees were first in order. The Committee on the State of Religion presented an interesting report. According to it the whole number of Churches connected with the Synod is 71; preaching places 102; ordained Ministers 88; whole number of believers 11,131; number baptized during the year 683; total of contributions for all purposes yen 23,354 417.

Another report of great interest was that of the Committee on cooperation. This Committee was appointed by the Synod at its previous meeting to confer with the Missions said to be cooperating with the Church of Christ in Japan with a view to securing cooperation of a closer and more formal character than that hitherto in existence. The committee reported that, in accordance with the instructions of the Synod, a conference had been held with representatives of the various missions, but with no very satisfactory results. The committee found that the missions, though not averse to cooperation in a general and somewhat vague sense of the word, were nevertheless wholly unwilling to cooperate upon the plan suggested by the Synod. The committee regarded this as very unfortunate, and had used every means in their power to reach a satisfactory conclusion in the matter, but in vain. It was, therefore, with regret that they felt constrained to report that "cooperating missions," in any formal, or official, sense of the term, do no longer exist. At the same time, the committee could not forget the great work done by the Missions in the past, and would recognize the work still being carried on by them. The Committee would also recognize the value of that informal and moral kind of cooperation which the missions propose to carry on. As to what should be done under the circumstances the Committee was somewhat at a loss to say. There seemed to be nothing left but for the Church and the Mission to go on very much as heretofore, each party working on its own lines. The Committee, however, suggested that, hereafter in making up the statistical tables it be indicated in some way what work is being done by the Japanese Church and what by the missions, as a matter of information. A prolonged discussion followed the presentation of this report. A large majority of the Synod was in favour of simply accepting the report and letting the matter drop. The minority, however, strenuously insisted that, as the question of cooperation was one of the greatest importance in the work of the Church, a Committee be appointed to negotiate further with the missions, and if possible, secure cooperation of a more definite kind and more in accordance with the views of the Synod on the subject. As the discussion seemed likely to go on indefinitely and without any satisfactory conclusion, it was at length decided to refer the whole matter to a Committee with instructions to consider the subject carefully and recommend what action should be taken. At a later session, the Committee thus appointed brought in the following resolutions, which were adopted by a large majority, to wit:

1. That the Synod express its thanks to the Committee on Cooperation and direct that its report be printed in the Minutes.

2. That, inasmuch as it appears that the Synod and the Council of Missions differ in opinion regarding the wisest method of cooperation, further consideration of the subject be postponed for the present.

3. That, since the obligations of the Church of Christ in Japan to the Missions are certainly very great, although unhappily in the matter of cooperation no agreement has been attained, nevertheless it is wise and proper to maintain a feeling of cordial friendship between the parties and to promote a spirit of mutual helpfulness.

4. That the clerk of the Synod be directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Secretaries of the several Missions. Although, as stated above, these resolutions were adopted by a large majority, a few members of the Synod were still much dissatisfied. They, therefore, pressed the matter further by addressing inquiries to the Synod in reference to two points. The first was to this effect, viz that since it has been made clear that there is no longer any such thing as official Cooperation between the Synod and the Missions, How shall Churches and preaching places which receive aid from the Missions be regarded? To this it was replied that, according to a previous action of the Synod,—of which mention will be made later on—such Churches and preaching places are hereafter to be distinguished, in the stable of statistics, from those belonging entirely to the Synod, and should be regarded as under the case of the Presbyteries within whose bounds they fall.

The second inquiry was in regard to the relation of those Missionaries who are not full members of Presbytery. Since all formal cooperation has ceased, have such missionaries the right to be elected as advisory members of the Presbyteries and the Synod? To this it was answered that such cases are fully provided for in the Canons of the Church—see Canon 23, Sect. 6. There still being dissatisfaction on the part of some, the Synod passed a resolution directing the presbyteries to strictly enforce the Canon on this subject. With this the long discussion on the question of cooperation came to an end, and everybody drew a sigh of relief. The whole subject is a delicate and complicated one growing out of the transitional stage through which the Church, as a whole, is now passing. As long as the Church was entirely supported by, and largely under the control of, the Missions there was little difficulty. When the Church shall become able to assume responsibility, financial and otherwise, there will be plain sailing again. In the meantime, the situation calls for prudence and forbearance on the part both of the Church and of the Missions. Of this the Synod was fully aware, hence the evident anxiety of all present while discussion was going on and the great relief when the question was at last disposed of.

Bearing on the same general subject, the Synod at a previous session, took the following action, viz:

1. That in statistical reports hereafter the churches and preaching places receiving aid from the Missions, or other outside sources, be indicated.

2. That preaching places under control of the presbyteries, but receiving aid from the Missions, be put in a separate column.

The Committee on the examination of presbyterial records, found that in Naniwa presbytery a certain preaching place had been placed under the care of a Committee consisting of ordinary Church members. The Committee inquired whether under the Canons this was allowable. The answer was in the negative, only ministers and elders being competent to take such responsibility.

The same Committee discovered in the records of Miyagi Presbytery that certain preaching places had been cut off from connection with the presbytery. The Committee stated that inquiry had been made into the reasons which led to such action on the part of the presbytery, and while in a measure the circumstances seemed to justify it, at the same time in the judgment of the Committee the action was unwise. After some discussion the report of the Committee was adopted as rendered.

An interesting case of appeal came before the Synod and was referred to the Judicial committee. The case was that of an elder in the Ushigome Church, of Tokyo, who some time ago became convinced that immersion is the only proper form of baptism. He, therefore, had himself re-baptized by immersion, and proceeded to teach in the Sunday School of the Church in which he was an elder that baptism by sprinkling is not baptism at all. The session of the Church then took the matter up and decided to remove him from his office as elder. From this decision he appealed to the presbytery, which sustained the action of the session. From the decision of the presbytery he then appealed to the Synod. The report of the Judicial Committee on the case was as follows:—The mode of baptism differs in different churches. In the Oriental Churches the Common mode is immersion. In the Roman Catholic Church, the Church of England, the Lutheran Church, and in the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, the common mode is sprinkling. The Church of Christ in Japan, as most of the Churches of Christ throughout the world, holds that the mode is not essential. Both immersion and sprinkling are valid. To insist upon a different view is to oppose the great principle of Christian liberty, and to make Christianity a religion of forms. This is contrary to the spirit of the New Testament. The Church of Christ in Japan has great respect for the rights of conscience. It is for this very reason that it insists that the mode of baptism shall not be made an essential. In all matters excepting those immediately connected with the fundamental truths of Christianity this Church will ever exercise the utmost forbearance towards any of its members who hold their views in such a way as not to disturb the peace of the Church. But to hold and teach that persons should be re-baptized has a manifest tendency to divide the Church into parties and to destroy the spirit of love. An officer, or private member, who deems it his duty to propagate such views should apply for dismission to some other Church with whose principles he is in harmony. The Synod therefore confirms the decision of the presbytery.

Another item of interest was the appointment of a committee of three to prepare a pastoral letter to be sent to all ministers, evangelists, and Church sessions, urging upon them the importance of looking carefully after Church members who change their residence from one place to another, and to see to it that such persons obtain letters of dismission and recommendation and thus keep up their connection with the Church as a whole. Similar action was taken by the Synod at its previous meeting a year ago, but the matter was deemed to be of sufficient importance to merit further attention. Among other important resolutions passed were such as these —

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

That a committee of three be appointed to consider the method of Church Sustentation now in operation in the Free Church of Scotland, and to report as to the wisdom of adopting some such plan for the Church of Christ in Japan. This committee is to report at the next regular meeting of the Synod.

That the report of the Board of Home Missions for the past year be accepted, and that the Board be authorized to raise and expend upon the work in the coming year the sum of yen 3,600.

That the request of the First and Second presbyteries of Tokyo to be united be referred to a committee. This committee reported at a later Session in favour of the union. The report was adopted and steps taken to consummate union in the near future.

The committee on the revision of the Hymn Book having reported progress, three members were added to the committee and it was authorized to complete and publish the revision as soon as possible.

Appropriate resolutions in reference to the death of the Rev. G. F. Verbeck, D.D., were adopted, to be recorded in the minutes and a copy of them sent to the bereaved family.

The Synod adjourned to meet in Tokyo in July, 1899, the day of meeting being left for the standing Committee to determine later on.

In regard to the meeting just held, several things could not fail to impress the sympathetic observer.

1. Full and free discussion of all important questions was allowed. No restraint whatever was put upon the expression of opinion.

2. At the same time, business was despatched in a manner at once expeditious and dignified.

3. Though there were serious differences of opinion in regard to some of the questions discussed, a spirit of unity and brotherly love pervaded the entire meeting.

4. The religious and devotional spirit was very strong thoughout the meeting. A prayer meeting, well attended, was held every morning at six o'clock in which the members of the Synod prayed earnestly for one another, for the Church, and for the speedy coming of the Kingdom in this land.

5. The meeting of the Synod was preceded by two days of conference and prayer. Important problems, doctrinal and practical, were earnestly and thoughtfully discussed by leading men in the Church of Christ in Japan and by Mr. Kozaki of the Congregational Church.

6. Again, one could not but be impressed with the fact, that notwithstanding all difficulties and drawbacks, Christianity is already taking deep root in this country, and that the day cannot be far distant when it must be recognized by all as one of the potent factors in the making of the New Japan. T. T. ALEXANDER.

BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN JAPAN.

This Board recently made its fourth annual report to the Synod. It may be worth while to call attention to some interesting features of the report. The Board has been carrying on work throughout the year in the following places, to wit:—Neda, Minami-Saku-gun, and Kita-Saku-gun in the province of Shinshu; in Mito, Ota-mura, and Shimotsuma in Ibaraki Ken, and in Taihoku and Tainan, Formosa. From these centres the work branches out in all directions and is gradually assuming larger and larger proportions.

The present report, as compared with that for the previous year, shows a decided falling off in the number of baptisms, the whole number for the year being only thirty-two. Of these, seven were in Taihoku and vicinity, twenty-two in Ueda, and three in Ibaraki Ken. In Taihoku there are many inquirers, also in Minami and Kita Saku Gun, and it is expected that a considerable number will be baptized in all these places in the near future.

In the matter of self-support good results have been attained. It is sometimes said that the policy of the Board tends to hinder self-support, rather than to promote it. The facts do not seem to justify this criticism. The Church at Ueda, which has been for some two years under the care of the Board, became self-supporting during the year covered by the present report. The Church has received no aid since the end of March. It pays its pastor twenty-five yen a month and defrays all other expenses. The work in Minami and Kita Saku-gun, also, has become self-supporting, paying the Minister's salary and all other expenses. Indeed, it has been the aim of the Board from the beginning to push self-support as rapidly as possible. It is firmly believed by the members of the Board that the best way to secure financial independence on the part of the Churches and preaching places under its care is by the timely and judicious use of money, thus encouraging the believers and gradually assisting them up to the point where they are able and willing to take care of themselves. It is hoped that the Church in Taihoku, which now pays one half the pastor's salary, may become self-supporting at no very distant day. The believers there, however, are making strenuous efforts to build a chapel, and this may delay progress in the direction of self-support.

The work at Tainan was begun a little more than a year ago, and has gone on under difficulties. It has had from the start the sympathy and generous assistance of the Missionaries of the English Presbyterian Church, who are working there. But unfortunately the Rev. Mr. Hirayama, who was sent there by the board, was compelled to resign his position and to return to this part of the empire on account of the serious illness of his wife. He returned last last spring and the Rev. R. Hosokawa, until recently pastor of the Kaigan Church in Yokohama, has been sent to take his place. Those who know Mr. Hosokawa will feel a deep interest in his work, will sympathize with him in his separation from home and friends, and follow him with their prayers. He is an earnest and consecrated man, well fitted for the work he has undertaken.

The report shows that the finances of the Board were, as usual, managed with care by the executive Committee. It may not be known to some that the Board itself consists of twenty members, one half of whom are elected at each regular meeting of the Synod. Care is always taken in the elections to secure a thoroughly representative body of men, so that every presbytery is represented in the Board. The management of financial matters and of the work in general is, however, entrusted to an executive committee residing in Tokyo and Yokohama. The Board's fiscal year has hitherto been from July 1st to June 30th, but hereafter will correspond to the calendar year, in accordance with the action of Synod at its late meeting. For the year just ended the Board was authorized to raise the sum of yen 3,600. The amount actually raised was 2,891.152. There was, however, at the beginning of the year a balance in hand of 4,455. There was also in hand 65,365, balance from a fund raised for the purpose of sending a committee to Formosa. This balance the Synod authorized the Board to expend upon its regular work. Adding these balances to the amount raised during the year we find that the entire sum at the disposal of the Board was 2,960.972. The sum expended was 2,892,694, leaving a balance at the end of the year of 68.278.

As the Board has just completed its fourth year it may be interesting to note the advance that has been made from year to year in the amount of contributions received. The total contributions for the

1st year were	562.196
2nd year	...1,469.763
3rd year	...1 909 968
4th year	...2,891.152

Of the amount raised last year churches and preaching places connected with the Board contributed... ... ... 363.800

Other Churches and preaching places ...	94 5936
Individuals (Japanese)	802 749
Missionaries in Formosa	250 000
" in Japan proper	159.000
Woman's Societies (Japanese)	93.098
Methodist Protestant Church for Work in Formosa	25.719
Japanese Church in San Francisco ...	25.510
Raised in Connection with Special Meetings in Celebration of the Church's 25th Anniversary	225 340
Total	...2,891.152

Thirteen churches contributed over 25 yen each, viz. :—

Taihoku Church	...130 000
Ueda "	... 85 100
Kaigan "	... 80.000
Kochi "	... 72.000
Ichi Bancho "	... 57.097
Shiloh "	... 46 850
Nagoya "	... 37.786
Daimachi "	... 35.307
Yamaguchi "	... 33 755
Shinsakai "	... 33 010
Hakodate "	... 27.825
Sapporo "	... 27 000
Kyoto "	... 25 890

Of the above churches only the Kyoto Church receives aid directly from the Mission, and it pays one half the pastor's salary and all incidental expenses. Eight churches contributed to the Board 10 yen, or more, and less than 25, each, as follows :—

Nagasaki Church	23 210
Kojimachi "	16.000
South Church (Osaka)	12.770
Chiba "	12 000
Shitaya "	11 649
Hongo "	11 500
North " (Osaka)	10 000
Seigen "	10 000

No one of these is dependent upon mission funds.

Out of a total of about sixty-eight Churches for the Church of Christ in Japan, twenty contributed nothing to the Board. These twenty are for the most part directly dependent upon the missions.

The total number of preaching places is about one hundred and twenty. Of these fifty-five gave nothing. The preaching places contributing most liberally were :—

Minami Saku Gun	50 00
Two places in Ibaraki-ken	71 07
Ichigaya	12 05
Aki	10 20

These are all independent of mission aid. In short, a careful examination of the figures shows that only a comparatively small proportion of the board's income for the year was from Churches, or preaching places, directly connected with the missions, probably from ten to fifteen per cent. In this particular the present report does not differ materially from that of the previous year, an account of which appeared in the Japan Evangelist for September, 1897.

The estimate for the work of the incoming year, as approved by the Synod, is yen 3,700. The work formerly under the care of the Board at Neda and elsewhere in the province of Shinshu having become self-supporting, it is purposed to begin new work. The Board has already completed arrangements for taking the Kobe Church under its care. The Church, aided by Missionaries, has agreed to take a large share of expenses from the start, and, it is expected, will soon be able to pay everything.

The Board is also authorized to open up work in Kumamoto, or some other important point in Kyushu, and at some place within the bounds of the Miyagi presbytery.

It is the purpose of the present members of the Board to push the work as rapidly as possible and to secure greater results during the incoming year than ever before, God willing. Let us not only wish them success in their efforts but also encourage and help them forward in every possible way. For, it is to such institutions as this Board, now small in their beginnings, that we must look for a large share in the ultimate evangelization of this country.

T. T. ALEXANDER.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CORRESPONDENCE.

MISSIONS IN JAPAN.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—I may be, as your correspondent * * * asserts, neither "Impartial" nor an "Observer"—I may also be an "Ignoramus"—and may "drivel like a babe, and deserve a good spanking" for the opinions expressed in my previous letter. But at the same time I would remind * * * that personal vituperation is not argument, and that he who descends to such a line of defence only proves that his cause is a weak one.

Your correspondent says that "the Missionaries in Japan, through much toil and labour, have laid the solid foundations of a grand edifice, of which Christendom has every reason to be proud"—and that "when this edifice is completed, no body of men will be more ready and glad to put down their heavy burdens and retire—but that to abandon their position before their task is finished would be unpardonable cowardice!"

Like many other thoughtful persons outside mission work, I certainly fail to see wherein consists the heroism of sticking as long as they can to the fat salaries, noble mansions, luxurious living, and comparatively easy work notoriously characteristic of mission work in Japan.

Not without good reason has this country been aptly dubbed "the happy hunting ground" of the American and English missionary?

The stranger arriving at Kobe, Osaka, or Yokohama, struck by the palatial appearance of certain foreign buildings in those ports, naturally exclaims interrogatively, "I presume these are the residences of the Consuls?" "Oh! No"—is the reply, "those are the Missions!"

It is a fact that the majority of missionaries and their families quit the ports, and "fly from their great toil and labor" at the first approach of summer in the month of June—to the various mountain health resorts—where they never fail to secure the most eligible sites—there to remain until the end of September—recruiting themselves from their "arduous labors" of eight months previous, by the gentle distractions of picnics, reading parties, lawn tennis, literary, social, and musical evenings, etc., etc., while the hard-worked merchants and their staff of clerks in the Treaty Ports, the journalists, the medical men, and others who have their livings to earn, can with difficulty snatch a fortnight's relief from their work during the intense heat of summer!

It was only the other day I found myself in the company of an intelligent woman who was just returning homewards after doing Japan, and heard her volunteer the following remark:—"Do you know what business I would enjoy if I had to earn my living? I would become a missionary in Japan. I think they have the jolliest time of any of the community that I have met! Why! where I come from, we always consider that a girl who goes out to the East as a missionary is a model of self-sacrifice, and she is lauded as a heroine accordingly, but now I see it is the best way of getting a delightful five years' trip, with all your expenses paid!"

It is an undeniable fact that missionaries are not in the same request amongst the Japanese as they were twenty years ago. Then the Japanese were ready and willing to swallow any doctrine for the sake of the European education they were craving for, but now that they have made themselves almost independent of extraneous educational aid, or think they have, they are continually giving the missionaries to understand that their presence as converters only is no longer required—not only through the vernacular papers, but by their recent action (however much to be reprobated in the manner of doing it) of the Doshisha affair and others.

But the missionaries are loth to take the hint, however broadly given, and prefer trimming their sails to suit the altered times, to furling them altogether.

The plain truth is—the whole world has undergone great changes since missionaries were a necessity. Two generations ago, no sensible or philanthropic person could gainsay their immense usefulness in introducing, along with Christianity, the peaceful arts of civilization throughout the length and breadth of the South Seas, nor can the most unorthodox thinker of the present day withold his admiration of the self-devotion and heroism of those pioneers of Christianity who knew in all cases they were risking their lives, and, as frequently happened, did sacrifice them, to the cause to which they had dedicated themselves, even although in many cases it turned out that their labours were put to good interest for their descendants who now, as in Honolulu and many other places, have become immensely wealthy by the greatly increased value of land granted by converted native chiefs to their fathers for little or nothing?

But was it really Christianity or civilization that those pioneer missionaries brought to those benighted lands? In the autobiography of the Rev. Dr. Paton, one of the earliest workers among the fierce cannibals of the New Hebrides, he naively relates an anecdote which, all unconsciously, tells as much against as for his work. After telling his readers that the first idea of Christianity grasped by the minds of the naked savages was that conversion was inseparably connected with clothes, he goes on to narrate how a specially contumacious female subject who was undergoing the process of conversion, but had for a long time proved impervious to all efforts on her behalf, suddenly appeared at his door one Sabbath morning, exlaiming joyfully, "Look, see Massa Paton, I Christian now!" proudly exhibiting her hitherto unadorned charms arrayed in high boots, a sailor's shirt and sou'wester, with a pair of trousers tied in a negligé manner round her shoulders by the legs, after the fashion of a lady's pelerine or cape (I crave pardon of my fair readers for my ignorance in describing the technicalities of their attire).

Who can say how much Japanese Christianity may be, as the saying is—"only skin deep"—but may perchance, as in the case of this female convert from Tanna or Rarotonga, have only reached the outside of the skin?

The Japanese, when their country was opened to the world, were neither cannibals nor naked savages—on the contrary, they are in possession of a written history which proves that they were clad in silk attire at a period of the world's history when the ancestors of those who now come to convert them were daubing their bodies with woad and other dyes in lieu of clothing! They have shown that they possess critical acumen and scientific and philosophic bias, which forbids their accepting without question the doctrines of Christianity when presented to them under the same aspect as it was to the cannibal denizens of the South Seas, and that is the great mistake that missionaries make, in treating them, in the matter of the Christian religion, as babes and sucklings, instead of acute speculative men inclined to materialism, as they have shown themselves in many cases.

In conclusion, I for my part am quite willing to take the consensus of all national public opinion, whether held by educated Japanese or foreigners (outside of missions, of course) on the question "Are missionaries, and the religious doctrines they offer to the Japanese, necessary to Japan at the present time?" and to abide by the verdict of the majority, if your correspondent * * * will do the same.

I am, yours, "Impartial Observer."

July 28th.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—Before endeavouring to reply to "Impartial Observer's" second letter, I should like to call the attention of your readers to the fact that, without the slightest provocation from the Missionary side, this gentleman charges them with wasting Mission money, with incompetency and many other things; then he offers to them a few most extravagant suggestions which, I still firmly believe that no human being having a deep—I might say even a shallow—knowledge of the history of the development of the religious instinct of mankind would have offered. Indeed, it was his language that can be characterized as vituperative and not mine, unless poignant truth be termed vituperation. I simply said that he was absolutely ignorant of the real facts of the whole situation, and I freely confess that the more I read this man's mental productions, the more I am confirmed in my former opinion that "Impartial Observer" is neither acquainted with history nor with human nature; as for impartiality there is no more of that very rare quality in him than there is life in a piece of ice! However, let us came to the real points of controversy. "Impartial Observer" has collected and marshalled with flippant language those "street" (in default of a fit English word) charges so common amongst a certain, not very serious, element of the Open Ports.

1. "Missionaries' fat salaries." Missionaries are paid what a fourth-rate minister would be paid at home; and while the latter, if a man of ability, would have every opportunity to advance in influence, in knowledge, in salary, and in everything else, the foreign missionary, from the day he leaves his home, has the door of progress absolutely shut upon him. I don't know a single missionary who has grown fat on his slender salary; on the contrary, I know numbers who haven't been able to save enough money to educate their children: they have to be helped by some kind-hearted individual. I know others who have grown old in the field and returned home to pass their last days in need and penury. These are real facts with many of them I am personally acquainted; they are not manufactured "hard facts."

2. "Palatial residences of many missionaries." I have been within scores of missionary homes, but I have not met a single house which could be properly called "palatial." As a general rule missionary residences, especially in Yokohama and Tokyo, are attached to some part of the mission institution: school, hospital, &c., which, to a superficial observer, whose main object is slander, not justice, might perhaps and do look palatial."

3. Missionaries leading a luxurious life and abandoning their work during the summer-heat, &c." I am afraid that there is considerable truth in this point. However, it should be observed that we are living in a "brutally materialistic age" as the late Matthew Arnold called it. There is no wonder that many missionaries are more or less affected by it. I wish and pray to God that they were more self-sacrificing.

4. "Considering the Japanese as equal to the cannibal denizens of the South Seas." This is shamefully false. No missionary possessing a scrap of common sense would consider Japanese as savages, or would convey the truths of the Gospel to them in the same way as they are conveyed to the cannibal of the South Seas. No body of men more appreciates Japanese intellect, Japanese hospitality, Japanese art, in one word, Japanese civilization, than the missionary body. To prove this I have simply to allude to the fact that the missionary body was the first which passed resolutions recognizing the equality of Japan with the Western civilized countries, and asking their respective governments to have the old treaties speedily revised. I have never heard a missionary but talk with admiration of the many admirable qualities which the race possesses. I firmly believe that it is the earnest desire, nay solicitude, of every Protestant missionary that Japan under divine Providence should grow into one of the mightiest empires which history has witnessed: mighty in spiritual, moral, and material prosperity.

5. "Japanese do not want missionaries." No nation ever did. But I am sure, and am speaking from personal knowledge and long experience, that the Japanese Christians still do want missionaries. At present these Christians are very anxious to become independent and manage the work themselves—a very laudable desire. At this transitional period very likely some slight friction will occur between the native Christian and the missionary, but something far milder than the disgraceful Doshisha episode. However, whatever the troubles caused by the human frailty, the divine side of Christianity will go on advancing in Japan as it has been everywhere else for the last 20 centuries.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

I have met many "educated Japanese" and have had long talks with them about many important questions, the future of Christianity amongst them. With the exception of those whose minds were vitiated by the sceptical foreigner, the rest have spoken very favourably concerning the missionary and his work. A short while ago I was visiting the new mayor of a large town—not a Christian; he told me that during the mayor's meeting the Governor of the province—not a Christian—said, before all, "Japan at present needed Christianity more than anything else." Of course I am not quoting this solitary expression to show that the missionary is still needed in Japan; that necessity emanates from a higher command.

With these explanations I withdraw from this unpleasant controversy, hoping every intelligent and impartial observer will see things as they are and not through the dim eye-glasses of unfair prejudice.

Very truly yours,

* * *

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—I have prayerfully read "Impartial Observer's" communications in the Mail. I have hopelessly failed to fathom the profundity of his reasoning. This is, no doubt, because of the obtusity of my mental faculties. Missionaries in Japan are thoroughly familiar with a common species of fungus, infidel criticism, which springs up in a night like Jonah's gourd, but withers away in the heat and light of truth. I imagine that "Impartial Observer" must be classed with the fungus. If his strictures are aimed against the general principle of missionaries living in good houses, eating good wholesome food, taking good care of their physical frames, and such like, then I have to take direct issue with him. As exceptions to the general good sense of missionaries, some, no doubt, do revel in luxuries beyond what is seemly. But this is the exception. And when we remember that the longevity of preachers and farmers exceeds that of any other class, it would appear that "Impartial Observer's" wisest course would be to join one of these classes. Probably he would be better fit for the former.

But it would appear that he lays his objection deeper. He says: "In conclusion, I on my part am quite willing to take the consensus of all rational public opinion, whether held by educated Japanese or foreigners (outside of missionaries, of course) on the question, are missionaries, and the religious doctrines they offer to the Japanese, necessary to Japan at the present time, and to abide by the verdict of the majority, if your correspondent * * * will do the same."

This is an "impartial" method, indeed. The worth of Christianity in Japan is to be decided by its enemies and others who are alike ignorant of it! "Impartial Observer," indeed! He is unacquainted with the elementary rules of justice. But that he may have an opportunity to experiment with his method, I for one accept his conditions. Now how shall we test the matter? Cry aloud to your gods, my friend, and see if they will come to help you. While you are devising a way of escape, I will suggest that we call, in any suitable place in Japan, a great assembly of the educated people, that one or two speakers for Christianity, and the same number for infidelity be chosen, that they present their respective sides, and that the merits of Christianity and infidelity be decided by a vote of this educated assembly.

None of this educated assembly could be excluded from voting; for in that case the decision would be partial one. And further, while of course such an assembly could have no legislative force, and hence each would be left to hold to his old beliefs though the decision might be against him, yet such a notable occasion would have great influence on the coming social institutions of Japan. I submit my proposal as fair and impartial; and while "Impartial Observer" is making his answer I would ask the Editor if he has heard of a colossal church of Infidels to be soon established in Japan for the purpose of saving the people from their sins, opening industrial schools for orphans, asylums for the poor, hospitals for the sick and diseased, publishing tract and scientific treatises against intemperance, narcotics, prostitution, etc., etc.? The Christians who have for so long been doing nothing for humanity but flashing out bitter attacks against the philanthropic infidels ought to be put to shame by this grandly magnanimous enterprise. I must hope that all will encourage a union of both forces in this good venture; and for one I shall speak nothing but good for it, if it be so.

Very truly, E. SNODGRASS.

Tokyo, Aug. 1st, 1898.

[We can not publish any more letters on this subject. In dismissing it we would ask  whether he thinks that missionaries would be well advised if they deliberately sacrificed their health by remaining in the cities during the heat of summer.—ED. J. M.]

THREE CONTRASTED PUBLIC NOTICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—On page 3 of your to-day's issue, appear three paragraphs to which I would desire to draw the attention of your readers.

The first is a list, nearly a column long, giving the amounts subscribed, with the donors' names appended, towards a sum of yen 1,466 just presented, on his departure from Japan, to a worthy man of whom the writer of this letter would be sorry to utter a word of disparagement, since his many years' work in Tokyo speaks for itself. It was, however, stated in the report of the presentation that the recipient observed that "he had done no more than his duty, for which he considered he had already received sufficient compensation." For his admirers to tender him a further sum of money after this admission is something like the pressing attentions of a too zealous host, who, when the guest whom he delighteth to honour assures him that he is filled to repletion still hospitably insists upon his partaking of more? However, it was but natural and just that the many friends and admirers of such a man should wish to give him some substantial parting proof of their regard, and the incident is only alluded to because, by a singular coincidence, the report happens to come into close juxtaposition with the other two—the second of which is a notice from the Hon. Treasurer of Christ Church acknowledging receipt of two additional donations of yen 150, which, with a previous sum in hand of former subscriptions amounting to yen 984.50, will he thinks, "leave a surplus which should be sufficient to meet the expenditure for the coming year," which notice the writer leaves un-commented upon.

By these two reports it would appear that when any claim is made upon the pockets of the community, whether for a "send-off" to a deserving friend, or for the yearly support of the particular church in which they worship, there is no question either of lack of money, or of inclination to part with it.

Passing on to the next column, we observe a modest paragraph of one inch, in which the editor acknowledges receipt of two sums amounting to yen 60, forwarded in response to an urgent appeal made some days ago to the charitably disposed of the community, concerning the actual present condition of the Japanese people in a country district within a day's journey of Tokio and Yokohama, thousands of whom, it was credibly reported by both the native and foreign newspapers, had been for some months past "endeavouring to keep life in them by subsisting on roots, grass, and pine-bark, the supply even of these becoming exhausted, and that consequently, deaths from starvation were of daily occurrence."

I respectfully submit these three contrasted reports to the consideration of the editors of the foreign and vernacular journals and their readers, whether Japanese or European, heathen or Christian, missionary or layman, and would ask whether some united effort could not be organized for the latter as well as for the two former objects, if public attention were drawn to it?

Should my appeal, like that of your previous correspondent, be allowed to pass by unheeded, then can I only exclaim, in the words of Thomas Hood,

"Alas for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the sun!"

I am your's

ANOTHER "SAMARITAN."

A MISSTATEMENT CORRECTED.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—The late Bishop Bickersteth in his Pastoral Letter of Lent, 1892, Appendix K, page 32, quotes at length a Creed which he says, "Japanese Congregationalists are proposing to adopt during the current year." The Bishop criticises this proposed creed for what it omits and for the insertion in it of belief in the Lord's day, the Lord's Supper, and the immortality of the soul.

In his Pastoral Letter of Advent, 1892, Appendix C, page 18, under the heading, "The Congregational Creed," the Bishop writes as follows:—"The Creed proposed for adoption by Japanese Congregationalists, which is quoted at length in my Pastoral of last Lent, has since been rejected by that body, and in its place, the following statement has been substituted;—

We believe, (1) in the one God, (2) in Jesus Christ who came to earth to save sinners, (3) in the Holy Spirit, from whom we receive new life, (4) in the Bible, which shows us the way of salvation, and (5) in Baptism and the Holy Supper, in punishments and rewards given by God according to our merits, in everlasting life, if we are righteous, and in the resurrection of the dead.'

"The rejected statement contained the phrase, 'We believe in Jesus Christ the only begotten Son of God, who suffered and died to atone for the sins of the world.' That this truth is devoutly held by large numbers of Congregational Christians, may be thankfully believed. That the public profession of the truth has been rejected in favour of a clause which omits all reference to the person and nature of the Lord, and as a matter of fact has been heartily welcomed by Unitarians, is a subject for profound regret. Speaking generally, it cannot be too clearly felt that systems which do not definitely teach the truths contained in the Apostolic and Nicene Creeds, whatever benefits may accrue to individuals from the moral teaching which they impart, are not merely negative in tendency and results, but retard the progress of the kingdom of Christ in Eastern lands."

The above statements, made of course under a misapprehension of the facts, more than six years ago, in the pastoral Letters of a Bishop in Japan, have only recently come to my notice, as no copy of these letters was sent or shown to any member of our American Board Mission, so far as I know. I first saw them quoted at length, as from Bishop Bickersteth, in a book on Missions published in England, where deductions were made putting the whole Congregational body in Japan under a cloud. In Cobbold's Religions of Japan, also, page 106, Bishop Bickersteth is quoted as saying that the Congregationalists in Japan have adopted the following Creed:—

"We believe in the one God, in Jesus Christ who came on earth to save sinners, etc." Here also damaging deductions are made. W. E. Curtis, also, in "The Yankees of the East," page 419, says a missionary told him concerning the Congregational Creed; "It left out some of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. For example, it said nothing concerning the atonement or the divinity of Christ."

Now the facts are that the Creed which

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Bishop Bickersteth quoted in his Pastoral Letter of Lent, 1892, as proposed for adoption, was drawn up by one man, and shown to others of the Japanese Kumi-ai body, but was never presented to that body, nor "rejected" by them. When the Pastors and delegates of the Kumi-ai churches met in their yearly Conference in Osaka, in April, 1892, the Creed which was adopted by them there, was the only one which was proposed for consideration, and it was adopted with very little change. This Creed is short, and judged by many standards incomplete, but on the divinity of Christ, it is very explicit.

The Creed is as follows:—"We believe in the one infinite and perfect God, who is revealed in the Bible as father, son, and holy spirit. We believe in Jesus Christ, who being God, became man, and for the sake of saving a world of sinners, endured agony, died and rose again. We believe in the Holy Spirit, the giver of new life. We believe in the Bible which was given by inspiration of God and which makes us wise unto salvation.

We believe in the Holy Church, Baptism by water, the Holy Supper, the Lord's holy day, the everlasting life, the resurrection of the dead, and righteous rewards and punishments."

The Japanese of the second article is as follows:—Warera wa Kami ni shite, hito to nari, yo no tsumibito wo sukuwan tame ni, kutsū wo uke, shishite yomigaeri tamaeshi Iesu Kirisuto wo shinsu. This Creed was thoroughly discussed and was adopted by a rising vote. I was present during the discussion and when the vote was taken, and if my memory serves me, all present but two arose to vote in the affirmative for it. Certainly only two men voted against it, and they voted "nay," because they wanted a fuller creed. They were two of the most conservative men in the body.

The old adage is true in this case that a misstatement will travel a hundred leagues while Truth is getting his boots on, but this misstatement was published on three continents, and several years had elapsed before the only men who knew the truth were aware of it.

This misstatement, published not only in the Pastoral Letter in Japan, but quoted from that in books published in England and America, and repeated and circulated very widely by those who accepted the Bishop's statement as true, has done injustice to a body of men who, as a body, are most faithful and loyal to Christ.

While it is true that a few, three or four men, during the last six years' among the Kumi-ai workers, under the influence of Unitarian and rationalistic influences, have lost their faith in the Divine Christ, or assumed an equivocal position, nearly one hundred others stand firm and unmoved. This is a surprising fact and it shows the power and persistence of basal and perennial Christian truth. I know whereof I speak, for the most of these men are my old pupils, and I have travelled about among them during the last two years. They are preaching a Divine Christ, not because they are afraid to avow a contrary belief, for nearly one half of them are working in self-supporting churches.

One is reminded of a story Rev. Dr. Barrows tells in one of his recent lectures in India, to illustrate Vivikananda's claim that theosophy is rapidly becoming the popular faith in America. The story is as follows:—A man came to a boarding housekeeper one day and asked him if he would buy a car-load of frogs legs. "No, of course not," was the repiy. "Will you buy fifty bushels"? "No." After a few days the man came back with three pairs of frogs legs, and the proprietor of the boarding house said, "Is this all you have? I thought you had a car-load." The man replied, "Well, the frogs made such a terrible noise in the pond near my house that I thought there were a million of them, but I have been dredging it for three days and I can find but three frogs."

A very few unsound men have made noise enough to throw discredit upon the whole Kumi-ai body, but, notwithstanding this and notwithstanding misstatements which have been so widely circulated, the great body of these workers are as loyal to Christ and as faithfully working for him as any body of men in Japan.

Kyoto, July 29, 1898. J. D. DAVIS.

TESTIMONIAL TO DR. D. MACDONALD.

The following is a copy of the circular relating to the Macdonald Testimonial, and of the list of subscribers:—

It is proposed to offer to Dr. D. MacDonald, on the occasion of his departure for Canada, a monetary testimonial, in slight recognition of his splendid services as a physician during many years in Tokyo, of the self-denying benevolence animating all his acts, and of the noble record of Christian charity which will always be associated with his name in Japan:—

	Yen.
Sir Ernest Satow, K C.M.G.	50
Col. A. E. Buck	50
John H. Gubbins, Esq., C.M.G.	25
Miss J. A. Leete	5
Miss S. Gardiner	10
W. D Cox, Esq.	10
E. P. Cox, Esq.	5
The Chinese Legation	3
Baron d'Anethan	25
Baron Rosen	25
Archdeacon Shaw	10
Miss M. M Shaw	5
L. van de Polder, Esq.	5
W. Silver Hall, Esq.	20
Rev. C. E Garst	5
Prof. E. Foxwell	10
Miss Monroe	30
Mrs. Kirby	25
Richard J. Kirby, Esq.	25
E.P.P.	10
Rev. Isaac Dooman	10
A. T. Macnab Esq	20
T.T.A.	5
Rev. C. H. D Fisher	5
Roman Catholic Mission	20
Bishop S. S. J. Scheschewsky	10
Rev. A. Lloyd	10
J. Mc D. Gardiner Esq.	10
Bishop McKim	20
Mrs. Nellie C. McKim	5
Rev. R. Y. Davidson	5
Rev. D. Thomson	5
De la Barrera Esq.	10
Rev. E. Woodman	5
Rev. Chas. H. Evans	10
Mrs. Buncombe	10
Communauté du St. Esp. Jesus	5
John de Rijke Esq.	20
Miss Belle J. Allen	10
Miss Clara Parrish	10
Miss Clarissa H. Spencer	5
X X X.	10
A. J Hare, Esq.	5
Mrs Summers	5
R. M Witschi, Esq	5
Miss Emma Williamson	20
Mrs S. E Goodbehan	10
Mrs E Spencer Large	10
Prof. H. Terry	25
John McDonald, Esq.	10
Rev. Joseph Cosand	5
Miss M. A. Gundry	5
Rev. H. Harris	5
Rev. H M. Landis	10
Rev. William Imbrie	5
Pro. Jno. C. C. Ballagh	10
Rev. T. M. MacNair	10
Dr. Herbert W. Swartz	5
J. O S.	5
Miss Harriet S. Alling	5
Rev. L Wigle	10
Miss C. E Hart	20
Miss L. S Blackmore	20
Miss K. M. Youngman	5
Capt. Brinkley, R A.	25
W. F. Page, Esq.	10
T. B. Glover, Esq.	10
Miss O. Julius	20
Miss Peacock	5
F. Nobemins, Esq.	5
Miss Ella Blackstock	25
A. W. Thompson, Esq.	25
F. W. Hammond, Esq.	10
Mrs. Florence Smith	5
A. R. Pattison, Esq.	5
Clay Mac Cauley Esq.	5
Miss M.A. Clagett	5
The Misses Prince	10
D. C. M. Boadbury	10
Dr. Harper H. Coates	15
R. Edward Divers	10
Dr. Whitney	10
Capt. J. M. James	20
A. Macmillan Esq.	10
L.C. Bordon Esq.	10
Rev. H. Waddell	20
J. Johnstone Esq.,	20
Rev. W. J. White	20
Mrs Bongonin	25
R. J. Ward, Esq,	50
Miss Bristowe	1
Rev. George Pierson	1
Dr. Baelz	100
Mrs Scudder	1
Mrs Schenck	1
Rev. J. S. Waller	4
Mrs. George Scott	28
Rev. John Scott	20
Rev. John Davis	1
Mrs. Chappell, Mayebashi	10
Yeend Duer, Esq.	20
G. Forrest, Esq.	5
W. H. Stone, Esq.	20
Edwin Dun, Esq.	20
H. W. Denison, E q.	25
J. Conder, Esq	10
Miss Perry	10
Ralph Paget, Esq.	20
	1,469
Expenses for collecting	3
Cheque paid Dr. McDonald	1,466

THE FATALITY IN YOKOHAMA HARBOUR.

Inquest and Funeral.

The inquest on the body of Miss Simons, the victim of the launch disaster of last Friday, was held on Saturday morning at the American Consulate. Mr. J. F. Gowey, Consul General, presided over the inquiry, and the two associates were Messrs. N. F. Smith and G. W. Bramhall.

Dr. Worden said the name of deceased was Maud E. Simons. She was a citizen of the United States. He saw her before her death, and afterwards, at four o'clock in the afternoon, he saw her dead body at 221 Bluff. Deceased was 33 years of age.

Dr. Eldridge said about one o'clock on Friday he was called to see the deceased at the Hatoba. He found her dead. There being another injured person on board, he attended to her first, and did not examine the body of the deceased till between six and seven o'clock yesterday afternoon. From the appearance of the body, taken with what he knew of the history of the accident, he believed that the deceased came to her death as the result of heart rupture or paralysis of that organ, the result of sudden and great compression applied to the thorax.

Miss Elizabeth R. Bender said she, deceased, and others were on the C P R. launch returning from the Empress of Japan. They were standing on the starboard side near the bows. The launch was rounding the stern of the Victoria, when they noticed a junk approaching. They saw that a collision was inevitable. The prow of the junk struck the side of the launch. She did not see it strike Miss Simons, but she saw the latter fall. She was put inside the cabin, and witness paid her attention to the other young lady—who was hurt. She herself did not hear any whistle.

Miss Clarissa H. Spencer said she was on the left side of Miss Simons when the accident occurred. She saw the prow of the junk approaching; and immediately after it struck the boat. She saw both Miss Simons and Miss Allen fall.

By the Court: The launch had been passing alongside the Victoria, and it was just after rounding her stern that the junk crashed into her. Witness could not judge, even roughly, the distance between the launch and the junk when they first saw the latter.

Miss Fanny G. Wilson said she was sitting on the deck of the steam launch. They had been steaming alongside the Victoria, and had almost reached the end of the ship when she saw a Japanese junk coming across the bows of the launch. About half a minute after the junk struck the launch, and witness saw Miss Simons lying, as she supposed, in a faint. She gave her attention to the other injured lady, and when she saw Miss Simonds carried off the launch she supposed she was dead. Witness heard the whistle of the launch before the collision.

Miss Harriett S. Allen said she was on the launch. Five ladies were on the deck and two were sitting in the cabin windows. As they rounded the stern of the Victoria a junk came from the opposite direction, apparently at right angles. It was not more than 20 feet away, and a collision could not be avoided. The collision took place only a few seconds later. They were all pushed down towards the stern of the launch. She heard a cry, and saw Miss Simons fall, pick herself up, and fall down again. The whistle of the launch was blown before they rounded the stern of the Victoria and again when the launch was sighted.

Digitized by Google UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Mrs. George Pett Pearson, who affirmed, said she was sitting in the cabin on the port side when the accident occurred. She was talking to a friend, and her head was turned away so that she saw nothing before the shock. She then turned and saw Miss Simons apparently falling into the water, while Miss Allen was being forced through the window. Witness with the help of her husband pulled Miss Allen through the window, and laid her on a seat. Miss Allen had a very tight hold of Miss Simons, but witness induced her to relinquish her grasp. When Miss Simons was brought into the cabin witness thought from the expression of her face that she was dead. The junk appeared to make a great effort to avoid a collision.

Miss Evans also gave evidence. She said the whistle of the launch had almost ceased when she reached the stern of the Victoria, and immediately after the prow of the Japanese vessel appeared. She thought she felt a thrill in the launch as if of hesitancy whether to go backwards or forwards. She heard no orders given. She only heard one whistle. She also saw several men on the junk attempt to do something with the sails, either to check its speed or change its course.

A Japanese policeman named Yata Kimbei said he was on board the launch. After leaving the Empress of China and just on the point of rounding the stern of the Victoria he saw the bows of a Japanese junk. He shouted a word of warning when the junk was about 180 feet distance, but a collision occurred directly afterwards. The sails of the junk—the ordinary square sails—were set and a south wind was blowing at the time. The steam launch whistled, and stopped her engines as soon as she saw the junk. He did not see the ladies struck.

Ogawa Riouzo, sailor on the Takasago Maru, the junk referred to, said the boat belonged to one Akimoto. He was on board at the time of the accident. The boat was coming from Shinagawa, and had entered the breakwater. A south wind was blowing, and he was pointing the head of the junk towards the west. Witness was steering. As his boat was rounding the stern of a foreign steamer he saw the launch belonging to No 14. The distance between them was about six feet. He was 25 years of age, and had been in command of this boat since May. The length of the boat was about 50 feet. As soon as he saw the launch he ported the helm.

Mr. George Pett Pearson, who affirmed, said he was on the launch when he heard a cry and saw the Japanese vessel's prow over the side of the launch. The shock was very inconsiderable. He heard a whistle before the shock, and he thought also before they rounded the Victoria's stern. He did not see deceased struck.

Mr. Louis Ottofy, dentist, stated that the launch first headed for the Hatoba and then changed its course, rounded the bow of the Victoria, and passed alongside of her until it approached her stern, when the launch slightly changed her course, which suggested to him that it was about to go towards the open harbour. He heard the whistle blow before they approached the stern of the Victoria. He did not recall hearing it a second time. Some action had taken place in the wheel house which one recognised in the change of motion of the vessel immediately the junk came into sight. He was on the opposite side from that which received the impact and had time to prepare for the shock, which was inconsiderable. Immediately after the collision the people who were in the cabin got out, and on looking in he saw an injured lady being passed in. He crawled through the window into the cabin. Just at that moment another lady was being handed in, who he had since learned was Miss Simons. He at once recognised that the injury she had sustained would probably be fatal. He tore open her clothing, exposing the chest, and drew out the tongue to clear the air passages. Respiration was very feeble, and the only hope of saving the patient's life lay in creating artificial respiration, which to endeavoured to do. He used the Marshall Hall method, which he had practised before. He had studied the subject in his course as a dental student. He was unable to distinguish any action of the heart or of the lungs. He continued the motion for inducing respiration for five minutes; at the end of that time the patient was certainly dead. He then looked for the wound, which was just below the heart, and was much discoloured. The junk came at an absolute right angle, and could not have been seen by the steersman as quickly as witness saw it. When witness first saw it, it was only 20 feet away, and as it was coming at good speed the engineer could not have avoided the collision. The junk was very close to the stern of the Victoria, she shaved it, in fact.

The Court at this point adjourned for tiffin. On resuming, Yamanouchi Kota, of the Water Police, said he was on board the Victoria on Friday morning, when he saw the collision. At that time the launch and the junk were about 150 feet away from the Victoria. They were nearer a Japanese steamer than the Victoria. While the cargo boat was passing the Victoria just before the collision it was about 240 away; the launch passed the stern at a distance of 120 feet. The mast of the junk he considered was about 36 feet high. He thought he saw the junk change her course after the launch whistle was blown, but he thought this made the collision a more serious one.

Mr. W. T. Payne, agent of the company, said he left the Hatoba on the launch about 11.40 with the ship's papers of the Empress of Japan. At that time there were very few passengers on the launch, as she had already made a trip. On leaving the ship there were ten or twelve ladies on the deck of the launch, and a few others in the cabin. At 12.20 or 12.25 the launch left the steamer, and made rather a wide circle across the bows of the Victoria. He was standing in conversation with friends on the port side about midships. As they approached the Victoria witness went aft, and stood at the corner of the cabin looking at the Victoria. He put in a diagram showing the positions of the different craft spoken of. The junk was not a proper sailing junk, but a towing junk fitted temporarily with a Japanese sail. He saw nothing of it when the first whistle was blown, but the accident happened almost immediately after. He did not notice any alteration in the course either of the junk or the launch. He could not say what was the strength of the wind blowing at the time; it was a fair sailing breeze for light craft. He should say the launch was not going at more than three-quarters speed; her full speed was about eight or nine knots, as she was only built for a tug boat.

Mr. Charles F. Pope, who was navigating the launch, said when it was just astern of the Victoria, about 130 feet distant, the whistle was blown as a signal to any approaching vessel. He heard the whistle once. As soon as they were about half-way across he saw the junk approaching in the opposite direction at a distance of about 40 to 50 feet. They barely had time to make any alteration to the launch's course when the collision took place. They were going at five to six knots an hour. It was usual to blow the whistle when passing a vessel. Previous to the collision the helm was put to port slightly. He did not see the accident to the ladies. He thought it was not possible to have seen the mast of the junk from the other side of the Victoria. He was satisfied that the steersman had a clear and unobstructed view. To a foreigner his whistle would mean that he was going to starboard; he did not know what it would convey to a Japanese.

Mr. A. R. Owen, was on board the launch at the time of the accident also gave evidence as to whistle blast, the appearance of the junk, and the collision.

A Japanese sailor named Ikeda, who was at the wheel of the launch at the time of the accident, made a long rambling statement to the effect, as far as could be understood, that he had been under the impression that the junk would pass on the other side of the Victoria. There was a man employed on the look-out, but the collision occurred almost at the same time as he gave warning. Witness stopped the engine, and gave orders for reversing it. The launch was running at half speed.

Mr. Scidmore informed the Court that there were no harbour regulations for Yokohama, only the international regulations observed by all countries.

The case was adjourned till Monday.

VERDICT.

The inquest was resumed on Monday morning at the American Consulate, Yokohama.

At the commencement of the proceedings, Mr. W. T. Payne, C. P. R. agent, explained that there were certain harbour regulations in force in Yokohama harbour, and one of them was to the effect that no steamer launch was permitted to tow within the harbour more than two tow boats. Within his own observation he had seen these regulations violated. He recalled the most recent instance as occurring on March 25th last as the Empress of Japan was leaving the port. A steam launch towed within the breakwater six cargo boats, which were cast off and drifted across the bows of the Empress of Japan, so that the steamer had to stop and back, at considerable risk to herself. No accident occurred, but he wished to enter his protest against such proceedings which involved great risk to steamers leaving and entering the harbour. These boats being large and flat-bottomed made a great deal of leeway, and he wished to bring it out that they formed a great menace to the safety of navigation.

Mr. Gowey—Don't you think that if it is so it is a reason for steam launches using extraordinary care?

Mr. Payne—Yes, I entirely agree.

Mr. Smith—What is the distance the launch could have turned in?

Mr. Payne—I am not proposed to answer that question; the boat is 75 feet long.

Mr. Smith—She is a twin-screw steamer?

Mr. Payne—Yes.

Mr. Smith—Then with one engine going astern and the other ahead she should be able to turn very quickly.

Mr. Payne added a word as to the experience of the steersman of the launch, who had been for 14 years in the service of Martin & Co. as steersman, and had been selected for his post on account of his having the largest experience in the harbour.

Suzuki Kojiro, boatswain on the launch, said he was on the starboard side near the stern at the time of the accident. He had seen the junk towed by a launch as far as the harbour entrance, when the two separated. At the time the steam launch began to pass alongside the Victoria from the stem to the stern the junk was about 700 feet away. When they had passed the bow of the Victoria the junk was of course hidden from sight. When his launch was rounding the stern of the Victoria the junk came straight at her, and hit her on the starboard side. When he first sighted her after passing the stern she was only 60 feet away.

Ikeda Shijiro, steersman, was recalled, and made a long rambling statement which threw no further light on the question.

Mr. C. F. Pope, recalled, said he thought the launch with one engine reversed going at half speed could turn in a circle of 200 feet. Witness was speaking to some one when the accident happened. After the steersman had been given his instructions it was witness's custom to leave the navigation of the launch to him.

Mori Kanjuro, the supposed look out-man on the launch, said there were many persons on board, and, being short in stature, he could not see in front. He had no special duty, but was on the launch to do anything that he was wanted to do.

Another sendo named Keigoro, was also called, but his evidence was immaterial.

At this point the Court took a lengthy recess, and on returning into Court Mr. Gowey read the verdict as follows:—"We find that Maud E. Simon died on board the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's steam launch Spindrift in the harbour of Yokohama, Japan, on Friday, July 29th, 1898, and that the cause of her death was internal injuries received in a collision between the said steam launch and the Japanese cargo boat Takasago Maru, and that the said collision was due to carelessness in navigation by the persons in charge of both the said vessels, and more particularly of those in charge of the said steam launch."

THE FUNERAL.

The funeral service took place at 5 p.m. on Saturday at 221 Bluff, one of the large rooms of which was completely filled by European and Japanese friends of the deceased. It was a most pathetic scene, and an occasional sob, to be heard here and there among the audience, testified to the regret felt at the lady's sudden death. After the singing of the hymn, "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide," the Rev. Dr. Cleveland read a portion of Scripture, after which a prayer in the vernacular was offered by the Japanese pastor of the Tobe Church, who later give an address in the native tongue concerning the virtues of the deceased, and the sorrow felt by the Japanese congregation at her untimely end. After a solo by Mrs. Cleveland, the Rev. Dr. Cleveland gave a brief outline of the life of Miss Simons, the main facts of which were given in our issue on Saturday. Bishop Cranston then delivered a lengthy address, in which he claimed that Miss Simons belonged to a band of Christian Crusaders who had made the nineteenth century notable. The fact that young women educated in the best institutions of Europe and America threw up all worldly prospects and advantages, and responded to the call of duty as Miss Simons had done, showed, he thought, a heroism that had not been equalled in the history of our race. He must ask them to distinguish between the madness of devotion and fever of enthusiasm and an intelligent appreciation of duty. It was the former spirit that had made the old crusaders; it was the latter that made intelligent, highly educated, and refined women—women who received the best knowledge that could be bestowed on them under the most favourable conditions, women with careers before them—leave their homes for strange lands where many difficulties and sometimes many terrible ordeals awaited them. He must say he felt almost ashamed of his own sex when he found men, also intelligent and educated, who came forward to express an unfavourable opinion of work they could have no possible opportunity of judging. Those leaders who criticised missions must remember that it was missionaries who had floated three-quarters of the business of the world. He meant that missionaries had gone first to the wild parts of the world, they had gained the confidence of the natives; and traders and speculators had followed to profit from it. And then they did not refrain from slandering and sending home false reports of the work. After a warm eulogy of the late Miss Simons, the Bishop concluded by the expression of a hope that her life and death would be the means of stimulating her fellow-workers to an even more consecrated, and steady, and holy industry.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

After the singing of the hymn, "Lead, kindly light," and final prayer by Rev. Dr. Johnson, a procession was formed for the Cemetery, where the interment took place. A large number of beautiful wreaths were sent.

TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

LATEST FROM MANILA.

FINAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR ATTACK.

MORE U. S. TROOPS EXPECTED.

(From our Correspondent.)

Manila, July 29, via Shanghai, August 1, 6.38 p.m.

General Merritt is now busily engaged in making final arrangements to attack Manila. The remaining transports from San Francisco are expected on the 29th—to-day. There will be no American or rebel advance on the doomed city until these reinforcement arrive. The situation is, consequently, unchanged.

STRIKE OF CHINA COAST FIREMEN.

SHIPPING DELAYED AT SHANGHAI.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Shanghai, Aug. 1.

A strike is now on among the firemen engaged on the steamers that ply up and down the China coast. They demand a rise of four dollars per month. The shipping at Shanghai and the big coast ports is being seriously delayed.

(From the "Japan Times.")

THE WAR.

MC'KINLEY WILL NEGOTIATE FOR PEACE: WAR TO CONTINUE MEANTIME.

CUBA TO BE INDEPENDENT.

ANNEXATION OF PUERTORICO AND LADRONES.

London, July 28.

President McKinley, in consultation with the Cabinet, has determined to accept the offer of Spain to open peace negotiations, but the war will continue unabated until more tangible terms are proposed. It is stated that the President's minimum terms include the complete independence of Cuba under American protection, the absolute cession of Puertorico and the Ladrones, and a port and coaling station in the Philippines.

NO SUSPENSION OF HOSTILITIES.

SPAIN MUST GIVE BINDING PLEDGES.

London, July 29.

America does not consent to suspend hostilities unless Spain gives binding pledges to abide by the broad preliminary conditions outlined yesterday.

THE SOUDAN CAMPAIGN.

ADVANCE OF THE BRITISH FORCES.

DERVISHES CONCENTRATE FOR ATTACK.

The Nile force has established a depot twelve miles below Shabluka. The Khalifa is concentrating his forces at Omdurman, and has announced that he will lead his army in person.

KING ALFONSO ATTACKED BY MEASLES.

The young King of Spain is confined to his bed with an attack of measles.

PRINCE OF WALES RECOVERING.

The Prince of Wales continues to make favourable progress towards recovery, and is going to Cowes.

BISMARCK DYING.

Prince Bismarck is seriously ill. His family is assembled at Friedrichsruhe.

THE GOODWOOD CUP.

The following are the results of racing for the Goodwood Cup:—1. King's-Messenger. 2. Pie Powder. 3. St. Cloud.

GREAT BRITAIN AND CHINA.

THE YANGTZE QUESTION IN PARLIAMENT.

London, July 30.

Mr. Curzon, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, declared in the House of Commons that England regarded the assurance of China respecting the Yangtze as definite and binding. He was aware the undertaking for the Pekin-Hankow railway had been granted to a Belgian syndicate, but China had assured Sir Claude Macdonald that Russia had no interest in the line.

AN ANGLO-AMERICAN LEAGUE.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT IN NEW YORK.

The New York Herald announces that steps are being taken in New York to promote the object of an Anglo-American league. A committee has been appointed to take action towards the establishment of a powerful national organization.

DEATH OF PRINCE BISMARCK.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH TRIBUTES TO THE ILLUSTRIOUS STATESMAN.

London, Aug. 1.

The French press, while paying tribute to Bismarck's greatness, implies that France is unable to forget 1870. The English papers, however, extoll his colossal genius as the creator of Germany, comparing him to Napoleon, Pitt, and Cromwell, and belauding his services to the peace of the world by the establishment of the Triple Alliance.

Prince Bismarck had a serious relapse, and died at eleven o'clock on Saturday night. The Emperor William was deeply affected at the news, and interrupted his tour to Norway, returning to Germany.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT FOR IRELAND.

The Irish Government Bill has passed all stages in the House of Lords.

THE PEACE CONDITIONS.

A SPANISH-AMERICAN COMMISSION.

The Washington Cabinet has decided upon formulating the following conditions of peace:—The cession of Puertorico, recognition of Cuban Independence, cession of one of the Ladrones. No armistice will be granted, and the United States refuses to assume either the Cuban or Puertorico debts. The future of the Philippines is to be left to the decision of a Spanish-American Commission, America in the meantime exercising control over Manila and vicinity, and also of Cuba, pending the establishment of a stable government.

THE FATE OF THE PHILIPPINES.

DISCONTENT IN AMERICA.

President McKinley's reported intention to abandon the Philippines has provoked strong protests in America.

GREAT BRITAIN AND CHINA.

STATEMENT BY LORD SALISBURY.

BRITISH SUPPORT PROMISED TO CHINA, IN RETURN FOR COMMERCIAL FACILITIES.

London, August 3.

In the House of Lords on Monday Lord Salisbury, replying to Lord Kimberley regarding British interests on the Yangtze, said the Chinese were well disposed towards British enterprise, but it had been suggested that they had been threatened by other Powers to give them the preference. Hence, on the 22nd July, Sir Claude Macdonald, British Minister at Peking, was authorized to inform China that Britain would support her against any Power committing an act of aggression upon her in return for permitting British subjects to construct or support railways or public works.

UNITED STATES ARMY INCREASE.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY'S PLAN.

The Washington Post states that President McKinley will call an extra Session of Congress with the view of passing special legislation to maintain an active army of one hundred thousand men.

AMERICANS OCCUPY PUERTORICO.

SPAIN ACCEPTS CONDITIONS.

London, Aug. 4.

The Americans have occupied Juanadiaz, Puertorico, amid the acclamation of the inhabitants. It is reported both from Washington and Madrid that Spain has in principle accepted the peace conditions.

THE AMERICAN TROOPS FOR MANILA.

Hongkong, Aug. 1.

According to intelligence from Manila, dated July 27, the third batch of American troops arrived at Manila on the 25th July. General Merritt arrived by the steamer Newport. Other transports are expected to arrive within a few days. The troops at Cavite are engaged in manœuvres.

MAIL STEAMERS.

THE NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	M. M Co.	Salazie 1	W. Aug. 10
America	O. & O. Co.	Gaelic 2	Su. Aug. 14
Hongkong	P. & O Co.	Rohilla	M. Aug. 15
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co	Em. of India 3	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Glengyle	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	Th. Aug. 18
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Olympia	Th. Aug. 18
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	M. Aug. 22
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Hohenzollern	W. Aug. 31

1 Left Hongkong on the 2nd inst.
2 Left San Francisco on the 26th July.
3 Left Vancouver on the 2nd inst.

THE NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	N. D. L.	Hohenzollern	F. Aug 5
America	O. & O. Co.	Belgic	Sa Aug. 6
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rosetta	W. Aug. 10
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Sata-ma Maru	W. Aug. 10
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of India	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Gaelic	M. Aug. 15
America	P. M. Co.	Glengyle	Tu. Aug. 16
Canada, &c	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	F. Aug. 19
Tacoma, Wash. ...	N. P. Co.	Olympia	F. Aug. 19
Europe, via S'hai.	M. M. Co.	Salazie	W. Aug. 27

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

CHESS

All Communications to be addressed to the CHESS EDITOR.

The Yokohama and the Tokyo Chess Clubs are closed during the summer months.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 378.

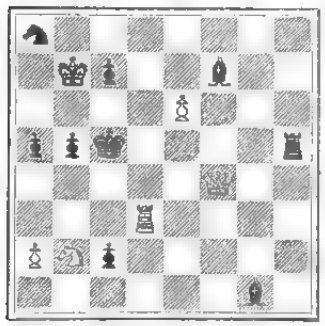
WHITE.	BLACK.
1—K to Kt 8	1—Kt to B 3 ch
2—B takes B mate
	1—K to Q 4
2—P to K 4 mate
	1—B takes R or moves
2—R to K 5 mate
	1—R moves
2—Kt to QB 3 mate
	1—Kt to Q 4
2—B takes B mate
	1—Kt any other move
2—B to QB 6 mate

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., Miss S., and D.D.

PROBLEM No. 381.

By H. F. L. MEYER, London.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White mates in two moves.

GAME No. 413

NOVEL CHESS.

The Field gives a game played by signal between two men-of-war lying in the English Channel—H.M.S. Arrogant and Mars. Here is the score :—

QUEEN'S PAWN OPENING.

White—H.M.S. Arrogant. Black—H.M.S. Mars.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK
1 P Q4	P Q4	17 Kt K5	Kt Q2(g)
2 P QB4	P K3	18 KtxQBP
3 Kt QB3	Kt KB3	(h)	R B sq
4 P K3(a)	P QB4	19 KxB	PxKt
5 Kt B3	Kt B3	20 Kt K3	Kt Kt sq
6 P QR3	P Q3(b)	21 Kt B5	B Kt4(i)
7 B K2	B K2	22 BxB	QxB
8 Q Q3(c)	BPxB	23 Kt K7ch	KxRsq
9 KPxP	PxP	24 KtxR(j)	RxKt
10 QxBP	Kt R4	25 P B4	Q B3
11 Q R4ch	P Kt4	26 Q K3	Kt B3
12 Q B2(d)	B Kt2	27 QR B sq	R QKt sq
13 P Kt4(e)	Kt B5	28 KR Q sq	Kt K2
14 BxKt(f)	PxB	29 Q K5	QxQ
15 Q K2	B Q4	30 QPxQ	Kt Kt3
16 Castles	Castles	31 P Kt3	Resigns

NOTES.

(a) The variation beginning with 4—B to Kt 5 is more usual now than this, the older form of development.

(b) A developing move instead of this would be better; Mars, however, in imitating the moves of his opponent, follows a course more suggestive of the name of the latter than of his own martial appellation.

(c) The Queen is in the way of the Bishop here. 8—P to QKt 3, followed by B to Kt 2 is preferable.

(d) 12—Q to Q sq at once would have been better.

(e) The Knight might be left undisturbed in favour of 13—B to K 3.

(f) Here also B to K 3, followed by Castles, would be better.

(g) Black has a good game, and might have improved it with 17..... Q to B 2, while the text move should lose a piece.

(h) White should have played 8—Kt takes B, and, if P takes Kt, 19—Kt to B 6 wins a piece. If 18 ..... Kt takes Kt, then 19—Kt takes B ch, Q takes Kt; 20—Q or P takes Kt, etc.

(i) Another weak move, losing the exchange and practically the game in consequence. 21..... B to B 3 should have been played.

(j) The remainder is all "plain sailing" for White.

GAME No. 414.

A VIENNA TOURNEY GAME.

KING'S GAMBIT DECLINED.

White—Blackburne. Black—Pillsbury.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K4	22 R B5	KR Q
2 P KB4	P Q4	23 P Kt5	PxP
3 Kt KB3	PxKP	24 P K6	PxP
4 KtxP	B Q3	25 Kt B5ch	K R
5 B B4	Kt KR3	26 R B6	Kt B7
6 P Q4	PxP e p	27 B K4	Kt K6
7 QxP	B KB4	28 RxP	RxKtP
8 Q K2	Castles	29 B Q3	R Kt7ch
9 Castles	Kt B3	30 K R	R Q7
10 B K3	BxKt	31 RxKt	R(Q7)xB
11 PxB	Kt Q5	32 R K5	R Q7
12 Q Q2	KtxP	33 R K7	RxP
13 BxKt	PxB	34 R K	P B4
14 RxB	QxQ	35 P R4	P B5
15 KtxQ	KtxR	36 PxP	P B6
16 KtxR4	QR Q	37 P K6	PxP
17 Kt B6ch	K R	38 Kt B4	P B7
18 R R5	K Kt2	39 R KKt	R Q8
19 P KKt4	K Kt3	40 Kt K2	RxKch
20 B K2	R Q7	41 KtxR	R R8
21 B B3	R KR	Resigns.

NOTES.

Mr. Steinitz has stated his belief that prejudice against chess as an intellectual exercise had been created in the public mind by the calamitous breakdown of Morphy's faculties and intensified by his own personal experience at Moscow. It is his desire to combat the growth of this prejudice, and it is for this reason that he is bent on bringing out his book on "Jewishdom in Chess." An unfounded statement, if permitted to circulate uncontradicted, in time assumes all the dignity of truth. Such is the case with the above ideality concerning Morphy. It has been published all over the world, and we deem it our duty, in the interest of truth and chess, to put a stop to its further circulation. Chess had nothing to do with Morphy's "calamitous breakdown." His decay was the natural effects of quite a different cause. If Morphy had never learned the first moves of chess he would just the same have broken down and become the physical and mental wreck he was when death happily came to his relief. Let us hear no more about chess being the cause of his breakdown from vigorous youth to imbecility.—New Orleans State Democrat.

Paul von Frankenberg-Proschlitz, formerly a member of the New York Chess Club, died in Germany recently, leaving 600 marks to the Club. The New York Chess Club passed out of existence several years ago, and there is a question regarding the legal heir.

In chess there is something that suggests the science of geology. Suppose that at some stage in a game between two good players—not too far advanced a stage, say the twenty-fourth or thirtieth move—the distribution of the pieces is reported to a third good player. Then it is quite possible that he would be able from mere inspection to pick out the piece that was moved last and to state where it came from. He might replace it, announce the previous move and so on, until, in the end, the board would show a known position in one of the recognized openings, after which he would have no difficulty in naming the rest of the moves.—The Australasian.

P. F. Blake, the famous English problem composer, has just won the championship of the Manchester Chess Club. This is a feat, indeed, and, as the Manchester Evening News observes:—"The cranks who are so fond of alleging that problem composition ruins a man for across the-board play will perhaps lie low for a time after this latest evidence in refutation of their theory."—Times Democrat.

At the annual meeting of the Hongkong Chess Club, accounts were passed showing a balance of $216 02, an increase of about $30. It was resolved to have the Club room open only on Thursday during the summer months.

The current number of the American Chess Magazine contains a brief sketch of the English chess enthusiast. Sir George Newnes, through whose generosity the Anglo-American cable contest became an institution. It is, perhaps, not generally known that Sir George, who is now a member of Parliament, the owner of several of the best-paying weekly magazines published in England, and counted as a millionaire, owed his rise in fortune to Tit-Bits, a paper which was started by him a decade or so ago. The journal had an extremely modest beginning and was conducted on novel lines, being largely made up of "reprint." It was frowned upon by the English press generally, and Punch went out of its way on several occasions to lampoon its methods. Notwithstanding the active hostility of its contemporaries, Tit-Bits was a money-maker from its inception, and its founder was speedily raised from poverty to affluence. It is comparatively but a few years since Sir George trotted around the streets of Manchester, literally on "his uppers." Even at this time he was possessed with the idea that one day by a lucky stroke he would become rich and powerful. It is on record that among his Manchester friends he was referred to slightingly as "the man with an idea."

Steinitz, all things considered, is doing well at Vienna, but it is barely possible that his constitution, now enfeebled by age, will be able to withstand the severe strain which the prolonged encounter entails. He claims to be the veteran of the Vienna tournament, but Herr Schwartz is about the same age—namely, 62. The ages of the other competitors are, approximately — Alapin, 44; Baird, 40; Blackburne, 56; Burn, 50; Caro, 39; Halprin, 25; Janowski, 30; Lipke, 26; Marco, 35; Maroczy, 28; Pillsbury, 26; Schiffers, 48; Schlechter, 24; Showalter, 38; Tarrasch, 36; Trenchard, 41; Tschigorin, 48; Walbrodt, 27. Schwartz has not played in leading contests for some years. Lipke won first prize at Leipzig in 1894. Alapin came in among the minor prize winners in 1890 at Manchester.—The Times.

The committee having charge of the arrangements of the Vienna tourney accorded the players an additional rest day during the week, as it considered the continuous strain might prove injurious to the health of some of the competitors. The status of the contestants has not been materially changed, although Tarrasch by securing the postponed game against Tschigorin placed himself upon an even footing with Pillsbury up to the twenty-second round, when the young American received the bye. Steinitz has a capital chance of securing a prize, but Baird and Showalter appear to be hopelessly outclassed. The results by rounds follow:—The twenty-second round, Lipke beat Janowski, Alapin beat Trenchard, Steinitz beat Schlechter, Maroczy beat Showalter, Halprin and Blackburne drew, Schiffers beat Caro, Tarrasch beat Baird, Burn beat Walbrodt, Tschigorin beat Marco. The score now stands :—

	WON.	LOST.		WON.	LOST.
Alapin	12	9	Pillsbury	15½	4½
Baird	4	17	Schiffers	9½	11½
Blackburne*	9½	10½	Schlechter	10½	10½
Burn	11	10	Showalter*	8	12
Caro	6	15	Steinitz	13½	7½
Halprin	8½	12½	Tarrasch	16½	4½
Janowski	14½	6½	Trenchard	3½	17½
Lipke	11½	9½	Tschigorin	13	8
Marco	9	12	Walbrodt	10½	10½
Maroczy	11½	9½

* Adjourned game.

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Kobe Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,645. R. Swain, 29th July,—Shanghai via ports, 23rd July, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Arabia, German steamer, 3,560. Dempwolf, 29th July,—Hamburg via ports, Shanghai, 25th July, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Powerful (14), British Cruiser, 14,200. Capt. Hon. Hedworth Lambton, 30th July,—Wei-hai wei.

Rosetta, British steamer, 2,039. E. B. Bishop, 31st July,—Hongkong via Nagasaki and Kobe, 29th July, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, Edward Porter, 31st July,—Tacoma, Wash., and Victoria, B.C., 15th July, Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Tosa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,589, C. Hillcoat, 31st July,—London via ports, Kobe, 29th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Frundsberg (9), Austrian Corvette, 1,400, Capt. Lucian von Ziegler, 31st July,—Manila, 13th July.

Hohenzollern, German steamer, 2,376, H. Bleeker, 1st Aug.,—Hongkong, 27th July, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Whiting (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 280, Lieut. Barton, 1st Aug.,—Nagasaki.

Glenfarry, British steamer, 1,925, Ferguson, 2nd Aug.,—Rangoon, 17th July, Rice.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Clam, British steamer, 2,311, Black, 2nd Aug.,—Batoum via ports, Oil.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Prometheus, British steamer, 3,583. Day, 3rd Aug.,—Liverpool via ports, Kobe 2nd Aug., General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Esmeralda, British schooner, 130, J. T. Harrison, 4th Aug.,—Guam, Copra.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

DEPARTURES.

Glenfarg, British steamer, 2,350, F. Selby, 29th July,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Riojun Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,010, A. E. Moses, 29th July,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, Geo. A. Lee, 29th July,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Duntrune, British ship, 1,452, G. Winterton, 30th July,—Portland, Ore., Ballast.—Otto Reimers & Co.

Victoria, British steamer, 1,991, J. Truebridge, 30th July,—Victoria, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Mails and General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Erato, German steamer, 2,377, Ostermann, 31st July,—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Wm. H. Starbuck, American ship, 1,272, Henry McDonald, 31st July,—Port Townsend, Ballast.—T. M. Laffin.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, Edward Porter, 1st Aug.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell Carlill & Co.

Nestor, British steamer, 2,417, W. Asquith, 2nd Aug.,—London via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Dante, German steamer, 1,302, Th. Kopke, 2nd Aug.,—Nagasaki, Ballast.—Captain.

Arabia, German steamer, 3,560, Dempwolf, 3rd Aug.,—London, Hamburg and Antwerp via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Fitzclarence, British steamer, 2,600, I. Pattie, 3rd Aug.,—Kobe, General.—Dodwell, Carlill & Co.

Japan, British steamer, 2,795, T. Leigh, 3rd Aug.,—London via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Ernest Simons, French steamer, 2,260, Maubenge, 3rd Aug.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Kobe Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,645, R. Swain, 3rd Aug.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per Japanese steamer Kobe Maru, from Shanghai via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. N. Bentz, Mr. and Mrs. Solshinokoff, Mrs. Ransome, Mrs. E. Sells, Colonel F. J. N. Nunstead, Mr. V. Wahee, Mr. D. Arimond, Major S. Ono, Major T. Yamamoto, Lieut. M. Kono, Mr. O. Satow, Mr. H. Yamaguchi and child, and Miss K. Mochida, in cabin; Mrs. M. Ohtani and 3 children, Mr. G. Satow, Mr. H. Mori, Mrs. and Mrs. Kong Seng Ing, and Mr. Young Jang Seng, in second class; 48 in steerage.

Per British steamer Braemar, from Tacoma, Wash., and Victoria, B.C.:—Mr. A. Mueller, and Mr. A. G. Price, in cabin; 58 in steerage.

Per British steamer Rosetta, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. Tooker, Mr. Lumberg, and Miss Monk, in cabin.

Per German steamer Hohenzollern, from Hongkong:—Mr. Ph. R. Goedkoop, Mr. E. Liethy, and Mr. T. Mera, in cabin; Mr. K. Yamasaki, Mr. T. Yoshida, Mr. Hans Temme, Mr. Aug. Schroeder, Mrs. Richardson and children, Mr. Etzoff, in second class; 3 in steerage.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Glenfarg, for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Rev. D. K. Harrington, Lieut. B. Cedie, Mr. Wm. Morris, and Mr. Pierre Dumarest, in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, for Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. G. H. Almond, Mr. L. Bérinduaque, Mr. L. V. Bœck, Lieut. P. Brown, Mr. Edgar Bruce, Mrs. Edgar Bruce, Surg. C. L. Bunton, Mr. Jas. Burns, Mrs. Jas. Burns, Miss Burns, Mr. A. G. Campbell, Mr. A. M. Chalmers, Mrs. A. M. Chalmers, Mr. H. R. Coombs, Major A. C. Cumberland, Mr. R. E. Difeodorifei, Rev. J. H. Doughty, Mrs. J. H. Doughty and maid, Miss Helena Doughty, Master John Doughty, Miss Adeline Doughty, Mr. W. F. S. Dugdale, Mr. T. Y. Dzushi, Mr. L. Escombe, Mr. Geo. Flood, Dr. Fryer, Mr. K. Gammell, Mr. A. R. Greaves, Mrs. A. R. Greaves, Mr. A. L. Herdlinger, Mr. Y. Hiraga, Mrs. J. M. Hood, Miss Mabel D. Hood, Miss Alice W. Hood, Mr. J. M. Hood, Jr., Mr. H. J. Hunt, Mrs. H. J. Hunt, Mr. J. Jacobson, Rev. E. Jones, Mr. S. Kimura, Mr. A. Lassos, Mr. J. P. Lawrence, Dr. L. Lönholm, Miss Lönholm, Chevalier Luzzatti, Dr. D. Macdonald, Mrs. D. Macdonald, Miss E. M. Neilson and maid, Dr. I. Nitobe, Mrs. I. Nitobe and maid, Master Nitobe, Mr. Y. Okuda, The Earl of Oxford, the Countess of Oxford, Capt. John Ouspensky, Rev. J. Parker, Mrs. Parker and child, Mrs. H. C. Perry, Mrs. M. K. Plummer, Mr. Lu Yick Quon, Mrs. Lu Yick Quon and daughter, Miss Read and maid, Mr. A. K. Rhoden, Miss E. Russell, Miss M. H. Russell, Mrs. E. J. Sanford, Mr. A. Sassen, Mrs. A. Sassen, Dr. Oscar von Schab, Mr. A. Schumacher, Mr. R. Stephenson, Miss Sterling, Mr. Theodore Stern, Mrs. Theodore Stern, Lieut.-Col. Stoker, Mrs. Stoker, Mrs. F. W. Such, Mr. J. A. Summers, Prof. I. Tanakadate, Count August Valentinis, Mr. P. C. Van Buskirk, U.S.U., Dr. R. W. Watson, Miss E. Williamson, and Miss K. M. Youngman, in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Riojun Maru for Seattle, Washington:—Rear-Admiral Y. Matsumaga (I.J.N.), Paymaster J. Takeuchi (I.J.N.), Paymaster S. Shimizu, Mr. J. H. Callaco, and Mr. M. Rowlinson, in cabin; 18 Japanese, and one European, in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Yinsen Maru, for Otaru via ports:—Admiral S. Ito, Commander M. Takashima, I.J.N., Rev. Chas. Bishop, Rev. C. F. Kupper, Rev. and Mrs. D. S. Spencer, Mr. Harry Spencer, Mr. David Spencer, and Mr. Robert Spencer, in cabin; 35 Japanese, in steerage.

Per British steamer Victoria, for Victoria, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash.:—Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Price and 2 children, Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Waller and 4 children, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. J. Morris, Mrs. T. J. Edwards and child, Miss Reina Day, Miss M. Farrow, Mr. A. G. Aitken, Mr. J. S. Burnet, Mr. W. D. Baker, Mr. M. M. Ellis, Mr. W. B. Sewell, Mr. A. H. Stewart, and Mr. Chas. Weber, in cabin.

Per French steamer Ernest Simons, for Marseilles via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Thwaites, Mr. H. J. Metz, Mr. G. Neubert, Mr. F. W. Home, Mr. W. L. Crow, Mr. de Berigny, Mr. L. Komor, Mr. J. Omer, Major-General N. Yanjoul, Lieut. Deverell, Capt. Menogue, Capt. Lang, Mr. Z. Polianorsky and boy, Mrs. A. Frique, Mrs. and Miss Asse, Miss Dudson, Miss Annie, Mr. Yamaguchi, Mr. Rickman, Mr. G. Harris Purcell, Mr. J. Wilson, Mr. Wehrung, Mr. Barlow, Mr. C. E. Miller, Mr. Gribble, Mr. Saltarel, Mr. Andrew Herd, Mr. A. G. Dutche, Mr. Benoist, Mr. Gilanton, Mrs. Rumsey, Miss H. Stone, Mr. K. Takahashi, Mr. Y. Mitsugi, Mr. T. Takebe, Mr. Cascarine, and Mr. A. Harteloup, in cabin.

Per British steamer Japan, for London via ports:—Mr. S. Toms, Mrs. S. Toms, Miss Toms, Miss Rita Toms, Mr. and Mrs. G. Ede, Mr. C. D. Wilkinson, and Mr. S. Hankin, in cabin; Mr. Edward Woodgate, Mr. Edwin Gill, Mr. A. Bambrook, Mr. A. Whiting, Mr. Edward Oliver, and Mr. William Ladick, in second class.

Per Japanese steamer Kagoshima Maru, for Otaru via ports:—Mrs. E. S. Patton, Mrs. Fraser, Master Drummond, Miss Sells, and Mr. S. Yasui, in cabin; 30 Japanese, in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Kobe Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—General Kuroki, I.J.N., Constructor A. Ishikawa, I.J.N., Mrs. and Miss Paton, Mr. J. W. Copmann, Rev. and Mrs. G. C. Needham, Rev. H. Loomis, Rev. J. H. Ballagh, Mr. T. B. Pocklington, Rev. and Mrs. D. L. Gifford, Rev. A. F. King, Mr. R. Hachiya, Miss Gheer, Mr. T. Sone, and Mr. J. M. Sutherland, in cabin; Mr. T. Tabata, Mr. Nakamura, Mr. Y. Noguchi, Lieut. S. Uchikoshi, I.J.A., Lieut. N. Oda, I.J.A., Constructor K. Ise, I.J.N., Mrs. M. Takebayashi, Master T. Takebayashi, Mr. C. Mikajiri, Mr. R. Furikui, Mr. J. Waßilevich, Mr. B. Leonteff, Mrs. J. Muranka, Mr. Chang-thin-Tuh, Mr. Hong-hwan, Mr. Shin Whin-Ging and child, and Mr. Tsu-Wei-chun, in second class; 71 Japanese, and one Chinese, in steerage.

CARGOES.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, for Vancouver, B.C.:—

	TEA.
	CANADA.	CHICAGO AND WEST.	NEW YORK & EAST.	PACIFIC COAST.	DUBUQUE	MINNEAPOLIS.	TOTAL PACKAGES.
Hongkong	31	—	42	372	—	—	447
Amoy	—	1,328	—	—	—	—	1,328
Foochow	991	914	—	303	—	—	2,208
Shanghai	1,781	870	1,126	134	—	—	3,911
Hankow	299	—	311	100	—	—	701
Kobe	3,088	—	—	—	—	—	3,088
Yokohama	6,842	549	—	172	—	—	7,563
Total	13,025	3,661	1,479	1,081	—	—	19,246

	SILK.
	NEW YORK.		OTHER CITIES.	TOTAL.
Hongkong and Canton	R.S. 310 / W.S. 106		—	416
Shanghai	219		—	219
Chefoo	—		—	—
Yokohama	321		—	321
Total	956		—	956

REPORTS.

The German steamer Hohenzollern, Capt. H. Bleeker, reports:—Left Hongkong, the 27th July at 2 p.m. Passed North Pt. of Formosa, the 29th July at 1.30 a.m. Yoko Island, the 30th July at noon. Siwo Pt., the 30th July at 4.30 p.m. Buck Island, the 1st August at 10 a.m., and arrived at Yokohama, the same day at 4.30 p.m. Got through Formosa Channel N. E. wind, strong. North of Formosa Easterly winds rain; outside the Islands squalls with torrents of rain. Last part of voyage N. E. light fine weather.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

There is no improvement in the deadlock, the few enquiries that are made for yarns and shirtings being at prices below home values.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

	PER PIECE.
Grey Shirtings—8¼ lb., 38½ yds. 39 inches	$2.55 to 2.85
Grey Shirtings—9lb., 38½ yds. 45 inches	2.85 to 3.35
T. Cloth—7lb., 24 yards, 32 inches	1.80 to 2.00
Indigo Shirtings—12 yards, 44 inches	1.75 to 2.60
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches	2.00 to 3.75
	PER YARD.
Cottas—Italians and Satteens Black, 32 inches	0.15 to 0.25

WOOLLENS.

	PER YARD.
Flannels	$0.30 to 0.50
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches best	0.38 to 0.42
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Medium	Nominal
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Common	Nominal
Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 24 yards, 32 inches	0.15 to 0.17
Cloths—Plain, 54 to 56 inches	0.35 to 0.50
Cloths—Presidents, 54 to 56 inches	0.60 to 0.72½
Cloths—Union, 54 to 56 inches	0.50 to 0.85
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5lb., per ½	0.50 to 0.60
	PER PIECE.
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	7.75 to 9.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 32 inches	0.60 to 1.00
Turkey Reds—2.0 to 3.0lb., 24/25 yards, 30 inches	0.25 to 2.20
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 4lb., 24/25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.50

COTTON YARNS.

	PER PICUL.
Nos. 16 24, Singles	$35.50 to 38.50
Nos. 28/32, Singles	39.00 to 42.50
Nos. 36 42, Singles	43.50 to 45.50
Nos. 32, Doubles	42.00 to 43.50
Nos. 42, Doubles	47.00 to 50.50
Nos. 2 60, Plain	60.00 to 63.00
Nos. 2 80, Plain	75.00 to 76.30
Nos. 2/100, Plain	97.00 to 99.00
Nos. 2 60, Gassed	69.50 to 76.50
Nos. 2 80, Gassed	85.00 to 90.00
Nos. 2 100, Gassed	114.00 to 124.00

RAW COTTON.

	PER PICUL.
American Middling	$19.50 to —
Indian Broach	19.25 —
Chinese	21.00 to 21.50

METALS.

There is some enquiry for galvanised corrugated sheets and tin plates, but at extremely unsatisfactory prices. In other directions the dullness is absolute.

	PER PICUL.
Round and square ¼ inch. and upward	3.85 to 4.10
Iron Plates, assorted	4.00 to 4.40
Sheet Iron	4.90 to 5.10
Galvanized Iron sheets	8.50 to 10.25
Wire Nails, assorted	5.90 to 6.10
Tin Plates, per box	5.75 to 5.95
Pig Iron, No. 3	2.08 to 2.10
Hoop Iron (1 to 4 inch)	5.00 to 5.25

KEROSENE.

Market quiet but steady. Quotations:—

American	$2.05	—
Russian	1.95 to	2.00
Langkat	—	1.85

SUGAR.

Market steady, with an advance in prices of about 5 sen in browns, except Manilas; Formosas are 10 to 15 sen dearer. There is an improved inquiry for white refined.

	PER PICUL.
Brown Takao	$5.40 to 5.60
Brown Manila	5.10 to 6.20
Brown Daitong	3.90 to 4.30
Brown Canton	4.20 to 5.85
White Java and Penang	6.90 to 7.25
White Refined	7.70 to 8.60

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is fairly active, the demand being chiefly from Europe, though more enquiries at better prices have been coming from America the last few days. Settlements since July 27th have been 1,020 piculs. There are 5,457 piculs in stock.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra 9/11, 10/12 den.	$920
Filatures—Extra 13/15, 14/16 den.	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1, 10/13 deniers	880 to 890
Filatures—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	920 to 910
Filatures—No. 1½, 10/14 deniers	865 to 875
Filatures—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	900 to 910
Filatures—No. 2, 10/15 deniers	845
Filatures—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	880 to 890
Re-reels—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	850
Re-reels—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	830
Re-reels—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	810
Re-reels—No. 2½, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 3, 14/20 deniers	Nominal
Kakedas—Extra	850
Kakedas—No. 1	815
Kakedas—No. 1½
Kakedas—No. 2	790
Kakedas—No. 2½

WASTE SILK.

The market is still quite destitute of life; there have been no settlements, and the following quotations must be taken as merely nominal.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filature, Best	$115 to 120
Noshi—Filature, Good	105 to 110
Noshi—Oshu, Best	110 to 115
Noshi—Oshu, Good	100 to 105
Noshi—Oshu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Shinshu, Best	70 to 75
Noshi—Shinshu, Good	65 to 67½
Noshi—Bushu, Best	115 to 120
Noshi—Bushu, Good	100 to 110
Noshi—Bushu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Joshu, Good	60 to 65
Noshi—Joshu, Fair	55 to 57½
Kibiso—Filature, Best	95 to 100
Kibiso—Filature, Seconds	85 to 90
Kibiso—Joshu, Good	25 to 30
Kibiso—Bushu, Fair	20 to 22½

TEA.

There is a good demand, particularly for common and medium grades. Though there is a very large stock prices have ruled firm, with no change on last week's quotations. The third crop is now being picked. The total settlements this year so far have been 155,214 piculs, compared with 167,544 piculs at the corresponding date of last year.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	$35 & upwards
Choice	$33 to 34
Finest	31 to 32
Fine	29 to 30
Good Medium	27 to 28
Medium	25 to 26
Good Common	23 to 24
Common	21 to 22

EXCHANGE.

Silver again ⅛ higher from London and sterling quotation ⅛ higher from China, but no change made in rates here.

Sterling—Bank T.T.	2/0⅛ to 5/16
— — Bills on demand	2/0 5/16
— — 4 months' sight	2/0½
— Private 4 months' sight	2/0½
— — 6 months' sight	2/0½
On Paris—Bank sight	2.55½
On Paris—Private 4 months' sight	2.58 to 09
On America—Bank Bills on demand	49½
— Private 4 months' sight	50½
On Germany—Bank sight	2.06½
— Private 4 months' sight	2.10½
On Hongkong—Bank sight	4¼% dis.
— Private 10 days' sight	6% dis.
On Shanghai—Bank sight	78½
— Private 10 days' sight	79½
On India—Bank sight	153
— Private 30 days' sight	156
Bar Silver (London)	27½

INSTANT RELIEF FOR SKIN-TORTURED BABIES

and rest for tired, worn-out parents in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a gentle anointing with CUTICURA, the great skin cure.

The only speedy, safe, permanent, and economical cure for the most distressing of itching, burning, bleeding, and scaly skin and scalp humours of infants and children. CUTICURA REMEDIES are guaranteed absolutely pure by chemists of the highest standing, and may be used from the moment of birth.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U.S.A. "How to Cure Skin-Tortured Babies," post free.

BABY SOAPS For preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, and hair of infants, and eradicating the first symptoms of distressing rashes, nothing so pure, so sweet, so wholesome, as CUTICURA SOAP, the greatest of skin purifying and beautifying soaps, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath, and nursery. For pimples, blotches, red, rough, oily, mothy skin, dry, thin, and falling hair, red, rough hands, it is simply incomparable. It produces the whitest, clearest skin, the softest hands, and most luxuriant hair. Absolutely pure, delicately medicated, exquisitely perfumed, surprisingly effective.

Trade Mark on WALTER MAC FARLANE & Co GLASGOW SARACEN FOUNDRY every Casting.

Macfarlane's Castings,

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"SHARP, CLEAN, AND FULL OF CHARACTER."

ORNAMENTAL CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

VERANDAHS, BALCONIES, BANDSTANDS, ARCADES, KIOSKS, CONSERVATORIES, ROOFS,

RAILWAY STATIONS, BARRACKS, FACTORIES, PUBLIC WORKS, MARKETS, &c.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PILLARS, BRACKETS, AND WIRE WAYS.

NUMEROUS HEIGHTS AND DESIGNS TO SUIT THE DIFFERENT REQUIREMENTS.

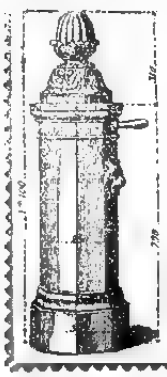
MACFARLANE'S GLASS ENAMELLED DRAIN AND SOIL PIPES, A SPECIALITY.

TWO GOLD MEDALS, CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

Illustrated CATALOGUES, Price Lists, and Estimates on application.

WALTER MACFARLANE & Co., Glasgow, Scotland.

969



WATERING APPARATUS

Non-freezing & Ordinary Hydrants and Street Washers.

Garden Watering Boxes and Apparatus.

Gun-Metal, Copper, and Cast-Iron Cocks and Valves.

E. GUESNIER, E.C.P.,

Engineer and Sock Mnfr.,

(Successor of ACHILLE CADET)

27, Rue des Taillandiers,

PARIS.

Hydropathic and Massage Apparatus supplied to the Vichy Co. Vapour Baths (Berthe system).

Apply to BOYES & Co., agents for M. OPPENHEIMER & Co., PARIS.

December 5, 1896.

A. SAVY & CO., ENGINEERS.

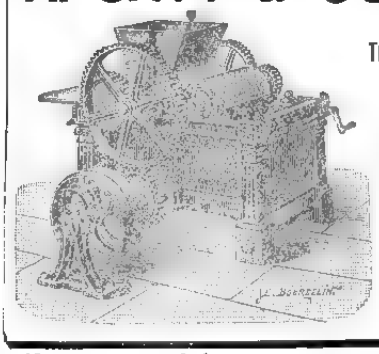
162, Rue de Charenton, Paris.

THE OLD G. HERMANN DEBATISTE WORKS.

ESTABLISHED 1830.

The Oldest and Largest Makers in the World of Chocolate, Cocoa, and Confectionery Plants.

Over 2,500 Chocolate Factories fitted up to January 1st, 1896.



GRINDING MACHINERY for all kinds of dry or wet substances, colours, printing inks, toilet soap, perfumery, and chemicals.

MIXING, CRUSHING, AND PULVERISING MACHINES FOR ALL MATERIALS.

Address Messrs. C. ROHDE & Co., YOKOHAMA.

November 21st, 1896.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LEA & PERRINS'

OBSERVE THAT THE SIGNATURE

Lea & Perrins

IS NOW PRINTED IN BLUE INK DIAGONALLY ACROSS THE OUTSIDE WRAPPER of every Bottle of the

ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

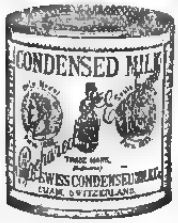
SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale by the Proprietors, Worcester; Crosse & Blackwell, Ltd., London; and Export Oilmen generally.

RETAIL EVERYWHERE.

46ins. May 8th, 1898.

MILKMAID BRAND CONDENSED MILK



The "Milkmaid" Brand is guaranteed to contain all the cream of the original milk. In the process of manufacture nothing but water is removed, nothing but the best refined sugar added.

Avoid low-priced brands from which the cream has been abstracted, and ask for the "Milkmaid" Brand, the best for all purposes.

TRAVELLERS CARRY

J. Liebig

LIEBIG

COMPANY'S EXTRACT.

It keeps good for any time, even after being opened, and is supplied to Armies, Expeditions, Governments, Hospitals, Doctors and Nurses all the world over.

DINNEFORD'S

The Universal Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Headache, Heartburn, Indigestion, Sour Eructations, Bilious Affections.

The Physician's Cure for Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Gravel; the safest and most gentle Medicine for Infants, Children, Delicate Females, and the Sickness of Pregnancy.

MAGNESIA

Sold Throughout the World.

N.B.—ASK FOR DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

September 19th, 1897. 94in.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

THE FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

More Fragrant; More Lasting; and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ATKINSON'S ONLY AND BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Only genuine with "White Rose." Trade Mark.

Of all Dealers & of the Manufacturers—

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

January 1st, 1898. 1y.

NOT SO FAR AWAY AS CHICAGO U. S. A.

IS THE

Greatest Mail Order House in the World.

MONTGOMERY WARD & COMPANY,

111 to 120 Michigan Ave.

WHO ISSUE SEMI-ANNUALLY THE MOST COMPREHENSIVE

GENERAL CATALOGUE AND BUYERS' GUIDE.

Containing 800 pages (8½ by 12 inches), 14,000 Illustrations, 40,000 dependable quotations, and Twenty SPECIAL PRICE LISTS, devoted to distinctive lines of GENERAL MERCHANDISE, viz.: FURNITURE, AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, WAGONS and CARRIAGES, DRUGS, MEDICINES, SEWING MACHINES, ORGANS, PIANOS, BOOKS on every subject, PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES, BOOTS AND SHOES, CLOTHING, CLOAKS, DRESSES, BICYCLES, GROCERIES, HARDWARE, CARPETS, DRY GOODS, WALL PAPER, and HARNESS SUPPLIES.

Any one or all of these publications will be sent postpaid upon application to dwellers in foreign lands, including our "Hand Book for Foreign Buyers." Send in your request, induce your neighbors, Friends and relatives to do so, and learn of our limitless facilities for filling orders expeditiously at minimum prices.

Goods Guaranteed as Represented or Money Refunded.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

CHICAGO, U. S. A.

111 to 120 MICHIGAN AVENUE.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF MODERN TIMES

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

PERSONS suffering from weak or debilitatep constitutions will discover that by the use of this wonderful medicine there is "Health for all." The blood is the fountain of life, and its purity can be maintained by the use of these Pills

Sir Samuel Baker, in his work entitled "The Nile Tributaries in Abyssinia," says—"I ordered the dragoman Mahomet to inform the Fakir that I was a Doctor, and I had the best medicines at the service of the sick, with advice gratis. In I short time I had many applicants, to whom I served out a quantity of Holloway's Pills. These are most useful to an explorer, as, possessing unmistakable purgative properties, they create an undeniable effect upon the patient, which satisfies them of their value."

SIMPLE, SAFE, AND CERTAIN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

Is a certain remedy for bad legs, bad breasts, and ulcerations of all kinds. It acts miraculously in healing ulcerations, curing skin diseases, and in arresting and subduing all inflammations.

Mr. J. T. Lowes, in his account of his extraordinary travels in China, published in 1871, says—"I had with me a quantity of Holloway's Ointment. I gave some to the people, and nothing could exceed their gratitude; and, in consequence, milk, fowls, butter, and horse feed poured in upon us, until at last a teaspoonful of Ointment was worth a fowl and any quantity of pear, and the demand became so great that I was obliged to lock up the small remaining "stock."

Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the World. May 1st, 1897.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor, at 51, Main Street, Settlement, by Arthur Bellamy Brown, of No. 7-c, Bluff, Yokohama, on Saturday, August 6, 1898.

Digitized by Google

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail.

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 7.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, AUGUST 13TH, 1898. 明治三十一年八月十三日 Vol. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 149
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 150
The Kwangsi Rebellion 150
Financial Question 151
Strike of Letter-Carriers in Yokohama 152
Professor Toyama 152
The Cost of Neutrality 153
Judicial Excitement 153
The Swimming Match 153
America, Japan, and England 154
The Liberals and the Progressists 154
Japanese Railways and Foreign Capitalists 154
Bribery and Corruption 155
The Foreign Office 155
The National Unionists 156
A New Departure 156
The "Kawa-Biraki" Fracas 156
A Typhoon 156
The Rice Harvest 157
The Formosan Rebels 157
Formosa 157
The Service of Trains from Yokohama to Kamakura and Zushi 157
The American-Japanese Bank 158
Party Platforms in Japan 158
The Election 158
Plain Speaking and Excellent Sense 159
The Portrait of Mr. Keil 159
Ethnological Position of Japan 160
Japanese Companies 160
Foreign Prisoners in Japanese Jails 161
The Federation of Women's Clubs 161
The Demand for Floating Capital 161
Another Invention 162
Finance in the Feudal Ages 162
Rice 162
Japanese Facts and Comments 163
Seven Months' Trade 164
Our Book-shelf 165
England the Tenest Republic 165
The Chinese Problem 166
Correspondence:—
Railway Questions 166
Educating Japanese Christians Abroad 167
Chinese Bureau of Railways and Mines 167
Chinese Affairs 167
News of the Week 168
The "Irene" at Manila 169
Mosquito Yacht Club 169
Railway Meetings 169
Roman Catholic Chapel Burnt 169
Hongkong and Shanghai Bank Dividends 169
Government Notification 169
Cricket 170
Alleged Frauds by a Young Foreigner 170
Manila Affairs 170
Latest Telegraphic News 172
Chess 173
Latest Shipping 173
Latest Commercial 174

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"FAISCH QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, AUG. 13TH, 1898.

BIRTH.

At Westlands, Yokohama, on the 10th inst. the wife of JOHN STIVEN, of a son.

DEATH.

On August 9 (2 o'clock a.m.), at No. 261, Bluff, LEONORA, beloved daughter of John Griffin.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE first transport with American troops from Santiago has arrived at New York.

SIR T. LIPTON, the London tea merchant, has sent his challenge for the America Cup.

THE Japanese warship Takasago arrived at Hongkong on August 5th from Singapore.

THE conduct of Aguinaldo, the insurgent leader at Manila, is regarded with suspicion.

THE rice crop in Kanagawa prefecture is expected to be better than the average of centre years.

THE landing of U. S. troops on the south east coast of Puerto Rico has been practically completed. The Americans are everywhere welcomed.

THE Novoe Vremya announces that Russia has acquired the Sultanate of Raheita on the Red Sea, as a naval base.

DURING the week many ministerial changes have been telegraphed from Korea, but none seem of any consequence.

THERE appears to have been a serious uprising of rebels in South Formosa during the first week of August.

DURING July 33,860 boxes of tea were sent into Kobe from the interior: purchases included 2,263,600 lbs.

DYSENTERY seems to be very rife all over central Japan at present. A few isolated cases of cholera are also reported daily.

THE Queen of Denmark, who is 81 years of age, is reported to be seriously ill. The family is assembling at Copenhagen.

COUNT ITAGAKI, the Home Minister, has duly notified the coming into operation of the revised treaties in July of next year.

THE Yokohama Cricket Club achieved an easy victory over the Fleet last Saturday: on Thursday the return match ended in a draw.

THE Powers regard the Anglo Russian relations in China as critical. Complications are apprehended. The stock market is weak.

SPAIN has accepted conditionally the conditions of peace outlined by the United States and hostilities are expected to cease at any moment.

MR. SHIMIZU, President of the Commercial College, who has been subjected to much adverse criticism of late, resigned the post on the 6th inst.

YOKOYAMA Seigen, 38 years old, an employé of the Kwansei Steamship Company, of Osaka, on the 5th inst. absconded with yen 11,100 belonging to the Company.

WEDNESDAY was the date of the general elections. In Yokohama the day passed quietly, the old member, Mr. Shimada Saburo, being re elected by a large majority.

TELEGRAPHIC intelligence from Chemulpho, dated the 5th inst., says that the German cruiser Deutschland left for Vladivostock that day H.I.H. Prince Henry is on board her.

A CONFERENCE of Superintendents of Prisons has been convened in the capital for the 15th prox. Improvements in the system and in the treatment of prisoners will be discussed.

THE third batch of U. S. troops have arrived at Cavite. There has been some serious skirmishing outside Manila. The Americans lost a good many men, but nothing in proportion to the Spaniards.

A VERY impressive memorial service in honour of the late Prince Bismarck was held in the Public Hall on Monday. The orator of the day was Dr. Baelz, the distinguished Tokyo physician.

THE typhoon predicted in the early part of the week, did a good deal of damage in North Formosa. It did not reach Japan, though it caused an appreciable drop in the temperature for a day or two.

MR. MATSUDA, the Minister for Finance, in a recent interview, acknowledged that investigations are being conducted as to available sources of increased revenue. He favours a land scheme whereby luxuries may be taxed, so that the rich may bear a fuller share of the national burdens than they have hitherto done, while the poorer folks will be relieved of many taxes that now press heavily upon them.

COMMANDER TAJIMA, Chief Engineer Tsuruuchi, Ensign Fujiwara and a staff of men, left by the Belgic on Saturday, to bring home the torpedo boat Shiranui, now completing at Glasgow.

THE Anglo-Russian relations in China are being followed with keen interest in America. Both the New York Times and Sun advocate prompt and joint action between the United States and Great Britain.

H.M.S. Powerful has gone to Batavia, to join in the celebration of Queen Wilhelmina's majority, but the Centurion, Victorious and Narcissus remain in Yokohama. The Fleet will shortly assemble at Hakodate for manœuvres.

MR. AMENOMIYA KEIJIRO, the prominent merchant of Tokyo, on the 4th inst. paid a visit to Count Okuma at his official residence, and offered his opinions on the advisability of allowing foreigners to own shares in private railways.

IT is rumoured that the Governor-General of Formosa intends to establish a salt monopoly in the island from which he expects to derive an income of 640,000 yen. He further intends revising the Land Tax, thereby increasing the yield by 900,000 yen.

A FUKUYAMA despatch to the Admiralty, dated the 5th instant, reports that all the machinery and fittings of the sunken torpedo-boat No. 23, have been recovered, but the boat still remains at the bottom of the sea. It is expected that she will be floated soon.

THE Osaka Industrial Bank (capital paid up yen 500,000), the 136th National Bank, (capital paid up yen 350,000), and the 130th National Bank (capital paid up yen 1,500,000) in Osaka recently agreed to amalgamate under the name of the 130th National Bank.

ACCORDING to the investigations of the Finance Department, banks throughout the country at the end of last month numbered 1,739. Their paid-up capitals amounted to yen 371,060,624. Comparing this return with June, there is an increase of 11 banks and in capitals of yen 6,661,500.

A STRIKE of engineers on the Nippon Railway Company is expected shortly owing to the determination of the Directors to abolish the usual half yearly bonus to the staff. It is said that the Company's business has been very unsatisfactory and the dividend to be declared for the current half-year will be cut down to 5½ per cent.

IN the course of a debate in the House of Commons, on the estimates for the Foreign Office, Mr. Curzon said nothing could be more definite or more precise than the assurance of support given to China. He denied that the open door had ceased to exist either in Manchuria or elsewhere, or had been shut in Britain's face. The concessions secured in China during the last few months were far greater than those obtained by all Britain's rivals put together. This proved that she had maintained her ascendency in the political councils at Pekin.

TRADE is very dull in Yokohama, sugar and kerosene among Imports alone showing any life. Raw Silk is very brisk and Waste Silk also meets enquiry, though principally from Europe. Tea is very active, orders coming in freely from the United States, though exports to date show a falling off of a million pounds compared with last year.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

The great object of a certain section of the vernacular press is to bring about the disruption of the two bodies forming the Constitutional Party, namely, the Liberals and the Progressists. It need scarcely be said that the Chuo is the leader of that effort. The Chuo is the organ of the National Unionists, who alone have kept their colours nailed to the flag staff of the "Meiji Statesmen," and who now find themselves behind the time. Their only hope of becoming once more a potential factor in the political field is to draw to themselves some flotsam and jetsam from the unwieldy ship of the Constitutionalists. They are working with great address. In the days of the last Matsukata Cabinet, certain Ministers, whose retention of portfolios was supposed to represent a compromise with the preceding Administration, were dubbed Hanshoku Daijin (cabinet convives, or ministers by courtesy). The Opposition now retaliates by declaring that the present Ministry abounds with "cabinet convives." It might be supposed that the allusion was to Marquis Saigo and Viscount Katsura. By no means. That hypothesis is carefully negatived. It is to Count Itagaki and the other Liberal representatives that reference is made. Marquis Saigo, and Viscount Katsura are an imperium in imperio. The Cabinet can not touch them. They stand independent and autocratic. To call them "ministers by courtesy" would be absurd. But the Liberal portfolio-holders are mere make-weights. The Progressist Ministers stand to them in the relation of step-parents and treat them as adopted children. Out of eight portfolios the Liberals have only three; the Progressists have five. Among all the new Vice-Ministers there is but one Liberal—Mr. Suzuki, of the Home Office—; the rest are Progressists. Among all the new Directors of Bureaux and Chokunin Councillors there is not one Liberal; the whole are Progressists. On the other hand, all the new Governors of Prefectures are Liberals. In a word, the Liberals have been treated as rustics. They have been banished from the capital to the provinces, from the central government to the local administrations. It may be urged that a portfolio of paramount importance—that of Finance—has been assigned to the Liberals. Yes, but finance is just the stumbling block of the time. If there is to be any great failure, it will be in the field of finance. The Progressists were only too glad to saddle the Liberals with that responsibility. How much, again, of Count Itagaki's views are to be carried into the domain of practical politics? Since last spring he has been an open and ardent advocate of the State purchase of private railways. All his life, especially of late, he has been an earnest projector of prison reforms. In neither direction are his opinions endorsed by the Cabinet of which he is supposed to be a leading member. He has been appointed President of the Committee of Administrative Reform. That looks like an honour. In reality it is a trap. Everybody that has hitherto essayed administrative reform has made a failure. The Progressists are only too pleased to place Count Itagaki at the head of the forlorn hope. The measure of respect he receives and of influence he wields has been clearly indicated by the affair of the Foreign Office portfolio. He wanted it for Baron Ito. But the Shimpo to Ministers would not listen to him. They paid even more attention to a small section of his own Party, the Kwanto ha. It is thus that the Liberals have been cajoled and deceived; played with as greenhorns are played with by professional gamblers. All their toil of 24 years, all their political struggles, are now as bubbles on the surface of a stream.

* * *

In such manner do the hostile journals endeavour to create the "little rift within the lute." It must be confessed that they have a specious case. Nor are their arguments strongly traversed in any direction. The Yiji Shimpo is, perhaps, their most effective opponent, and even the Yiji seeks not so much to deny their premises as to point to the evils that their advice may precipitate. Nothing less than the interests of the Constitution are at stake, according to the Yiji. The Cabinet, it finds, is simply a replica of the Satcho combination. The Progressists and the Liberals are to-day what the men of Satsuma and the men of Choshiu used to be. There is still a balance of power to be preserved; there are still conflicting interests to be reconciled. But the issue now hanging in the balance is, not whether a forward step shall be taken towards the bourne of representative institutions, but whether the hands shall be put back through a large arc on the dial of progress. If this Cabinet suffers disruption owing to the influence of forces generated by its own squabbles and jealousies, the conservatives who believe that the situation can be saved only by suspending the Constitution, will step into the breach with flying colours. Then all the work of the Progressists and the Liberals during nearly a quarter of a century will be nullified, and the advocates of progress will themselves have created an opportunity for its enemies.

* * *

There is a great deal of journalistic impatience about the Cabinet's failure to introduce any of the numerous reforms expected of it. Newspapers seem to imagine that a Ministry can inaugurate sweeping changes on the very morrow of its assumption of office. The Asahi is inclined to attribute the delay to the fact that the best men of the Constitutional Party have all stood aloof, and the mediocrities have been hoisted into power. The country hoped that a thoroughly new atmosphere would permeate the whole region of officialdom when the system of party cabinets was inaugurated, but the hope has proved quite fallacious. There has been no change for the better, and it would be extravagant to look for anything striking from such men. The Yiji echoes the cry but in different terms. The party politicians, it says, before they came into power, were never tired of declaiming about the imperative necessity of reducing the number of superfluous officials. Why do they not undertake that most desirable reform? Assuredly there are superfluous officials. In one particular Department there are 30 waiters and 40 pages to 300 officials. Seventy servants to three hundred officials, a ratio of one to four! It is a painful task to dismiss men from office, depriving them, perhaps, of the means of subsistence. But it has to be done. The longer the hesitation, the more irksome the effort. Weed out all the needless men, and give better salaries to those that remain.

* * *

The Nippon is vigorous as ever. It avers that the old shibboleth of the party politicians has been perverted into a cloak to conceal their shortcomings. Once upon a time the word "responsibility" was always on their lips. They wanted "responsible cabinets." If only the State had a responsible cabinet, everything would be for the best in this best of all worlds. Well, they have got their responsible cabinet, and now "responsibility" is their refuge from public criticism. They can not lightly undertake this or essay that, being "responsible" Ministers. Such a reform might have been rashly attempted, or such a measure precipitately approached, in the days of "clan administration," when Cabinets were not animated by any proper sense of "responsibility." But now, all that is changed. Responsibility opposes an effective barrier to every hasty movement. "Oh, responsibility," says the Nippon, adapting the immortal invocation, "what crimes of opportunism are not committed in thy name!"

* * *

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun shares the views of the Asahi. The watchword of the parties used to be jinsai tōyō, or appointment by merit. They complained not merely that clan favoritism closed the door to men of talent without influence or patronage, but even that the system of examination for office and of promotion served to [illegible] ed officialdom into a species of monopoly. Has any improvement taken place under their own regimen? Have not men of expert knowledge and valuable experience been driven out in order that their places might be given to needy party politicians?

* * *

The discussion about finance continues ceaselessly. It is now alleged that the Constitutionalists are divided into three sections with regard to this subject. There is, first, a section whose members insist that no occasion exists for increased taxation. They say that ends can easily be made to meet by applying the pruning knife to administrative expenditures. Abolish the Army and Navy Departments and replace them by a War Department (gumma-sho). Lop off the Divisions newly added to the Army and revert to the old establishment. Abolish the Metropolitan Police Board, the Department of Education, and the Department of Justice. Dismiss all superfluous officials. By these means the State expenditures may be diminished to the extent of 50 or 60 million yen. This section is under the leadership of Mr. Otake Kanichi. It is not numerically strong, but its followers are increasing. The second section do not object to augmenting the sake tax and other sources of revenue, but will not suffer the land tax to be touched. Their contention is that many reforms are urgently needed in the communes—engineering, sanitary and police reforms—, and that funds for carrying them out can be obtained only from the local land rates. But unless the land is to bear a heavier burden than it did in feudal times, the land tax, the land rate, and the local expenses (chosan-hi) must not aggregate more than 4 per cent. of the value of the land. Already that aggregate has been reached. Hence there is no margin for increase. This section is headed by Mr. Takekomi. It includes a large majority of the old Progressists. Finally, there is a third section, including many Liberals and several Progressists, who hold that an increase of the Land Tax is inevitable. The financial difficulties may be tided over for a year or two by sundry expedients, but to place the economy of the State on a really sound footing, recourse must be had to the Land Tax. The heads of this section are Messrs. Shimada and Taguchi. They will not commence their campaign openly until after the general elections. Meanwhile, they have sent out a circular to tenant farmers with the object of obtaining materials to frame an indictment against the landowners. This is the Asahi's analysis.

* * *

It is the opinion of the Shogyo Shimpo that to put an end to the private brewing of sake for domestic use would be to attack an immemorial custom of the peasant class, and that the people would bitterly resent such an innovation. The burden of the increased sake tax, were that veto imposed, would fall almost entirely on the middle-lower and lower classes. It is true that the proposed tax upon silk garments would be paid mainly by the upper classes. But the amount would be paltry compared with that of the increased sake tax.

THE KWANGSI REBELLION.

News has already reached us by cable of the suppression of the Kwangsi rebellion. The last stages were marked by much bloodshed, over 1,000 men being killed at Yuagnu, a city captured by the rebels soon after the affair gathered strength.

Chang Chi-tung recently referring to China's population, arrived at the same total estimate as Lord Salisbury, but he proceeded to handle it very differently, says the P. & T. Times. The venerable Viceroy made a clean sweep of 50 per cent. for women with crippled feet and therefore useless; 25 per cent. for opium smokers as unreliable; four fifths of the balance of dilapidated and the "brave" a mere handful of 20,000,000; and then we have to descend to an acceptable minimum of the word "brave."

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

FINANCIAL QUESTIONS.

It appears to be now generally believed that in compiling the Budget for 1899-1900, the Minister of Finance will have to provide an additional revenue of 50 million yen, if he adopts the estimates presented by the various Departments of State. The appropriations sought by the Departments are not yet publicly known, but a leading Tokyo journal professes to have obtained information showing that the following increases, as compared with the figures for the current year, have been asked for :—

	YEN
Foreign Office	400,000
Home Office	1,150,000
Finance Office	?
Army	8,000,000
Navy	6,000,000
Agricultural and Commercial ...	2 000 000
Communications	10,000,000
Justice	1,900,000
Education	2,500,000
Total	31,950,000

There is already a deficit of 14 million yen on the revenue side of the Budget for the current year, so that, if the above figures were allowed to stand, a total shortage of 46 million yen, in round numbers, would present itself. But of course the Departmental requisitions will not be adopted in their entirety. They never are. It seems to have become habitual in Japan that each Department should ask for more than it wants, being well assured that it will obtain only a portion of its requisition. Some people go so far as to say that the less political influence a Minister wields, the larger are his financial demands, inasmuch as he knows that the pruning knife will be applied to his proposals in inverse proportion to his weight in the Administrative scale. It may be taken for granted, we think, that the total increase of expenditure will be cut down to 30 or 35 million yen. There will remain, however, other sources of outlay—the maintenance of the Fleet, Formosa, &c.—so that our recent conclusion as to the necessity of providing for an increase of revenue to the extent of 50 million yen is likely to prove correct.

It is, of course, quite impossible to form any really intelligent idea of the financial situation by means of such shadowy outlines as the above. No information is vouchsafed as to the nature of the increased appropriations demanded by the Departments. Considerable portions of them are doubtless intended to meet extraordinary and temporary outlays. Until discrimination of that kind is possible, judgment must be suspended.

There is observable among the Constitutionalists a distinct wavering on the subject of the Land Tax. Mr. Matsuda himself now talks openly of increasing the tax upon urban lands. Of course that is a different thing from increasing the general a Land Tax. The provincial land-owners would not raise any objection to the imposition of a higher rate on urban lands, and, as we have showed more than once, such a measure is urgently demanded in the cause of justice. It would not yield a great increase of revenue, however, unless the rate is radically altered. Out of the total of 17½ million yen that Count Inouye proposed to obtain by augmenting the Land Tax, only 1½ millions would have come from urban lands. Still, the fact that the Minister of Finance is beginning to look towards the land can not be ignored.

Very outspoken is the Yomiuri Shimbun. On the 10th of last month, a big meeting of land-owners was held in Osaka. It was attended by over 400 delegates, representing two cities and twenty-five prefectures. The meeting decided unanimously that agitation in favour of re-assessing the taxable value of land must be undertaken, and there can be no doubt that a powerfully supported bill in that sense will be presented in the next session of the Diet. The object of reassessment is, not to raise the rate on lands supposed to be undervalued, but to reduce the rate on lands supposed to be over-valued. Hence the general result of the measure would be a diminution of revenue. Now in discussing that proposal, the Yomiuri Shimbun frankly acknowledges that the only source from which the revenue can be properly augmented is the Land Tax; that since the Government is resolved not to have recourse to the Land Tax, there will be nothing for it but to fall back upon the Indemnity; that the latter course will necessitate the sale of bonds into which the available portion of the Indemnity has been converted; that, under such highly embarrassing circumstances it is most inopportune to talk of re-assessing the taxable value of the land, and that to press the question would be to create dissension in the ranks of the Constitutional Party. Such admissions sound strange in the mouth of a pro-Cabinet journal. It has to be remembered, however, that many of the Constitutionalists did not oppose the project of increasing the Land Tax on its merits, but merely declined to give it favourable consideration unless the State expenditures were submitted for simultaneous discussion. The Cabinet would not necessarily be acting inconsistently if it asked the next Diet to sanction an increase of the Land Tax in connexion with the Budget.

STRIKE OF LETTER-CARRIERS IN YOKOHAMA.

Vernacular newspapers report a strike of letter-carriers in the Settlement. The reason assigned is decidedly peculiar. Some time ago the Department of Communications decided—we quote the story as it is told—that the pay of the letter-carriers must be increased, first-class men to receive 60 sen daily instead of 50 sen, and the others classes being raised in proportion. But when this much-needed reform came to be carried out, funds were found to be deficient. The officials, therefore, hit upon the device of lowering all the carriers by one class, and then putting the new scale of emoluments into operation. Of course the result was that while all the classes—except the first, which disappeared—seemed to have had their salaries raised, each man really remained in receipt of exactly what he had before. In short, the "benefit" that the men derived from the change was a reduced status and unaltered pay. On the 3rd instant, 20 of them struck work, and their two leaders were dismissed. This greatly angered the remaining 60, and steps were taken to concert with Tokyo for a general strike. The Authorities fortunately succeeded in persuading the men that if they quietly resumed work, their grievance would be redressed "by-and-by."

PROFESSOR TOYAMA.

Some distinctions are dearly bought in Japan. The cases of Professors Hamao and Toyama are in point. Professor Hamao, after years of zealous application to educational duties, rose to be President of the Imperial University. There is only one higher prize in the sphere of education. It is the portfolio of the Department. Probably, in the opinion of many people, the post of President of the Imperial University is the more desirable of the two. There is a certain cachet about it. A mere politician may become a Minister of State. The moral gifts and the practical achievements that qualify a man for such an office are not necessarily of such a kind as to confer lasting benefit on his country. But to become President of the University means that really solid work must have been done in the cause of education; that is to say, in the very best interests of the country. Besides, the position of President of the University is virtually permanent, so far as anything can be permanent in Japan. When we add that reservation, we do not mean to suggest that impermanence is characteristic of this country's institutions or of its people's doings. But there is constantly operative among the Japanese an impalpable factor called giri, which may at any moment upset all calculations built on a Western estimate of given conditions. It often seems to outsiders that a certain official is fairly fixed in his post; that nothing except an unforseeable catastrophe should move him. Yet he suddenly and quietly disappears from the administrative scene, making way for a successor whose qualifications are not so palpably superior as to warrant the change. What has happened? The answer is general difficult to express intelligibly. That omnipotent giri has asserted itself in some form or other. Some shadowy moral principle has failed to obtain full recognition from the official, some sentiment would be outraged by his continuance in office. Doubtless, in the great majority of cases, these experiences, could they be clearly analysed and correctly synthesized, would spell out a very pretty creed of altruism and a finely ordered state of "spheres of individual interest." But we are here concerned only with the fact that a special element of instability has to be reckoned with in Japan, and that even an office like that of President of the University is only relatively permanent. It is, at all events, removed above the high-water mark of the ebb and flow of party politics, and that is no small consideration. Mr. Hamao became President of the University on the 30th of March, 1893. He occupied the position for a space of over five years, and on the 6th of November, 1897, he accepted the portfolio of Education. The appointment was hailed with universal satisfaction; not, perhaps, for personal reasons, but because it seemed to indicate that the administration of educational affairs was thenceforth to be entrusted to educationists. There is much to be done in the sphere of education in Japan. A great deal has been done, we frankly admit, and we also confess that as Englishmen we hesitate to criticise. It is only 64 years since the first grant of public money for educational purposes was made in England—a paltry sum of twenty thousand pounds sterling—, and no reader of history can recall, without a feeling of intense humilia-

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

tion the extraordinary arguments adduced by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Stanley, Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Disraeli five years later, when it was proposed to increase the grant by a moiety, and to extend its benefits to unsectarian schools. Such arguments were partly the outcome of a terrible record of religious intolerance; an echo of the anti-popery struggle that left such cruel scars on the heart of England. Yet we doubt whether the spirit of "fantastic bigotry" inherited by Englishmen from the days of "bloody Mary" swayed the nation more powerfully than the traditions of political Christianity and the Shimabara struggle influenced the Japanese at the beginning of the Meiji era. Nevertheless, arguments such as the Primate of England and men like Peel, Gladstone and Disraeli used from their parliamentary places in 1839 would be freely denounced as semi-barbarous did they come from the lips of Japanese legislators to-day. Our own country's antecedents, therefore, forbid us to pass harsh judgment, and we are content to say that the status of private schools in Japan at present and the attitude of the Government towards religious instruction seem quite unworthy of the enlightened progress which has won so much honour for the country. When the Department of Education came to be presided over by a genuine educationist, there were hopes that these and other defects might be remedied. But for Mr. Hamao personally it proved to be an evil hour when he accepted the portfolio. He held it for just 67 days, and then passed out of sight. A ministerial post is like the plough in the parable. A man must never look back from it. To lose it is to become lost to use, and even to memory unless the loser has some special faculty for keeping himself before the public. Professor Hamao does not seem to possess that faculty. He has passed completely out of sight, for the moment at all events. He has bartered his fine position of President of the University for sixty-seven days of portfolio tenure—"a crowded hour of glorious life"—followed by extinction. Professor Toyama became President of the University in succession to Professor Hamao. He occupied it for five and a half months, and then, like his predecessor, accepted the portfolio of Education, That happened on April 30th, and June 30th saw the Professor relegated to private life. The two experiences were remarkably similar from an arithmetical point of view. Professor Hamao, 5½ years as President of the University, 67 days as Minister of Education, and thereafter, nothing; Professor Toyama, 5½ months as President of the University, 61 days as Minister of Eduction, and thereafter, nothing.

But Professor Toyama has not passed out of sight. He has qualities that compel the public to observe him. We have sometimes thought that Professor Toyama might be not inaptly be called the Brougham of modern Japan. He possesses the same vehement, remorseless cynicism, the same command of scathing rhetoric, the same pitilessness of denunication as that "strong and strange" figure of early Victorian days, though happily he is without the boundless self-confidence and overweening vanity of the great English jurist. When he passed from the control of the Department of Education, he doubtless found himself embarrassed by unemployed energy—the energy of which he had formerly made such brilliant use as Director of the College of Literature in the Imperial University. He therefore took to speech-making, a sphere where he is eminently qualified to shine. At first his utterances were of lamb-like gentleness. He welcomed—who more heartily?—the advent of party cabinets. This second revolution filled him with bright hopes. And so forth and so on. But suddenly he changed his tone, and let it be very clearly known that while ardently advocating the principle of party cabinets, he regarded with profound disdain the first practical application of the principle in Japan. He showed as much ingenuity in fitting contemptuous epithets to the new Cabinet as old Martin Chuzzlewit exhibited in finding abusive names for Pecksniff. It was a nuye-naikaku—a cabinet resembling the fabulous nuye of mediæval days, a monster partly monkey, partly tiger, and partly snake. Its hide was many-coloured. It had no administrative independence, being ruled by the head-quarters of the Constitutional Party as effectually as France was governed by the Jacobin Club in the eighteenth century. It was, in fact, a Jacobin Cabinet. It was a Cabinet pretending to stand on a foundation of liberty, yet its acts were circumscribed by daily dread of a coup d'état by the Army and Navy. It might be called the Army-and-Navy Cabinet. The Army and Navy possessed extraterritorial privileges and defied the administration. It was nonsense to suppose that Japan could leap at one bound to a political pinnacle which England had barely mounted after decades of hard struggle and painful effort. The goal had not been reached. The progressive march had only just begun. These were the days for binding on sandals (waraji kake no toki), not for taking them off. Counts Okuma and Itagaki must be prepared to leave their bodies in the breach which the nation was attempting to scale. They need not fondly imagine themselves to be Gladstones and Disraelis.

This speech was delivered on the 21st of July, if we remember aright. What the occasion was, we do not now recall exactly, but we think that it was a dinner given to Professor Toyama by his University colleagues. Very little notice was taken of the oration. It may almost be said to have fallen flat. But on August 2nd the Professor followed it by another profoundly sarcastic utterance at the general meeting of the Miyagi Prefecture Educational Society. Mr. Ozaki, the present Minister of Education, had been invited but did not attend, and his absence was taken as a text by Professor Toyama. They were, he said, greatly disappointed no doubt by the Minister's absence. But what then? A Government that did n't care for education, whether it was a clan government or a party government, must be overthrown. Any peaceful means to that end were permissible. This new Cabinet talked much of administrative reform; of abolishing the Departments of Justice and Education, and so on. Of course the Ministers had courage for the effort. Let them make it. They might be confidently trusted to do so. They surely had the courage of their professed opinions. Let them begin to show it by granting the budgetary appropriations of the various Departments, not on a scale fixed by the personal and political influence of the heads of the Departments, but with honest reference to the merits of the objects of expenditure. Courage was above all things the conspicuous characteristic of party Cabinets. Clan cabinets had nothing of that quality. The second revolution of the Meiji era had now been achieved. Therefore there could be no hesitation about revolutionizing everything—the State grant to education, for example. Count Okuma was an ardent educationist. He had founded and supported one of the greatest and most flourishing colleges in the empire. He had associated himself with education in many ways. Surely, now that he stood at the head of the Administration, he would be consistently helpful to the cause he had so long advocated. Two years ago, Representations had been presented in both Houses of the Diet and adopted, urging that a portion of the Indemnity should be applied to educational purposes. But the Cabinet of the time, being a "Clan Cabinet," had no courage to adopt that advice. Things were different now. The Representations had been presented and supported by Count Okuma's closest friends, the leaders of the present Constitutional Party. Consistency and courage being the attributes of party cabinets, the horizon looked very bright for education. Besides, what had won the war against China? What had obtained the Indemnity? Education; nothing but education. Let its merits and achievements be properly recognised. When he was a member of the Cabinet, it had come to his knowledge that 7½ million yen of the Indemnity remained unappropriated. They would be content with half of that sum. They would be content with a third of it. But they expected some.

This speech was repeated in substance by Professor Toyama on the following day at a meeting of the Meikei-kai in the Koishikawa Botanical Garden, the Minister of Education being present. Our readers will perceive that it was a subtle speech. Professor Toyama himself, if invited to explain his utterances, might say that they had no object except to obtain a larger measure of State aid for education, and might contend that he had credited the present Cabinet with very fine qualities which were wanting in its predecessors. But no one hearing or reading the speech could fail to detect the vein of bitter sarcasm running through it. Now there is a regulation, issued by the Department of Education in 1897, which interdicts all attempts to impart politics into the sphere of education or to enlist the influence of students or person engaged in education for the purpose of promoting political ends. The Yomiuri Shimbun wants to know whether Professor Toyama has not violated that regulation. It does not approve of the regulation, regarding it as an undue interference with the freedom of speech, but it contends that, so long as a law is operative, it must be obeyed and enforced. There is here an interesting point, however. Professor Toyama is not merely an educationist,—if, indeed, he can any longer be called an educationist, seeing that he sacrificed, and has not recovered, his educational position for the sake of becoming a Cabinet Minister. He is also a member of the House of Peers. In which capacity did he speak at Sendai and at Koishikawa? If as a member of the Upper House, he certainly is not bound by the regulation of the Department of Education. At any rate it would be very bitter for the present Cabinet to have to employ such a regulation for the muzzling of its political opponents.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

There is another interesting point, too. Mr. Ozaki Yukio, Minister of State for Education, stood up and answered Professor Toyama at the Koishikawa meeting. Mr. Ozaki is a great debater. His speeches in the Diet are famous. He answered Professor Toyama after Professor Toyama's fashion. If the condition of the schools and the circumstances of the time called so imperatively for a grant of 3 or 4 million yen in aid of education, it was strange, he said, that Professor Toyama had not made the discovery until his own exit from office; strange that he himself, as Minister, had made no display of the courage now so much demanded of his successor. It was easy to apply for big appropriations. The so-called "Cabinet Convives" had done that; had, indeed, made a habit of doing it, for they knew that if they didn't ask for much more than they wanted they had no chance of getting what they did really want. But he (Ozaki) did not propose to adopt that system of "second-price" requisitions. He had a different idea of ministerial dignity. He thought, too, that a member of a Cabinet had to consider something more than the interests of the particular Department over which he presided; he had to consider the general convenience of the State, and the condition of the public finances.

That was a Rowland for Professor Toyama's Oliver. It was more too. It was an official recognition of the propriety of discussing such subjects at a meeting of educationists. The Cabinet can not claim that speech on a particular occasion was unlawful for Professor Toyama but lawful for an official. A Minister of State can not meet a man on his own ground and then declare that he violated the law when he ventured on such ground. We do not suppose that the Government thinks of proceeding against Professor Toyama, but it is strange that this obvious point does not occur to the vernacular newspapers.

THE COST OF NEUTRALITY.

If taking part in a war is expensive, so too is the business of looking on in a lawful manner. Japanese newspapers say that the total outlay incurred by Japan, up to the time when the accounts were last figured up, in connexion with discharging the duties of a neutral, was 436,429 yen, which money was defrayed from the Second Reserve Fund; and that a further expenditure of 122,118 yen, out of the Third Reserve Fund, will have been made by the close of this month. In short, the average monthly bill on this account totals about 100,000 yen. Not every person will understand precisely what the costly functions of a neutral are. Perhaps the simplest way of explaining the matter is to say that when a State declares strict neutrality, she must show herself prepared to vigorously resent any disrespect of her declaration on the part of the belligerents. That entails movements of ships and other precautions. It is not pleasant for a country to be anywhere near the scene of warlike operations.

JUDICIAL EXCITEMENT.

One of the periodical agitations of a more or less sentimental character so common in Japan, has now been started in connexion with the Judicial Department. Many details of the story have no interest for our readers but the general outline is worth tracing. Eight years ago, while Count Yamada held the portfolio of Justice, some busy folks tried to persuade the public that the Judiciary and the Department of Justice were in quite a lamentable condition, the judges, the procurators and the officials being split up into a number of sections, each presenting a different political complexion. The statement contained the proverbial grain of truth. In those days, the civil law and civil procedure of the country were still a mixture of traditional customs and imported principles, and the Judiciary consisted of old-fashioned men with little or no basis of genuine legal knowledge, and young men educated according to modern standards. These two sections stood naturally opposed to each other, but the strength of the second was dissipated by sub-division, the students of French law, the students of English law, and the students of German law being mutually antagonistic. The promulgation of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Commercial Code (in great part), and the final revision of the Civil Code furnished a complete system of Japanese law, and put an end to the differences of English, French and German, so that the three sub-sections of the modern men united, and took whatever steps were lawfully possible to bring about the retirement of the men of the old school, who stood in their light, and were considered quite incompetent to administer the new Codes. There was nothing political in all this. The members of the Judiciary, despite of various rumours circulated by news-mongers, seem to have always stood carefully aloof from politics. Out of 3,700 high-class officials in Japan, 1,600 belong to the Judiciary; and out of an aggregate sum of 4 million yen paid annually to these officials, 2¼ millions, in round numbers, go to the Judiciary. It is a poor average—1,400 yen per annum—, but the higher offices are much desired, and naturally the well-equipped and competent juniors feel impatient that the prizes of the profession should be monopolized by the ill-equipped and incompetent men of the old school. At the same time, the responsible officials of the Judicial Department have always appreciated the necessity of weeding out the superannuated judges as quickly as possible, and the necessity became more imperative than ever when the new Codes were promulgated. The Constitution, however, presents an obstacle to any arbitrary process of "weeding," for it guarantees to the judges life tenure of office. Fortunately the 74th Article of the Law of Organization of the Law Courts supplies a partial remedy. It provides that any Judge may be removed if a Council of Judges pronounces him incompetent. During the 9 years of the Law's operation, not more than 4 Judges have been dealt with by such a tribunal, though some hundreds have resigned either because they shrank from being cited before a Council, or because they were persuaded of their deficient qualifications. When Mr. Sone, the last Minister of Justice, came into office, he approached this problem entirely without prejudice. His predecessor, Mr Kioura Keizo, is said to have been trammelled by connexions with the Judiciary. At all events, he took no step towards the more expeditious process of sifting demanded by the time. But Mr. Sone went to work vigorously. He induced quite a number of the antiquated Judges to resign, and appointed men of the new school to their places. The press welcomed these steps enthusiastically, but the judges of the old school, both those that had resigned and those that felt insecure, concluded that they were being hardly used, and began to cast about for some materials to construct an indictment. They found them in two facts, one that Mr. Sone had acted with apparently unseemly precipitancy; the other, that he has procured the abolition of the Regulations for the Fixed Establishment of Courts (Tei-in-rei), and the substitution of a regulation which fixed the total number of judicial officials only, leaving the detail for each court to the discretion of the Minister. As to the former point, it is a mere question of dates. Mr. Sone tendered his resignation on the 25th of June, when the Ito Cabinet fell, but consummated the above changes in the Judiciary on the 27th. Why, being still in office, he should not have proceeded with a much-needed reform, all the preliminaries of which had been arranged, we fail to see. It is known also that this very question of time was submitted to Marquis Ito, and that he authorized Mr. Sone to proceed, despite the pending change of Ministry. As to the second point, if the discretionary power conferred by the revised Regulations was really desirable, the crime of revision is not apparent. The old-school Judges found a strong champion in Mr. Kojima Iken, formerly Chief Justice of Japan, who resigned his post some years ago in connexion with an accusation of card-playing preferred against certain Judges. Mr. Kojima has addressed a long letter of indictment to the present Minister of Justice. It is in one sense an amusing document, for the writer has carefully constructed it on the lines of a parliamentary paper; but it also an unhappy document, for if we remove from it Mr. Kojima's suspicions—suspicions which he, an ex-judge, seems to regard as valid evidence—, if we remove his suspicions that Mr. Sone acted, from first to last, not in the interests of an improved administration of the law, but simply in the interests of his own personal friends whom he desired to promote, there remains nothing of the indictment. There is not much in the story either, our readers will probably say. Well, not much. But many Japanese evidently think that there is.

THE SWIMMING MATCH.

It is plain that the swimming contest to-day between foreigners of this Settlement and Japanese from Tokyo is looked forward to by the latter with much interest—which is quite as it should be. "A Yokohama Boy" writes to the Yorozu Choho, strongly repudiating the idea that the Tokyo swimmers may be regarded as the champions of Japan. He has no doubt that if the empire were searched, much more proficient performers might be found. We entirely agree with him. But it is a Roland for an Oliver. Precisely the same point has already been made with reference to the Yokohama foreigners, or let us say, Englishmen, for apparently only one nationality will be represented. The British residents of Yokohama do not pretend to be champions in any sense. They are always ready to stand up for the old country, and do the best that in them lies, but when they look at the records they can not labour under any delusion as to their own prowess. We advise the Japanese also to consult the records. A friendly trial of skill in Yokohama is all very well. It has its uses apart from the mere question of athletics, and whichever side wins will have the hearty applause of the other. But if the Japanese swimmers want to measure themselves fairly and squarely by foreign standards, they have a much more infallible test than that furnished by a swimming match with the representatives of a small community at a treaty port. They have only to consult their watches. Their times will settle the question unerringly.

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

AMERICA, JAPAN AND ENGLAND.

There is evidently a strong impression in Japan that the Tokyo Government has taken a decided line about the Philippines, and that this country and Great Britain will be drawn closely together by the event. Japan would be more than human if she failed to welcome this opportunity of paying off some of the Liaotung score. Russia, France and Germany combined to deprive her of the fruits of her victory in Manchuria, and there are strong indications that the same league of Powers will interfere to prevent America from dealing freely with the territory she has conquered in the Philippines. The Japanese are persuaded—we derive our idea of their views from the editorial utterances of the Fiji Shimpo, the Kokumin Shimbun, the Yomiuri Shimbun, the Hochi Shimbun, the Asahi Shimbun and the Nippon—that the peace of the East will not be promoted, or the balance of power preserved, either if the Philippines are left in Spain's hands, or if they are handed over to Aguinaldo and his followers, or if any European Power except England is allowed to have a controlling voice in their disposal. There is no special wish that the islands should pass into British possession. That alternative would be unhesitatingly preferred, however, to the occupation of the whole or any part of them by Germany, France or Russia. It is not that any sentiment of hostility is entertained towards the last three Powers, apart from the not unnatural desire to "get even with them" in return for Liaotung. It is that all three are credited with designs of territorial aggrandisement, the prosecution of which is not consistent with the peace of the East. What the Japanese seem to desire before everything is that America should annex the Philippines. They regard the presence of the United States in the Far East as a guarantee of peaceful commercial development and a bulwark against arbitrary aggression. They think, too, that a certain responsibility devolves on America. She drew the sword in the cause of right and she must not sheathe it in such a manner as to promote disorder. It is true that she entered the lists as the champion of an oppressed people. But it is also true that she commenced the War, and the duty devolves upon her of bringing it to a conclusion which shall not involve the danger of other wars. Japan does not want the Philippines for herself, but she is determined that they shall not pass into the possession, or lie at the mercy, of Russia, Germany or France. Great Britain's policy is identical with Japan's in this respect. It is essential, however, to guard against another surprise. The Liaotung lesson must not be forgotten. Before any triple alliance can step into the field in connexion with the Philippines, an alliance to oppose it must be concerted and ready. Evidently the leading vernacular Journals think that these facts are recognised, and have become the basis of active procedure, by the Foreign Office in Tokyo.

LIBERALS & THE PROGRESSISTS.

The friction between the Liberals and Progressists seemed to have been transformed from a mere suggestion in the columns of hostile journals to a fact recognised in the columns of their own organs, Count Itagaki's attitude towards the scheme of reforms emanating from the Committee of the Constitutional Party is represented by the Yomiuri Shimbun as almost defiant. He says that if the Committee's programme is submitted to the Cabinet merely for purposes of comparison, well and good. But if it is intended to be a document of instructions, then it is a most arbitrary invasion of the Cabinet's administrative rights. In short, if the Party imagines that it may formulate a decision for the Cabinet's guidance, it is arrogating intolerable authority.

Every sober-minded person will endorse Count Itagaki's view, we imagine. But the Yomiuri Shimbun is an organ of the Progressists, and the Yomiuri's way of presenting the Liberal leader's opinions is distinctly calculated to ruffle the susceptibilities of the Progressists. Besides, there is much significance in the fact that the Yomiuri should separate Count Itagaki from the rest of the Cabinet in such a manner. Why should he be singled out as the particular Minister to denounce the Party's arbitrariness?

The problem of the Metropolitan Police Board also threatens to become a source of dissension. Count Itagaki is uncompromisingly opposed to abolishing the Board. He even talks of extending the system from Tokyo to Osaka. He is strongly supported in that view by the Tokyo Shimbun, the organ of the Liberals. But several Progressist organs have stoutly advocated the advisability of abolishing the Board, and the Fiji Shimpo now joins its voice to theirs.

The transfer of Mr. Abe Hiroshi from the Governorship of Toyama Prefecture to that of Chiba, has not thrown oil upon the troubled water. Mr. Abe was formerly Governor of Chiba, but was moved elsewhere for reasons that do not seem to have enhanced his reputation. His restoration to Chiba is supposed to have been effected at Count Itagaki's suggestion and has been severely criticised by the Progressist organs, who contend that it was a step dictated solely by party considerations. The Tokyo Shimbun—the Liberal organ—replies quite angrily. Count Itagaki, it says, is not guided by party considerations in selecting or recommending officials. Such accusations are intolerable, and if a spirit of that kind is to dictate the utterances of the Progressist organs, relations had better be severed without delay.

JAPANESE RAILWAYS & FOREIGN CAPITALISTS

The news circulated some time ago to the effect that the Formosan Railway Company had successfully negotiated a loan of fifteen million yen from a British firm, evidently created quite a flutter in Japanese railway circles. Company after company has come forward since then and tried to effect a similar operation, but one and all seem to have experienced great difficulty. The Boso Railway Company, the Kobu, the Kishiu, the Hokuyetsu, the Sanyo and the Nippon are all said to be carrying on negotiations, and it is supposed that if they succeed, their example will be followed by many others. Meanwhile the Boso Company's affairs are subjected to the operation of a very inconvenient search-light by one of the vernacular newspapers (the Chiuo). It is a rather tedious story, but we shall tell it in as few words as possible. The Boso Railway connects the provinces of Kazusa, and Awa. Its capital is 1,200,000 yen, in shares of 50 yen each, which are now fully paid up. The shares, however, are not worth more than 25 yen in the open market, and the banks will not advance money against them. The section of the line from Chiba to Ichinomiya is already open to traffic, and the section from Ichinomiya to Katsura (19 miles) is under construction. In March, 1897, a general meeting of the shareholders sanctioned a loan of 90,000 yen, in response to the representations of the directors, who pointed out, that in consequence of the sudden appreciation of commodities, the work of construction could not be completed. It is now alleged that this ninety thousand yen has disappeared, though not a moiety of it has been spent on the railway. It is further alleged that an additional loan of 350,000 yen was subsequently contracted—200,000 from the Mitsubishi Bank, 50,000 from the Imperial Industrial Bank, and the remainder from capitalists in Chiba, and that only a fraction of it appears in the Railway's accounts of expenditure. In short, a direct charge of dishonestly alienating the Company's money is preferred against the directors. The idea is that several of the directors have been endeavouring to utilize their connexion with the Railway in a questionable manner. They have been lending its money to a maritime carrying company organized by themselves to work in conjunction with the line. This part of the story is told in considerable detail, but our readers will probably prefer not to be troubled with more than the bare outlines. If the facts stated by the Chiuo be correct—as to which we, of course, offer no opinion—the carrying company (Kaiun-goshi Kaisha) has been losing steadily at the rate of from 300 yen to 500 yen monthly ever since it commenced business in March, 1896; its capital of 50,000 yen was dissipated long ago, and it has lived by borrowing money from the directors of Boso Railway, the last loan being a sum of 70,000 yen, nominally for the purpose of dredging the Miyako River, a work upon which only a tenth of the amount has been spent. It is altogether a very bad showing, but that implicit reliance can be placed on the Chiuo's story is doubtful, for after relating all the above

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

particulars and several others in the minutest and most circumstantial manner, the Japanese journal winds up with the naïve remark that doubtless the directors will come round carrying some version of their own, which it will publish in due course. One imagines that steps would have been taken to obtain the directors' version before the Chiuo admitted the narrative to its columns, but our contemporary evidently knows that one side of a story makes the best tale. We may add here that the Yorozu Choho makes an attempt to discredit the Kobu Railway company also by alleging that the directors have been misappropriating its funds. Meanwhile the Minister of State for Home Affairs has been asked to say what form of security a Japanese railway company may lawfully offer to a foreign capitalist, and his Excellency's answer is awaited with considerable interest.

The Directors of the Boso Railway have lost no time in replying to the sweeping charges brought against them by the Chiuo Shimbun. They deny emphatically that there has been any improper alienation of the Company's funds or any chicanery whatever. Of course they do not enter into particulars. Declaring the whole indictment to be false, they naturally see no occasion to discuss it in detail. They admit, however, that the affairs of the Company are in disorder, though they claim that the thorough reforms now in progress will completely remedy that defect. The Chiuo makes a merit of publishing this rejoinder, and alleges that its own accuracy is vindicated by the Directors' admission of disorder. Opinions differ. Our own notion is, first, that the Chiuo's fairer and more prudent course would have been to seek information from the Directors before giving publicity to a sweeping accusation against them; and secondly, that there is all the difference in the world between an embarrassed state of affairs and the deliberate misappropriation of trust money.

The Boso Railway Company is in an interesting condition just at present, and as no one knows what its affairs may bring forth, we are devoting more attention to it than it would deserve under ordinary circumstances. Our own belief is that the management of Japanese railway companies leaves much—a great deal, in fact—to be desired, and that by not employing the best agents to aid them, the shareholders are losing large sums of money. At all events, railway enterprise in Japan will soon find itself in a cul-de-sac unless foreign capitalists come to its assistance, and the best way to promote that consummation is to give all possible publicity to their affairs. We have had occasion to repeat the injurious accusations brought against the Directors of the Boso Company by the Chiuo Shimbun, and we have had occasion to refer to the general but emphatic denial made by the Directors. We now learn that the Company held an extraordinary meeting on the forenoon of the 11th instant, when 144 shareholders attended, representing 16,559 shares out of a total of 24,000. The purpose of the meeting was to appoint new Directors, in lieu of the old, who tendered their resignation. But of course the shareholders had a great many questions to ask. They wanted to know, in the first place, why the Directors resigned, and it must be confessed that the answers they received were not very satisfactory. Their general drift was that the Directors were too much occupied with other business. Then the shareholders asked whether it was true that locomotives and other properties of the Company had been sold, and the Directors replied in the affirmative, explaining that, owing to the difficulty of collecting calls on shares, unexpectedly heavy expeditures and the necessity of paying for imported materials, recourse to that device had been unavoidable. Finally, the meeting decided to appoint an investigating committee, with instructions to report within two months, and to postpone acceptance of the Directors' resignations pending receipt of the report.

It is alleged that when Baron Suyematsu held the portfolio of Communications, he decided that the Railway Regulations must be amended, in the sense of allowing foreigners to become shareholders. A draft of the amendments was in course of preparation when the Cabinet went out of office. Mr. Hayashi, the new Minister, is said to hold precisely the same views as Baron Suyematsu on this subject, so that the latter's draft will, in all probability, be used without alteration for submission to the Diet next session. It will be necessary, however, that the opinion of the Railway Council should be taken before going to the Diet and there is a strong probability that the military members of the Council will raise some objection. In military circles there is an idea that railways likely to be required for strategical purposes should be the property solely of the people of the country. It is a somewhat chimerical anxiety, seeing that full provision for the unobstructed use of a road by the State can always be inserted in the charter and enforced by the Government. Still, we do not pretend to say that the Japanese are the only people to whom such apprehensions would present themselves.

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION.

The operation of the new law for the better regulation of elections has already brought about a fiasco, though whether the blame rests with the law itself or with the manner of its application there appears to be some uncertainty. One of its provisions interdicts the giving or taking of money, goods, bills of exchange, or other articles of value in connexion with electioneering. A few days ago, agents canvassing on behalf of Mr. Hoshi Toru in Tochigi Prefecture distributed newspapers to the voters and others. The police held that newspapers belong to the category of "other articles of value," and the consequence is that some four thousand persons are in the position of law-breakers. It seems a very absurd incident. If the framers of the law intended it to bear such an interpretation, they showed a great lack of practical knowledge. We suspect, however, that the police have misconstrued the provision in question. Speaking generally, however, foreign critics will agree that the new law is excessively stringent. It certainly could not be enforced in Great Britain.

THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

It is pointed out, rightly we venture to think, that the dispute about the portfolio of Foreign Affairs reflects very little credit on the disputants. There would be no difficulty in understanding a difference of opinion, and in appreciating a warm controversy, if the question concerned the national good; if the interests of the country were at stake. But no one pretends for a moment that such considerations have anything to do with the matter. No better Minister can be found than Count Okuma. He is the man upon whom the choice of the people would certainly fall under existing circumstances. Hence the trouble has its origin simply in office-seeking, and has become serious owing to the jealousy between the two sections of the Constitutional Party.

Vernacular journals assert that an agreement has been come to between the Liberals and the Progressists on the above subject, and that a candidate not belonging to either party but acceptable to both, has been selected. They refrain, however, from giving his name. We are not accustomed to such reticence on the part of our Japanese contemporaries, and we venture to think that the explanation is very simple, namely, ignorance. At present, the question appears to be who shall succeed Mr. Hoshi Toru at Washington rather than who shall succeed Count Okuma at the Foreign Office.

Another busily circulated rumour is that the Government has decided to appoint ambassadors to England, America, Russia, France and Germany; that the change will be made from the beginning of next year and that the promotion is not likely to fall to any of the Japanese Representatives now in those countries. The people responsible for this story appear to forget that Japan can not accredit an ambassador to a foreign Power unless the latter agrees to send an official of similar grade to Tokyo. We have not heard that any negotiations in that sense have taken place.

Several Tokyo journals allege that the question which of late has caused so much friction between the Liberals and Progressists—the question of the portfolio of Foreign Affairs—, seems to have been amicably settled, both parties having agreed that the post should be given to Mr. Ebara Soroku, a prominent and much respected member of the Liberal Party. But Mr. Ebara declined to accept it, and for a moment the trouble appeared likely to be renewed, when happily another expedient was hit upon, namely, the transfer of Mr. Ozaki Yukio from the Department of Education to the Foreign Office, and the appointment of Mr. Ebara to the vacancy thus created. It is added that this plan suggested itself originally to Count Okuma, but the Liberals were determined to have the Foreign Office and nothing else. Perhaps we ought to explain that the fact of several Tokyo journals' simultaneously publishing an item of news does not necessarily lend to the intelligence the force generally attached to concurrent testimony. It simply means, in the majority of cases, that the item has been supplied by a news agency.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE NATIONAL UNIONISTS.

The tide of change has swept past the National Unionists and left them stranded on a terra incognita. No one knows now what flag they fight under, or to what principles they cling. They can not be regarded as enemies of government by party, for they took an active part in bridging over the chasm between the old and the new when they joined hands with the Liberals to support the Ito Cabinet. That was the co-operation era. Every one understood the issue to which it pointed. The National Unionists understood. But they had no sympathy, apparently, with the cause that led to a rupture between the Liberals and the Cabinet. So far as we know, that cause was, proximately, the Cabinet's reluctance to grant portfolios, already occupied, to leaders of the Liberal Party. There was no reason why the National Unionists should support such a claim. They did not support it; their allies broke away, and they found themselves isolated, numerically insignificant and morally uninfluential. Thirty candidates will appeal to the constituencies in the National Unionists' interest on the 15th instant. Not more than twelve or thirteen are expected to be successful. It is evident that the Party is moribund. Rumour says that its leaders will forestall the death-blow by voluntary dissolution, after the elections. They will be acting wisely. The name Kokumin Kyohai has an unpleasant sound in the ears of Liberals. But out of what elements is the new opposition to be formed? There must be an opposition. Nothing is so intolerably wearisome as perpetual agreement. The Constitutionalists can not be called exactly a mutual admiration society, yet they are sufficiently in unison to be threatened with the monotony of agreement, and unless there is some fire of opposition to keep their elements fused, the cooling process will soon commence with disastrous results. How is the opposition to be organized? Under what leaders? On what platform? Undoubtedly we are assisting at one of the most interesting developments of Japan's political progress.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

We have received the following letter:—

IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT OF JAPAN.
Lighthouse Office.
Yokohama, August 5th, 1898.

DEAR SIR,—I am instructed to enclose herewith notice and to inform you that the advertising in your paper as well as the other English papers, the notification, re the lighthouses, &c., hitherto in use, have been discontinued and that in future the printed English translation of the notification as is issued, will be distributed to all concerned.

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,
K. TAKATSU.

This appears to us to be a very ill-advised departure. The saving will be a mere bagatelle, and the consequence of diminished publicity may be disastrous. It seems to us quite impossible that the printed English translation should be "distributed to all concerned." Who are "concerned?" How is the Lighthouse Office to carry out such a programme? By this journal exceptionally favourable rates have always been accorded to the Lighthouse Office, and the utmost care has been taken not only to give prominence to the advertisements, but to call special attention to them by means of editorial paragraphs. Shipping folk, by long years of usage, have learned to look to the newspapers for information on these highly important subjects, and if they do not find the information there, they will assume that it is not to be found anywhere. We certainly can not be a party to these abrupt and, as we venture to think, highly perilous innovations. We consider it our duty to continue the publication of the notices, leaving the Lighthouse Office to profit by their gratuitous insertion.

THE "KAWA BIRAKI" FRACAS.

Vernacular newspapers report a collision between officers of H.B.M.S. Narcissus and some Japanese pleasure-seekers, on the occasion of the River-opening Fete in Tokyo last Saturday. The officers—they are spoken of as "officers" but may really have been warrant officers or even blue-jackets, for if they were in plain clothes, a distinction of that kind would scarcely be made by Japanese newspapers—the officers numbered five, and were accompanied by a Japanese friend and an interpreter. They were in a boat on the river enjoying themselves, when another boat came up, having on board Mr. Kasai Yosaburo, manager of the Hokkaido Life Insurance Company, several jinrikisha-drawers and some dancing girls. Mr. Kasai and his companions are said to have been "elevated"—not to use a stronger term—, and finding something very entertaining in the behaviour of the British officers, they began to jeer at them. The officers replied by throwing the stumps of their cigars at the jeerers, and the latter retaliated with bottles, cups, tea-pots and articles of that class. The others, of course, did not receive this shower unmoved, and a potting match ensued, with the result that two persons were wounded in the Japanese boat and three in the foreign. As to the character of the wounds nothing is reported by the Tokyo press, but inasmuch as the police are said to have taken away the injured men for medical aid, it is to be feared that the hurts were not trifling. Mr. Kasai managed to abscond, but was arrested the following morning at 6 a.m. when returning to his inn.

It appears that Mr. Kasai had among his boat-companions on the 6th instant, when the fracas occurred with some officers of the Narcissus, a police inspector named Kajiya Katsutaro, and that the latter has now been dismissed from the service, the Authorities being of the opinion that his failure to interfere in the cause of peace and good order was a flagrant dereliction of duty. The Mainichi Shimbun is disposed to criticise this procedure as partial. It argues that as there were wounded persons on each side, both parties must have been to blame, and the Japanese, therefore, ought not to be punished until full investigation has been made. It occurs to us as not improbable that full investigation has already been made. At all events, the accounts given by the vernacular press showed that Mr. Kasai and his companions were emphatically to blame. It was they that commenced the trouble by jeering at the Englishmen, and it was they that first introduced a dangerous element into the affair by throwing bottles and cups. If the story told by the Tokyo journals be correct, Mr. Kasai and his companions deserve to be punished, and we trust that they will be.

A TYPHOON.

The Central Meteorological Observatory at the beginning of the week predicted the advent of a typhoon. On the 1st instant, the barometer began to fall in Formosa, and a change of weather set in, with rain gradually increasing in violence. Reports from the south of the island were to the effect that a rapid fall of the mercury took place on the 3rd instant, and that 63 millimeters of rain fell in 8 hours. The centre of disturbance travelled thence to the Riukiu Islands, and on the afternoon of the 5th the reading of the barometer at Ishizaki-jima was 738 mil., and a gale was blowing from the north-east. At 10 p.m. that night the mercury fell 16 mil., and the wind and rain increased in violence, 207 millimeters of rain falling in 8 hours. The reports of the Observatory appear to have been mangled in their transfer to the columns of the vernacular newspapers, so that we are unable to discover exactly what the storm did. The gist of the matter, however, is that instead of holding its original direction and travelling from Ishigaki-jima towards Kiushiu, the centre assumed a new route on the afternoon of the 6th instant, and travelling past the north of Formosa at a speed of about 10 miles an hour—not the velocity of the wind but the rate of the storm's motion—, entered China southward of Shanghai and headed in the direction of Ningpo. The warning addressed to Kiushiu has therefore been rescinded, but the Meteorological experts point out that as the action of these storms can not be predicted with any assurance, there may be another equally radical change of direction in the present case, and it would therefore be unwise to abate all precautions until four or five days have passed. If the storm has bid us a final good-bye, we owe it a thankful farewell, for without coming north to disturb us, it gave us 24 hours of delightful and most refreshing coolness. Indeed, the incident illustrates the enormous extent of the area affected by these violent atmospheric disturbances. The typhoon never got closer to us than the Riukiu Islands, yet it made itself distinctly felt during three days. Throughout the 7th, there was a perpetual rumbling of distant thunder with fitful showers, succeeded by that particularly ominous condition of the air when the most distant noises sound sharp and clear as in a mountain solitude. On the 8th, we had a cloudy sky with rare glints of sunshine and ragged flecks of rain like little pieces torn by a tempest from the face of the ocean. Then followed a night of invigorating coolness, and then, as the storm turned in its tracks and headed away to the south and west, the heavy heat of the dog-days once more re-asserted itself. Yet the centre of the storm never got within 700 miles of Yokohama and Tokyo.

The following telegram, dated the 7th inst., despatched by the Governor-General of Formosa, has reached the Home Office:—About 2 o'clock on the morning of the 7th instant, the weather suddenly became unsettled and the wind gradually increased to the force of a typhoon: the wind was accompanied by heavy rains. About 10 o'clock the same morning, the typhoon passed away, though the rain continued to fall. The Tamsui River, which runs alongside of Taipeh city, overflowed its banks and almost the whole of the streets were flooded. About 759 houses were destroyed and 31 partially damaged, and some 11 lives were lost. Taipeh Prison was seriously damaged, but the prisoners are safe.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

According to information sent to the Chugai Shogyo, the flood-water reached the roofs of the buildings at some places.

THE RICE HARVEST.

The prospects of the rice harvest are said to be very good. Accurate estimates are not yet possible, of course, but information collected officially from various quarters is interpreted to indicate a probable yield of 41,310,000 koku, as against an average crop of 37,340,000 koku. Last year's crop was only 33,000,000 koku. It follows, therefore, that if this forecast be verified by events, the farmers will find themselves, at the end of the year, richer by about 124 million yen than they were at the end of 1897, and 59 million yen richer than they would be at the end of an average year. These figures are suggestive. They show how insignificant the question of increasing the Land Tax is compared with the quality of the harvest. Count Inouye's project would have added 18 million yen to the tax paid by owners of rice lands. In other words, the difference between a good crop and an average crop of rice is 4½ times greater than the additional tax that Count Inouye would have imposed. Another point is worth noting. The value of 41 million koku of rice, at 15 yen per koku, is 615 million yen, and the tax upon agricultural land is 36 millions, in round numbers. Hence the tax is $\frac{1}{17}$ of the rice crop, omitting all the other produce of the soil—barley, wheat, millet, mulberry, tea, root crops, cotton, hemp, tobacco, &c. Yet there are men who venture to tell the Japanese land-owner that he pays as much to the State as he did in feudal days when the daimyo took $\frac{2}{5}$ of the rice crop. Two-fifths of 40 million koku of rice represent 240 million yen, and the tax is 36 millions.

THE FORMOSAN REBELS

Formosa is truly a most disheartening place. A few days ago, intelligence reached us that several bands of insurgents had made act of submission and that at length the sun of tranquillity was really rising above the horizon. The Governor General, too, in a speech delivered by him on the 27th ultimo, spoke as though the reign of good order would soon be established throughout the island. But now comes a telegram from Taipeh, dated the 8th instant, saying that a body of Japanese troops was engaged for three days attacking the rebels in Gashizan; and conveying the impression that this onset did not result in any signal success. A general advance, we read, was make by the Japanese on the 5th instant, but encountering desperate opposition, they were unable to hold their ground, and had to fall back upon Hoinchu on the 7th instant, having repulsed the insurgents and burned their village. Two officers, five privates, and an official of the local office of the district were killed on the Japanese side, and the wounded numbered eight. The list of casualties is not very heavy, but the report indicates unlooked-for capacity of resistance on the side of rebels.

FORMOSA.

Formosan affairs are now a good deal en evidence, not only because of the sweeping administrative reforms recently effected, but also because of some statements made by the Governor-General after a dinner given by him to the principal Civil Officials on the 27th ultimo. His Excellency said that the necessary administrative reforms having now been effected, attention must be directed to the development of the Island's material resources. He does not seem to have elaborated that point at all, but to have passed on at once to the question of the railway. He declared himself most anxious to see it constructed. If, however, the Government undertook the work, the Diet's consent must be obtained as a preliminary, and there would be a delay of probably one or two years. If, on the other hand, foreign capital could be procured, it would be possible to proceed at once with the construction.

We may observe, in parenthesis, that this difficulty about foreign capital is very inexplicable. According to all accounts, Messrs. Peacock & Company are perfectly willing to provide the money if satisfactory arrangements can be made about its repayment. Surely that is an elementary condition? Neither the Governor-General nor the Directors of the Formosan Railway Company imagine, we presume, that British capitalists are going to furnish millions of yen unless they can obtain some guarantee for the recovery of the money. The fact is that the Japanese are not behaving in a practical manner about this railway problem. It will not do merely to say, the law does not forbid foreigners to hold shares in Japanese railways, or to have a Japanese railway hypothecated to them as security; therefore such privileges are presumably enjoyable by foreigners. That kind of constructive potentiality is altogether too vague where hard cash is in question. There must be something tangible; something in black on white. The alternative is for the Government itself to borrow money, pledging the credit of the State. But the Government will presently have quite enough borrowing to do on its own account.

Lieut.-General Baron Kodama's allusion to developing the material resources of Formosa is what principally attracts attention in Japan. The finances of the Island are dealt with in special accounts and do not appear in the State Budget. But a considerable grant in aid has to appear in the Budget. Count Matsukata, in his Estimates for 1898-9, put the figure at 13 million yen. Marquis Ito, in his Estimate for 1899-1900, put it at 11 millions. The present Cabinet is said to contemplate 10 millions. No wonder that Japanese publicists are beginning to ask how long this state of affairs is to continue. The revenue at present is derived from (1) Government Industries and Government Properties; (2) Internal Taxes; (3) Customs Duties, and (4) Miscellaneous Sources. Baron Kodama proposes to add to the revenue obtained from Government Industries by establishing a monopoly of table salt, which will yield 640,000 yen, and to the revenue obtained from Internal Taxes by making the Land Tax payable in money instead of grain, by which means there will be an increase of 900,000 yen. But 1½ million yen, together with the improved yield of the Customs after the new Tariff goes into force, will still leave a large deficit, and the question is, what then? The Yomiuri Shimbun makes some bold suggestions: stop the import of opium and grow poppies as a State monopoly; make State monopolies of the camphor industry, of gold dust gathering, and so on. The Yomiuri seems to forget that State monopolies are the most costly affairs in the world in proportion to the profits they produce.

What appears to us to have been the most interesting portion of the Governor-General's speech was his allusion to the aborigines (seiban). He described them as a serious obstacle to progress, and said that he had asked a certain foreigner what other Governments would do with such folk under similar circumstances, but the foreigner's reply had not been conclusive. Give these aborigines wine, and they drank it with all the good will in the world, but when it was finished, they turned and murdered the donors. How were they to be treated? Should they be cleared out of the country? They were wild animals with human faces. Should they be handled like beasts? "How would you, as a Christian, proceed towards them?" he had inquired. But the foreigner had confessed himself unable to reply.

These are certainly very significant utterances. They are surprising, too. We did not imagine that the aborigines justified such a description. In the south they are said to be quiet, tractable people. It is only in the northerly districts, where the camphor distillers have encroached upon their territory that they show themselves truculent and bloodthirsty. So, at least, we have always understood.

The Governor-General added that the north of the Island would soon be completely pacified, and the south also, he hoped, before long. Speaking of immigration, he said that the Western coast was pretty thickly settled, but that there was much room in the south and east. He referred also to Kelung harbour. The committee of experts had recommended that the deep parts should be dredged and the shallow filled in, but such a plan would reduce the area of the harbour, a result which he was very anxious to avoid, in view of the importance of the anchorage. His own idea was that the whole harbour should be dug out. The matter was under consideration.

THE SERVICE OF TRAINS FROM YOKOHAMA TO KAMKURA AND ZUSHI.

As the Railway authorities have always shown a courteous desire to be informed of points affecting the public convenience, we ask permission to direct their attention to a very unwelcome feature in the service of trains from Tokyo to Yokosuka via Yokohama, as shown in the schedule issued on the 1st instant. There is a large passenger traffic during the summer months from Tokyo and Yokohama to Kamakura and Zushi. As to the Japanese sections of the traffic we have nothing to say, of course, but with regard to foreigners we are assured that there are fully twenty regular travellers during the summer, to say nothing of casual tourists. On the completion of the double line, it was expected that the service of trains would be improved, and the disappointment caused by the new schedule is proportionately great. For, according to the present arrangement, there is one train less than before in the evening, at the very time when people from Yokohama want to return to their sea-side homes. Nine trains leave Tokyo between 7.25 a.m. 1.40 p.m., but there is not one between 3.25 a.m. and 6 p.m., nor does the 6 p.m. train call at Yokohama. In short, for people who want to go from Yokohama to Kamakura or Zushi no train is available between 4.20 p.m. and 8.30 p.m. The former is, of course, too early for business men, and the latter is much too late for anyone desiring to get to Zushi or Kamakura in time for dinner. According to the old schedule, a train left Tokyo at 4.55 p.m., calling at Yokohama at 5.50, an arrangement which suited the foreign community very well. We have no doubt that had these circumstances presented themselves to the Railway Authorities, a more convenient schedule would have been drafted.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Another point which we may take this opportunity to notice is that the accommodation for first-class passengers from Yokohama during the summer months is very inadequate. That is a fact of which the Railway officials must often have taken cognisance, but whether the cause be insufficiency of rolling stock or some other defect not easily appreciable, no measures are adopted to remedy the inconvenience. Tickets are issued apparently without reference to the available accommodation, and although there is an evident disposition to make things comfortable, it often happens —as it did on the evenings of the 2nd or 3rd instant—that while only one first-class carriage is forthcoming, the number of passengers would suffice to fill two, the result being that some have to stand up and others to seek places in second or third-class cars. These are small matters, easily remedied, but their neglect greatly affects the comfort of passengers and the reputation of the Railway Authorities.

THE AMERICAN-JAPANESE BANK.

Messrs. Kaneko Kentaro and Sugiyama Shigemaro have not abandoned their project of establishing a big bank with the aid of foreign money, in order to supply the present dearth of floating capital. So, at least, the Nichi Nichi Shimbun says. Mr. Sugiyama paid a visit to America last year to investigate the chance of enlisting cōoperation in the States. He was thoroughly successful, but he failed to convince the Tokyo statesmen that things were as favourable as he imagined. Finally he induced the Ministry to telegraph to the States for information. The answer confirmed his report in every respect, and the scheme seemed likely to become an accomplished fact when the political vicissitudes of the past eight months commenced. But the projectors think that what is deferred is not necessarily lost. The Hispano-American war has been a serious obstacle. It is drawing to a close now, however, and the talk of a bank is reviving.

PARTY PLATFORMS IN JAPAN.

The general election took place on Wednesday, but very small regard was at first paid to it by the vernacular press. The organs of the Constitutional Party were probably disposed to invite as little attention as possible to the struggle, and their opponents found only one criticism. It was, however, a pregnant criticism. Where, they ask, is another example to be found of a political party's going to the polls without any declared platform. It is certainly curious, when one comes to think of it. In Occidental countries a candidate for election takes a great deal of trouble to let his constituents know what they are to vote for. Very often he never discovers his own convictions, or knows that he has any particular convictions, until the moment for preparing his hustings' speech arrives, but he is exceedingly particular to convince the electors that he possesses most decided opinions and that their opinions are his. The Japanese, however, are a law unto themselves. Occidental precedents do not concern them. We are not aware that a single Constitutionalist has published an address to his constituency. At all events, if he has, no vernacular newspaper has noticed it. On the other hand, as to the assertion that no precedent exists for such reticence, we are disposed to say that there are as many precedents as there have been general elections in Japan. Writing these words with calm reflection and stretching our memory to its utmost limit, we can not give a clear sketch of any platform that was ever presented to the country by any political party in Japan. There have been platforms indeed: no lack of them. But nothing intelligible distinguished one from the other. A general interchange of principles might have been effected without entailing the slightest inconvenience to anybody. Therefore the Constitutionalists may claim that, though their complete silence on the present occasion is a new departure, they are not doing any practical violence to the precedents of the past five elections. The retort is not complete, however. Hitherto the constituencies have not felt any want of explicit information. A big fight was being waged before their eyes—the fight for party cabinets against clan ministries. They had a vague notion that tenure of power by the latter was connected with various abuses which would be redressed as soon as the former were victorious. They voted therefore to secure that victory, without making any importunate scrutiny into the nature of the abuses. The victory is now won, however, and the time has come to talk openly of the abuses. But that is exactly what the Constitutionalists do not want to do. They know that so soon as their opinions are applied to the touchstone of constructive statesmanship, a great many different colours will come out. Count Okuma, when he went out of office last year, said that what the country waited for, what he counted most desirable in the interests of representative government, was the appearance of some broad and easily intelligible issues, on either side of which the parties might range themselves definitely. But it is natural that neither Count Okuma nor his followers should chose the hustings as a place for shaping such issues. Undisturbed tenure of power is what they want at present—that and nothing else. Do what they may, the elections are destined to give a heavy shock to their cohesion, for it is evident that in several districts the candidates of the former Liberals and the former Progressists, ignoring the fact that they are now all Constitutionalists, intend to fight against each other with no stint of their old bitterness, and out of such contests there will grow something more than momentary estrangement. It would be expecting too much, therefore, to look for definite declarations of policy at this juncture. The fact is that the nation has reached only the threshold of party government. The so-called "parties" have obtained control of the administration, but have not yet obtained control of themselves. There must be another differentiation and another integration.

THE ELECTIONS.

The general elections took place on the 10th instant, and seem to have passed off without any rioting or deeds of violence. A few returns are to hand, but it would be useless to publish them as the fragmentary information they convey is practically meaningless. It appears to be universally believed that at least two-thirds of the constituencies will return the candidates of the Constitutional Party, and that the Cabinet will find itself supported in the next session of the Diet by an overwhelming majority in the Lower House.

Unquestionably the good order that has marked these elections must be partly placed to the credit of the Government. The Imperial Ordinance issued in the time of the Ito Cabinet, forbidding the carrying of weapons of any kind either when canvassing or during the polling, and providing penalties for intimidation in whatsoever form, was a useful measure, and its effects were distinctly felt in the elections last spring. The present Ministry has gone farther in the same direction, and may congratulate itself on the success that has attended its efforts to preserve the peace. At the same time, the absence of opposition must be remembered. With the exception of a few constituencies, the Constitutionalists have had the field to themselves, and under such circumstances there ought not to have been much reason for commotion.

But if tranquillity and good order have characterised the elections, there is not a little discontent about the operation of the recently issued regulations for the prevention of corrupt practices. The provisions of the new law are extraordinarily strict. No legislation of corresponding severity exists, or has ever existed, in an Occidental country, and if such regulations were put into operation in England, the number of malefactors at every election would be legion. But the discontent in Japan is directed not against the stringency of the law so much as against the manner of applying it. Unfortunately the offenders against its provisions have in almost every case been opponents of the Constitutional Party, and when such "coincidences" occur in a series, credulity is severely taxed. There has been one flagrant case in Tokyo. The candidates for the Kyobashi district were Mr. Yamada, Vice-Minister of Justice, and Mr. Nakazawa, an "Independent." The supporters of the former brought some charge of corrupt practices against the supporters of the latter in connexion with a "tea and talk" (chawa-kai), but the accusation could not be substantiated. By and by, two hundred of the "tea-and-talk" men sent a circular to the electors advising them to vote for Mr. Nakazawa. It was discovered that among the 200 names was included that of a Mr. Tsuchida, who declared that he had not agreed to be a party to the proceeding. He laid an information against the other 199, and the Procurator of the District Court instituted proceedings which appear to have been very ill-judged and severe, for they extended even to the searching of houses, and are said to have had the effect of preventing these 199 constituents from recording their votes. The officials of the police, it is asserted, were strongly opposed to such action, and of course the sufferers do not hesitate to say that the public procurator would never have exhibited this judicious zeal had he not been working in the interests of a Vice-Minister of Justice. Indeed, two or three journals bitterly attack the Constitutionalists, declaring that whereas in former years they loudly denounced Cabinet after Cabinet for improper interference in elections, they have now been themselves guilty of the worst form of interference since they have perverted an Imperial Ordinance into a party weapon. Of course these murmurs must be largely discounted, but it is probable that we shall hear a good deal about them. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun, indeed, predicts that great troubles are in store and speaks in very pessimistic strains of the record of the election, and the Chuo Shimbun avers that instances of the arbitrary application of the new law to party purposes are reported from Osaka, Kyoto and no less than 19 prefectures.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Another severely criticised feature is that the efforts of the leaders of the Constitutional Party failed to prevent contests between candidates set up by the former Liberals and Progressists. It is not to be expected, say the Shogyo Shimbun and the Nichi Nichi, that men who stood opposed to each other at the polls will readily range themselves under the same banner in the Diet. In short, these election contests are the "little rift" which is destined to widen rapidly when the session opens. Besides, there is a wide-spread belief that many candidates, though standing in the nominal interests of the Constitutional Party, and obtaining their seats under its auspices, will break away from it whenever an opportunity offers. Possibly such ratiocinations are prompted mainly by the chagrin of defeat, but surely there is no denying the point made by the Kokumin Shimbun, namely, that the constituencies have returned the Constitutional candidates without knowing anything whatever of their principles; that these candidates, therefore, can not be said to represent public opinion, since they do not avowedly represent any opinion at all; that they can not even be trusted to support the Government, since neither does the Government know their views not do they know the Government's, and that it was very easy for any one to side with them at the polls seeing that he did not commit himself to anything by doing so.

Election day passed very quietly in Yokohama on Wednesday, none of the incidents of early election days—soshi, thronging crowds around the polling booth, and excitement generally—being present. The candidates were Mr. Shimada Saburo, editor of the Mainichi Shimbun, who has represented the constituency since the first session of the Diet, and Mr. Suzumoto Inanosuke, a wealthy tobacco merchant. Mr. Shimada is an old time Kaishin to man and Mr. Suzumoto belonged to the Jiyu to. Although both parties have amalgamated, the electors yesterday preferred to speak of their candidates as still ranged under the old banners, and acted accordingly. Voting began early and by noon day both parties were about equal, then Mr. Shimada Saburo began to forge ahead and by closing time it was an open secret that the old member had again been returned. The ballot boxes were opened this morning and the first count showed the following result:—

Mr. Shimada Saburo	347
Mr. Suzumoto Inanosuke	208
Majority for Shimada	139

PLAIN SPEAKING AND EXCELLENT SENSE.

Count Itagaki's circular instruction with reference to the operation of the Revised Treaties deserves to be strongly applauded. He reminds the people that the exercise of the rights recognised by the Treaties involves the discharge of corresponding duties, and that their attitude towards foreigners not only indicates the degree of the nation's development but also effects its reputation. The time is most opportune for the inculcation of such principles. Count Itagaki has had the happy inspiration which enormously enhances the value of a wise act—the inspiration of knowing the right moment to perform it.

Even more interesting and much more suggestive than this circular of the Home Minister's, is an article prompted by it in the Kokumin Shimbun. Not many years ago, a witty foreigner called the Kokumin-no-tomo—which is a magazine connected with the Kokumin Shimbun—the "cocky man at home." But times have changed. The Kokumin Shimbun is now a conspicuously well-balanced and liberal journal. Among its many excellent articles none, however, seems better conceived or sounder than this latest. Having expressed entire accord with the principles enunciated by Count Itagaki, and approval of his action in publishing them, it goes on to say that a solitary expression of sound views is not sufficient. The Government itself must set the example of displaying towards foreigners the disposition which it urges the people to cultivate. Can it be justly said that officials do act up to these principles? How is it that they hesitate to accord to foreigners the right of owning shares in Japanese railways, and to railway companies the privilege of hypothecating their lines as security for foreign loans? The people desire to have these rights officially recognised, but the Government stands irresolute. Looking back a little, we find that the principle laid down in the Second Article of the Civil Code—the principle that foreigners shall be entitled to enjoy in Japan all private rights not explicitly withheld by law or treaty—has been stoutly opposed by two leading officials of the present Government, Mr. Yamada, Vice-Minister of Justice, and Mr. Komuchi Tomotsune, Director of the Legislative Bureau, who distinguished themselves in the 12th session of the Diet by vehemently advocating that the Article should be amended in the sense of conceding to foreigners such private rights only as are definitively recognised by law or treaty. The people may well be pardoned if, despite such wise and liberal circulars as that of Count Itagaki, they feel dubious about the Government's real sentiments towards foreigners. Everyone understands, of course, that no question exists concerning the views of Counts Okuma and Itagaki, leaders of progress as they are. But there are other conservative, narrow-minded folks who have never disabused their minds of the notion that foreigners are barbarians. The Government has to educate its own followers before it undertakes to instruct the people. Could anything be more antiquated than the notion of certain officials who contend that to allow foreigners to hold shares in railways might deprive the latter of their strategical use in time of war? The railways are in Japan. The Government of Japan wields the powers of a Government. Presumably it can always act in accordance with the exigencies of the Japanese State within Japanese territory, whether it has to deal with foreigners or with its own nationals. More important still is the question of education. The system of education pursued now in Japan has the effect of inculcating a fanatical kind of patriotism. The Japanese child learns to regard all aliens as enemies ab initio. It was remarked recently that the histories used in American schools tended to represent England in a light which could not fail to nurture a spirit of antipathy towards her in the breasts of American youths. The same may be said of Japan's educational system with regard to all outside nations. This circular of Count Itagaki's, considered in conjunction with the teaching of the schools and the views openly enunciated by several officials, suggests that the Authorities are throwing water on the fire with one hand and feeding oil to it with the other. The effect of such a state of affairs with regard to mixed residence is as nothing compared with its effect upon the best interests of the nation.

We venture to call that "plain speaking and excellent sense." The particular kind of scholastic instruction referred to by our contemporary is not within our knowledge, but we have long thought that the schools are guilty of a serious sin of omission in not teaching children that a courteous and considerate demeanour towards strangers is an evidence of civilization, and that a rude and offensive demeanour disgraces the nation. Where do the children learn to cry out Tojin bakka, or Neko papa when a foreigner passes? Why are they never rebuked? If such a mood is sanctioned in the child, what reason have we to expect that he will be different as a man?

THE PORTRAIT OF MR. KEIL.

Mr. Fred. Yates has finished the portrait of Mr. Keil. We say "the" portrait, because we presume that our readers know all about this picture—how a hundred Free-masons of Yokohama and Tokyo, at the initiative of Dr. Eldridge, combined to have a portrait painted of a gentleman to whom Masonry in Japan owes a debt that can never be repaid. Tributes of such a nature are not easy to arrange in a community so mixed as that of Yokohama, but Masonry provides a bond to bind together many nationalities—unhappily not all—and it is thus that Yokohama will come into possession of a portrait which every member of the community will be glad to see handed down to future generations as a memento of an exceptionally generous, kind-hearted and loyal friend.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Mr. Yates has make a remarkable success. The portrait shows Mr. Keil seated, the lower part of the legs not appearing. It is life size—38 inches by 44—; the face is in nearly full view, the hands rest lightly on the arms of the chair, and the general attitude is easy and unconstrained. The masonic character of the picture is indicated by two jewels, one of the 33° round the neck, the other—the decoration of the Court of Honour—on the left breast. The likeness seems to us quite perfect. Some of Mr. Yates' previous work suggested that his signal successes depend on the attributes of his subject to a greater degree than is usual with portrait-painters. Where there is a possibility of making a "picture," he is emphatically happy, but where the subject is incapable of being invested with an artistic halo, however dim, Mr. Yates does not deify it. After all, that fact, when one comes to analyse it, must be placed to the artist's credit rather than to his discredit, for it shows that even in drawing a likeness he introduces the subjective element without which every painting is a mere photograph. This portrait of Mr. Keil will delight everyone. It presents to us the genial, sympathetic face, not merely as we have known it in everyday intercourse, but as we have seen it in happy moments when brethren were "called from labour to refreshment," or when some special opportunity of doing a deed of charity had just been utilized. It is in the genius of the really gifted artist to create these moments merely by studying a face without any knowledge of the emotions reflected by it in the past. That is what Mr. Yates has done, and truly Yokohama will owe him gratitude for enriching it with a really fine work of art as well as with the perpetually living presence of a dear friend and much respected citizen.

With reference to our remarks on the subject of Mr. Keil's portrait, painted by Mr. Fred. Yates, we are asked to state that the list of subscribers is not limited to Yokohama and Tokyo, but will include Kobe and Nagasaki Masons also. It may further be advisable to explain, for the information of any Masons who have not yet been invited to cöoperate, that since obvious circumstances rendered the immediate execution of the work imperative, the picture was painted to the order of a small group of members of the fraternity who became personally responsible, pending the canvass of the Masonic community as a whole, which canvass is now in progress.

ETHNOLOGICAL POSITION OF JAPAN.

If we take the first personal pronoun as used by the Japanese to aid us in determining their ethnological position, we seem to challenge the earliest people of the race to tell us from their own consciousness to what race they belong. What can we learn from the common Japanese words for I—ware and watakuski? Kushi we reject. It is ware and wata that are of importance to us. They may be reasonably compared with the Korean na? Probably an initial ■ has been dropped. The Japanese reached their islands from Korea. The Koreans were the next stratum of population to occupy their peninsula. We naturally expect, therefore, that they are akin in language and in race. The unfortunate rejection of the useful initials p and b by the Japanese—who instead of pi prefer to say hi—hides many important words. Hi, fire in Japanese, is the Korean par (fire) but people do not notice it.

If we recognize the kinship of Koreans and Japanese, where are we to find, in other parts of Asia, clear traces of the same relationship? They appear in the Dravidian tongues. Here will be found the advantage that exists in making use of the first personal pronoun as a witness to early relationship.

In Sir William Hunter's lists of words, he notes for I that the Telugu word is nenu, the Tamil nan, Malayabin nyan, Carnatic nanu. In these words the resemblance to the Korean na, for I, is remarkable. For I the Chinese have ngo. The Tartar languages and the Indo-European languages have me; the Hebrew has anoki; the Koreans, Dravidians, and Japanese have nat or nan or na.

The use of pronouns may certainly be considered a fair mark of kinship. In the case of midzukara—self—what do we find? Midzu (self) is the Korean mom (self). Mom is mi, repeated: me in old Latin is met. When the Koreans took na for I, as the Japanese and Dravidians also did, it was not because me was not in their language. The personal equation was strongly in favour of nat or nan. As a first personal pronoun there was an agreement in the use of the root me, for self. This did not extend to Telugu. In Telugu, I, myself, is nene. The vowel is changed from u to e The resemblance to Telugu fails here. But Mongol has uberon (self) This is the Korean and Japanese word in a modified form. The root kara in midzukara (self) is the Chinese 己 ki (self). In the Tungus language self is manakan; plural, manakar. Here the two roots are combined, just as in Japanese. Judging by such instances there was ancient kinship existing between the Mongol and Tungus tribes and the Japanese. If then we would know by positive research and significant facts the ethnological position of the Japanese, we do well to follow the light of language. Every word is a heirloom several thousand years old. All words are really primæval. So old are words that the same root may be interrogative in one language while it is the sign of the first personal pronoun is another. Me, for example, is with us the accusative of the pronoun I. In Mongol it is the nominative for I. In Japanese it means self. In Chinese and Hebrew, with the vowel ■ or o, it means what, as an interrogative. All this striking variety of senses is caused by the very great length of time during which roots have lived and the perpetual friction to which demonstrative roots have been exposed in the endless intercourse of the market, the court house, and the home.

It is only in pronouns that such changes could occur. For such Japanese words as hone (bone), we are forced to claim kindred with English because the words are identical. This is within the primæval vocabulary. All we claim is not identity in grammar but only in a root. Roots are all older than grammar and have a vitality. Roots live while languages, as such, grow old and die. We can understand then why the Japanese word meshi and food are and must be identical. New words are never made. Everyone who tries to make a new word will fail. He can only repeat an old one in a new shape.

The Japanese sakana (fish) is the Mongol dagas and the Hebrew dag. The philosophy of language does not allow the appearance of new roots. It is impossible that they should occur. The existence of such identical words proves ancient kinship with the Mongol and Hebrew races. What this fact tells us is that the Japanese and Mongols are more nearly related than the Japanese and the Jews. The identity of sakana with dagas extends to two syllables; the identity of sakana with the Hebrew dag (fish) extends to only one. The ancient Japanese must have been akin to the ancient Mongols during a period later than the time when their kinship with Hebrew-speaking peoples was made plain by their possessing similar names of objects.

J. EDKINS.

Shanghai, July 6th, 1898.

JAPANESE COMPANIES.

This is emphatically a time of trial for Japanese joint-stock companies. The day of fat dividends and high-priced shares is past, for the present at all events. There is nothing novel or surprising in the experience. It is an old story that undue haste brings leisurely repentance. Things have moved too fast in Japan, especially since the war with China, and the reaction had to come sooner or later. Most of us were prepared for a much sharper and earlier crisis than that which has overtaken the country, but it must be confessed that if some classes of Japanese show slowness in appreciating the policy which, after all, works best for business interests, they display a very enviable faculty of stopping just short of the brink of excess in all their doings. An excellent give-and-take principle guides them safely past abysses into which more stiff-necked folk would inevitably fall. True, the power of tacking at the supreme moment is not altogether admirable. Too many compromises suggest a moral flabbiness that has obvious disadvantages, and we often think that if departures from the narrow path were allowed to entail their full measure of disaster in this country, men would learn to walk straighter. But the nation avoids a great deal of acute and concentrated suffering by agreeing to spread the pain in reduced doses over a wide area. It will emerge from its commercial and industrial troubles without many serious scars. Meanwhile some of the experiences that the crisis is teaching sound amusingly naïve. The Mainichi Shimbun, for example, has discovered that the destroyers of sound enterprise are speculators in shares; men who do not look upon a tradal or a manufacturing undertaking as an investment, but as an opportunity to gamble. It describes at some length how they inveigle simple-minded capitalists to start an enterprise; take shares in it; bull the market; sell out, and transfer their money and their knavery to some other sphere, leaving their dupes to enjoy the debâcle. One imagines that if this class of gentry has been so fully developed in Japan, the faculty of discounting their devices ought to have grown up pari passú. But that is not the Mainichi's notion.

Captain W. S. Moraes, Assistant Harbour Master at Macao, has been appointed Consul for Portugal at Osaka and Hyogo.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

FOREIGN PRISONERS IN JAPANESE JAILS.

It has been more than once pointed out in these columns that while no one thinks of asking for better treatment, theoretically, for foreigners imprisoned in Japanese jails than Japanese prisoners receive, there is an emphatic feeling that to treat both alike would be to greatly aggravate the punishment in the case of the foreigner. Japanese diet, Japanese modes of living, and Japanese garments are absolutely painful to the average foreigner, just as foreign diet, foreign modes of living, and foreign garments might be painful to the average Japanese. To satisfy the principles of justice the foreign criminal and the Japanese criminal should receive treatment which is absolutely equal when estimated by their respective standards. We have reason to know that leading Japanese statesmen have always recognised that argument, and the Mainichi Shimbun now tells us that it is recognised by the present Cabinet. Even in Western countries the old-time theory was that a criminal deserved no consideration. Hence the system of uniform treatment prevailed—old and young, adults and children, men and women being included in the same category. But modern reformers have radically changed all that, and Japan herself has for many years endeavoured to bring her prison practice into conformity with the enlightened method called the "individual system." It would be entirely contrary to that system to aggravate the punishment of a foreign criminal by adding to the penalty of hard labour and confinement, the pain of unaccustomed and unpalatable diet, uncomfortable clothes and restless nights.

THE FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

From American journals received by the last mail we learn that the fourth biennial convention of the Federation of Women's Clubs opened on June 22nd in Denver. The number of delegates attending the convention and of friends interested in it seems to have been enormous, and doubtless the hackneyed phrase "a great success" may be justly used to describe the affair. The Denver Republican devotes column after column in issue after issue to verbatim reports of the speeches delivered, and to portraits of the leading ladies among the delegates. We can not profess to have read all the speeches. It has been necessary to confine ourselves to partial indulgence in that pleasure. But even on the strength of our limited acquaintance with them, we venture to describe them as remarkable. They are for the most part of a somewhat essay-like character; rhetorical, slightly "hendecasyllabic," and framed with an evident tendency to picturesqueness and effect. Such feature, we suppose, are likely to be presented by ladies' speeches until the world is a good deal older. We quote one of the addresses that own readers may judge for themselves. It is the speech of Mrs. Frank Heller on "Education per se":—

"Upon America's decree, within the brief years, has sprung what we are pleased to call a great system of education. The primitive log school houses, from which the gigantic shadows of a Garfield, a Greeley and a Lincoln stretch away into infinity, gave place to the smart white house with modern equipments. The master has been replaced by the young mistress. In the cities great piles of brick accumulate; the rooms grow dingy and the children pale. They wear glasses and stoop in their walk. There are professors with a small p, and boards with very large B's; and sometimes a teacher with ungentle ways and bad grammar. A dark, ghostly, indefinable shape hoves near to see that these things are so. It sits on the front steps; prowls in the back yards, and is often in the basement with the janitor. We see pupils grow dull and apathetic, or bitter and hard, and are conscious that their risks as to ignorance and knowledge, to body and mind and soul, are tremendous.

"It has been a century of rapid transition. The changes in the educational world rightly understood are the very epitome of all the rest. For education is at once an effect and a cause. A strain from a grand instrument which is no sooner expressed than it in turn becomes creative and breathes forth new and varied harmonies. 'Twas a simple work the fathers had in mind when they thought to give each man his chance at schooling, but we have differentiated in such confusingly complexed ways since then. 'Twas once a simple thing to give the children a supper of bread and milk; but now, alas, who would dream of it; since Helen's milk must be sterilized, and Clarence's must be pepsinized, and Margaret's must be malted; the Borden brand only agrees with Frances, while the twins can digest nothing but Mellin's food and shredded wheat. The day has forever passed when the A, B, C, and multiplication table are to be dealt out in cold, hard, indiscriminate doses. They, too, must be malted, sterilized and pepsinized, or, perhaps, discarded for more wholesome substitutes.

We are puzzled over other matters than reading one's ballot and keeping clear of the poor house. Whole communities are beginning to turn their attention to their misfits. To look about is to understand. My neighbour on the left is a moral hunchback—injured from a fall in his ambition and natural aims in life. He draws a good salary as accountant, but in his breast beats a surgeon's heart that aches at the sight of every lame cur in the street, not more for the creature's pain than his own, that he cannot alleviate it. My right neighbour has a bad case of moral ticketts. Nature made him a mechanic, but his father's prosperity decreed him a lawyer. He has gained one qualification. In that handsome villa across the street dwells a monstrosity. Yes, he pays his bills promptly, but in the whole land there is, I think, no pauper who, from the community, takes so much and gives back so little, of joy, or love, or sunshine, as this strange citizen with his spotless commercial integrity. Few are the happy ones in a long list of acquaintances that are not going through life lame, halt or blind: wearily repressing the song their throats ache to sing; discouraged trying to deliver a message they only half understand; sick of seeming what they are not.

"In these inarticulate, unexpressed members of society that are the community's concern. That the name is legion, is the inevitable result of early schools which we have failed to perfect in season. Such results could not fail to invite the approach of the opposing principle. As early as 1750 came Rousseau's frantic wail for growth's experience as against passive conformity; then comes Pestalozzi's plea to culminate in Froebel's full clarion cry, "All that does not grow out of one's inner being, or that is not one's original feeling and thought, or at least awakens, that oppresses and defaces the individuality of man * * * shall we never cease to stamp human nature, even in childhood like coins, instead of letting it develop itself and grow into form according to the law of life implanted on it by God."

Conservative Englishmen will probably feel a thrill of something different from admiring enthusiasm when they hear of married ladies addressing monster meetings and having their portraits inserted in the public prints. But the times are changing and we have to change with them. It has been a blot upon our civilization that woman's intellectual life should so long have been confined to the narrow sphere out of which the ladies of America are now lifting it, and the conservatism in this matter of the generation that is passing away will doubtless be looked back to by the next with as much astonishment as we old folks feel to-day when we remember that, in the England of our youth, little boys had to climb through the soot of chimnies and nearly naked women were harnessed like beasts of burden to trucks in coal mines. We are bound to say, too, that among the six columns of these speeches which we have read, incomparably the most stilted, the most posture-striking, and the most frothy is that of one of the only two male orators that spoke, Governor Adams, who opened the convention. He set out by declaring that in the mountains of Central Africa Livingstone found a tribe who wrote over the door of every one of their huts, "she ruleth here," and he referred to the fact as a proof that "savage instinct and impulse grasped a principle of equality and justice which it had taken ages of Christian civilization to discover." That is an excellent specimen of the tinkling-cymbal style of rhetoric. Neither Governor Adams nor any one else could interpret its meaning. Then the Governor passed on to declare that mountain lands are the home of liberty; that "only in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming did the statutes recognise that the Creator made no mistake when he placed man and woman side by side in Eden;" that "westward the course of justice, as well as of empire, takes its way," and that "the influence of women's votes, and especially of the women's clubs can now mould—almost dictate—any new legislation?" Was ever such splendid foolishness talked before! Utah and the Mormons recognising woman's rights! The Creator, who put woman for ever under the rule of man after the exodus from Eden, cited as having decreed the equality of the sexes! "Justice" interpreted to mean the supremacy of woman in the home and in the legislature! If Governor Adams was a master of subtle sarcasm, and if his purpose had been to injure the cause he professed to promote, his oration would have been a masterpiece. But he is not that kind of person. He set out to be silver-tongued and Demosthenic, and he did the ladies the service of delivering an address by the side of which the emptiest and most affected of their utterances sounds solid and sagacious.

However, we have been led away to speak of the meeting in general whereas our purpose originally was to refer only to the part taken by the delegates from Japan—Miss Tsuda and Mrs. Watanabe. Our readers doubless remember the setting out of these ladies in May last. They went at the suggestion of Mrs. A. J. Breed, then on a visit to Japan, and by the assistance of Marquis Ito, Count Okuma and Professor Toyama. On the third day of the Convention, Miss Tsuda addressed it, and the incident is thus described by the Denver Republican:—

There was a flutter of excitement among the audience when two petite Japanese, dressed in native silks, were shown to the stage and introduced by Mrs. Breed as Miss Tsuda and Mrs. Watanabe. The latter could speak but a few words of English, but Miss Tsuda has mastered the English tongue and read a most interesting paper, in the sweetest of voices and with faultless enunciation. She said in part:—

"The tide of popular feeling in our country is at present greatly in favour of the progressive movement for women. Our gracious empress has been most earnest in her efforts in every way for the elevation and education of her sex in Japan. The very fact of our presence here shows the feeling regarding women's work, for we have come not only with the sanction and sympathy of some of our leading men, but with the cordial sympathy of the schools with which we are connected. As in so many things Japan has owed much to the warm friendship and sympathy of this country, so does she desire at this time to learn of good things for the women. All we have heard and seen in this

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN
Original from most wonderful and beautiful country we shall remember and bear back to our country. We take your kindness to us, not as a personal matter, but as the reaching out of the women of the West towards those of the East."

Private letters from America say that Mrs. Watanabe and Miss Tsuda have made a signal success and have excited a great deal of public interest. One writer says, "are these the people we are keeping out of Hawaii?"; and another, "these women have opened our eyes to the fact that Japan is an ally worth cultivating." Here, too, is a tribute printed by the newspaper quoted above:—

Miss Alice R. Williard, of the Illinois Woman's Press Association, Chicago, is one of the newspaper women who are in attendance at the convention. She is connected with the Railway Age. It would have been a very remarkable thing even a decade ago for a young woman to be sent to a convention for the purpose of taking note of the manner in which the railroads, and especially the Western roads, would handle an excursion of 3,000 women. She has only praise and admiration for the manner in which the Loop excursion, with its seven trains of eager and enthusiastic women, was conducted. "It was a glorious time," she says. "The inspiring things to my mind have been the trip to-day, and the little Japanese lady's speech last night. To Mrs. Alice Ives Breed is due the gratitude of the women of the federation for the happy thought of bringing before them a woman so perfectly endowed, who delivered one of the best five-minute speeches of the biennial—best in composition, delivery, grace and voice.

Marquis Ito, Count Okuma and Professor Toyama have the satisfaction of knowing that their enlightened action in this matter has been of national value, and Miss Tsuda cannot be too heartily congratulated upon the courage, tact and ability she has displayed. We believe that a project is on foot to send Miss Tsuda and Mrs. Watanabe to Oxford, and that it has the hearty cooperation of Sir Ernest Satow. We hope that it will be carried out.

THE DEMAND FOR FLOATING CAPITAL.

Mr. Kawashima, President of the Industrial Bank, has delivered a speech which contains one item of interest to foreigners as well as to Japanese. He says that since the Bank commenced business less than a year ago, there have been 377 applications for loans, the total sum applied for being 16,676.348 yen. The details of the record stand thus:—

	Number.	Amount.
		Yen
Applications from Public Associations	22	988,213
Applications from Agriculturists	205	5 783.631
Applications from Manufacturers	150	9 924 504

The loans actually made by the Bank, or now in process of being made, are:—

	Number.	Amount.
		Yen
Public Associations	20	621.404
Agriculturists	48	1.061.400
Manufacturers	50	3.582 600
Totals	118	5,265 404

ANOTHER INVENTION.

We recently reproduced an account of a newly invented machine for firing, rolling and facing tea-leaves. We now find in the vernacular press notice of another invention, the machine on this occasion being for weaving purposes. The main point of difference between this new loom and the loom hitherto in use, is that the employment of the hands in throwing the shuttles is altogether avoided. Every operation in connexion with the weaving is effected by the action of the feet on two pedals, a purely mechanical movement. The inventor is said to be Mr. Fukuda Shibachiro, of Joshiu, and the machine is now at work in the factory of Mr. Otaka Jinshiro. One machine costs 30 yen, and the inventor claims for it not only that expert labour is dispensed with, but also that the work done in a given time is 2½ times as much as that accomplished with the old machine. A patent has been taken out.

FINANCE IN THE FEUDAL AGES.

The recent address by Baron Suyematsu on "Finance in the Feudal Ages," delivered before the members of the Kokkagakkwai, has been reported in the magazine of that association. The main points of his address are as follows:—According to the feudal system of the Tokugawa Shogunate—the most perfect feudal system in the East—the Shogun's Government was centred in Yedo, with many daimyos, having vast authority, scattered about the various provinces of Japan. These latter were divided into many classes, such as fudai, tozama, kokushu, and ryōshu, altogether making the so called "three hundred daimyos," though in fact they did not number more than two hundred and sixty. Their fiefs were each capable of yielding more than ten thousand koku of rice. There was also another class named the kōtaiyoriaishu, who were treated like daimyo, but whose fiefs yielded less than ten thousand koku. The domain of the Shogun was said to be worth eight million koku; and that of some of the daimyo seven hundred thousand koku, of others, five hundred thousand koku, and some, such as the lord of Kaga, held sway over districts yielding more than one million koku. Owing to the manner in which the tribute rice was assessed, the figures set opposite each territory do not show the net yearly income. The State valuations sometimes revealed an increase and at other times a decrease in the amount of the crop, for in some cases an increase of income arose from the opening up of cultivated land which was not at first notified to the Shogun's government. The daimyo received four-tenths of the agricultural produce, leaving the remaining six-tenths to the people; for example, four tō out of one koku (or ten tō) were taken by the former, and the remaining six tō were left to the latter. The tax was paid chiefly in kind, but some miscellaneous taxes, called komononari, were generally paid in money. The farmers were subjected to heavy taxes, but merchants escaped almost untaxed, though in some clans something like a licence-fee was imposed upon various classes of dealers. The brewing of sake was under the direct control of the Shogun's Government, which restricted the amount of the brew and issued brewing licenses, and no clan was entitled to impose a tax on sake brewing, though some clans imposed something very like a tax but under a different name.

The Daimyo expended their incomes on various things. Baron Suyematsu, for the purpose of his investigation on this point, turned to the documents of the Choshū clan only. He believes that similar results would be found in the records of other clans. The chief tax, that of rice (which was called mononari), was insufficient to pay the clan's expenses in Yedo (or Tokyo), and extraordinary means of raising revenue were resorted to when there was not enough to pay the bills incurred in the domain of the clan. Another item of expenditure which was a great source of trouble was the tributes and contributions demanded by the Shogun's Government under the names, kōyakukin, waritate, or fuyaku. In the early days of the Tokugawa rule, a supply of labourers was demanded for building castles or for repairing river banks. It is a well-known fact that Kato Kiyomasa and Fukushima Masanori were ordered to take part in the building of the Castle of Nagoya. But in later days tributes of money were substituted, under the pretence that the latter occassioned less expense to the daimyō. The total amount of such contributions was enormous. The most expensive item in a daimyō's budget, however, was that connected with the sankin kotai—the expenses incurred during compulsory residence in Yedo. When the lords of Choshū came to Yedo they usually took, in the early days, two or three thousand retainers with them, and even in later times one thousand followers was no uncommon feature of their procession.

The proceeds of taxes in those days—which, as stated above, were paid in kind not money—were generally sold to merchants, but as each clan generally owed money to the merchants of Osaka, the tax grain was transported to Osaka where it was sold to liquidate these liabilities. Some clans monopolized certain goods; for example, paper, wax, and on some occasions, indigo, were all in the hands of the Choshū clan. Small portions of these articles were sold to retainers of the clan, but the larger portion was transported to Osaka. Many rich people in those days lived in Osaka and they were the chief creditors of the daimyo, though money-lending was not limited to them. A document found in an old house in Osaka belonging to a person who was a daimyo creditor, shows how high interest ran in those days. Creditors were called yotasshi or deiri-shonin (both words mean an agent or merchant who supplies one with necessary articles), owing to the position of the borrower being far higher than that of the lender; and when a daimyo intended to borrow money an official of his clan used to be sent to order the yotasshi to supply it. In case of difficulty, the chief officials of the clan visited the lender to entreat for a loan. Much respect was paid to these money-lenders. Some of the richest, such as Konoike, Uyeda, or Hirooka, were yotasshi, or in fact creditors of many clans, so that in years of famine they were at one and the same time asked by several clans to supply money, which they were sometimes compelled to decline, but usually supplied after negotiation with other money lenders. Rice was generally given as security for these debts. No loans were raised without proper securities being deposited, either in bonds, or promissory notes on goods.

RICE.

A remarkable table is published by the Tokyo Shūshi, showing the price of rice during the past 24 years. Two columns of figures are given, the first showing the actual price per koku, the second the index number to which that price corresponds, taking 4.37 yen per koku (the price in 1888) as 100. It should be noted that the prices from 1875 to 1896 are the average figures for the whole empire, whereas the price for 1897 is the average of the Tokyo market on December 31st of that year, and the price for 1898 is the average of the Tokyo market on the 6th of May of this year:—

Year.	Actual Price, per koku. Yen.	Relative Number.
1875	4 95	113
1876	4 26	97
1877	4 22	96
1878	5 17	118
1879	7.00	160
1880	9 28	212
1881	9 09	208
1882	7 64	175
1883	5.49	126
1884	4 71	108
1885	5.86	134
1886	5 08	116
1887	4.71	108
1888	4 37	100
1889	5.56	127
1890	8.15	187
1891	6 86	157
1892	7 00	160
1893	7 08	162
1894	8 24	189
1895	8.21	188
1896	9.32	213
1897	13 48	308
1898	17 58	402

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

JAPANESE FACTS AND COMMENTS.

The general depression of the building trade since the latter half of last year has had the effect of considerably decreasing the demand for cement. Competition among the various companies has also led to a steady depreciation in prices. In March a meeting of the principal companies was held in Shimonoseki, with a view to discussing the best means of maintaining prices at a higher level, but no understanding was arrived at between them, and competition became keener than ever, threatening some companies with ruin. Another conference was then held, headed by the Hokkaido Cement Company, who were followed by nine other large corporations. These representatives met in Tokyo about the middle of last month. A provisional combination was concluded on the 3rd instant, and a scheme for organising a joint stock company was determined upon. The principal provisions agreed to are:—(1) The manufactures of the allied companies are to be sold by a new joint stock company which shall act as sole agent. (2) Cement entrusted to the allied joint stock company for sale shall undergo a certain examination similar to the tests adopted in Germany. (3) The allied joint stock company is to be officered by agents from the companies concerned. (4) Any member breaking these stipulations is to be treated as a revolter against whom resolute opposition shall be carried out by the combined companies. (5) The capital of the joint stock company is to be supplied by the allied corporations, the term of its maintenance being 20 years.

At a meeting of the United Spinning Companies held in May it was decided that delegates should visit the Specie Bank to seek a loan of 3 million yen. The Specie Bank having assented to the application, steps were taken to obtain the Government's sanction, and this too being secured, the following arrangements have been made:—The Specie Bank is to issue loans against yarns in stock at Shanghai and Hongkong. A sum of three million yen is to be issued by December, and another two million yen from January to June next year. Now that the original loan of three million yen has been increased to five millions, the spinning companies should be able to carry on their business without any serious inconvenience.

The Shogyo states that traffic on the new railway between Sorachifuto and Asahigawa, Hokkaido, a distance of 36 miles, commenced at the end of last month. The Asahigawa-Rauu line (18 miles) and another between Asahigawa and Miyei (20 miles) are now nearly completed, with the exception of some bridges which remain still unfinished. It is said that the two lines will be opened to traffic by the 20th of this month. Work on the lines east of Miyei is then to be commenced. In Rauu, immigrants are already engaged in cultivation, but west of this district the land still retains its aspect of wildness for several hundreds of miles. To the east of Miyei, however, speedy connection with Hitomai is considered necessary, as communication between that place and Obihiro is rendered impracticable by the ordinary roads. From Obihiro a tunnel is to be constructed to lead the line as far as the river Takatsu, so as to connect it with Asahigawa on the coast. Thus a complete junction may be effected between Sorachifuto and Takatsu, and greater facilities secured than are now enjoyed. The tunnel between Miyei and Obihiro is expected to be completed in two years, work having commenced last year.

Count Oki, in a recent interview with a representative of the Tokyo Asahi, is reported to have spoken as follows:—Two or three leading journals in Tokyo have represented me as communicating secretly with Count Okuma, being urged thereto by certain political ambitions. These allegations are erroneous. Count Okuma, as well as Count Soyejima, belonged to the same feudal clan as myself and I have occasion to correspond with them occasionally on ordinary matters. The error into which the above journals have fallen seems to have been based on a note of introduction given by me to a certain gentleman. Apart from these circumstances I am diametrically opposed to the present Ministry. When the question was raised in a former Cabinet as to the advisability of establishing a national assembly in the 23rd year of Meiji, I strongly protested against Marquis Ito's proposals, urging that the inauguration of such an institution should be deferred until the 30th or 35th year of Meiji. The late Prince Iwakura agreed with me, and he was supported by Prince Sanjo. But the majority carried their point, and the result of their precipitancy is seen to-day. Look at the fate of Marquis Ito! Was he not the leader of the movement for the establishment of a national assembly? Yet he has failed to exercise over the destiny of the nation that power which his keen penetration and abilities seemed to justify. Instead of contentment he has brought nothing but afflictions upon the nation. Being now fully sensible of his inability to maintain his position, he has transferred the reins of power to a political party composed of most dangerous elements. He has no one to blame but himself for these unfortunate results. As for the political views of Count Okuma, I have an many objections to urge against them, and these I intend to publish in a pamphlet in due course.

The regulations for the collection of local taxes in Formosa were gazetted on the 2nd inst. They comprise 15 articles with an Appendix. The taxes to be collected include the Supplementary Land Tax, the House Tax, the Trades Tax, and Miscellaneous Taxes. The revenue from these local imposts is to be spent on police, education, sanitation, relief, engineering, repairs, district offices, and other matters that affect the localities where they are collected.

The Official Gazette of the 2nd instant publishes Imperial Ordinance, No. 183, embodying regulations for the organization of the Salt Industry Council. The council is to consist of a chairman and 20 members, to be appointed by the Cabinet from among government officials or private individuals who have the requisite knowledge or experience. In cases of absolute necessity, the number of members may be increased at the discretion of the Government.

According to the Yomiuri, the scheme of adopting a silver standard in Formosa was determined upon from the time of the preceeding Cabinet, and the date of its enforcement was postponed only on account of changes in the Ministry. On the 26th ultimo a notification was issued to the effect that the silver standard should be enforced in the island from the 1st August this year. Holders of yen pieces, therefore, will sustain a loss of ten per cent., as the legal value of silver is likely to be fixed at 90 sen. The period of exchange expired on the 31st July, but as Formosa failed to complete the exchange in time, many of the inhabitants expect to incur serious losses. The Yomiuri disapproves of the Government's action.

Dysentery in Kanagawa Prefecture seems to have been pretty generally spread, the number of cases reported up to the 3rd instant being no less than 1,486. Classified according to towns and rural districts the figures stand thus:

	From beginning of outbreak.	Deaths.	Under treatment.
Yokohama	53	11	17
Kuraki	3	—	2
Tachibana	22	5	7
Tsuzuki	5	—	1
Miura	53	3	46
Kamakura	87	15	61
Takakura	617	93	364
Naka	192	26	106
Ashigara (upper)	55	6	44
Ashigara (lower)	132	25	32
Aiku	179	33	106
Tsukui	91	13	38
Total	1,486	230	824

New cases per diem throughout the prefecture number from 50 to 80. On the 2nd instant three new cases occurred in Hayama village. They came close to the Palace belonging to the Imperial Household, and special measures were taken to remove the patients to the hospital and to transfer their families to the detached station. Similar cases were also reported from Shimoura in the same district.

The leaf tobacco monopoly of the Government has been, remarks the Yorodzu, a complete failure from the outset. The Government raised the rates of profit to 100 per cent. since last month, and managed to increase the new tariff to 300 per cent. for the sole purpose of maintaining the system. But all kinds of illicit dealing and manufacturing are carried on in ways which are very difficult to detect, and on the other side excessive trouble attending the enforcement of the monopoly system has induced many producers to change their occupation. A serious reduction in output is, therefore, expected in the various leading districts. Investigations completed at the end of last month show the total diminution throughout the empire to be no less than 30 per cent. A manager of a certain tobacco company in America, possessing a capital of 300 million dollars, is reported to have lately arrived in Yokohama and declared that even after the operation of the revised tariff the leaf might still be imported into Japan at prices such as to place the American tobacco in easy competition with the domestic production. The Government is doomed, under these circumstances, to a still greater failure next year in connection with its monopoly.

The Jiji anticipates serious difficulty in regard to the introduction of foreign capital without the guarantee of the Government. A private company, it remarks, can hardly expect to secure success in borrowing foreign money unless the security of the Government is procured. That the rates of interest prevailing in the interior are no less than 20 per cent. is a fact well-known to intelligent foreigners. To talk of low interest is only to invite their laughter. A few days ago a certain influential merchant in Tokyo called upon a foreign firm in Yokohama and asked for a loan at 5 or 6 per cent. Pointing to a file on his desk, the head of the firm said:—"These are applications from native merchants for loans which altogether amount to 500 000 yen. Most of these were complied with at a little less than 10 per cent. Should you consent to this rate of interest, you can also have the amount you propose." The Tokyo merchant was taken by surprise, and hinted at the risks incident to such a high rate of interest. The foreigner smiled, and remarked that even fixed deposits in the Mitsui and Mitsubishi Banks would secure 7.5 per cent. interest per annum. A private loan from a foreigner at a low rate of interest, the Jiji adds, is a matter of impossibility in the present state of affairs.

In February of the 29th year of Meiji (1896), the Government prohibited foreigners from residing outside the settlements in Formosa, but two German firms continued to maintain establishments for the manufacture and sale of camphor on the plea that they had previously obtained special privileges to do so from the Chinese Government. Not only have they refused to comply with the prohibition of the Japanese Authorities, but have neglected to pay various taxes. Steps were therefore taken by the Formosan Government to seize the articles in the firms' possession. The Germans still persisted, however, alleging that as the rights they acquired from the Chinese Government were based on a special contract, the same must be enjoyed in perpetuity. On these grounds they subsequently opened negotiations for the recovery of damages sustained. The Government, having investigated the facts, declared that not only was it under no obligation to acknowledge the damages, but also that the German firms had no right to object to the Government's proceedings.

Another Notification issued by the Governor General of Formosa embodies the Regulations for various Law Courts in the island. They came into force on July 20th. Article

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

II. provides that the administration of justice in Formosa shall be conducted by two distinct Courts—the Local Court and the Appeal Court. The Appeal Court is to be established in the district where the Governor-General's Office exists in order that judgments given by various Courts may be re-examined, and legal questions concerning their jurisdiction determined. In each local court a Judicial Police Bureau is to be established, subject to the direct control of the Governor-General. All Judges in Formosa are, during their tenure of office, not only prohibited from openly participating in political affairs, but also not allowed to join a political party or clique, to enter into public service for salary or any pecuniary profit, or to engage in any branches of trade. No Judge is to be dismissed from office save as the result of a criminal sentence or disciplinary punishment pronounced against him. Pensions will be awarded Judges released from office on account of bodily or mental debility.

A notification was lately issued by the Governor General of Formosa, for which he has obtained the Imperial sanction, in connection with the disciplinary punishment of Judges in the island, the most important provisions embodied in it being as follow :—

Art. I.—In case any Judge in the law courts of Formosa is found to have acted contrary to his official duties or committed a deed calculated to impair his official dignity, he shall be submitted to disciplinary punishment.

Art. II.—Disciplinary punishment shall be inflicted in the following forms :—(1) Reproof. (2) Confiscation of salary. (3) Dismissal from office.

Art. III.—The form of punishment shall be determined by a disciplinary council in accordance with the nature of the offence committed, but the former personal conduct of offenders is to be taken into consideration.

Art. IV.—When confiscation of salary is ordered, not more than one-third of the monthly amount received by the offender may be dealt with, for a term of not less than one month and not more than one year.

Art. V.—The disciplinary council shall consist of a chairman and four other members, together with three reserve councillors, appointed by the Governor-General from among the Judges in Formosa. The post of Chairman shall be occupied by the President of the Appeal Court.

Art. XII.—Whenever it is found that a case brought before the disciplinary council is without data sufficient to warrant the infliction of disciplinary punishment, a decision may be rendered for immediate acquittal.

Art. XX.—The present regulations are to be applied to offences committed prior to their promulgation.

The Official Gazette of the 8th instant publishes a note issued by the Minister for Home Affairs in regard to the operation of the revised treaties in July next year :—The Government having resolved upon putting the revised treaties into operation from July of the 32nd year of Meiji (1899) have notified the various Powers as prescribed by treaty. The problem of revising the treaties now in operation has been upon the tapis since the Restoration, both Government and people having desired their revision. The time has now come for giving notice of the operation of the new treaties and it is certain that Japan will be able to carry on intercourse with other Powers on an equal footing in less than one year. The exercise of these rights, however, necessitates the performance of corresponding duties. The attitude of Japanese towards foreigners not only indicates the degree of development they have attained, but also affects the honour of their country. In their dealings with foreigners, therefore, they ought to exercise liberality and magnanimity, and should treat them with friendly cordiality in order that they may succeed in promoting the reputation as well as the glory of their country.

Mr. Takata Sanai, Vice-Minister of Education, is said to have remarked, in the course of a speech delivered to the Imperial Educational Council, that among the various nations of the world the Japanese alone are characterized by lack of aptitude at public speaking. There were speech-makers in Japan, but no orators. Various causes may account for this defect. The existence of the old-world idea which regarded silence as the true characteristic of a hero was doubtless a proximate cause. It is for these reasons that no speeches worthy of attention have ever been delivered in the Diet. On the contrary, the speeches delivered in the English Parliament are distinguished, in most cases, by gravity and sublimity. Gladstone won a reputation for having spoken continuously from the previous evening till the following morning. Sir Robert Peel made himself famous by delivering 48 speeches on the Reform Bill. How is it possible to develop this power of public-speaking among the Japanese? First, the unification of the language, both spoken and written, is absolutely indispensable. Secondly, there must be an alteration in the style of expression, or literary construction.

The Tokyo Asahi devotes much space to the general election. In one article it says :—The present Cabinet has distinguished itself by refusing to interfere with the general elections. Nevertheless it is curious to observe how numerous and well selected are the pro-government candidates. Electoral districts in which no member of the Constitutional Party have presented themselves do not exceed 20, the rest are entirely under the control of the Constitutionalists. Some of the constituencies, though apparently supporting the Constitutional Party, are at variance with one another, and yet appear to have resolved upon returning Constitutional candidates. In short, it is expected that no less than two-thirds of the next House of Representatives will be supporters of the Government. This over-whelming majority evokes surprise. It is true that some of the candidates were only induced to enlist on the strict promise that they would be elected. These will exhibit their perfidy at the earliest opportunity. The present power of the Constitutionalists must therefore not be construed as a sign that they will succeed in carrying everything before them; rather must it be viewed as a misfortune likely to lead to their fall. The friction between the former Liberals and Progressists is already apparent, and threatens to bring about a split in the party ranks before long. The next general election will prove a prelude to a grand political drama which will mature in the second or third act.

Commenting upon the present situation of Japan, Mr. Oishi, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, is reported by the Kokumin to have spoken as follows :—The present era is an era of new personages. The destiny as well as the development of Japan are entirely in their hands The general course of events will be shaped by new influences and new principles. Any political movement based upon the support of the older statesmen has proved unfruitful; a new movement is now inaugurated. Abuses inherent in the Imperial Diet will now be speedily eradicated. The time has come for innumerable demagogues who have called themselves public spirited-men, without knowing what the term meant, to withdraw from the political field along with the older statesmen, and so enable the country to acquire new learning, new knowledge, new principles.

Under the caption, "The consequences of the revised treaties upon the financial community," the Nichi Nichi says the operation of the revised treaties so far as an amelioration of the financial situation is concerned, is likely to lead to disappointment. The privilege of mixed residence will not induce a large immigration of foreigners, unless the possibility of acquiring signal profits is guaranteed. The impression that mixed residence will lead to the introduction of foreign capital is utterly mistaken. The Shogyo, referring to the same question, alleges that the country under the present Ministry is comparable to Italy. The root of the malady by which the nation is at present tormented lies in financial disorganisation, therefore the scheme of increasing the land tax must at once be determined upon. The Yiji refers to the sale of public bonds. Despite the present depreciation, the tightness of the money market and the fall in rates of interest, hopes of making good sales can fairly be entertained. In order to satisfy the requirements of next year's budget it will be necessary to sell Government bonds in foreign markets; what matter if they are at a considerable discount, they bear a low rate of interest. The tone of the Asahi differs from that of other papers. It is opposed to the organisation of a special committee to evolve a scheme of financial adjustment, and urges the necessity of formulating a financial programme by the Prime Minister, so that the same may be submitted for Imperial sanction at once.

The development of warehousing enterprises in Kobe since the enforcement of the Bonded Warehouse Regulations last year has secured considerable facilities for merchants of all classes. Yokohama, however, has failed, for reasons unknown, to make much progress in this respect, few conveniences being afforded to outside private enterprise. The warehouses attached to the Custom House do not exceed 432 tsubo in area, and if each tsubo may be supposed to find room for three tons of goods, the capacity is limited to 13 000 tons. These godowns are at present filled with tobacco, yarns, iron, wire, and cement. The accumulation of imports in these godowns however, is nothing as compared with the amount stored privately.

SEVEN MONTHS' TRADE.

The trade of Yokohama, Kobe and Osaka during July, and also for the first six months of this year, is tabulated below :—

	July. Exports. Yen.	Imports. Yen.
Yokohama	5,544,143·47	9,634,952.07
Kobe	4,687 010.03	10,797,409.59
Osaka	190,471 65	340,869-00
Total	10,421,635 15	20,733,231.66
	January to June. Yen
Three ports ...	69,617,069 00	154,240,805 00
Grand total...	80,068,694 00	175,374,036 00

Thus the aggregate of exports and imports reach 255,682,770 yen approximately, being an excess in favour of the latter of no less than 95,545 302 yen. A brisker export of silk in the autumn may improve affairs to a Certain extent, but the excess of imports may now reasonably be expected to exceed 100 million yen in the course of a few months. In regard to the import and export of gold and silver coins and bullion during the month under review, the figures stand thus :—

	Exports. Yen.	Imports. Yen.
Gold coins.....	317 900	6,361,530
Gold bullion	—	3,919,302
Stamped silver yen'.....	3 600 000	—
Silver bullion	26 071	1,153,271
Total	4,138,890	11,434 103
Grand total from January to June 61,275 764		4 677.353
Grand total 65,414.654		16,111,456
Excess of exports..... .....49 303.198

During last month a sum of 3,919,000 yen in gold bullion and 6,320 000 yen in gold coins were brought from London on account of the Indemnity, the total in this respect showing an excess in imports of over seven million yen. Compared, however, with the gross total from January, the balance shows an outflow of specie of over 49 millions. The sum of 3 600,000 yen of stamped silver mentioned in the above table is said to have been exported to Formosa, Korea, and other places.

The rateable value of the whole colony of Hongkong is now $4,521,947, as compared with last year's assessment of $4,040,502—an increase of $481,445, or 11.91 per cent.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

OUR BOOK-SHELF.

The Making of a Saint; W. Somerset Maugham: London, Mr. Fisher Unwin's Colonial Library.

About a year ago, Mr. Maugham gave to the world a curious tale of London life, "Liza, of Lambeth." The critics were divided upon the merits of the book, for it dealt with a section of humanity that it was the habit, a year or so ago, to speak of as belonging to a class scarcely above "the submerged tenth." Mr. Maugham gave his characters a vivid personality and as a result his book was peculiarly sad reading—could such things really be, people queried, in the magnificent city of London at the close of one of the most progressive and enlightened eras the world had ever seen? Some who read the book blamed the author for creating Liza and her companions; others denied the possibility of her existence. Mr. Maugham, however, had written of the life of the Lambeth slums as he had seen it—his story was all too true. "Liza of Lambeth" achieved a certain success and more work on a similar line was naturally expected from its author's pen. But in the next story that he gives to the world—"The Making of a Saint"—Mr. Maugham forsakes the field of his first love altogether—forsakes the land, forsakes the country, conveying us in fancy to the south of Europe and transplanting us to Italy at a time when Lorenzo de Medici tyrannized Florence and Lodovico Storza ground Milan beneath his brazen heel.

Filippo Brandolini, who tells the story, is a young nobleman who found it convenient, for political reasons, to fly from his native city and seek protection and service under a more powerful captain's banner. He knocks about Italy for ten years, seeing much service under the Duke of Calabria in the Neapolitan armies. Then a desire to visit his old home again comes over him—the political sky having cleared a little—and he leaves the south of Italy and journies north. On the way he meets old companions in arms at Forli, and, accepting their invitation, stops there long enough to become deeply engaged in a conspiracy against the ruling Prince—Girolamo Riario, who had begun to tyrannize over the citizens after the approved Italian fashion of the Middle Ages. The plot succeeds in so far as the murder of Girolamo is concerned. But this prince had married Lodovico Sforza's bastard daughter, and when the terrible Duke of Milan comes to avenge his son in-law's treacherous murder, the game is up and the conspirators flee. Meanwhile Filippo, after several questionable amours—described in much detail—falls in love with a beautiful widow, Giulia dalle Aste. The pure flame of passionate love eventually springs up from what at first was an illicit dalliance, and when the assassins of Girolamo have to escape, Donna Giulia, by reason of her connection with some of the conspirators, finds she had better quit the town of Forli too. Filippo manages this for her and the two are afterwards married. All goes merrily for a year or so, when an old lover of Giulia turns up. Filippo discovers his wife is unfaithful and stabs the lover before her eyes. Then comes one of the most powerfully written scenes in the book. He tells his wife's father of the occurrence. Old Bartolomeo answers, "You have done well, Filippo."

The old man calls to his two sons and together they leave the room and proceed to Filippo's palace. The rest of the story of Giulia is brief.

"At last I heard the steps again, and Bartolomeo Maratini entered the room, followed by his sons; and all three were very grave.

'Sir,' he said, 'the stain on your honour and mine has been effaced.'

"I bowed more deeply than before.

'Sir, I am your very humble servant.'

'I thank you that you allowed me to do my duty as a father; and I regret that a member of my family should have shown herself unworthy of my name and yours. I will detain you no longer.'

"I bowed again, and left them."

But when the first heat of his passion had passed away and many hours of silent contemplation had exerted their mysterious but potent influence, the outraged husband found excuses for the erring woman—at least, he thought of all that had happened, he pondered over the woman's life from the day she left her convent school and the influences that had wrought upon her, and—"I tried to understand." Filippo then entered a monastery and in the after years distinguished himself in good works—so much so that the Pope granted him the title of Beatus not very long after his death.

"The Making of a Saint" is a tale brightly told, giving vivid pen-pictures of life and politics in an old Italian township in the closing years of the fourteenth century—as the author imagines them to have run. Plots, intrigues, illicit amours, assassinations, terrible deaths and horrible vengeances are woven into the warp and woof of the story, and never once does the interest flag. There is only one objection to be taken—and that is the curious jumble of ancient and modern phraseology that runs through it all, destroying the glamour of "atmosphere" that otherwise would make the scenes portrayed more realizable to the average layman's mind.

ENGLAND THE TRUEST REPUBLIC.

Where the American and French Constitutions Fail.

It is well for Englishmen in this momentary pause both in politics and the War, says the Spectator, to notice carefully how much better their own constitutional system works than either the French or the American. Our own has plenty of defects, the principal one, perhaps, being that it often makes it the interest of a party to protect an abuse or condone a failure; but it has at least this merit, that by confiding legislative power and the selection of the Executive to the same hands it enables the nation in any time of emergency to act with its whole force. When everything went wrong in 1855, and it really seemed for some weeks as if the greatness of England would perish of muddle, the country called for Lord Palmerston, the most vigorous man it had; Parliament placed him at the head of affairs; and as the Premier while supported by his majority was absolute, could appoint whom he pleased, dismiss whomsoever he distrusted, and spend whatever was necessary, everything went right. The American people have no power of doing this. The framers of the Constitution were possessed with two fears, that the Executive might become too strong, and they therefore deprived it of any place in Congress; and that it might become too weak, and they therefore made its Chief irremovable except by impeachment, vesting him at the same time with absolute power to appoint and to dismiss his advisers, and with the initiative in the nomination and removal of all officers, an initiative which, during the recess of Congress, becomes a right of appointment. The result of this arrangement is that in an emergency like a great war, an inefficient President means incurable inefficiency in all Departments. There is no power of removing him, there is no power of compelling him to trust the right men, there is no power of coercing him into a greater display of energy. He moves on his own path more uncontrolled than an Emperor of Russia, for the Army has in Russia an influence in emergencies which is never disregarded. This war with Spain for example, drags, money being spent in masses while little is accomplished. It is quite possible that it ought to drag, and is intended to drag, the Departments feeling that they must have time to create both a navy and an army, and fearing that unless they await cool weather, the losses from fever in the American army of invasion might be as terrible as they have been in the Spanish army of defence. The littoral of Cuba is, by all accounts, what the delta of Burmah was when we first entered it, a place which may be made perfectly healthy, but which, until it has been so made, has the dreadful power of burying whole brigades, all stricken and his Ministry were convinced that the with local fever. Why, if that is the case, the American Government has not said so openly in a proclamation to the people, it is difficult to understand; but still the delay may be perfectly right, and in accordance with the best advice of military experts. We rather think it is so, and that President McKinley will be recognised at the end of the campaign as a solid man of business who did the best he could with the means at hand, and feared nothing except a military failure. But suppose for a moment that it is otherwise, and that President McKinley, being, as he is, the sole source of executive energy in the Republic, is unequal to his position, does not feel clear what he ought to do, does not pick precisely the right men, exaggerates the chances of defeat, or—the commonest of errors—fails to perceive that in war "connection" is as important as it is in the management of railway traffic, where is the remedy? There is simply none. The United States might possess the greatest organiser alive; the American people might be boiling over with irritation; the Army and Navy might be almost mutinous in their despair at inaction; and still there would be nothing to be done. The President cannot be removed, he is no more bound to obey opinion than a Judge is; and as to the officers, what can they do except wait sullenly on till final orders are received? That "instinct of democracy" which has so often saved States is not allowed free play in the American Constitution, which was drawn up by men who intended to make democracy supreme, but who distrusted the supremacy of democracy. We suppose that in the last resort, if, for instance, during a war a President's incapacity brought the public patience to an end, the Houses could absolutely refuse supplies and so bring about a deadlock; but the remedy would be of the kill or cure kind, and if the President were as obstinate as most inefficient men are it might fail. The absolute power which is needful in great emergencies, and which in this country is lodged in the electors, is in America, so far as we can see, deposited nowhere, or rather is so divided that it cannot be exercised. Some day or other, probably many years hence, upon some dreadful occasion the American people will perceive that, and by a rapidly passed amendment on the Constitution will allow the House of Representatives to put the continuance in office of the President or any other executive officer before the people to be decided by "Referendum"—the vote of the entire electorate. Until that has been done they must remain as they are now, more dependent on the ability of the Head of the State than the people of any Monarchy.

The difficulty in France is of a different kind, though it springs from the same origin, the reluctance of the constitution-makers to deposit ultimate power in any hands which can use it. There it seems clear that the Assembly, i.e., the Chamber and the Senate acting together, can compel an inefficient President to resign. This was not intended by the framers of the fundamental Law, who were, as they thought, preparing the way for a Restoration; but the power has developed itself in working. The Deputies and Senators cannot "dismiss" the President, but they can, by continuously rejecting the Ministers whom he appoints, compel him to resign. They resorted to this device in M. Grévy's case, and it is well understood that on sufficient provocation they would resort to it again. They are therefore secure while no coup d'état is struck against a corrupt, or imbecile, or factious President, and are as against him sovereign. But as against the Chambers the people have no remedy. They may be as inefficient, or corrupt, or factious as they please, and until the term of their mandate has expired there is nothing to be done. Neither the President nor the Ministry can dissolve them without the consent of the Senate, which, if that body were itself involved in the quarrel, would be refused. Suppose, for example, that the Assembly were determined to protect Spain, that the people were furious for Spain, and that the President war would be unwise. The war would nevertheless go on, for no power of dissolution exists, while the power of dissolving Cabinet after Cabinet does. Or suppose that the "groups" in the Chamber and Senate became a trifle more factious and shifty than they are now, so that no responsible Ministry could be formed likely to last a fortnight, where is the remedy? There is none, any more than in America, yet this contingency, at all events, is well within the scope of sober political calculations. It would be incorrect to say that in France the ultimate power, the true sovereignty, is deposited nowhere, for as the Constitution is now interpreted it is deposited in the electors, whose representatives can in practice remove even the President, and so bring all powers in the State into working harmony; but the electors cannot exercise their power unless consulted, and the right to compel such consultation, except at times divided by an interval of four years, does not exist. France, like America, in fact, has been lettered by a latent distrust of the democracy, which, strange to say, in our veiled Republic has never existed,—perhaps because the Lords, who are not elected, can always compel the electors to consider themselves, and say what they really mean. In none of the three countries is there any resistance to the dogma that the people ought to rule, but in two of them the Constitutions were drawn by men who were very much afraid of the people ruling.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE CHINESE PROBLEM.

To the clamour for maintaining the integrity and independence of the Chinese Empire at all costs, says the Spectator, has succeeded a demand that we shall stiffen the back of China by reorganising for her her Army and her Navy,—by providing, that is, a supply of British Officers who shall make a new Sepoy Army in China. No doubt the proposal is, at first sight, very attractive, and would, if it could be carried out, solve successfully the problem of how China is to be made unassailable by Russia. If we could send Sir Herbert Kitchener to Pekin, and give him a free hand and the millions a year China now spends on her Army he would unquestionably produce in three years an army capable of giving an extremely good account of itself even when pitted against a Russian force. He and a good staff of English officers, say five to each regiment, would not take long to raise a hundred thousand men and to provide arsenals in which everything down to the newest machine-guns would be locally made at a cost which would astonish Woolwich and Enfield. But though this scheme is so attractive in theory, it is one which we trust no sensible person will dream of entertaining until he has seriously considered what it means. If he does so consider it, he will, we feel sure, realise that it is an impossible proposal, since it must in the end mean either failure, or the annexation, or at any rate control, of China by England. Unless we mean to rule in China as we do in India, we must abandon the idea of organising the military forces of China by means of British officers. The notion that an efficient civilised Power can organise the armed forces of an uncivilised and effete Power in order to secure the uncivilised Power's independence is a pure delusion. You can only successfully organise a permanent army for a "native State"—Gordon's Ever-Victorious Army fell to pieces when he left it, and made no permanent impression on China—if you make the native State dependent, i.e., place it under control. The placing of English officers at the head of native troops, and keeping them there, is always the first step to English domination, and never can, or will, be anything else. Either the attempt is given up, and the army or navy falls back into the old state of confusion, or else the country becomes what Hyderabad is at this moment. In India in the eighteenth century we had plenty of experience in the matter of organising the forces of other "independent" native States. Look at Oudh, inevitably lead us to this dilemma,—the position of those States now. Every one of them is under complete British control.

The history of what happens in all such cases may be told in skeleton. The army of the native State is weak and in disorder, and it applies to us to organise its forces. In perfect good faith we allow certain of our officers to volunteer, and they begin to make a highly efficient army. But while doing this work they are sure to produce a large crop of jealousies, and to incur many hatreds. A period soon comes when pressure is put on the native Government either to dismiss or else to take all real power and authority, out of the British officers' hands. The British officers, who do not care to see the instrument they have so carefully constructed, and are so proud of and so loyal to, knocked to pieces by "a lot of incompetent niggers," naturally ask the Home Government whether they really mean to let five years' work be demolished in this way,—i.e., whether, that is, British officers are to submit to native control in the matter of the army. Here is the crucial point. If the Home Government says, "It is no business of ours; you must resign if you cannot get on with your masters, or go if they dismiss you," the native army or navy comes to an end. The Chinese Navy was organised, and well organised, by an English sailor. He was dismissed, however, by the Chinese, who thought they had learnt the trick themselves, and had had enough of the "foreign devil" at the head of their ships. The result was that the Chinese Navy became in a couple of years as useless as if it had never been a properly organised force. The same sort of thing would have happened in Egypt if the Khedive had been allowed to treat the Sudar as he tried to treat him,—had he been allowed, that is, to make it impossible for British officers to remain in the Egyptian service. Here however, our Government—quite rightly—supported the British soldiers in their struggle with native authority, with the result that the Egyptian Army is now one of the best fighting machines in the world. But mark the political effect. From that day our rule has been firmly riveted on Egypt. Up till that time it still seemed possible that we might evacuate Egypt. After we had first organised the native Army—in the genuine hope, curiously enough, that it would help to secure Egyptian independence—and then insisted that it should not be destroyed by the will of the native ruler, it became clear to the world that we were in Egypt for good. It was the old story. By organising a military force and maintaining it against the influences which in the East always tend to the destruction of armies, we had unconsciously answered the question of evacuation or occupation. Take yet another example of the rule. We once lent a couple of infantry officers from the Gibraltar garrison to the Emperor of Morocco in order to organise a force which should secure his independence. But when the pinch came we did not insist that the officers should have a free hand—probably they did not even ask for it, as they knew beforehand what the answer must be—and, therefore, the Moorish Army remains a mere absurdity as a fighting force. With no political power behind it, the reorganisation of the Moorish Army became a perfect farce. These are the facts that we must bear in mind when we begin to talk about organising the military and naval forces of China through British officers. Either the whole thing will be an ignominious failure—that is, the British officers will be given no power, and will be put under Generals in pigtails who will sincerely believe that, after all, a bow and a shield with a fierce face on it are more reliable weapons than Maxims—or else we shall have to keep backing up our officers against the Pekin Government till at last the point of compulsion will be reached, and we shall have to control Pekin; the army officers treating the Home Government, as they do in Egypt, as their real superiors. But this, if it carried out, would mean the acquisition of all China. We have, then, to choose between dead failure at once or entering upon a course which "Either let the whole of four or five years' hard work be sacrified, or coerce, and then control, the Government of China."

If we have stated the situation truly, and we believe we have, we do not see how any one who does not want to make China into a new India can possibly wish us to undertake officially, or semi-officially, the organisation of the military forces of China. Those, of course, who wish to take China will not object to the proposal, for they will be prepared to assume control of the Empire when the proper and necessary moment arrives. They should remember, however, that Russia will quite well understand the results of a military reorganisation of China's forces by British officers, and will do her best to prevent it. The first symptoms of the successful organising of the Chinese Army are pretty sure to make Russia resolve that she must either attack us, or else not only abandon all idea of obtaining great parts of China for herself, but be exposed to the risk of having a great army stationed on her flank. In other words, the semi-official organisation of the Chinese Army by British officers means the first step in the direction of war with Russia, and if we are successful, the virtual annexation or control of all China. Frankly, we do not like the prospect. Portugal in the sixteenth century was ruined by the withdrawal of all her best men in order to conquer and develop her great Empire. The same thing may happen to us if we try to hold all India, all China, and half Africa as dependencies. We are not Little Englanders, not afraid of Empire, and believe firmly that, in reason, the governing of the lower races is an excellent thing morally, politically and even economically, for the governing Power. But because a beef-steak is good we must not assume that it would be wise to eat the whole ox. Let us go prudently rather than jealously, and let us not be so foolish as to think that unless we always help ourselves again, when any one else helps himself, we shall be starved. That is a strange delusion. The way to find out whether we have got enough is not to watch others helping themselves, but to look at our own plate.

But though we are against forcing British officers on the Chinese—for that is what it comes to in the long-run—we have no objection to the plan of raising and drilling a small Chinese Sepoy army of our own at Hongkong and Wei-hai-wei. If we were to add ten regiments to our Imperial Army in this way we should probably be doing a wise thing. Ten thousand such troops might prove very useful in emergencies in many parts of the world. Another Malay campaign is not an impossibility. If the need came when we had Frontier troubles in India, the authorities would be delighted to get the necessary troops from Hongkong rather than from Madras.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RAILWAY QUESTIONS.

To the Editor of the "Japan Mail."

Sir,—Will you please allow me a little space in your valuable paper?

You have already pointed out many faults in the Revised Time Table of the Tokaido Railways, especially the Yokosuka section; but there is yet another very important drawback, which I have discovered yesterday afternoon. I asked for a ticket to Kamakura for the 6.30 train; the officer at the booking window told me that no ticket could be sold for less than 40 miles for this express train. I bought one for Yamakita (41 miles from Yokohama) and got down to Kamakura, thereby paying 3 times the ordinary fare (besides waiting 45 minutes at Ofuna for connexion).

As it is, under the present arrangement, there is no train between 4.27 and 8.30 (4 long hours) from Yokohama to Yokosuka or Kozu and all the way stations, just at the very hour when traffic is largest, unless a passenger is prepared to pay extra fare for 40 miles. This new arrangement is therefore, a great deal worse than the old schedule, when there were trains at 4.25, 5.52, and 7.20.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

As regards the 40 mile rule, why cannot the Railway Authorities abolish it? I should think the more businesslike and practical way is that express trains should accommodate local passengers to all the stations at which they are to stop, without regard to distance.

Yours faithfully, "A TRAVELLER."

Yokohama, August 9th, 1898.

EDUCATING JAPANESE CHRISTIANS ABROAD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—"Impartial Observer" in his letter dated July 13th has reopened a very interesting subject that may be discussed at length with great profit. If he would favour the public not merely with his enlightened opinions, but with facts, figures, and items of actual experience he might hope to gain converts to his doctrine. The subject is discussed in the report of the Foreign Mission Boards 1893 pp. 15-22. a" a, July 25th, states that "several Missions have passed resolutions to encourage this policy." Would he please give details? Let us hear from some of the men who have been here for a generation?

Yours truly, KANWA.

CHINESE BUREAU OF RAILWAYS AND MINES.

The North-China Daily News says it understands that the Imperial Edict, given below, establishing a Railway and Mining Bureau for the Chinese Empire, is the outcome of the work that Mr. Pritchard-Morgan, M.P., has been doing at Peking, and the representations that he has made to the high authorities.

IMPERIAL EDICT OF 2ND AUGUST.

Railways and Mines are now-a-days the most important enterprises in this Empire. We have already had the Tientsin-Shanhaikuan and the Tientsin-Peking Railways built and in regular working order for some time, while steps are now being taken for raising funds to build the Shanhaikuan extension to the Taling River (Newchwang and vicinity). As for the Canton-Hankow and Hankow-Peking lines, full control had been granted the Head Commercial Company to find ways and means for the construction of these railway lines, and matters appear to be now taking definite shape in this connection. Then as to mines, we have the Kaiping Colliery and the Muhô (Amur) gold mines as the most successful, so far, amongst the many mining enterprises embarked upon, and we have already further commanded those in control to seize every opportunity to extend the works of the two mines above noted. We are, however, apprehensive, in view of the number of provinces in the Empire and the various conditions of men who will attempt to open mines of all sorts in the future, that a diversity of methods and ensuing confusion will be the result, which would of course be detrimental to the principal object we have of getting the fullest advantages obtainable out of each and every undertaking begun in this direction. It is therefore highly important that there should be a centre of control to direct, under a single system, the working and exploitation of mines and railways in the Empire, and we hereby command that a Bureau of Control for Railways and Mines be established in Peking, to the Chief Commissionerships of which we now specially appoint two Ministers of the Tsung-li Yamên, namely, Wang Wên-chao and Chang Yin-huan. The said Chief Commissioners shall, from henceforth, have special control over the opening of mines and construction of railways throughout the Empire, and companies formed for the above purposes will in future be required to apply to the said Commissioners for permission and guidance in their operations.

CHINESE AFFAIRS.

The first train on the new Shanghai-Woosung railway was expected to run from Woosung to Shanghai on Saturday last, the 6th inst.

The Foochow Echo on the 16th July remarked that the rice harvest had been going on since the beginning of the week and the crop is reported to be good both in quality and quantity.

Mr. H. E. Fulford is transferred from the Shanghai Consulate-General to Peking as Chinese Secretary of the British Legation, and will be succeeded in Shanghai by Mr. W. P. Ker from Soochow.

According to a Shanghai contemporary, an Imperial edict of the 28th of July commands that Jung Lu and Chang Chih-tung, Viceroys of Chihli and the Hukwang provinces, respectively, be given supreme power to raise funds and construct the Lu-Han and other railways.

Says the Peking and Tientsin Times, apropos of Mr. Tennant's sad death:—We think we have remarked before, that Yokohama possesses the most unenviable record for suicides of any place in the East. It is a veritable Monte Carlo both for beauty and some secret malevolent influence which induces self-destruction.

Shanghai has had an unpleasant experience with a mad dog, several Europeans being bitten before the animal was destroyed. We understand that the son of Mr. H. C. Manning, as well as Mrs. Scott, and P. C. Richardson, all of whom were bitten in Hongkew, have come over to the Pasteur Institute at Nagasaki for treatment.

By special decree of the Emperor, the Chinese Progress has been made an official magazine, and its expenses are now to be guaranteed by the Board of Revenue which is also commanded to see that the journal is regularly supplied not only to his Majesty the Emperor himself, but also to all the high metropolitan and provincial authorities of the Empire, for the "enlightment and education in Western politics and affairs of the said officials."

Residents in Japan may be interested in the following note on Shanghai temperature, taken from the N.-C. Daily News:—The average minimum of the thermometer in the Settlement in July was 79°.17, the average maximum 94°.37, and the mean 86°.77, against 78°.7, 89°.1, and 82°.4, respectively, in July 1897. The rainfall in July was 3.34 inches, and rain fell measurably on 5 days, against 10.48 inches and 13 days in July, 1897, and an average of 5.77 inches and 10 days for the sixteen years 1882 1897.

A Peking dispatch to a Shanghai paper reports that in addition to his own appointment by Imperial edict to the Comptroller-Generalship of the proposed new Imperial University of Peking, H.E. Sun Chia-nai has recommended and received the Imperial consent to the appointment of H.E. Hsu Ching-ch'êng, now President of the Russo-Chinese Railway in Manchuria, at St. Petersburg, to the post of President of the Faculty of the University in question. Until the return home of the last-named official, his post will be administered by H.E. Sun Chia-nai himself.

The Echo de Chine explains that the institution at the back of the Belgian Syndicate which has contracted to build the Great Western Railway of China is the Société Générale pour Favoriser l'Industrie Nationale, of Brussels, a Bank with a capital of 350,000,000 francs (£14,000,000 sterling) with agencies in all the great financial markets of Europe. The Russo-Chinese Bank is merely acting as its agent in China, and the Syndicate, according to the Echo de Chine, is no more Russian than it would have been English if the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank had been appointed agent to the Belgian bank.

The Peking and Tientsin Times on the 23rd ult. had a note on the damages caused by recent heavy rains in North China. It also remarked that the railway being under water in places, and the farmers having torn up a part of it in the hope of letting the water off their fields, communication with Peitaiho was carried on by towboats from Tangku. The heavy rains had caused the collapse of five houses at Peitaiho. "For the first time on record, the water has topped the line at the great Lanchou Bridge, the Tay Bridge of North China. It was considered phenomenal when the water rose at this point, some 22 feet in 24 hours, a year or two ago, but this year it is several feet higher."

Anti-foreign riots are of almost weekly occurrence in China: the Empire is so vast and its population so steeped in ignorance and prejudice that this is hardly to be wondered at, perhaps. The latest disturbance occurred in the subprefectural city of Lichou, Hunan, owing to the purchase of a house in that city by a foreign missionary—bearing, says the N.-C. Daily News, the Chinese name of Fang Lei-sze—from a native named Ming. The sub-prefect happened to be seriously ill at the time but fortunately Tang Taotai, of the Yochou Intendancy, heard of the riot and at once went in person to Lichou to restore order. By the prompt efforts of this official the mob was dispersed and Tang Taotai became the recipient of personal thanks tendered by the missionary for the assistance given. The deed of sale of the property in dispute was afterwards settled satisfactorily through the medium of Mr. Wang, district magistrate of Wuling-hsien, who was selected for the purpose owing to his close friendship with Mr. Fang, the missionary. The students assembled for the licentiate examinations at Lichou, who joined the mob in the demonstrations against the missionary, afterwards returned quietly to the examinations.

The P. & T. Times says:—There seems reason to believe that the fight Russia is making to prevent British capital being used for the completion of the Shanhaikuan-Newchwang line is not ended yet, in spite of former information to that effect. The Russian Chargé d'Affaires has renewed his protests, couching them in the strongest possible language; but we hope there will be no withdrawing. It is whispered that Russia, backed by France, has had the temerity also to renew her protests against the increase in the Customs pay, but we are unable to substantiate the report. We hope that it is only the echo of the occurrence of some weeks back, when Russia certainly did protest against the increase, and offered to "do the job" for China more cheaply than Great Britain. At the same time, the cool impertinence of Russia's attitude—unfortunately fostered by our spirit of tolerance, which she misconstrues as either weakness or fear—is such that no report, however startling, can safely be discredited until proved unfounded.

Writing on August 5th, the N.-C. Daily News said that it understood, in reference to the Ningpo Joss-House dispute, the French Consul-General, the Count de Bezaure, had not broken off negotiations with the Provincial Treasurer, H.E. Neih, though he refused to have any more communication with Tsai Taotai, after his ill-advised publication of a diplomatic document without the knowledge or consent of one of the parties to it. This document is, of course, of a very different character to the minutes of the French Council, which were previously published in our columns. The whole matter, however, is now referred to Peking. We have already mentioned that there is some reference to the agreement of 1878 in the minutes of the French Council. The French Minister, M. Brenier de Montmorand, who had come to see to the distribution of the indemnity paid by the Chinese, and the Tls. 7,000 repaid by the French, attended the Council meeting on the 12th of August, 1878, and mentioned three of the terms of the agreement, but nothing more. These were that the French were to desist from making roads through the Ningpo Guild's property, and were to charge no taxes [illegible] on their side the Chinese undertook to deposit no more coffins in the Ningpo Joss-House. The French have kept the two conditions affecting themselves, but the Chinese have entirely failed to observe their undertaking.

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The wheel of progress has began to creak a little in China, and already some personages in high places have exhibited alarm lest it should gather too great a momentum. Still this does not discourage the reformers, and new proposals are constantly being sent forward by them to the Emperor. Quite recently, if we are to believe the Daily Chinese Progress, a vernacular magazine published in Shanghai, some high officials memorialised the Throne recommending the abolition of a number of bureaux which are now only sinecures. Others have gone even further and recommended the most radical reform of all, being nothing less than the abolition of the Six Boards—Boards of Civil Appointments, Revenue, Rites, War, Punishment, and Works—and the Nine Ministries or Courts—Courts of Censors, transmission of Decrees, Haulins (also called Haulin Academy) Supervisorate of Instruction, Sacrificial Worship, Imperial Stud, Imperial Entertainments, State Ceremonial, and Astronomy. This is a large order indeed. But the reformers are constructive, as well as destructive statesmen, and they suggest that the old boards should be replaced by twelve Departments, the senior of them all to be named the Department of Laws and Edicts. The idea is said to have been favourably considered by the Emperor, who commanded the Grand Council, the Board of Civil Appointments, and the Tsung-li Yamên to deliberate over the matter and report thereon. The reply was characteristic, but perhaps only natural, under the circumstance. They "considered the changes recommended to be too sweeping and such radical innovations could not therefore last long." His Majesty seemed unwilling to lay the matter on the table and replied:—"I am determined to effect some change, and you are all to reconsider your reply on this question." Surely this is too good to be true; the Peking romancist has allowed his pen and fancy too loose a rein! And can we believe also, the further assertion, that the Emperor is among the band of eager reformers who are anxious "to effect as sweeping a revolution as that which passed over Japan three and a half decades ago." In the misty twilight haze that seems ever to surround the innermost sanctuary of the whole broad Chinese Empire, it is difficult to gather a correct impression of its ruler's mental calibre. To most foreigners who have seen him, the boy Emperor has appeared as a pale phantom too soon grown weary of life, worn out by sensual indulgence before ambition has had time to attract him towards higher objects and desires. Yet of late, tales told by Chinese writers have worn a different complexion—or is it merely the Empress-Dowager masquerading in the Emperor's place? Reforms are doubtless in the air; whether at the Emperor's instigation or promoted by the masterful woman who has so long ruled China behind the veil, we can not say, for recently a joint circular, under instructions of the Emperor, was sent by the Boards of War and Revenue to the Tartar-Generals, Viceroys, and Governors of the Empire ordering them to do away entirely with spears, bows and arrows, etc., in the various branches of the provincial armies and to decide, after a general interchange of opinions amongst themselves, as to what sort of modern firearms, ammunition, and drills shall in future be used amongst the provincial forces. The importance of using but one system of drilling for the troops and one style of weapons and ammunition being recognised as the supreme principle in the future armies of the Empire, says this interesting document, the various high provincial authorities are ordered to memorialise the Throne as to the best way of applying this principle; and if any recommendation shall be found to be superior to that already decided for the organisation and arming of the Imperial levies—as apart from the provincial—the Emperor will, it is said, give due weight to such recommendation.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

It is a significant fact, says the N. C. Daily News that the Imperial Maritime Customs are about to re-establish the lights at Wei-hai-wei.

The Kobe Municipal Council have agreed that the agent of the O. & O. and P. M. Companies may erect a flagstaff at his office in Kobe on condition of paying 10 yen per month as rent.

A note in the N.F. Maritime Register says that "one of the boats of the Russian ship Bay of Naples, Capt. Cedar, from Port Natal for Tokyo, capsized off Noumea on the 22nd of June, and fourteen sailors were devoured by sharks."

On Sunday afternoon, says our Kobe midday contemporary, two young prisoners escaped from Osaka Jail by breaking down the cell where they were confined. The Jail authorities warned all police stations in the city by telephone and a search party was sent out to scour the city, but the fugitives were not captured.

The Avenir du Tonkin says:—Not for a long time have there been so many foreigners at Saigon as at present. Amongst these birds of passage are a number of Americans who are waiting, it appears, for the cessation of hostilities to go to Manila and seek their fortunes there.

During the examination of Mr. Moberly Bell, the Manager of the London Times, by the Chairman of the Select Committee appointed by Parliament to enquire into law of copyright, the fact was elicited that the large sum of £50,000 a year was spent by The Times on foreign telegrams.

The Spanish prize ships Catalia, Miquel Jover, Buena Ventura and Guida, captured during the early days of the war, were taken north by the gun-boat Newport on the 1st ult. The Buena Ventura and Guida have been brought at the United States Marshal's sale by the Government and will be made into armoured warships.

About 5 o'clock on Tuesday morning, a shoemaker named Hirata Shokichi, 34 years old, living at No. 4, Motomachi, 1-chome (Yatozaka) murdered his daughter named Sute (11 years of age), by cutting her down with a sword. He then committed suicide, cutting his throat with the same instrument. It is said that the murderer was temporarily insane.

The health of the American forces at Manila is excellent and beyond the highest expectations of the Generals. They seem to stand the heat, rains, and other conditions like veterans. Of course there are quite a number sick but not a large list. In fact, says a Daily Press correspondent, the California and Oregon regiments have not a dozen men in all incapacitated from duty.

Throughout Monday all the German business houses, the German Club, and the Consulate flew the German flag with mourning streamers attached, as a token of respect for the late Prince Bismarck. The Austrian cruiser now in harbour flew the German flag at half-mast. The memorial service at the Public Hall was largely attended, every member of the German community of Yokohama, and many from Tokyo, being present, besides representatives of other nationalities. Dr. Baelz's oration was very finely phrased and caused great satisfaction.

A correspondent writes to the China Mail from Cavite as follows:—On the 21st July, a sad fatality occurred in Manila Bay. A steward on board the British collier Cyrus, named George Archer, was playing with a live shell, rapping it against the bulwarks of the vessel, when the dangerous missile exploded, blowing off one of Archer's arms and part of his face, besides inflicting other serious injuries. The poor fellow lingered for about half-an-hour before succumbing. He picked up the shell while ashore at Cavite Point. There are many of these live shells lying about, and it will be a wonder if there are no further fatalities either among the natives, who regard anything without a visible owner as legitimate loot, or among the numerous parties searching for souvenirs of the great American victory and the occupation of the Philippines.

Late on Thursday afternoon Mr. E. Leopold—late of Messrs. Ahrens & Co., of this port—was arrested on a warrant issued by H.B.M. Court for Japan.

When Captain J. Turner Harrison of the British schooner Esmeralda was last at Guam, he was presented by Padre Jose' Palomo with a bottle that one Raphael de Leon Guerrero had picked up on the beach of Ilig, Guam, Marianas Islands on the 21st June, 1898. From a document found in the bottle it was discovered that the latter had been thrown overboard from the steamer Zealandia, then on a voyage from San Francisco to Apia, Auckland, and Sydney, in Lat. 8'20 N., Long. 163' W., on January 20th, 1897, by Mr. Clement Wragge, of the Brisbane Weather Bureau. Padre Jose' Palomo found a similar bottle on the beach of the island of Saipan in 1884, which had apparently been drifting for about two years. Captain Harrison has presented the document to the British Consul-General in Yokohama.

Ralph G. Forster, Esq. H.B.M. Acting Assistant-Judge, on Tuesday continued the hearing of the case in which William Reisenorck, a seaman on the British ship Mooltan, was charged with assaulting Edward Lindenberg, seaman belonging to the steamer Prometheus on the morning of the 7th inst. Dr. Gordon Munro having given evidence as to the nature of the wounds, and an A. B. of the Mooltan having testified that he saw no bottle used during the assault, only the flat of the hand, His Honour said that as it had not been proved that accused had used a bottle to strike the complainant with, the Court would give him the benefit of the doubt, but it was clear an assault had been committed by him and he would be sent to prison for fourteen days and have to pay the costs.

The French, says the China Mail, are evidently to have no end of trouble in connection with their concessions at Kwongchauwan. We hear on good authority that the French cruiser Duguay Trouin is tide-bound in the Bay. Several weeks ago the cruiser had some little difficulty in getting over the bar at the entrance to the Bay, and owing to the rapidly shifting nature of this natural barrier the Duguay Trouin is in the somewhat remarkable position of a prisoner in a newly-acquired harbour. The Dugnay Trouin is the vessel which had trouble with the natives some time ago regarding the purchase of provisions. The commander landed a small party of marines and bluejackets, took twenty Chinese on board as hostages till provisions were supplied and then flogged the prisoners before allowing them to go ashore.

Messrs. S. W. & Co., writing from Manchester, under date June 25th, say:—This has been a dull month in the Pig Iron trade. The volume of business has been small, and prices of both Scotch and Cleveland Iron have drooped steadily, though only slowly; the total fall during the month being some 3d. or 4d. per ton. At present there is very little trade being done, but producers in the Cleveland district are understood to be well provided with orders to keep them going for some weeks, and are not anxious about selling at present. The Manufactured Iron trade in the Midlands continues in a good position; producers are already well provided with orders, and a fair amount of new business is being transacted, values thus being well maintained. Copper has fallen steadily about 22s. 6d. per ton during the month, but is now a little firmer again. Tin has advanced strongly, about £2, and tends further upwards. Spelter has advanced 12s. 6d., and is steady. Lead has fallen about 7s. 6d., and is easy.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE "IRENE" AT MANILA.

An official despatch from the Board of Command of the Second Division of the German Asiatic Squadron has been sent from Tsintau (where the Irene is now stationed) to the German Consulate at Shanghai. The purpose of the despatch is to correct the erroneous statements published in the China Gazette of the 13th July and the N.C. Daily News of the 14th July concerning the sending of the Irene to Isla Grande in Subic Bay. It has been officially established that the Irene went to Isla Grande to bring away distressed Spanish women and children, and that she there accidentally encountered the insurgent steamer Filipinas. This steamer, without any demand on the part of the Germans, offered to allow herself to be searched, an offer of which the Irene did not, however, avail herself. The Filipinas then left of her own accord, and the Irene subsequently left the island, having taken on board the women and children. On her way back to Manila she passed outside the bay two American cruisers, neither of which communicated with her. According to this account we see that the Irene was engaged only in the cause of humanity, and did not in the slightest degree infringe the rules of neutrality. Any other interpretation of the facts can only be the result of an endeavour to sow the seeds of misunderstanding between the Germans and the Americans.

In the Shanghai Daily Press of July 21st a telegram from Hongkong was published, stating that at a picnic given by the officers of the Irene at which some of the higher Spanish officers were present as guests, the captain of the German warship delivered a political speech against the annexation of the Philippines by the United States. We are authorised to state that all the data of this telegram are purely fictitious. It is untrue that any picnic took place on board the Irene at which Spanish officers were present, and it is also untrue that the captain of the Irene made any speech in the presence of Spanish officers.—Der Ostasiatische Lloyd.

MOSQUITO YACHT CLUB.

On Saturday the Mosquito Yacht Club had a race to Tomioka for a prize presented by the late Commodore, Mr. W. W. Campbell, the course and conditions being as published last week. An excellent start was effected and the three boats ran to the harbour entrance, with spinnakers to starboard, in close company. When on the wind the Kodesu drew ahead and the Lightship was passed by her, the Nandeska, and the Sodeska, in the order named at half minute intervals. Beating down to Nagahama, the Nandeska and Kodesu kept passing and repassing each other as each was favoured by wind and sea, or found herself on her pet tack. The Nandeska prefers the port tack and the Kodesu the starboard. The Sodeska kept farther out to sea than the leaders and meeting more tide fell behind. Off Tomioka the wind was lighter and the sea smoother, and, as this state of affairs just suited the Kodesu, she was able to outsail the Nandeska and finished 2 min. 45 sec. ahead of her. The times, as taken by Mr. Blad, the officer of the day, were as under :—

	Start.	Light-ship.	Widow Buoy.	Nagahama Buoy.	Finish.
Nandeska.	3 05.09	3.31.34	4 36 00	5 36.30	5.44 45
Sodeska ...	3.05.07	3.32.10	4 40.00	5 46 02	5 54.10
Kodesu ...	3.05.07	3.31.00	4.36.10	5 34 00	5.42.00

The Nandeska was sailed by Mr. F. J. Hall, the Sodeska by Mr. Lefroy, and the Kodesu by Mr. Warming. At half-past seven, members and guests of the Club sat down to dinner in the pretty grounds of the Club House, and a pleasant time ensued. At 10.30 the launch set out for the return, taking the Sodeska and Nandeska in tow—the Kodesu had returned with Mr. Lefroy directly after the race. The Aborigine also came in for a tow before reaching home, and moorings were found shortly after midnight.

RAILWAY MEETINGS.

We take from the Japan Times the following railway reports :—

JAPAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

An ordinary general meeting of the Japan Railway Company was held on the 9th inst. at the Y. M. C. A. Hall in Kanda. The shareholders present numbered 580, representing 2,168 shares. Mr. Shibusawa, one of the Directors, presided. The business report and the financial accounts for the past half year were read and adopted as presented by the Directors, although there was some discussion concerning the distribution of bonuses. The profit and loss account was stated as follows :—

	Yen.
Net profits...	1,261,646
Proceeds from the disposal of superfluous estates	1,473
Brought forward from the preceding account	116,882
Total	1,380,001
To reserve...	63,082
Bonuses	25,269
Interest on loans	116,595
Expense of removal...	1,310
Depreciation of value of the War Loan Bonds	1,340
Interest for debentures and fund for the redemption of the same	13,750
Dividend (5½ per cent.)...	1,145,666
To be carried forward to next account	12,987

Subsequently a special general meeting was held for the election of Directors and Auditors, the term of the present officials having expired. The voting resulted as follows. Directors :—Viscount Yujun Soga, Messrs. Takeshi Arishima, Tetsunosuke Tomita, Akira Sakai, Jusuke Mori, Ryosaku Kume, Rinhei Tsunoda, Genchо Futabashi, Eiichi Shibusawa, Choshiro Kikuchi, Ikuzo Wakao, and Fukusaburo Watanabe. Auditors :—Messrs. Shigenari Yasukawa, Kentoku Hayashi, and Shoichi Kyuno.

Mr. Shibusawa, chairman, proposed that a certain amount in bonuses should be presented to those who retired from the Board of Directors in recognition of their services. The proposal was adopted without division. The meeting rose at 2.40 p.m.

HOKKAIDO RAILWAY AND COAL MINING COMPANY.

The Hokkaido Railway and Coal Mining Company held its regular general meeting at the Company's branch office, Tokyo, on the 7th inst. to settle the business account for the half year ended June last. The meeting was attended by 192 shareholders, altogether representing 158,767 shares. Mr. Kayemon Takashima occupied the Chair, and the business report was read by Mr. Kakugoro Inouye, one of the Directors of the Company. It was to the following effect :—

	Yen.
Net profit	704,651
Brought forward from previous account ..	84,334
To reserve...	36,000
Bonus	59,895
Dividend (12 per cent. per annum)	648,020
To next account	45,071

Director Inouye then addressed those present on the business done during the half year. In round figures the general profit during the first half year shows an increase of 107,000 yen over the corresponding period of last year, but a decrease of 107,000 yen against the second half year of the previous year. The profit realized by the Railway Section during the term totalled 285,000 yen and the amount of coal procured was only 245,000 tons owing to the fire at Yubari colliery this spring, while there was an increase of some 1 36 per cent. in passengers fares and of some 45 per cent. in freights. With regard to the Mining Section there was a total profit of 522,000 yen during the period, and had it not been for the recent explosion in the Yubari mine the profits would have been much greater. The direct loss from the fire at Yubari mines was 27,000 yen. There was further an indirect loss of some 170,000 yen owing to the diminution of output to the extent of about 53,000 tons during the past season; and but for occurrence of the fire some 200,000 yen would have been carried forward to next account instead of 45,071 yen.

On the question of the second half of this year the Director further stated that the Company at its general meeting to be convened in February next will be able to declare a dividend of 15 per cent. and some 85,000 yen may be carried to new account, even though some 173,000 yen are to be laid aside as special reserve. The Director concluded by saying that though the business prospects for coal cannot be said to be bright at present, the output from the Yubari, Sorachi, Horonai and other mines is scarcely sufficient to meet the demand.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPEL BURNT.

Information was received in Shanghai on August 3rd, says the Mercury, from the Roman Catholic Mission station at the Feng-wan-shan Hills that a riot took place on Tuesday last at Naizee, a village near the Hills largely inhabited by native Christians.

About 1,000 men marched in a body and attacked a Christian family who were believed to have a large quantity of rice stored up. The attack was quite unexpected and so far as we can learn was made upon innocent persons. Several were injured but no lives were lost.

The Roman Catholic chapel was burnt to the ground and the native Christians had to flee for their lives. The cause of the outbreak is traceable not to hostility to Christianity but against the hoarding of rice with the object of enhancing the price.

The chapel was largely built from votive offerings and was only used occasionally, there being no resident priest.

HONGKONG AND SHANGHAI BANK DIVIDENDS.

The following statement, says the Daily Press, shows the dividends paid by the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank during the past twenty years :—

	First 6 mos.	Second 6 mos.
1878	£1 0	£1 0
79	1 0	1 0
80	1 5	1 10
81	1 10	*2 0
82	1 10	*2 10
83	2 0	2 0
84	2 0	2 0
85	2 0	*2 10
86	2 0	1 10
87	1 10	1 10
88	1 10	1 10
89	1 10	*2 10
90	†2 10	†3 0
91	1 10	1 10
92	1 0	1 0
93	1 0	1 0
94	1 0	1 5
95	1 5	1 5
96	1 5	1 5
97	1 5	1 5
98	1 5

* Includes bonus of 10s. † Includes bonus of £1

Includes bonus of £1 10s.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

The following notification was issued on the 27th instant above the signatures of the Premier and the Minister of Finance :—

LAW No. 22.

Special Regulations for dealing with taxes on land devastated by inundations.

Art. I.—These Regulations shall apply to land devastated by inundation from July to October of the 30th year of Meiji.

Art. II.—Land which, though not entirely laid waste, has not, owing to damage by flood, produced a harvest, shall be exempted from tax for the 30th year of Meiji.

Art. III.—The annual instalment of taxes in arrear in connection with land coming under the purview of the preceding Article shall not be collected for the 30th year of Meiji.

Art. IV.—The collection of land taxes shall be suspended during the period in which the extent of damages sustained is under investigation in accordance with these Regulations.

Art. V.—Taxes on such land collected prior to the enforcement of these Regulations shall be returned.

Art. VI.—No complaint or action in an administrative law court can be instituted with regard to the enforcement of these Regulations.

Art. VII.—Any person desiring to be dealt with according to the above Regulations is required to notify the fact up to August 31st of the 31s year of Meiji. If he fails to present the requisite notice within the prescribed period, he will not be entitled to relief in conformity with these Regulations.

Digitized by Google Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Another Notification, issued over the signature of the Minister of War, embodies regulations for the control of surveying operations on land and sea. Some of the most important provisions are as follow :—

Art. I.—If any person desires to survey, sketch, paint, photograph or take note of the topographical features of land or sea within 5,750 ken of any fort or stronghold, he must previously obtain permission from the Commandant of the fort, and must comply with the instructions he receives from that officer.

Art. V.—Violation of Article I. shall subject the offender to major imprisonment for a term of from 11 days to 1 year, or to a fine of from 2 to 50 yen.

Art. VI.—Any person removing or destroying sign posts, whether stone, wood, or board, shall be liable to major imprisonment for a term ranging from 11 days to 2 months, or to a fine of from 2 to 20 yen. Offences of this nature committed through inadvertence shall be punished with a police fine ranging from 5 sen to 1.95 yen.

In addition to the above an Imperial Ordinance was issued embodying regulations for the organisation of public schools in Formosa. According to those regulations the schools are to be placed under the control of the Directors of the Benmusho or its branches, subject to the local governor or chief of the administration. In each district where a public school is established, an educational committee of two is to be appointed.

The Official Gazette publishes engravings of the new revenue stamps to be issued in accordance with Imperial Ordinance No. 140 of the 31st year of Meiji. They are of four different classes. The stamps of the 1st class differ in value from 10 yen to 100 yen; those of the 2nd from 50 sen to 5 yen; those of the 3rd from 1 sen to 10 sen; those of the 4th from 1 rin to 5 rin.

CRICKET.

THE FLEET VERSUS YOKOHAMA.

In blazing summer weather the fourteenth cricket match of the present season began on Saturday morning on the Yokohama Cricket ground, between a team from Her Majesty's Fleet now in Yokohama and an eleven of the Y.C. and A.C.: and on this occasion victory rested with the home eleven. Yokohama, though it won the toss, sent in the visitors first, soon after eleven o'clock. Fairie and Strong opened for the Fleet, facing the bowling of White and Clark. Scoring was slow at the beginning and the first man was dismissed for 11 runs. The fielding of the home side was a great improvement on previous exhibitions and this kept the visitors from getting many runs, so that when the adjournment was made for tiffin 38 was the score for three wickets. Resuming play at 2.45, the Fleet remained in till nearly four o'clock, by which time they had knocked up 129 Duff and Kilby went out first for Yokohama, and the former was dismissed after scoring 8 runs. Crawford then went in and took the figures up steadily, his partnership with Kilby resulting in 77 being telegraphed. Then White partnered Crawford and runs came quicker, and soon the visitors total was passed. Crawford's 78 was the feature of the match, his play being neat and good. Scores :—

FLEET.

Lieut. Fairie (Centurion), st. Duff, b. White	40
Lieut. Strong (Victorious), b. Clarke	5
Mr. Wall (Powerful), b. Kingdon...	8
Lieut. Barton (Whiting), c. H. W. Kilby, b. White	20
Mr. Peile (Powerful), c. Kingdon, b. White...	1
Mr. Bull (Centurion), l.b.w., b. Clarke ...	0
Lieut. Nicholas (Powerful), c. Clarke, White	0
Lieut. Egerton (Powerful), not out	29
Mr. Manisty (Centurion), c. White, b. Clarke	0
Mr. Shipway (Centurion), c. Clarke, b. White	18
Major Bishop (Victorious), c. Clarke, b. Murdoch	10
Extras	6
	129

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	Balls.	Maidens.	Runs.	Wks.
Mr. White	130	11	41	5
Mr. Clarke	90	5	30	3
Mr. Murdoch ...	61	7	16	1
Mr. Edwards... ...	50	4	16	—
Mr. Bughird	5	—	5	—
Mr. Kingdon... ...	40	2	15	1
Mr. Hunt ...

YOKOHAMA.

Mr. Duff, b. Manisty	8
Mr. H. W. Kilby, b. Fairie	18
Mr. Crawford, c. Wall, b. Manisty	78
Mr. P. B. Clarke, c. Wall, b. Manisty ...	0
Mr. F. E White, c. Bishop, b. Peile	12
Mr. E. B. S. Edwards, c. Egerton, b. Wall...	2
Mr. Hunt, c. Fairie, b. Barton	29
Mr. Bughird, b. Wall	3
Mr. Kilby, not out	28
Mr. Murdoch, st. Egerton, b. Barton	0
Mr. Kingdon, not out	4
Extras	6
	188

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	B.	M.	R.	W.
Mr. Wall	155	20	40	2
Mr. Manisty	115	5	59	3
Mr. Strong	50	1	21	—
Mr. Fairie	40	2	25	1
Mr. Nicholas	50	—	25	—
Mr. Peile	10	—	7	1
Mr. Barton	10	—	8	2

THE FLEET VERSUS YOKOHAMA.

The return match between the Fleet and the Y.C. & A.C., took place on Wednesday in piping hot weather. Play began shortly before two o'clock and continued till 6.30 o'clock, when Yokohama had still two wickets to fall. The game was therefore drawn, though, as a glance at the score will show, very much in favour of the Fleet. The visitors went in first and had the Yokohama bowlers at their mercy for the best part of the afternoon. Shortly after five the last Navy wickets fell, and 189 was the total of runs telegraphed. Lieut. Barton made top score, 50, being followed by Lieut. Fairie, 42. The head of the team was decidedly the strongest part of the combination, as will be seen when we state that the first wicket fell for 28, the second for 96, the third for 140, the fourth for 144, the fifth for 175 the sixth for 179, the seventh for 185, the eighth for 187, and the ninth and tenth for 189. Yokohama, after a hot afternoon's leather hunting, were scarcely in good trim for batting. Their only hope was to keep up the wickets and play against time. In this they succeded, and thus averted a bad defeat. Clarke was the only man to achieve anything worth chronicalling, his 32 being the result of some free hitting. The best stand was made when he was partnered with Johnson and H. W. Kilby. Yokohama were dismissed, first wicket for 2, second for 5, third for 16, fourth for 33, fifth for 62, sixth for 73, seventh for 74, eighth for 76—then stumps were drawn. Scores :—

THE FLEET.

Lieut. Fairie, Centurion, c. Stewart, b. Johnson	42
Lieut. Hall, Victorious, b. Kingdon	17
Lieut. Barton, Whiting, c. H. Kilby, b. Murdoch	50
Major Bishop, Victorious, c. H. Kilby, b. Kingdon	2
Lieut Compton, Narcissus, c. Crawford, b. Clarke	16
Mr. Gascoigne, Narcissus, run out	12
Mr. Gush, Victorious, c. and b. Clarke... ...	2
Sub. Lt. Marston, Victorious, l.b.w. Clarke...	7
Chapman, L. S Centurion, b. Bughird... ...	1
Mr. Brooke, Narcissus, c. and b. Clarke ...	2
Mr. McNeile, not out	0
b. 11, l.b. 3, w. 1...	15
	189

YOKOHAMA.

Mr. P. B. Clarke, c. Hall, b. Gascoigne ...	32
Mr. E. H. Bughird, b. Fairie	1
Mr. C. M. Duff, b. Hall	1
Mr. K F. Crawford, b. Fairie	2
Mr. R C. K. Johnson, c Barton, b. Hall ...	11
Mr. H. W. Kilby, c. Chapman, b. Bishop ...	11
Mr. E W. Kilby, not out	9
Mr. H. A. Stewart, b. Fairie	1
Mr. H. R. Main, c. & b. Fairie	0
Mr. J. Murdoch, not out	0
Mr. A Kingdon, did not bat	—
b. 10	10
	78

The Government of India is making extensive experiments in the Deccan with a theory evolved by one of its medical advisers that the growth of sunflowers in malarial soil is much more beneficial in the prevention of malaria than the eucalyptus tree. So far as can be judged, the results have been in every way satisfactory.

ALLEGED FRAUDS BY A YOUNG FOREIGNER.

Yesterday afternoon, says the Kobe Chronicle of Tuesday, the Japanese police placed under arrest a young foreigner who gave the name of C. Baines. There are various charges against him of obtaining goods by false pretences, and according to the statements of the police it appears that he made his appearance in Kobe in June last, and commenced work in Motomachi. Among other shops he visited was that of Mr. Y. Nakao of 287 Motomachi, 4-chome. There he was successful in obtaining a hat, coat, pipe, and a bottle of Florida water, valued altogether at yen 19 75, upon his statement that he was employed here, and upon his signature to an ordinary invoice of the goods. Other tradesmen were visited, but, as far as known, he had no further success. "Baines," as he styles himself, seems to have left Kobe after this, and nothing was heard of him until a week or so ago, when he reappeared and obtained accommodation in a house upon the hill. There he seems to have stated that he had "great expectations," and for a little while no suspicion was aroused as to his real position. On Saturday last the police state that he entered a jeweller's shop in Motomachi, and after looking at sundry articles selected a diamond ring valued at yen 60, which he said he would purchase if the shopkeeper would accept his "signature on a chit." That was not agreed to, and he left the shop to visit another. On Sunday he was in Motomachi again, and interviewed other jewellers and dealers, but without result. Suspicions having been aroused, he was asked by a police officer who had watched his movements to accompany him to the station. This was done, and he then stated that he was an American citizen. The United States Consul was seen, but as Mr. "Baines" had no papers of any kind to support his assertion, Mr. Lyon refused to recognise him. The police then allowed Mr. "Baines" to leave the station, but kept him in view, and at one o'clock yesterday arrested him upon information of other charges to be preferred against him. One of these is that of going to a hotel on the hill on Sunday night, and running up a little bill without any means of paying it. When seen at the station yesterday afternoon, Mr. "Baines" seemed disinclined to give a Chronicle representative any information on the subject of his arrest or his antecedents. He did, however, state that he had been "for some time a traveller for the Equitable Life Insurance Company, running up and down the Chinese ports." He informed the police, however, that he had only been in Japan a month, having just come up from Singapore. He is, he says, eighteen years of age, and persists that his arrest is illegal—that the police have taken the wrong man.

Mr. "Bains" is about 5 feet 3 in. in height, and of a fair complexion. He is said to be constantly dressed in light tweeds with a straw hat, but has not by any means an American accent.

In this connection it may be stated that a Yokohama contemporary recently published a paragraph relating to the doings of a young man named M. Edwards, who was alleged to have victimised several hotel keepers and commercial establishments in the northern port. The police were on the young gentleman's track, but while the question of his nationality was under consideration he disappeared. The local police are now in communication with Yokohama with a view of ascertaining whether Mr. "Baines" and Mr. Edwards" are one and the same person.

Since the above was in type, we learn that Mr. "Baines" was taken to the Municipal Police Station last evening pending inquiries as to his nationality.

MANILA AFFAIRS.

FUTURE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

SORTIE BY THE SPANISH GARRISON.

(From the "China Mail.")

U. S. Army Headquarters.
Cavite, July 21, 1898.

There can be only one construction placed upon the latest development of the native policy. Aguinaldo and his supporters evidently imagine that the United States Government will withdraw their troops as soon as Spain is conquered, leaving the Revolutionaries in possession. It is at least obvious that in the event of Spain being unable to indemnify the United States for the cost of the war —which is very likely—the Spanish Colonies will be held either permanently or temporarily until the United States have repaid themselves. A section of the native leaders has shown itself possessed of considerable ability, and doubtless the United States Government will avail itself of this material to assist in the administration of the country. But there can be no dual control, and the administration must be held by the conquerors of Spain. It is, therefore, premature to speak of a Revolutionary Government, President, and Cabinet. Aguinaldo and his chief supporters are here through the direct agency of the United States of America, and it would be well that these gentlemen should bear this in mind. As time goes on, it is becoming more clearly apparent that the United States officials who are responsible for the shipment of the insurgent leaders to Cavite may have made a grievous mistake, and whereas there was a tendency a few weeks ago to strive for the credit of this move, I expect there will soon be an equally fervent desire on the part of these same officials to wash their hands of all responsibility.

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

So much for the political aspect of the situation. It requires very delicate handling, and I have not said all I might have said. The trouble will begin when the Spaniards are dislodged from Manila.

The last of the 1st Californian Volunteers left this morning for the Bacoor shore, where the whole of the American forces are now concentrated with the exception of the 14th Regulars, the 2nd Oregon Volunteers, and the 300 men of the 23rd Regular Infantry commanded by Colonel French.

At the Insurgent Headquarters in Cavite, I have been able to glean some additional particulars of Sunday's fight. It appears that a general advance was made along the line. On the north side, General Pantaleon Garcia was in command; and here, in spite of the desperate bravery of the Spanish Garrisons, the insurgents succeeded in capturing three outposts. Skirmishing commenced at midnight on Saturday, the 16th inst., and fighting continued almost without cessation till 3 p.m. on Sunday. The Spaniards made their first rally in the Chinese cemetery at Loma, but were defeated with considerable loss, yielding up the entrenchments and a neighbouring blockhouse, and afterwards the posts of Pago and Kitas, where they had been strongly entrenched. This brings the insurgents close to the suburbs of Tondo. Before being forced back on Binondo and across the river into the walled city, the Spaniards are expected to make a strong fight. The American officers do not anticipate any further advance along this line; but the insurgents have been so successful in their rifle and hand-to-hand combats with the Spaniards that we need not be astonished at any advance. The Spanish soldiers must be thoroughly disheartened and worn out by fatigue; but the poor fellows, badly officered and badly fed, at least deserve great credit for the plucky manner in which they have fought under the most discouraging conditions. The insurgents admit having three men killed and many wounded on the north side. What the Spanish loss was is unknown. The dead are buried where they fell. A native who escaped from the city on Sunday night reports that the wounded were being carried into the walled city in large batches, and as the losing side it may be conjectured that they lost heavily before abandoning their entrenched position.

On the south side, the insurgents were not so successful. Here General Noriel has to operate against the pulveria, or powder magazine at Malate. This has been the centre of many fights since my arrival, and although driven from their trenches the Spaniards have made up their minds to make a desperate resistance in the fort. Sunday's fighting was severe. I have been informed that the rebels lost at least 50 men killed; but at Headquarters they admit only 11 killed and many wounded. I have seen many wounded men, Spanish and insurgents, but, as the wounds were dressed, cannot say from personal observation what the stopping effect of the Mauser bullet may be. The Americans, on the other side of the Bay, saw many wounded insurgents brought back from the front. When a man is picked off in the trenches, he is allowed to lie until the fire slackens; then he is thrown loosely over the shoulder of a comrade and carried, bleeding and groaning, to the rear to have his wounds dressed. It is wonderful to see the fortitude with which these young lads fight and suffer. One lad was brought into the insurgent hospital at Paranaque suffering from a wounded arm. The arm was completely shattered at the elbow joint, and the native doctor decided to amputate. This operation was performed without any anæsthetics. The limb was placed across the table, the surgeon struck two or three sharp blows with a native bolo, or hacking sword, and the injured part was thus roughly amputated! The insurgents, however, have many capable surgeons, who have done excellent work.

The rebels captured the Spanish outpost at Meutibig, but I am informed that the Spaniards made a sortie along the Malate line last night, driving out the insurgents, who fell back upon the American lines. The U.S. cruiser Boston, which had been moved over to the Bacoor shore to cover the landing of the American troops, signalled to the flagship that the Spaniards were forcing back the rebels on our camp. Brigadier-General Greene proceeded to the front at once, and the American troops advanced their lines slightly and prepared to resist attack. Fighting between the rebels and the Spaniards was carried on throughout the night as usual, with no serious results on either side. It would have given a new interest to camp life if the American troops had come into action. These slight repulses should have a good effect on the political situation. The Spaniards were content to re-occupy the entrenchments they had abandoned during the recent fighting, but subsequently withdrew 1,000 yards; but as the zone is swept by the Spanish quick-firing guns the rebels have not advanced.

On this side, the encampment wears a deserted aspect. Partially with the aid of natives, partially by their own efforts, but chiefly by utilising the Spanish prisoners from Guam, the American troops have cleaned and transformed the Arsenal and its immediate surroundings. The palm in this respect must be yielded to Captain Geary of the U.S. Artillery Volunteers and an ex-Regular who has completely changed the appearance of Fort St. Filipe. In the course of his operations, Capt. Geary unearthed two oubliettes in the massive masonry of the walls, and in another quarter brought to light two dark, dismal, narrow cells said by the natives to have been used by the Spaniards in former times as torture chambers.

I hear that steps are being taken to obtain khaki uniforms for the American troops here, and that a large sum of money has been sent to Hongkong to obtain the requisite amount of material. This is a wise step. If the American troops are to remain in these islands for any considerable length of time they must be clothed differently, and khaki is the most suitable material. As soon as Manila is taken, some of your local firms ought to come down here and open branch establishments. There is a fine field for enterprising firms content with a reasonable profit. Doubtless the Manila stores will supply the needs of the Americans, but they can do so only to a limited extent, and the officers and men will go where English is spoken, if they are not charged exorbitant prices for every luxury. The Volunteer Regiments are composed of men accustomed to a considerable degree of comfort. Their needs are many. Tailors and outfitters, wine merchants, and general retail dealers should do well. As it is, I know many orders are going by every steamer to Hongkong, but stores on the spot will obtain all the orders, as soon as a paymaster comes along. The American forces, officers and men, have arrears of pay coming to them, no payment having been made since they left San Francisco. Is there any enterprise in Hongkong to rise to the occasion?

Governor-General Merritt, it is stated has authority from the United States Government to re-enact the Spanish import and export duties in the Philippines.

ARRIVAL OF GENERAL MERRITT.

Cavite, July 25.

Major-General Merritt and staff arrived in Manila Bay to-day on board the transport steamer Newport. It is hoped the attack on Manila will be made. Rain has fallen heavily for three days.

ARREST OF THREE SUSPECTED SPIES

MORE FIGHTING AT MALATE.

U.S. Army Headquarters,
Cavite, July 22nd, 1868.

This weary period of inaction, the long-drawn-out suspense, is more wearing, more trying on the nerves than a continuous spell of fighting might be conceived to be, and we will all be pleased when the Commander-in-Chief gives the order to move upon Manila. When that will be no one knows. Presumably we are awaiting the arrival of Major-General Merritt, who, as Governor-General of the Philippines (vice Captain-General Augustin cooped up in Manila), has dictatorial powers to deal with the peculiar political situation now in course of development. It is also said we are awaiting the monitor Monterey, expected daily.

Two days ago, the British sailing ship Fort Stuart arrived from Australia heavily laden with a cargo of coal. As she sailed slowly up the Bay, she was met by the Concord. The Fort Stuart was supposed to have put in here in the hope that that she might be "captured" by the American Admiral, but coal is now plentiful. She left to-day.

The friction I have hinted at between the insurgent leader and the American authorities is slowly developing. All along the Cavite peninsula, Aguinaldo has registered the live stock of the natives and the ordinary means of transportation. When the American advance was made, there was difficulty on the score of transport, Aguinaldo having impressed on the natives that his consent was essential before any contract could be made with the American transport department. This was an act almost amounting to open hostility, although I do not suppose it was meant as such. General Anderson took prompt action. He sent a formal request for baggage animals and conveyances. Aguinaldo declined to furnish them, or to remove his embargo. General Anderson hesitated not at all. Having observed the conventionalities, he informed the Filipino leader that he meant to take just what he needed for the service of his forces, under the usual conditions of civilised warfare. Aguinaldo bowed before the inevitable. The ponies, bullocks, carts and other conveyances were soon forthcoming, and no delay of any consequence was experienced in pushing forward supplies from the shore to Dewey Camp at Tambo.

The despatch-boat McCulloch is now regularly engaged on patrol duty in the waters between the walled city and the neutral warships.

Yesterday there was another heavy engagement near Malate. Shortly before 6 p.m., there was an explosion as if a magazine had blown up, but details have not reached Cavite. These skirmishes are now so common that they attract little attention.

Much more exciting was the news circulated in Cavite yesterday that two German spies had been arrested in the American lines at Tambo. I visited them to-day in Fort San Filipe, where they had been handed over to the tender care of Capt. Geary. They stated that their names were E. Moll and Schaub, that they belong to the firm of Messrs Kuenzle and Streiff, and that they were of Swiss nationality, not German. For some reason which they would not inform me—but which I have since been informed was nothing more menacing than the purchase of Spanish bank notes at a discount of 25 per cent—they resolved to set out from Manila to visit the opposite lines. They carried passports from General Augustin, cheque books, letter of credit and papers from the German and Swiss Consuls. Getting pass the outposts at San Juan del Monte, they were alarmed to find themselves the target of one of the Spanish forts. They bolted precipitately and sought shelter in the scrub remaining there throughout the night of the 20th inst. Yesterday morning, they attracted the attention of the rebel outposts, who refrained from firing and allowed them to pass to the rear. They told me they were astonished to find themselves walking into an American camp, and yet more astonished when arrested as suspected spies and sent over to Cavite. The officer in command of the advanced battalion of the Colorado Regiment, Major, Moses, effected the arrest very diplomatically. After making their acquaintance he invited them to remain for lunch. Suspecting nothing they pleaded another engagement. The hospitable major was not to be denied. He persuaded them to stay and have the honour of tiffining with Brigadier Greene. The Brigadier then informed them that they would have to accompany Lieut. Allen, A.D.C., to Cavite. To-day they realised the gravity of the situation, but attempted to laugh it off as an unfortunate misunderstanding. As I write, they remain among Captain Geary's guests in the fort. There they will be safe from harm.

Another Manila resident, a German named Lenhoi, also came through the lines accompanied by two British subjects. He was arrested as a suspect, but subsequently released, and allowed to return to the city. A few more incarcerations in Fort San Felipe will check these excursions from Manila to the American lines.

This morning, on instructions from Admiral Dewey, a party of eight Spanish prisoners was released from Cavite and conveyed to Manila. They comprised four priests named Bruno Alberde, Lorenzo Macho, Miguel Hernandes, and Segundo Alonzo Gomes, and four civilians named Mario La Feta, Antonio Pneo, Manuel Gavay, and Juan de Juan. The latter is a reporter on the Oceani Espagnola. These eight men were among the prisoners who voluntarily surrendered to the Americans when the gunboat Leyte was forced down the Pampanga River by the rebels a few weeks ago. The transfer to Manila was made at the request of the prisoners, whose choice is remarkable when consideration is given to the comfort of the Spanish prisoners kept under direct American supervision. The negotiations were carried out by the Belgian Consul, M. Andre. There are now 33 Spanish military and naval officers and 10 or 80 men in durance in Fort San Felipe. Something has also been done to alleviate the conditions of the prisoners under the care of the insurgents in Cavite. The officers' wives and children, who had been kept in close captivity since the fall of Cavite, will be allowed greater freedom, and they will also receive better food and treatment. This desirable reformation has been brought about through the agency of General Anderson.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Last night, one of the Spanish prisoners died of anæmic poisoning. The body was buried at San Roque this afternoon. This is the first death ashore on the American side. The health of the troops is now excellent. There is a suspicion that a large proportion of the cases reported in previous letters was due to malingering. Some of the cases were said to be due to injudicious exposure to the sun. All the commissariat and transport work has to be done by the soldiers in the ranks. It is hard work, and it is not surprising that Volunteers unaccustomed to manual labour should suffer severely. Few of the cases now in hospital are climatic.

TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

SEVERE FIGHTING AT MANILA.
SUSPICIOUS CONDUCT OF AQUINALDO.
SPANIARDS REPULSED THRICE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Manila, August 6, via Shanghai, August 9.

The Spaniards attacked the American Camp near Malate on the night of the 31st July. They charged the American line repeatedly but were eventually driven off with heavy loss.

The Americans had eleven killed and thirty-seven wounded.

The rebels—Filipinos—withdrew at the first shot and it is firmly believed that Aguinaldo was aware of the Spanish intentions to attack and deliberately retired.

On the 1st and 2nd August there were renewed Spanish attacks, but these were all repulsed, the Americans losing one killed and having eleven wounded.

SHIP ON FIRE IN KOBE.
RUMOURS OF INCENDIARISM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Kobe, Aug. 12, 8.40 a.m.

Fire broke out on the ship Baring Brothers at half-past twelve o'clock this morning and before the flames were extinguished the vessel was completely gutted. There are rumours of incendiarism circulating this morning, which gather about the crew, as the vessel was loaded ready for departure.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

FRENCH AMBASSADOR CONFERS WITH PRESIDENT MCKINLEY.

London, Aug. 5.

M. Cambon, French Ambassador at Washington, acting as Spanish plenipotentiary, had an hour's conference with President McKinley at the White House on Wednesday, but no statement has been given out by the authorities to the press. This silence and the length of the conference are unfavourably commented on. Meanwhile, the Hon. R. Alger, Secretary of War, has announced that the war plans remain unmodified.

HOSTILITIES ABOUT TO CEASE.

London, Aug. 6.

It is understood that Spain has practically agreed to the terms of peace. Hostilities are expected to cease by Sunday. The New York Herald states that President McKinley has decided to utilise the harbour of Pagopago, Samoa, as a naval coaling station. In consequence of a memorial from Shafter's leading officers that the army must perish of fever unless moved, the War Office is arranging to send the troops home.

SPAIN'S REPLY ON THE WAY.

QUEEN REGENT APPROVES.

London, Aug. 8.

The Queen-Regent has approved. Spain's reply to America, which will reach the White House by Tuesday at latest, after which date Spain expects hostilities will cease forthwith.

SPAIN ACCEPTS CONDITIONS.

HOME-COMING OF AMERICANS.

FRIENDLY WELCOME IN PUERTO RICO.

It is semi-officially stated in Madrid that Spain, in her reply to the United States, accepts the peace conditions, and merely stipulates a suspension of hostilities in order to avoid complicating the negotiations for definite peace.

The first transport with American troops from Santiago has arrived at New York.

The landing of troops on the south-east coast of Puerto Rico has been practically completed. The Americans are everywhere welcomed.

SPAIN'S REPLY RECEIVED.

TERMS NOT UNCONDITIONALLY ACCEPTED.

London, Aug. 10.

Spain's reply reached Washington on Monday. It is believed that it does not include an unqualified acceptance of the American terms, but renders possible the cessation of hostilities with the view of the initiation of regular negotiations.

GREAT BRITAIN'S INTERESTS IN CHINA.

MR. CURZON SPEAKS.

London, August 5.

In the course of a debate in the House of Commons on the estimates for the Foreign Office, Mr. Curzon said nothing could be more definite or more precise than the assurance of support given to China. He denied that the open door had ceased to exist either in Manchuria or elsewhere, or had been shut in Britain's face. The concessions secured in China during the last few months were far greater than those obtained by all Britain's rivals put together. This proved that she had maintained her ascendency in the political councils at Pekin.

PROSPECTS OF AN ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

NEW YORK PRESS ADVOCATES JOINT ACTION.

London, Aug. 8.

The Anglo-Russian relations in China are being followed with keen interest in America. Both the New York Times and Sun advocate prompt and joint action between the United States and Great Britain.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN RELATIONS CRITICAL.

The Powers regard the Anglo-Russian relations in China as critical. Complications are apprehended. The stock market is weak.

THE AMERICA CUP.

SIR T. LIPTON'S CHALLENGE.

London, Aug. 5.

Sir T. Lipton, the London tea merchant, has sent his challenge for the America Cup.

INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL.

RESTRICTION OF RESIDENCE.

The Pretoria High Court has decided that Indians engaged in trade in towns in the Transvaal must live in locations outside the townships, to be assigned by the government.

ILLNESS OF THE QUEEN OF DENMARK.

London, August 10.

The Queen of Denmark is reported to be seriously ill. The family is assembling at Copenhagen.

RUSSIA ON THE RED SEA.

A NAVAL BASE.

The Novoe Vremya announces that Russia has acquired the Sultanate of Raheita on the Red Sea, as a naval base.

(Received by the Fiji.)

ARRIVAL OF AMERICAN STEAMERS AT MANILA.

Hongkong, Aug. 10.

The American transports Indiana, City of Para, Morgan City, Valentia and Ohio arrived at Manila on the 31st of July.

Hongkong, Aug. 10.

The American monitor Monterey and the collier Brutus have been added to the U.S. Asiatic Squadron.

ENGAGEMENTS IN THE VICINITY OF MANILA.

Hongkong, Aug. 10.

On the 31st July at noon an engagement was fought in the neighbourhood of Manila lasting for about three hours. The Americans lost 11 soldiers, with 40 wounded, while about 300 Spaniards were killed, and 1,000 wounded. The loss suffered by the rebels was very slight.

ADOPTION OF GOLD STANDARD BY KOREA.

Söul, Aug. 5.

The Korean Government has decided to adopt the gold standard.

KOREA.

Mr. Li In-yu has been appointed Vice-Minister of Justice.

Mr. Yun Ung-yŏl, Chief of the Police Board, has been released from the post and Mr. Min Yŏn-kwi appointed in his place. The Police Board has ordered the Independence Club to stop public speeches on politics, and constables are strictly patrolling the neighbourhood of the Club.

MAIL STEAMERS.

THE NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
America	O. & O. Co.	Gaelic 1	Su. Aug. [illegible]
Hongkong	P. & O. Co.	Rohilla 2	M. Aug. 15
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co	Em. of India 3	M. Aug. [illegible]
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Glengyle 4	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China 5	Th. Aug. 18
Hongkong	N. P. Co.	Olympia 6	M. Aug. 17
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	M. Aug. 22
America	P. M. Co.	Aztec 7	Tu. Aug. 23
Hongkong	M. M. Co.	—	W. Aug. 24
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Hohenzollern	W. Aug. 31

2 Left San Francisco on the 26th July.
3 Left Hongkong on the 5th inst.
3 Left Vancouver on the 2nd inst.
4 Left Hongkong on the 5th inst.
5 Left Hongkong on the 10th inst.
6 Left Hongkong on the 7th inst
7 Left San Francisco on the 4th inst.

THE NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of India	M. Aug. 15
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Gaelic	M. Aug. 15
America	P. M. Co.	Glengyle	Tu. Aug. 16
Canada, &c.....	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of China	F. Aug. 19
Tacoma, Wash....	N. P. Co.	Olympia	F. Aug. 19
Europe, via S'hal.	M. M. Co.	Salazie	W. Aug. 17
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Saikio Maru	W. Aug. 17
Hongkong	P. & O. Co	Rohilla	W. Aug. 24
America	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	W. Aug. 24
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Aztec	W. Aug. '24
Hongkong	N. D. L.	Hohenzollern	F. Sept. 5

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

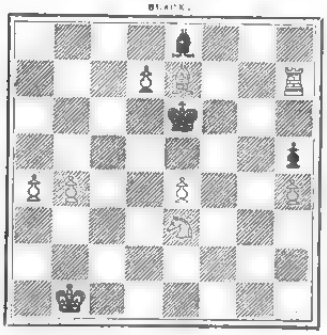
CHESS.

All Communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor.

The Yokohama and the Tokyo Chess Clubs are closed during the summer months.

Our problem-solvers are feeling the fatigues of the summer. One writes:—"Weather too hot, no energy left to tackle the prize 3-movers, 379, 380." Very well, we will wait another week before giving the solutions, that is all.

Problem No. 383.
By H. W. Sherrard, and H. F. L. Meyer.



White mates in three moves.

Game No. 414.
Played in the Vienna Tournament:—

IRREGULER DEFENCE.

White—H. N. Pillsbury.		Black—H. Caro.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P QB3(a)	16 P Q5	P QB4
2 P Q4	P Q4	17 Q K 5ch	K B q
3 Kt QB3	PxP	18 Castles, QR	Q B2(d)
4 KtxP	Bt B3	19 R Q3	R K5
5 KtxKtch	KPxKt	20 R B3	P QR3
6 Kt B3	B Q3	21 Q Q3	KQ Ksq
7 B Q3	B Kt5(b)	22 BxP(e)	K Q2
8 P KR3	B R4	23 B K3	Q R4
9 P KKt4	B K3	24 P R3	P QKt4(f)
10 Kt R4	Kt Q2	25 R B6	B B5
11 Kt B5	BxKt	26 K Ktsq	BxB
12 BxB	P KKt3(c)	27 PxB	RxKP
13 Q K2ch	Q K2	28 Q Q4(g)	R K8ch
14 BxKtch	KxB	29 K R2	RxR
15 B K3	QR Kt	30 Q R7ch	Resigns.

Notes from the St. James's Budget.

(a) Not to be recommended.

(b) As in the French Defence, which this position somewhat resembles, there is no virtue in this pinning of the Kt; there was R to K 3 followed by Q to B 2, with a view to Castling on the Q's side.

(c) The B did no harm there; a simple continuation would have been Q to K 2 ch, followed by Castling QR.

(d) Simpler would have been K to Kt sq.

(e) Very cleverly played. If, in reply, R takes B, then 23—P to Q 6 wins back the piece with advantage.

(f) This move further weakens his position.

(g) A neat combination; even if Black had prevented Q to R 7 ch, then White would win in any case by Q takes P.

Game No. 416.

A Queen's Pawn Opening vigorously and splendidly played by Pillsbury in the Vienna Tournament. It is, no doubt, one of the best games so far. We are indebted to the Illustrated London News for the score and notes:—

QUEEN'S PAWN OPENING.

White—Halprin.		Black—Pillsbury.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P Q4	P Q4	21 KtxKt	Kt B6ch
2 Kt KB3	Kt KB3	22 K Kt2	B Ktsq
3 P K3	P B4	23 R KRsq	P B4(e)
4 P QKt3(a)	PxP	24 Kt B3	P K5
5 PxP	Kt B3	25 B K2	R Ksq
6 P B4	B Kt5	26 Kt Kt5	P B5
7 B K2	P K3	27 Q R3	P K6
8 Castles	PxP	28 P Q6	Kt K4
9 PxP	R B q	29 BxKt	P B6ch
10 B Kt2	B K2	30 K R2	RxB
11 QKt Q2	Castles	31 B Q3	B Q2
12 Q Kt3	Q B2	32 PxP	Q Kt5
13 QR B q	KR Q q	33 B B q	R R4
14 Q K3	B Q3	34 R B2	RxKt
15 P Kt3(b)	Q R4	35 R Q2	R K4
16 B Q3	Q KR4	36 Q Kt2	KxKP
17 Kt Kt5	P K4	37 QxP	R B3
18 P Q5	Kt Q5(c)	38 Q Kt2	P B7(f)
19 P KR4(d)	P KR3
20 Kt(Kt5) K4	KtxKt

NOTES.

(a) This is not commendable, at least at this early stage. P to B 3 is far better, and is in accord with the character of this "stonewall" opening. But for some time, however, White has no apparent inferiority in position.

(b) Something must now be done in view of B to B 5, and no satisfactory result appears from either of the alternatives Kt to K 5 or Kt to K 4, but undoubtedly the move made opens the way to an attack on White's K later.

(c) Very effective, and owing to White's venture 17—Kt to Kt 5, the Kt cannot be taken without loss.

(d) If P to B 3, which looks attractive, Black ought to win by B to QB 4.

(e) Some clever play now ensues. It does not appear that White has any opportunity of getting out of the attack. Black's combinations are worthy of special praise.

(f) The mate by Q takes KtP cannot be avoided.

Game No. 417.

The encounter between Steinitz and Showalter produced another beautiful game, only equalled by Pillsbury's given above.

FRENCH DEFENCE.

White—Steinitz.		Black—Showalter.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 P K4	P K3	20 R K3	P Kt3
2 P Q4	P Q4	21 KR R3	R B2
3 P K5	P QB4	22 K R	K Kt2(d)
4 PxP	QKt B3	23 Kt B3	P KR3
5 KKt B3	BxP	24 R RKtsq	P R4
6 B Q3	KKt K2	25 Q Kt3	Q R q
7 Castles	Kt Kt3	26 Kt Kt5	KR B q
8 R K q	B Q2	27 Q R4(e)	Kt Ktsq
9 P B3	P QR4	28 P B4	PxP
10 P QR4		29 BxQBP	KR K q
(a)	Q Kt q	30 R Q3	R R2
11 Q K2	B K3	31 R Q6(f)	R Kt2
12 Kt R3(b)	Castles	32 QR Q q	B B q
13 QKt Kt5	Kt R2	33 KtxPch	BxKt
14 B K3	BxB	34 BxB	Q R2
15 QxB	KtxKt	35 R Q7ch	R K2
16 PxKt	P Kt3	36 RxKR	KtxR
17 Kt Q4	P B4	37 Q B6ch	K R3
18 P KB4	Kt K2	38 R Q8	R B2
19 Q B2	Q Q-q(c)	39 P R3	Resigns (g)

NOTES.

(a) This is seldom good.

(b) Naturally enough White seeks an entry for the Kt via Kt 5. P to QR 3 was requisite instead of P to QR 4.

(c) We should have preferred Q to K sq.

(d) Black is in a knot, and White proceeds in leisurely fashion as of old. Black might have tried R to Kt 2 with a view to P to Kt 4, to make room for the luckless Kt.

(e) Advancing with stealthy but sure step. Kt takes P ch was threatened.

(f) How smoothly all this works out. White can win the important KP, still is in no hurry and develops his other R first.

(g) White has only a P up, yet the hopelessness of Black forms telling testimony to the powerful play of the veteran.

Notes.

The score in the match between W. L. Jacobsen and W. H. Jonas for the chess championship of Australia on the 14th ult. stood:—Jacobsen 3 wins; Jonas nil; drawn one.

A pawn may generally be sacrificed in the opening with advantage when it accomplishes two objects, i.e., when it brings an undeveloped piece into play, and at the same time keeps an opponent's piece out of play. This applies especially to Gambit attacks.

The St. James's Budget remarks:—Certain problem solvers, somewhat after the fashion of some people's love for flowers, admire the compositions which engage the attention for the time. They like a good problem, solve it, and after it is thus plucked, its interest fades away rapidly and disappears in a day or two to make room for a fresh specimen. They give little thought to aught but the difficulty of solution, and the manner in which the mate is effected. There are, however, other admirers of problems who judge each production from the point of view of problem art. These appreciate a fine creation, and look for the imaginativeness, originality of treatment, symmetry, and purity of construction with a critical eye, and with the same devotion, attention and interest which lovers of art bestow on the objects engaging their attention.

I have recently seen, remarks Black Bishop in the China Mail, in several magazine articles and newspaper paragraphs, a gratifying recognition that chess has attained a dignity and importance transcending that of a mere pastime, and a suggestion that the State should recognise it as a valuable part of intellectual training. It seems a fantastic idea, but, me judice, it would be quite as legitimate a test as many of those applied and far more discouraging to examinees. It would not be easy for the average coach to prepare a student for the following paper.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

June, 1918.

1. Solve the Problem given above.
2. Annotate the following game.
3. State and explain the general principles governing the development of Knights.
4. Discuss the contributions to chess literature of de Cessoliz, Lucena and Steinitz.
5. Compose a two move problem containing at least two mirror mates with a Knight.

N.B.—The practical test of play will be taken on Thursday afternoon from 4 to 8.

Though I yield to none in zeal for the spread of chess, continues Black Bishop, I am not prepared for such a reform as that indicated. Compulsory chess in youth would breed a dislike for it in later years and our educational curricula are for the most part overloaded already. An additional argument in that chess itself would be degraded by dragging it into the arena of results grants. Let chess retain its virgin glory as the only thing that is learned for love and practised for glory, and let avarice, and pedantry keep their hands off the noblest of mental exercises procul absint profani.

The Vienna Tournament.

On account of the withdrawal of Schwarz, one point was added to the score of each contestant. The 23rd round was begun and finished on July 4. The score follows:—

	WON.	LOST.		WON.	LOST.
Alapin	13	10	Pillsbury	17½	4½
Baird	6	17	Schiffers	11	12
Blackburne	11	11	Schlechter	12½	10½
Burn	13	10	Showalter	8	13
Caro	7	16	Steinitz	15½	7½
Halprin	9½	13½	Tarrasch	18½	4½
Janowski	15½	6½	Trenchard	4½	13½
Lipke	13	10	Tschigorin	14	9
Marco	10	13	Walbrodt	12½	10½
Maroczy	13	10

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Omi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,533, C. Young, 4th Aug.,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, Kobe, 3rd Aug., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Belgic, British steamer, 2,695, J. H. Rinder, 4th Aug.,—Hongkong via ports, 26th July, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Mooltan, British ship, 1,616, Kirk, 4th Aug.,—Antwerp, 26th Feb., Coke and Pig Iron.—Sale and Co.

Yarrowdale, British steamer, 1,908, W. G Geddes, 5th Aug.,—Norfolk via ports, Kobe, 3rd Aug., General.—Frazar and Co.

Chingtu, British steamer, 1,459, J. E. Williams, 5th Aug.,—Australia and New Zealand via ports, Hongkong, 30th July, Mails and General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Handy (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 260, Lt.-Com. A. Gillespie, 5th Aug.,—Kobe, 3rd Aug.

Narcissus (12). British Cruiser, 5 600, Capt. K. King-Hall, 5th Aug.,—Kobe, 3rd Aug.

Centurion (14), British Flagship, 10,500, Capt. J. R. Jellicoe, 5th Aug.,—Kobe, 3rd Aug.

Victorious (16), British Battleship, 14,900, Capt. A. Schomberg, 5th Aug.,—Kobe, 3rd Aug.

Satsuma Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,157, N. Ohno, 5th Aug.,—Shanghai via ports, 30th July, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Benlomond, British steamer, 1,754, C. K. McIntosh, 7th Aug.,—Rangoon via Hongkong, 31st July, Rice.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Hothow, British steamer, 896, J. G. Carnaghan, 7th August,—Hongkong, 30th July, Sugar.—Butterfield & Swire.

Columbia, British steamer, 1,689, A. Gow, 7th August,—Tacoma, Wash., and Victoria, B.C., 20th July, Mails & General.—Dodwell Carlill & Co.

Borneo, British steamer, 2,943, A. W. Symes, 8th August,—London via ports and Kobe 6th Aug., Mails and General.—P. & O S.N. Co.

Arcadia, German steamer, 3 481, Burmeister, 8th August,—Hamburg via ports and Hongkong 1st August, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Unison, Norwegian steamer, 760, A. Torbjoinsen, 9th Aug.,—Saghalien, Ballast.—Captain.

Handy (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 260, Lt.-Com. A. Gillespie, 10th Aug.,—Yokosuka, 10 Aug.

Salasie, French steamer, 2,089, Sellier, 11th Aug.,—Marseilles via ports, Kobe, 10th Aug., Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Yinsen Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,433, K. Nakajima, 8th Aug.,—Kobe, 6th Aug., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Shiganoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,507, S. Kakimi, 9th Aug.,—Kobe, 8th Aug., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hokkai Maru, Japanese steamer, 437, K. Soyekawa, 9th Aug.,—Hakodate, 6th Aug., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Suminoye Maru, Japanese steamer, 866, S. Muramatsu, 10th Aug.,—Bonin Islands, 4th Aug., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kumamoto Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,236, K Iwanaga, 10th Aug.,—Kobe, 9th Aug., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

DEPARTURES.

Hohensollern, German steamer, 2,376, H. Bleeker, 5th Aug.,—Hongkong via Kobe and Nagasaki, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Indrapura, British steamer, 2,510, Horsfall, 5th Aug.,—New York via ports and Suez Canal, General.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Pactolus, American barque, 1,585, S. Watts, 5th Aug.,—New York via Kobe, General.—Simon, Evers & Co.

Belgic, British steamer, 2,695, J. H. Rinder, 6th Aug.—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Handy (6), British Torpedo Boat Destroyer, 260, Lt.-Com. A. Gillespie, 6th August,—Yokosuka.

Powerful (14), British Cruiser, 14,200, Capt. Hon. Hedworth Lambton, 7th August,—Hongkong.

Clam, British steamer, 2,311, Black, 7th August, —Vladivostock, Oil and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Columbia, British steamer, 1,689, A. Gow, 8th Aug.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell Carlill & Co.

Glengarry, British steamer, 1,925, Ferguson, 9th Aug.,—Sydney via Moji, Ballast.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Yarrowdale, British steamer, 1,908, W. G. Geddes, 9th Aug.—Batavia via Moji, Ballast.—Frazar and Co.

Rosetta, British steamer, 2,039, E. P. Bishop, 10th —Hongkong via Kobe and Nagasaki, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Chingtu, British steamer, 1,459, J. E. Williams, 10th Aug.,—Australia and New Zealand via Kobe and Hongkong, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Unison, Nowegian steamer, 760, A. Torbjoinsen, 10th Aug.,—Kobe, Ballast.—Captain.

Prometheus, British steamer, 3,583, Robt. Day, 12th Aug.,—London via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Omi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,533, C. Young, 11th Aug.,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Satsuma Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,157, G. Ohno, 10th Aug.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Fuyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 875, Tennick, 8th Aug.,—Nagasaki, Ballast.—Mitsu Bishi Co

Kokura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,567, I. Higo, 7th August,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hiogo Maru, Japanese steamer, 871, H. Walter, 4th Aug.,—Kobe via Yokkaichi, General,—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kamakura Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,797, Tremt, 6th Aug.,—Marseilles, London and Antwerp via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, F. W. Horton, 9th Aug.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Belgic, from Hongkong via ports:—Staff Surg. H. Carlton, R.N., Staff Engineer C. H. Hardcastle, R.N., Baron P. de Gunzburg, Miss E. Corner, Miss E. Reifsnyder, Rev. H. C. Hodges, Mrs. Hodges, Mrs. Everhardt, Miss Moller, Mr. Yun Hing and servant, Mrs. Lawless, Mr. E. Kellman, Mrs. G. R. Moore, Graham and 2 daughters, Mr. S. Strauss, Mr. H. Marcus, Mr. H. W. Lea, Mr. F. G. Sale, Mr. H. Houston, Mrs. Houston, Mrs. J. Liddell, infant and amah, Mr. C. H. Crosse and servant, Miss M. Rogers, Mr. A. E. Blake, Mr. J. Crowther, Dr. J. Fowler, Mr. J. G. Duel, Mrs. Duel, Capt. J. W. Lee, Mr. C. W. Dimock, Mr. G. Palliiz and servant, Mr. G. Gause, Mr. T. T. O. Nicholson, and Mr. J. Butler, in cabin. For San Francisco:—Mr. H. K. C. Fisher, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. Hom Shee and 4 children, Mr. W. T. Thacher, Mr. W. Hancock, Mr. F. Myers, Mr. J. S. Fearon, Rev. J. B. Frazier, U.S.N., and Mr. E. J. Cowan, in cabin.

Per British steamer Chingtu, from Australia and New Zealand:—Mr. R. Reid, Mr. R. Henderson, and Mr. J. H. R. Hance, in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Satsuma Maru, from Shanghai via ports:—Rev. E. Perrin, Rev. Heinrich, Rev. Wolff, Mr. Guster Tappe, Mr. G. Roupen, Mr. S. Ogura, Mrs. F. Ogura, in cabin; Mr. Larun, Mr. Ah Wai, Mr. S. Okuda, and Mr. D. Komura, in second class; 45 in steerage.

Per British steamer Borneo, from London via ports:—Mr. H. G. George, Mr. Pilkington, Mr. Maurice McBain and native servant, Mr. Kay, Mr. J. W. Copmann, Mr. E. W. Tilden, Mrs. E. W. Tilden, Mr. H. J. Metz, Mr. F. W. Horne, Mr. M. Baggallay, Mr. W. C. Henderson, Mrs. Parmentier, Miss Irwin, and Mrs. Rosaki, in cabin.

Per British steamer Columbia, from Tacoma, Wash. and Victoria, B.C.:—Mrs. N. E. Eazell, Miss N. J. Lewis, Mr. Jas. Thobaud and the following officers and Engineers of the steamer Arizona viz.:—Mr. R. L. Stephen, Mr. A. L. Thompson, Mr. Geo. Campbell, and Mr. Wm. Aiken, in cabin; 44 Chinese, and 1 Japanese, in steerage.

DEPARTED.

Per German steamer Hohensollern, for Hongkong via ports:—Baroness W. Swaine, Mr. and Mrs. Hèritte and children, and Mr. E. Achilles, in cabin; Mr. H. Temme, Mr. J. E. Denham, and Mr. M. Sierta, in second class; 11 Chinese in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Kamakuru Maru, for London via ports:—Commander J. Yajima, I.J.N, Chief Eng. J. Tsunuchi, I.J.N., Lieut. Y. Fujiwara, I.J.N., Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, Mr. J. Thompson, Capt. J. Arakawa, Mr. M. Kato, and Mr. A. Nishiyama, in cabin; Mr. K. Sano, Mr. I. Takeo, Mr. Y. Suzuki, Mr. S. Nakayama, Mr. Charles Karot, in second class; 20 Japanese, and 3 European, in steerage.

Per British steamer Belgic, for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. A. Adelsdorfer, Mr. R. D. Adamson, Mr. T. C. Aitken, Mr. E. J. Cowen, Dr. Clinton Cushing, Mrs. Clinton Cushing, Mr. M. Chiye, Hon. Chas. Denby, Mr. J. C. Dusel, Mrs. J. C. Dusel, Mr. A. M. Dell, Mr. J. S. Fearon, Mr. J. B. Frazier, U.S.N., Mr. H. K. C. Fisher, Mrs. H. K. C. Fisher, Mr. J. H. Fisher, Baron Pierre de Gunzburg, Mr. J. F. Hooper, Mr. W. Hancock, Mr. R. Ishii, Count Lambert, Mr. Wm. Lassueur, Mr. A. H. Myers, Mrs. T. Miyoshi, Mrs. T. Miyoshi, Mrs. Jas. R. Morse, Miss Morse, Rt. Rev. Bishop McKim, D.D., Miss McKim, Mr. H. Olsen, Mr. Jules Richard, Mr. Frank E. Simpson, Mr. G. Schweitzer, Mrs. Huon Shee and four children, Mr. W. J. Thacher, and Mr. F. Ziemessen, in cabin.

Per British steamer Rosetta, for Hongkong via ports:—Mrs. M. M. Trafford, infant and amah, Mr. I. Luneberg, Capt. Simmonds, Dr. Dow, Mr. E. R. Morriss, Lt. E. W. Browne, Lt. W. Loring, Mrs. Mansfield, Mrs. Covey, 2 infants and amah, Miss Parsons, Miss E. Cameron, Mr. W. C. Henderson, Bishop Earl Cranston, Mrs. Cranston, Misses Ethel and Flora Cranston, Miss Ruth Cranston, Mr. L. D. Abraham, Mr. Fritzsche, Mr. E. W. Tilden, and Mr. and Mrs. H. Tooker, in cabin; 4 Chinese, in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Satsuma Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—Colonel F. J. H. Nienstead, Mr. Goedknop, Mr. T. Doi, Mr. P. Chan, Capt. Hillcoat, Mr. and Mrs. Dabkjouski, Mr. and Mrs. H. Hauston, and Mr. V. L. Boeck, in cabin; Mr. E. Bush, Colonel and Mrs. Ramsaitseff, Mrs. and Master K. Arai, Mr. C. Yokota, Mr. Anton Citrian, and Mr. R. Oshiro, in second class; 110 Japanese, and 2 Chinese, in steerage.

CARGOES.

Raw and Waste Silk shipped per steamer Hohensollern:—

	RAW.			WASTE.
	Opt.		Italy.		England.
Otto, Reimers & Co.	56	—	—	—	—	—
Sieber & Co.	14	—	—	—	—	—
Sieber Brennwald & Co	199	—	25	—	35	—
Nabholtz & Co.	121	—	—	—	—	—
C. Giussani	—	—	10	—	—	—
Vatenne & Co.	—	—	20	—	—	—
Bavier & Co.	—	—	20	—	—	—

Total—465 bales Raw Silk / 35 bales Waste Silk.

Following were silk shippers per O. & O. steamer Belgic which left for San Francisco on Aug. 6:—

	Bales.
Vivanti Bros.	176
Sieber, Brennwald & Co.	101
Ulysse, Pila & Co.	42
Bavier & Co.	21
Siber & Co.	12
Nabholz & Osenbrüggen	29
Mitsui Bussan Kaisha	110
Kiito Shokai	48
Doshinsha	32
Total	571

Per British steamer Rosetta, for Hongkong via ports:—Raw Silk for Europe, 925 bales; Waste Silk for Europe, 44 bales.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Business is still in the doldrums, few enquiries being afoot, and even these are all below home prices.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

	PER PIECE.
Grey Shirtings—8½ lb., 38½ yds. 39 inches	$2 55 to 2 85
Grey Shirtings—9lb., 38½ yds. 45 inches	2.85 to 3.35
T. Cloth—7lb., 24 yards, 32 inches	1.80 to 2.00
Indigo Shirtings—12 yards, 14 inches	1.75 to 2.60
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches	2 00 to 3 75
	PER YARD.
Cotton—Italians and Satteens Black, 32 inches	0 25 to 0.45

WOOLLENS.

	PER YARD.
Flannels	$0.30 to 0.50
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches best	0.38 to 0.41
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Medium	Nominal
Italian Cloth, 30 yards, 32 inches Common	Nominal
Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 24 yards, 32 inches	0 15 to 0 17
Cloths—Pilots, 54 @ 56 inches	0.35 to 0.50
Cloths—Presidents, 54 @ 56 inches	0.60 to 0.72½
Cloths—Union, 54 @ 56 inches	0 50 to 0.85
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5 lb. per lb.	0 50 to 0 60
	PER PIECE.
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	7 75 to 9.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches,	0.60 to 1.00
Turkey Reds—2.0 to 3.0 lb., 24/25 yards, 30 inches	0.25 to 2 20
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 4 lb., 24/25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.52½

COTTON YARNS.

	PER PICUL.
Nos. 16/24, Singles	$15.50 to	38.50
Nos. 28/32, Singles	39.00 to	41.50
Nos. 38/42, Singles	43.50 to	45.50
Nos. 32, Doubles	42.00 to	43.50
Nos. 42, Doubles	47.00 to	50.50
Nos. 2/60, Plain	61.00 to	63.00
Nos. 2/80, Plain	75.00 to	76.50
Nos. 2/100, Plain	97.00 to	99 00
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	69 50 to	70.50
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	85.00 to	90.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	$114.00 to	124.00

RAW COTTON.

	PER PICUL.
American Middling	$19.50 to	—
Indian Broach	19.25	—
Chinese	21.00 to	21.50

METALS.

Dullness prevails in all departments, nothing being enquired for except tin plates and a few bundles of rod iron.

	PER PICUL.
Round and square ½ inch. and upward	3.85 to	4.10
Iron Plates, assorted	4 00 to	4.40
Sheet Iron	4 90 to	5.10
Galvanized Iron sheets	8.50 to	10.25
Wire Nails, assorted	5 90 to	6.10
Tin Plates, per box	5.75 to	5 95
Pig Iron, No. 1	2.08 to	2.10
Hoop Iron (1 to 1½ inch)	5.00 to	5.15

KEROSENE.

The market is very quiet, only the usual steady summer business being transacted. Quotations are firm.

American	$2 05	—
Russian	1.95 to	2.00
Langkat	—	1.85

SUGAR.

The week has seen a steady business, with prices well-maintained despite the recent large arrivals from Hongkong.

	PER PICUL.
Brown Takao	$5.40 to 5.60
Brown Manila	5.10 to 5.20
Brown Daitong	3.90 to 4.30
Brown Canton	4.20 to 5.85
White Java and Penang	6.90 to 7.15
White Refined	7.70 to 9.60

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is active, demand being chiefly from Europe, the American silk-men evidently being away on holiday tours just now. The last P. & O. steamer took over 900 bales for Europe.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra 9/11, 10/12 den.	$920
Filatures—Extra 13/15, 14/16 den.	Nominal
Filatures—No. 1, 10/13 deniers	880 to 890
Filatures—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	920 to 910
Filatures—No. 1½, 10/13 deniers	865 to 875
Filatures—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	900 to 910
Filatures—No. 2, 10/15 deniers	845
Filatures—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	880 to 890
Re-reels—No. 1, 13/15, 14/16 den.	85
Re-reels—No. 1½, 13/16, 14/17 den.	830
Re-reels—No. 2, 14/18 deniers	810
Re-reels—No. 2½, 14/18 deniers	Nominal
Re-reels—No. 3, 14/20 deniers	Nominal
Kakedas—Extra	850
Kakedas—No. 1	815
Kakedas—No. 1½
Kakedas—No. 2	790
Kakedas—No. 2½

WASTE SILK.

The market is almost destitute of life; a few settlements were put through for the last English mail, P. & O. steamer Rosetta, which took 44 bales for Europe.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filature, Best	$115 to 120
Noshi—Filature, Good	105 to 110
Noshi—Oshu, Best	110 to 115
Noshi—Oshu, Good	100 to 105
Noshi—Oshu, Medium	90 to 95
Noshi—Shinshu, Best	70 to 75
Noshi—Shinshu, Good	65 to 67½
Noshi—Bushu, Best	115 to 120
Noshi—Bushu, Good	100 to 110
Noshi—Bushu, Medium	90 to 95
Nushi—Joshu, Good	60 to 65
Noshi—Joshu, Fair	55 to 57½
Kibiso—Filature, Best	95 to 100
Kibiso—Filature, Seconds	85 to 90
Kibiso—Joshu, Good	25 to 30
Kibiso—Bushu, Fair	20 to 22½

TEA.

A good demand continues, common and medium grades being mostly in request. Despite the war-duty America is sending plenty of orders. Last year, from the beginning of the tea season up till the 8th August, 16,744,100 lbs. of tea were exported to America, valued at yen 4,603,215. This year during the same period 15 423 100 lbs. were exported, valued at yen 4,612,840. The decrease is thus only 1,321,000 lbs., valued at yen 80,371.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	$35 & upwards
Choice	$33 to 34
Finest	31 to 32
Fine	29 to 30
Good Medium	27 to 28
Medium	25 to 26
Good Common	23 to 24
Common	21 to 22

EXCHANGE.

No change in silver from London, but sterling from China comes ½ higher and rates on China are accordingly lower: Gold rates show a hardening tendency.

Sterling—Bank T.T.	2/0⅞ to 1/16
— — Bills on demand	2/0 15/16
— — 4 months' sight	2 0⅛
— Private 4 months' sight	2 0⅛ to 1/16
— — 6 months' sight	2 0⅛ to 1/16
On Paris—Bank sight	2.55½
On Paris—Private 4 months' sight	2.50 to ½
On America—Bank Bills on demand	49⅞
— Private 4 months' sight	50⅛
On Germany—Bank sight	2.06½
— Private 4 months' sight	2.10½
On Hongkong—Bank sight	4⅛% dis.
— Private 10 days' sight	5⅛% dis.
On Shanghai—Bank sight	77½ to ⅝
— Private 10 days' sight	78½ to 79
On India—Bank sight	153
— Private 30 days' sight	156
On Silver (London)	27 1/16

CUTICURA FOR THE HAIR

LUXURIANT LUSTROUS HAIR

With clean, wholesome Scalp, free from itching, bleeding, and scaly eruptions, produced by warm shampoos with CUTICURA SOAP, and frequent dressings with CUTICURA, greatest of emollients and purest of skin cures. This treatment clears the scalp and hair of crusts, scales, and dandruff, soothes irritated and itching surfaces, stimulates the hair follicles, nourishes the roots and makes the hair thick, soft, and glossy.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A. "How to Produce Luxuriant Hair," a 64-page book, post free.

Trade Mark on WALTER MACFARLANE & Co GLASGOW SARACEN FOUNDRY every Casting.

Macfarlane's Castings,

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"SHARP, CLEAN, AND FULL OF CHARACTER."

ORNAMENTAL CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

VERANDAHS, BALCONIES, BANDSTANDS, ARCADES, KIOSKS, CONSERVATORIES, ROOFS,

RAILWAY STATIONS, BARRACKS, FACTORIES, PUBLIC WORKS, MARKETS, &c.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PILLARS, BRACKETS, AND WIRE WAYS.

NUMEROUS HEIGHTS AND DESIGNS TO SUIT THE DIFFERENT REQUIREMENTS.

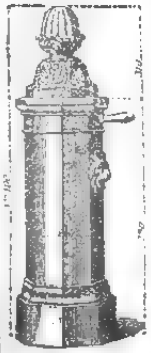
MACFARLANE'S GLASS ENAMELLED DRAIN AND SOIL PIPES, A SPECIALITY.

TWO GOLD MEDALS, CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

Illustrated CATALOGUES, Price Lists, and Estimates on application.

WALTER MACFARLANE & Co., Glasgow, Scotland.

969



WATERING APPARATUS

Non-freezing & Ordinary Hydrants and Street Washers.

Garden Watering Boxes and Apparatus.

Gun-Metal, Copper, and Cast-Iron Cocks and Valves.

E. GUESNIER, E.C.P.,

Engineer and Cock Mnfr.,

(Successor of ACHILLE CADET)

27, Rue des Taillandiers.

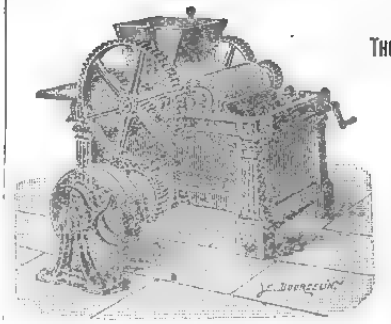
PARIS.

Hydropathic and Massage Apparatus supplied to the Vichy Co Vapour Baths (Berthe system).

Apply to BOYES & Co., agents for M. OPPENHEIMER & Co., PARIS.

December 5, 1896.

A. SAVY & CO., ENGINEERS.



162, Rue de Charenton, Paris.

THE OLD G. HERMANN DEBATISTE WORKS.

ESTABLISHED 1830.

The Oldest and Largest Makers in the World of Chocolate, Cocoa, and Confectionery Plants.

Over 2,500 Chocolate Factories fitted up to January 1st, 1896.

GRINDING MACHINERY for all kinds of dry or wet substances, colours, printing inks, toilet soap, perfumery, and chemicals.

MIXING, CRUSHING, AND PULVERISING MACHINES FOR ALL MATERIALS.

Address Messrs. C. ROHDE & Co., YOKOHAMA.

November 21st, 1896.

Digitized by Google

Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LEA & PERRINS'

OBSERVE THAT THE SIGNATURE

Lea & Perrins

IS NOW PRINTED IN BLUE INK DIAGONALLY ACROSS THE OUTSIDE WRAPPER of every Bottle of the

ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

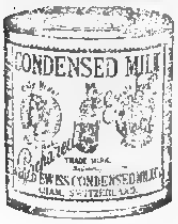
SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale by the Proprietors, Worcester;
Crosse & Blackwell, Ltd., London; and Export Oilmen generally.

RETAIL EVERYWHERE.

46ins. May 8th, 1898.

MILKMAID BRAND CONDENSED MILK



The "Milkmaid" Brand is guaranteed to contain all the cream of the original milk. In the process of manufacture nothing but water is removed, nothing but the best refined sugar added.

Avoid low-priced brands from which the cream has been abstracted, and ask for the "Milkmaid" Brand, the best for all purposes.

Cheapest for Beef Tea and Kitchen Use.

LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT.

J. Liebig

Always look for the BLUE SIGNATURE. There are many imitations which have not the same flavour and are not so carefully manufactured.

DINNEFORDS

The Universal Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Headache, Heartburn, Indigestion, Sour Eructations, Bilious Affections.

The Physician's Cure for Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Gravel; the safest and most gentle Medicine for Infants, Children, Delicate Females, and the Sickness of Pregnancy.

MAGNESIA

Sold Throughout the World.

N.B.—ASK FOR DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

September 19th, 1897. 9im.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

THE FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

More Fragrant; More Lasting; and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ATKINSON'S ONLY AND BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Only genuine with "White Rose" Trade Mark.

Of all Dealers & of the Manufacturers—

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

January 1st, 1898. 1y.

THE

GENERAL CATALOGUE AND BUYERS' GUIDE

ISSUED SEMI-ANNUALLY BY

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.

THE GREAT MAIL ORDER HOUSE.

Chicago, U. S. A.

IS THE MOST COMPLETE IN THE WORLD

It has more than 14,000 illustrations, about 40,000 quotations of prices, weighs 2½ pounds, and contains over 800 pages. Everything you wear or use is listed in it; and the prices quoted place you in a position to buy from us in large or small quantities, at wholesale prices. We do not sell this General Catalogue and Buyers' Guide; we give it away. To introduce to you our immense facilities we will send free of charge to you or any other foreign resident our "Buyers' Guide," and our "Hand Book for Foreign Buyers," which gives all information necessary to put you in touch with our methods. Send us your address and we'll do the rest.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

111 to 120 Michigan Ave., Chicago, U. S. A.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF MODERN TIMES

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

PERSONS suffering from weak or debilitatep constitutions will discover that by the use of this wonderful medicine there is "Health for all." The blood is the fountain of life, and its purity can be maintained by the use of these Pills

Sir Samuel Baker, in his work entitled "The Nile Tributaries in Abyssinia," says—"I ordered the dragoman Mahomet to inform the Fakir that I was a Doctor, and I had the best medicines at the service of the sick, with advice gratis. In a short time I had many applicants, to whom I served out a quantity of Holloway's Pills. These are most useful to an explorer, as, possessing unmistakable purgative properties, they create an undeniable effect upon the patient, which satisfies them of their value."

SIMPLE, SAFE, AND CERTAIN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

Is a certain emedy for bad legs, bad breasts, and ulcerations of all kinds. It acts miraculously in healing ulcerations, curing skin diseases, and in arresting and subduing all inflammations.

Mr. J. T. Cooper, in his account of his extraordinary travels in China, published in 1871, says—"I had with me a quantity of Holloway's Ointment. I gave some to the people, and nothing could exceed their gratitude; and, in consequence, milk, fowls, butter, and horse feed poured in upon us, until at last a teaspoonful of Ointment was worth a fowl and any quantity of peas, and the demand became so great that I was obliged to lock up the small remaining "stock."

Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the World. May 1st, 1897.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor, at 51, Main Street, Settlement, by Arthur Bellamy Brown, of No. 7-C, Bluff, Yokohama, on Saturday, August 13, 1898.

Digitized by Google

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Japan Weekly Mail:

A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART.

No. 8.] REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. YOKOHAMA, AUGUST 20TH, 1898. 明治三十一年八月二十日 第三種郵便物認可 VOL. XXX.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News 177
Spirit of the Vernacular Press during the Week 178
The Election Complication in Tokyo 179
Irksome Privileges 180
Working of the Corrupt Practices Ordinance 180
Result of the Elections 180
A Sweeping Measure 181
Count Okuma 181
The Foreign Office 181
A Quiet Thrust 181
Mr. Hoshi Toru 181
A Colonial Administration School 182
The Treasury's Silver 182
Resurrected Errors 183
Foreign Capital 183
Foreign and Shares in Japanese Companies 183
Hawaii and Shashi 184
A Costly Grievance 184
Cotton Spinning Companies 184
Formosa 184
A New Newspaper 184
A Death and a Birth 185
China's Ambassadors 185
The Chinese Legation in Tokyo 185
The Kyobashi Hotch-Potch 185
The "Yamato" in the Typhoon 186
The Germans in the Philippines 186
Mrs. Hugh Fraser 186
Leading Article:—England in Far East 186
Monthly Summary of the Religious Press 187
German News 190
French News 192
The Surrender of Manila 192
Mr. Detring and China's Mines 192
Life in East London 193
Japanese Facts and Comments 193
Another N. Y. K. Steamer Ashore 193
Correspondence:—
The Government's Feelings Towards Foreigners 195
Pious Impiety 195
Educating Japanese Christians Abroad 195
News of the Week 195
Fire in Kobe Harbour 196
H.B.M.'s Court for Japan 196
Latest Telegraphic News 198
Chess 200
Latest Shipping 201
Latest Commercial 202

The Japan Weekly Mail.

"FAISCE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. Whatever is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, AUG. 20TH, 1898.

BIRTH.

At No. 12 C Tsukiji Settlement, Tokyo, on the 11th inst., the wife of CHARLES GUSSY CONINGHAM, of a daughter.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

H.I.H. PRINCE NASHIMOTO-NO-MIYA left for Hiroshima on the 13th inst.

MR. OTAKIBI, Japanese Consul at Shanghai, returned to Tokyo on the 12th inst.

MR. OISHI, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, is lying ill of consumption.

AN armistice between the United States and Spain now prevails on land and sea.

THE peace commissioners of Spain and the United States are to meet in Paris in October.

A TEAM of Tokyo baseballers were beaten by the Y.C. and A.C. in Yokohama last Saturday by 6 runs to 19.

To relieve sufferers from the recent typhoon at Taipeh, Formosa, His Majesty has made a donation of yen 1,000.

THE Hyogo Warehousing Association held an extraordinary general meeting on the 10th inst. Mr. Ando, the president, resigned the presidentship, and Mr. Kano filled the vacancy. A Committee, consisting of 13 persons, was appointed to settle the present troubles.

THE working of the corrupt practices ordinance during the last general election has proved particularly irksome.

THE warship Akashi, sister ship to the Suma, was recently completed at Yokosuka Dockyard, and will be launched shortly.

THE warship Atago, which had been at Shashi since the troubles there, arrived at Shanghai on the 18th inst. en route for home.

THE Hon. George Nathaniel Curzon, Parliamentary Secretary for Foreign Affairs, has accepted the Vice-royalty of India.

IT is reported that the cruiser Fuso, which is undergoing repairs at Kure Dockyard, will be out of the workmen's hands within a few days.

PEACE protocols were signed in Washington on the 12th inst: on the 13th Manila fell after a combined assault by land and sea lasting two hours.

THE trouble in the Kyobashi electoral district of Tokyo grows more complicated every day: charges and counter-charges being made almost hourly.

THE construction of a railway line, 30 miles in length, between Kunohama and Kodaka, was recently completed. It will be opened for traffic on the 25th inst.

THE birthday of the Emperor Francis Joseph was celebrated in Yokohama on Thursday with high mass at the Catholic Church and salutes from the warships in harbour.

AT the recent meeting of the Directors of the Nippon Railway Company, it was decided that Viscount Soga Yujun should be appointed President, and Mr. Mori Jusuke Vice-President.

IT has become very apparent that the mercantile and industrial community generally held aloof from the last general election, leaving it entirely to the professional politicians.

THE Associated Chambers of Commerce have appointed Lord Charles Beresford to proceed to China to report on the prospects of British trade in China. He starts on the 24th inst.

THE swimming races in Yokohama harbour on Saturday last resulted in two wins for the Japanese challengers and one win for the English representative, Harold Y. Irwine, in the half-mile.

THE Anglo-Russian relations in China are being followed with keen interest in America. Both the New York Times and Sun advocate prompt and joint action between the United States and Great Britain.

IT is semi-officially stated in St. Petersburg that Russia is solely anxious to secure her recently gained advantages, and contemplates no fresh acquisitions, nor does she desire to injure the economic interests of Great Britain.

A PAWN-BROKER named Sasaki Yohei (65) living at Shoten yokocho, Asakusa, Tokyo, on the 12th inst., committed suicide by drinking some sulphuric acid. He is said to have despaired of the present condition of business.

AN accountant named Nagata Naokichi (43) of the Ajikawa Police Station, Osaka, on the 28th December last absconded with money amounting to over yen 1,000 belonging to the institution, and taking with him a girl from a brothel at Matsushima. He had since been living in Tokyo, where, on the 10th inst., he was arrested at a hotel in Shimbashi.

A WORKMAN named Sato Sankichi, employed by the War Department, was dangerously wounded on the head on the 11th inst. by a gunpowder explosion at the artillery workshops. He was sent to the Military Hospital at once, where he lies in a dangerous condition.

MR. HOSHI TORU returned from Washington on Monday. He has been interviewed by nearly every newspaper in the capital, which print his views on Hawaiian affairs, the much talked-of Anglo-American Alliance, and the future of the Philippines in detail.

DURING the week, H.B.M. Court at Yokohama has been occupied with hearing charges of fraudulent obtaining of money from the H. & S. Bank, preferred by Messrs Ahrens & Co. against a late employé, Emil Leopold. Some curious matters have been disclosed.

AT 3 p.m. on the 12th inst., fire broke out in a house occupied by a carpenter, in Umamichi, Asakusa, Tokyo, and destroyed the building in which it originated. On the 13th inst. another fire broke out in a godown belonging to a grocer at Minami Inari-machi. The building was destroyed.

PERMISSION for the construction of the Kawasaki Railway was granted on the 15th inst. The Railway Company immediately commenced work, and it is said the line will be completed within three months. It runs from Kawasaki Station to the famous Buddhist Temple at Daishi.

IT is said that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha is intending to raise a foreign loan, amounting to yen 10,000,000, at 5 or 6 per cent. per annum. The 100th National Bank also purpose to raise a foreign loan of yen 100,000 000 in Germany. The President of the Bank, Mr. Ikeda Kenzo, is undertaking the arrangement.

MR. TAKAGI, who has been elected by the 12th Division in Tokyo, is suffering from bad eyes, and is nearly blind. According to the provisions of the Election Laws, a maimed man can not be elected as a parliamentary representative, and it is said that a question concerning his status will probably be asked in the Diet.

THE war expenditure of the United States is estimated at 150,000,000 dollars. Several leading American journals declare that the community of interests of Great Britain and the United States in China and the present situation constitute a pressing reason for America to lay a firm hold of the Philippines.

A SLIGHT revival in the cotton piece-goods trade is reported from the interior, but so far the ripple has not spread to Yokohama. Except in so far as a few enquiries for yarns and grey shirtings have been made, business in these lines during the week has been nil. As regards metals, transactions have been confined to tin plates and corrugated iron sheets. Kerosine trade is dull, only retail business moving, but prices are unchanged. Sugar is steady, as usual, supplies being about equal to demand. A very active trade has been done in raw silk, and all outgoing steamers took cargo. American enquiries are beginning to come in and a brisk demand for fine filatures is expected. In waste silk, little is doing and the stock mounts up. The third crop tea is turning out in fairly good quality and large supplies may be anticipated. Business has been very brisk in me-

Digitized by Google
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SPIRIT OF THE VERNACULAR PRESS.

There have been many references during the past week to the Far Eastern Question, which has now assumed in the eyes of the average Japanese the aspect of a triple alliance between Germany, Russia and France, on one side, for aggressive purposes, and America, England and Japan, on the other, to preserve the peace, maintain the balance of power in the Orient, and safeguard the integrity of Far Eastern empires. Some journals are perfectly outspoken on the subject. Others refrain from any explicit statement of the camp that Japan ought to enter, but with unmistakable significance declare that if they do not speak plainly, it is because no one can have any doubt on the subject. The Yomiuri contrasts British sentiment towards Japan, as described in a letter from Mr. Kadono, one of the Directors of the Keiogijuku, with Russian sentiment as set forth in the columns of the Novosti. The St. Petersburg journal says that Japan's voluntary evacuation of Weihaiwei in favour of Great Britain was an emphatic act of unfriendliness to Russia, and that as between England and Japan, Russia resents the latter's procedure rather than the former's. Mr. Kadono says that the Japanese are hail fellow-well-met wherever they go in England, and that it a common thing for an Englishman to take a Japanese by the hand and cry, "Japan, America and England against the world!' The Tokyo Asahi reiterates the hackneyed proposition that the interests of Japan in the Far East are identical with the interests of England and America, and that the sentiments of Japan towards Russia, Germany and France are perfectly well known even though no Philippines' problem had presented itself to emphasis them. It was in the days of the Ito Cabinet that Japan made her first approaches to Great Britain and America, but it is only now that a really definite attitude has been assumed. Not until to-day, indeed, did the occasion present itself imperatively, but when, in the very near future, the fate of the Philippines comes to be determined, the lines of international cleavage will have to be marked out with unmistakable clearness. The Shogyo Shimpo, without making any special reference to Japan's action, thinks that the Hispano-American war has been attended with three memorable and splendid results: first, that America now takes her stand among the great Powers of the World, her might being no longer confined to the continent of her dominion; secondly, that she has henceforth to be reckoned with as a strong naval State; and thirdly, that the bonds of union between her and England have been drawn very closely. There may not be a definite alliance between the two Anglo-Saxon Powers, but there will be an understanding rendering them invincible. The Triple Alliance can no longer issue fiats as to the fate of empires from Berlin, Paris, and St. Petersburg. London and Washington will be the centres of authority. It is a happy day for civilization.

* * *

There has been something of a lull in the generally breezy views of Japanese journalists about Korea. The question of the Philippines and all the complications connected with it, have monopolised attention. But the Nippon brings Korea once more upon the tapis. There is an appearance of calm, it says, in the world of Korean politics, but it is wholly superficial. If we look below the surface, immmerable elements of unrest are discernible. The Court can not be said to have exercised a wholesome influence at any time. But at least it was the depository of political power; a steady point in the welter of personal and family ambitions. Now, however, the Court has parted with a portion of its power to the people, and among the latter there is no party strong enough to accomplish anything in the way of reform. There are only a number of factions strong enough to squabble among themselves. One falls, to be succeeded by another, and the latter, in turn, has to give place speedily to a third. Russia is simply biding her time. The old story will surely be repeated: domestic turmoil, an appeal for foreign aid, and the re-fixing of the alien yoke, this time with rivets not to be again shaken loose. Is Japan to stand idly by with folded arms? Can no good policy be devised? It does not appear that the Japanese Representative in Sôul achieves much success. He recently presented an ultimatum about the Sôul-Fusan Railway, giving the Korean Government three days to reply. But no reply has yet been received. Either he went too far, or having gone so far, he stopped at a point that rendered his whole work abortive. Other Representatives get what they want, but the Japanese Representative fails.

* * *

The propriety of allowing administrative officials to become members of the Diet is beginning to be discussed with some warmth. There never has been any restriction with reference to this matter in Japan, but, on the other hand, instances of administrative officials' entering parliament have been so few as to deprive the question of any practical importance. Things have changed now, however. There are a number of candidates for seats in the Lower House who hold official positions, whether in the Central or in Local Governments. It is reasonably asked by some of our vernacular contemporaries how these men can be expected to discharge their duties in both capacities. While the Diet is sitting they will certainly neglect their official functions. There is also a curious feature in the Japanese system. An administrative official is forbidden to be a member of a political party. Yet he may be a member of the Diet, where, of course, he can play the rôle of a party politician without restraint. That is an evident anomaly. The Nippon strongly recommends that a law should be passed forbidding administrative officials to have seats in the Diet. Such a step, it thinks, would effectually cool the "fever for office."

* * *

There is no respite for the Cabinet. With untiring persistency its enemies attack it. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun criticises its policy towards America, contrasting its present attitude with that assumed by Count Okuma when the question of Hawaiian annexation first entered the field of practical problems last year. The position then taken was that the annexation of Hawaii by the United States would endanger the peace of the Orient and disturb the balance of power in the Pacific. To-day, the annexation is on the verge of being completed, yet no protest of any kind is made. Last year, when Count Okuma took what was called "a strong line" in his negotiations with Washington, the party politicians applauded him in the most outspoken manner. But these same politicians have not a word to say at present. They preserve careful silence about Hawaiian annexation, and even seek to divert public attention from that question by arguments about the Philippines, and by urging the advisability of an alliance between England, America and Japan. It does not appear that the Nichi Nichi Shimbun is opposed to the annexation of Hawaii, still less that it deprecates an Anglo-American-Japanese understanding. Its sole object, so far as we can discover, is to convict Count Okuma of having no fixed policy; no continuity of conviction; of being in fact, a mere opportunist. The Chuo Shimbun is even more condemnatory. It says that the three prime functions of a Cabinet are finance, administration and foreign politics, and that the present Cabinet vacillates about finance, does nothing in the way of administrative reform, and has no foreign policy. On those hypotheses it is not difficult to build up an imposing indictment. Clever as the Chuo's writings generally are, however, its denunciations are growing too reckless to be convincing, and too vague to be effective. The Yiji Shimpo is a much more puissant foe when it accuses the Cabinet of being hampered by its own ill-judged pledges of administrative economy. The men now in power have posed for such a long time as advocates of reduced expenditures that they shrink from devoting money even to purposes essential to the public welfare. Communications and education are objects on account of which the State is urgently required to make some liberal appropriations, but the Ministry will do nothing. On the other hand, they do not economise. They do nothing: simply stand still. It is difficult to distinguish any difference between the new men and the old, between the party politicians and the clan statesmen.

* * *

It is insisted by the Yiji Shimpo that Judicial officials ought to be more zealous in the discharge of their functions. Nominally the courts do not take a midsummer recess, but in practice the Judges and Public Procurators are careful not to do too much work in the hot weather, and the result is that unfortunate people are left sweltering in prison because it is too sultry for law officers to decide their cases. The Yiji indulges in some sarcasm. It says that the men in whose hands the direction of affairs rests at present ought to be sympathetic in these matters, for several of them have had practical experience of prison life.

* * *

An illustration of the essentially captious spirit that animates several of the vernacular journals at present in their criticism of the Cabinet is furnished by the Tokyo Asahi. Very soon after the Ministry came into power a committee was appointed to investigate the question of Administrative reform. Count Itagaki became President, and among the principal members were the Vice-Ministers of the various Departments. The Asahi now declares that to entrust to such men the duty of elaborating a scheme of reform is like telling a sick man to diagnose and treat his own malady. Fancy asking the Vice-Minister of Education to adjudicate upon the advisability of abolishing the Department of Education! Evidently the Committee is badly organized. Such is the Asahi's conclusion. But its arguments obviously apply to any officials that might be appointed members of the Committee, unless, indeed, the general scheme of reform were determined beforehand by some occult power and the Committee were constituted so as not to include any members of Departments or Bureaux affected by the programme.

* * *

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun throws cold water on the views of sanguine people who expect a large influx of foreigners and foreign capital after the Revised Treaties go into operation. There are no apparent inducements. India, with a native population of 280 millions, has only 100 000 English throughout the length and breadth of the land, and even in Italy there are but 50,000 foreign residents. Unfortunately the intercourse of foreigners and Japanese is not marked by mutual sympathy and confidence. If capital is to come in, it must be on a co-operative basis and the time is scarcely ripe for that as yet. In agriculture there is no room for foreign enterprise: the Japanese make the most of their opportunities. In commerce, considerable development may be anticipated, but it will be more or less checked at first by the new Tariff, and, under any circumstances, the grooves in which business moves at present are not likely to undergo any marked change for some time. As for industrial enterprise, there is doubtless a field for foreigners and Japanese to work together, but the character of the industry must be fully understood by the foreigner and he must learn to trust the Japanese with whom he shares large responsibilities. On the whole, the operation of the Revised Treaties will exercise very little perceptible effect at first.

The man Edwards, charged with victimising Japanese tradesmen in Yokohama and Kobe, and who was arrested at the latter place, was on the 13th inst. brought to Yokohama by the Japanese Police authorities, and has been sent to the District Court for its preliminary trial.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

THE ELECTION COMPLICATION IN TOKYO.

The complications that have occurred in connexion with the election in the Kyobashi district of Tokyo present quite a comical aspect. The candidates, as we have already stated, were Mr. Yamada, Vice-Minister of Justice, a Progressist, and Mr. Nakazawa, a Liberal. Of course both gentlemen represent the interests of the Constitutional Party. They ought not, therefore, to have opposed each other at the polls. But no principle of that kind applies. Tokyo is not the only place that has witnessed these internecine contests. The first trouble was that Mr. Nakazawa's supporters formed "a tea-and-talk" club and had a friendly réunion. Thereupon Mr. Yamada's supporters lodged information against them for "treating" electors. The information was laid with the police, whose chief is a Liberal. The police, considering the proof insufficient, declined to move in the matter. Then it was placed in the hands of a public procurator—a judicial official. Mr. Yamada, as we have seen, is Vice-Minister of Justice, and Mr. Ohigashi Gitetsu, the Minister of Justice, used to belong to the Progressist Party. The public procurator acted upon the information, and adopted some strong measures—such as domiciliary searches and so on. At this stage there appeared upon the scene a certain Mr. Tsuchiya, who seems to have been a somewhat lukewarm supporter of Mr. Nakazawa. Alarmed at these inquisitions and menacing proceedings, he hastened off to the public procurator, carrying documentary proof that every member of the "tea-and-talk" club had paid his own bill and that there had been no "treating" whatever. But at the office of the procurator—this is Mr. Tsuchiya's story—he met the Vice-Minister, Mr. Yamada, who told him that a much worse trouble was in store for him, since his name had been appended with 199 other signatures to a circular inviting electors to vote for Mr. Nakazawa. There was nothing in the smallest degree unlawful about such a circular, but Tsuchiya, not having definitely sanctioned such a use of his name and being evidently a timid person, signed a declaration that his name had been forged and sent the document to a magistrate. Meanwhile, thinking that the privilege of exercising the franchise was becoming rather irksome, he retired to the country and did not return until the elections were over. On his return, he found that he had been unfortunately precipitate, for by hastening to exculpate himself in connexion with the "tea-and-talk" affair, then by getting into a trepidation and charging his friends with forging his name, and finally by rushing away to hide himself in the country, he had missed a letter of explanation which would have entirely satisfied him about the use of his name in the circular. He at once withdraw his charge of forgery, and now began to cry out that he had been intimidated and deceived by the Vice-Minister of Justice. Meanwhile—and this is the queerest feature of the affair—the supporters of Mr. Yamada, coming together on the 6th instant, had compiled and circulated a letter, bearing the name of a Mr. Sewaki Hisao, in which the electors wese invited to vote for Mr. Yamada. Mr. Sewaki, it seems, was not a direct party to this proceeding, and did not discover it until the 10th, whereupon he circulated a statement that his name had been taken in vain, and the electors of the district lodged an accusation of forgery against his fellow politicians by whom the canvassing letter had been compiled.

That is the whole, miserable, paltry story. We should not devote an inch of space to telling it for its own sake, but it undoubtedly acquires a peculiar interest from the fact that a veritable storm has been raised in connexion with it, and that journal after journal devotes leading articles to its discussion. It is suggested that the only way to remove the stain from the reputation of the Constitutional Party is for Mr. Yamada to resign. There is even talk of the association of Barristers removing his name from their roll. The Tokyo Shimbun cries not that there has been official interference in the elections. The Kokumin Shimbun declares there has been a disgraceful triple fight: a fight between the Liberals and Progressists; a fight between the metropolitian Police and the Judiciary; and a fight between the Cabinet and the Home Office. The Nippon finds that the elements of the Constitutional Party, from the very outset of their administrative career, are falling into the state of internecine strife which finally paralysed the strength of the Satsuma-Choshiu combination; that their quarrels have hitherto been prevented from becoming fatal only by the cō operative exertions of Counts Okuma and Itagaki, and that these two have now begun to fall out—for Count Itagaki, at the instance of the Chief of Police, is supposed to have hurried off to Oiso to lodge with Count Okuma a complaint against the public procurator and Mr. Yamada—, and so the ball of criticism and comment is tossed about until quite a bewildering impression of commotion is created. The only really sensible view is advanced by the Hochi: namely, that, when the Matsukata Cabinet was accused of interfering in the elections, and when complaints were lodged in the courts of law, the Judiciary conclusively proved its independence. Is it likely that the same Judiciary would now prostrate itself at the beck of a Vice-Minister of State, working in his own private interests?

We can easily predict what our readers will say about the matter. Their wonder will be that among educated citizens of Tokyo there could have been found two such persons as Messrs. Tsuchiya and Sewaki. What can exceed the fatuousness shown by these two gentlemen in preferring charges of forgery against the whole of their respective political friends? Nothing less than forgery, forsooth! They can not have believed that anything like forgery had been deliberately perpetrated. Even if they were sufficiently silly to entertain such a wild suspicion, their precipitancy in making the matter the basis of a criminal information suggests that they are either exceptionally malicious or slightly delirious. How, again, can any public procurator or magistrate have induced himself to pay serious attention to such a charge? It appears to us that there is great deal of hysterical electricity in the air with reference to electioneering affairs, and that the Government materially assisted to charge the battery when it issued its wonderful "Urgency Ordinance" for the prevention of corrupt practices.

What we have written above conveys only a partial idea of the excitement caused by this event. The vernacular journals of Saturday the 13th instant, on which our comments were chiefly based, contained numerous articles and notes on the subject, but their issues of Sunday the 14th, which we have subsequently examined, show even greater excitement. We should say that there is something very like a determination to convert the incident into a cause of rupture between the Liberals and Progressists. That journals opposed to the Cabinet should make much of the incident is not strange, but when we find the Mainichi Shimbun, a leading Progressist organ, applying to the Liberal electors of the Kyobashi district epithets which are not the less insulting because of the erudition they display, and when we find a strong disposition on the part of the Progressists to accuse the Liberals of disloyal plotting, it is difficult to think that a permanent breach will not ensue. We ought to explain, perhaps, that Mr. Nakajima, Chief of the Hokkaido Administration, was originally the Liberal candidate for the Kyobashi district. At the instance of the Constitutional Party, however, he consented to stand aside, in favour of Mr. Yamada, the Progressist candidate. It is now openly declared that, while pretending to refrain from opposition, Mr. Nakajima secretly instigated another Liberal, Mr. Nakazawa, to contest the election. Nautrally such a charge does not tend to throw oil on the troubled waters.

In our opinion the worst feature of the whole affair is that it led to the arrest of respectable citizens and the searching of their houses. The facts are not very plain, but, so far as we can discover, seven arrests were made on the 9th instant and three on the 10th, and four persons at least are still under detention. Was there any offence warranting such measures? Truly we fail to see that there was.

The trouble in connexion with the election in the Kyobashi district of Tokyo seems likely to be a nine-days' wonder. It is taken up in an excited, almost passionate, manner by several of the vernacular journals, some being honestly concerned lest an act of official interference should have been perpetrated; others, simply anxious to make a point against a member of the Government, or to create friction between the Liberals and the Progressists. It is decidedly unfortunate for the Vice-Minister of Justice that the machinery of the law courts should have been put in motion against his opponent's supporters at the polls. But to hold him responsible for the fact, or to infer that the Public Procurator showed excessive and unfair zeal because he knew that he was acting in the interests of the Vice-Minister, is to display the very spirit against which the critics cry out. Briefly stated, the allegations made are three, first, that the Municipal Police, having a member of the Liberal Party—Mr. Nishiyama—for their Chief, were reluctant to entertain the complaints preferred against the Liberal candidate for the Kyobashi District—Mr. Nakazawa—; secondly, that the Public Procurator and his assistants, influenced by the fact that the Minister of Justice—Mr. Ohigashi Gitetsu—is a Progressist, were over-willing to entertain the accusations preferred by the Progressist candidate—Vice-Minister Yamada—against his Liberal opponent; and thirdly, that Mr.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

Yamada himself gave secret instructions to the Public Procurator. There has also been an attempt to drag Count Itagaki and Count Okuma into the quarrel, but unless we are mistaken, the excitement is not very sincere. The incident will engender some soreness, however, between the two sections of the Constitutional Party.

It is not true that the General Business Committee of the Constitutional Party have removed from the roll of the Party's members the name of Mr. Yamada, Vice-Minister of Justice, the principal figure in the Kyobashi election trouble. In mentioning the rumour we said that it was to be received with reserve. The Shiba section of the Party appear to have addressed to Mr. Yamada a letter announcing in the curtest possible terms that they have passed a resolution in favour of his resigning his office, and that they recommend him to abide by their advice. The general belief is that if Mr. Yamada ignores this very considerate counsel, he will be struck off the list of the Party. There is something really fine and independent in the manners and customs of the politicians calling themselves Progressists in Japan. Everybody remembers the very remarkable manifesto they issued at the outset of their alliance with the Matsukata Cabinet. They informed the public in almost as many words that the Ministers of the Crown were really very intolerable bunglers and reprehensible persons, but that the Progressists undertook to keep an eye on them, and that the first symptoms of a relapse into evil ways would be the signal for the Party to turn their backs on the cabinet and leave it helpless and hopeless. Everybody remembers, too, the absolutely tactless course they adopted on the eve of the rupture with the same Ministry, dictating to it in terms so peremptory that it seemed as though the portfolio-holders had received their mandate from the Progressists and not from the Palace. And now we have them undertaking to judge, off-hand, whether a high official shall remain in power; thrusting the Cabinet aside, in effect, and proclaiming that a man's fitness to continue in office and the propriety of his doing so shall be determined by them, quite independently of the Minister under whom he is serving and of the other heads of the administration to which he belongs. The doubt most prominently expressed by publicists discussing the feasibility of party cabinets in Japan is whether any one of the present parties commands sufficient trained ability to organise a ministry. That does not appear to us to be the chief source of solicitude. The main difficulty, we think, so far as the Progressists, at any rate, are concerned, is that they have not yet learned to distinguish between the responsibilities of power and arbitrary usurpations of it.

IRKSOME PRIVILEGES.

No less than three hundred electors in the Third District, of Tokyo—the Kyobashi district, where such a tea-pot gale has been raging—are said to have abstained from exercising the franchise in the recent elections. Three hundred votes do not suggest to English ears a large section of the franchise-holding population in a constituency, but they do constitute a very large section in Japan where the votes polled by a successful candidate in quite a considerable district are often not much more than that number. Vernacular newspapers says that the case of Kyobashi is typical, and that there has been an exceptional degree of abstention on the part of voters throughout the whole empire. One very simple explanation of the fact is that contested elections have been the exception. In 220 constituencies out of 300, the candidates of the Constitutional Party had a walk-over, and of course when electors know that the candidate they approve will be returned without any effort on their part, or that they can not have an opportunity of voting for a candidate of their own political complexion, they are very unlikely to take the trouble of going to the hustings. That appears to us to be a partly satisfactory explanation. But the Jiji Shimpo does not think so. It is persuaded that the very stringent regulations issued by the Government for the prevention of corrupt practices alarmed people so much that they thought it wiser to have nothing whatever to do with the elections. A man getting a present of a towel or a fan from a friend—common gifts in the dog-days,—or being hospitably treated to tea and yokan by a neighbour, might find himself "run in" for bribery and corruption. There is a good old proverb that if one keeps out of the gods' way they won't curse one, and prudent folk obeyed it at the elections on the 10th instant.

WORKING of the CORRUPT PRACTICES ORDINANCE.

Concerning the operation of the Urgency Ordinance for the prevention of corrupt practices at elections, it appears that the number of persons charged with offences under its provisions, distinguished according to their political complexion, stands thus:—

Government Supporters.
Constitutionalists (not Liberals or Progressists	7
Liberals	12
Progressists	13
Total	32
Opposition.
National Unionists	16
Business Men	2
Yamashita Club	4
Independents	13
Total	34

The totals are nearly equal. But it has to be remembered that out of the 300 constituencies, only 70 were contested by the Opposition. Hence in 70 constituencies the Ordinance appears at first sight to have has been put into operation against 34 opponents of the Cabinet—a rate of over 48 per cent.—whereas in 230 constituencies where the Constitutionalists had the field to themselves, there were only 32 persons prosecuted, or less than 14 per cent. There will be capital made out of these figures, of course, but do they warrant any suspicion of partiality on the part of officialdom? It appears to us that in constituencies where contested elections did not take place, there can not have been any temptations to violate the law, and probably there were no violations. To set up a just comparison we must find out, not rough totals such as those given above, but exactly in what constituencies the offences against the law occurred. If, as is more than probable, they all occurred in the contested constituencies, then the above figures serve to demonstrate, not the partiality of the police, but their impartiality.

RESULT OF THE ELECTIONS.

According to the returns received from the various constituencies up to the evening of the 13th instant, the result of the election stands thus:—

Government Supporters.
Former Progressists	110
Former Liberals	92
Minor Parties supporting the Constitutional Party	50
Total Government Supporters	252
Government Opponents.
National Unionists	20
Independents	17
Total Government Opponents	37
Grand Total	289

We take these figures from the Jiji Shimpo. Other journals vary considerably in their estimates of the relative strengths of the Progressists and Liberals, some making the Liberal figure more than 100. It will be observed that the National Unionists come out better than they expected. The idea was that they would not win more than 12 seats, and they have carried twenty up to the present.

What seems tolerably certain is that even though the Liberals sever their connexion with the Progressists, the latter will still remain with a working majority. The above list shows that the Progressists command about 160 votes without the Liberals. That is already a plurality of the whole House, and it is most improbable that a rupture between the two sections of the Constitutional Party would lead to the secession of the whole 92 Liberals. A portion of the latter would remain with the Progressists, still further swelling their majority.

As is usually the case, considerable discrepancies are shown in the election returns published by different journals, the political complexion of the newspaper being imparted to its estimates. There is remarkable agreement with regard to the Liberals' however. The seats carried by them are put at 96 by three leading journals and at 95 by two others. But the number of Progressist representatives varies in the returns of these five papers between 101 and 120. Taking the averages of the five statements, we obtain the following:—

	Present Elections.	Former Numbers.
Progressists	112	91
Liberals	96	98
Neutrals (supporting the Constitutionalists)	51	50
Total Government Supporters	259
National Unionists	20	26
Independents	21	35
Total Government Opponents	41
Grand Total	300	300

The Liberals, it will be seen, have lost 2 seats and the Progressists have gained 21, at the expense, chiefly, of the Independents and the National Unionists. The Independents are, for the most part, "business men," that is to say, representatives of the mercantile class. It is a feature of the recent elections that the trading and manufacturing communities stood conspicuously aloof.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

A SWEEPING MEASURE.

The Minister of State for Education has taken a step of almost heroic dimensions. Our readers remember, of course, the strong views recently expressed by Professor Toyama, the attempt made by one or two vernacular journals to convict him of having violated the regulations which forbid the intrusion of educationists into the domain of politics, and the reply made to his strictures by Mr. Ozaki Yukio, the present Minister of State for Justice. Immediately on the heels of that interesting series of incidents comes an announcement that the Minister of Education has rescinded, at one coup, no less than 23 measures, enacted and promulgated from time to time by his predecessors, for excluding teachers, students and educational officials from interference in politics, and for regulating the relations of teachers and taught. The broad result of this sweeping abolition—1 enactment, 4 notifications, 6 instructions & 12 injunctions—is that educational officials and students are apparently left to do pretty much as they like. But that is not the idea or intention of the Minister, as interpreted by Mr. Kashiwada, his lieutenant. His Excellency does not think that people engaged in the instruction of the young or in the direction of educational affairs should mix in politics, neither does he think that licence should take the place of law in the world of professorship and studentship. His notion is that these are matters of what may be called natural morality; that there are certain unwritten principles which ought to guide and are amply sufficient to guide, teachers, and taught in their attitude towards one another, and that all other affairs falling under the purview of the now extinct enactments, instructions, injunctions and what not, may be left to the control and direction of those officially concerned. We are not setting forth the Minister's views from any personal cognisance that we have of them, but only from the statements of vernacular newspapers which report the Vice-Minister's explanations. Apart from the aspect which Mr. Ozaki's action assumes as an answer to the critics who condemned Professor Toyama—and it is only fair to note that these same critics, while insisting that the regulations had been violated, took care to announce their dissent from the principle of such legislation,—the great point of interest for the Japanese public will be to see whether by the introduction of a system of self-government, the present highly unsatisfactory state of discipline in Japanese schools can be improved. Recently the Tokyo newspapers, in a two-line paragraph, reported the resignation of the Director of the High Commercial School. No one seems to have paid any attention to the incident. Yet this is the gentleman against whom the students rebelled two months ago; the gentleman whom the then Minister of Education, Professor Toyama, publicly took credit for having kept in office despite the students' objections. But the students won the day in the end. They simply boycotted the unfortunate Director, who has now been quietly snuffed out. It is always so: always the students win. Under the circumstances the new Minister's act is very courageous. Perhaps he knows his own countrymen, and is right in expecting that if a larger measure of trust be placed in the students, they will prove themselves worthier of trust.

COUNT OKUMA.

Count Okuma has been talking, it is said, to a member of the House of Peers who has communicated the conversation to the Nippon. The Count seems to be a little weary. He finds it impossible to eliminate the personal equation from the realm of the Administration, and he says that he can fully sympathise with the difficulties that the same problem presented to Marquis Ito. As to the duration of the present Cabinet's life, his Excellency evidently entertains no particularly strong hopes. A debacle may come at any moment. Having entered the boat, however, he has no intention of abandoning the helm, but will stick to his post until the craft runs ashore, whenever and wherever that may be.

We do not for our part appreciate the grounds of Count Okuma's pessimism. The danger to be apprehended at the moment is one and one only, namely, a rupture between the Liberals and the Progressists. But what then? Suppose that a rupture does occur, must it be followed by the fall of the Okuma Cabinet? We fail to see the necessity of any such sequence. The Progressists have a following of over 150 in the new House of Representatives. The members returned as actual and open Progressists aggregate at least 110, and there are certainly 50 "Neutrals" (chiuritsu), as they are called, who may be confidently expected to work hand in hand with the Progressists. Further, even if the Liberals do break away, the general opinion seems to be that they would not secede en bloc: a section, large or small, would remain in the Progressist camp. Without reckoning that contingency, however, Count Okuma's Party would have a plurality in the House, and there is no apparent reason, from a Parliamentary point of view, why the Cabinet should not remain in power minus its Liberal constituents. Many people will probably doubt whether the Progressists alone could form a Cabinet. We think that they could. They have many able men in their ranks—men at least as competent to discharge Ministerial functions as some of the present holders of portfolios. Six months ago it was not supposed that any party, or combination of parties, could construct a Cabinet, but that idea was based on a now obsolete estimate of a Cabinet's qualifications. Very few will be found to-day to deny that the Progressists alone could organise a Ministry fully as worthy of public confidence as the Ministry now in power. In our opinion the very best thing that could happen for the country would be a final rupture between the two parties. The trimmings and conciliations now required to hold them together are completely paralysing their usefulness, and it is evident that they shrink from the essential step of framing a platform lest the effort should lay bare fatal divergences of view. They are now a nondescript, unwieldy, colourless body, and it would be an immense gain to the nation as well as to themselves if they abandoned their irrational alliance and shook off the fetters that are now shackling their energies.

THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

The rumour that Mr. Ozaki Yukio would take the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, being succeeded at the Educational Department by Mr. Ebara Soroku, seems to have lost all credibility. But journals supposed to have a semi-official cachet continue to attack Mr. Hoshi Toru strenuously for leaving his post at such a juncture, and sacrificing the public interests to his own political ambition. One newspaper, never conspicuous for moderation, professes to have exact knowledge of the telegrams that passed between Mr. Hoshi and the Foreign Office, and endeavours to show that Mr. Hoshi obtained money for travelling expenses to recruit his health before intimating his intention of returning to Japan. We infer from all this that there is some apprehension as to the nature of the agitation which Mr. Hoshi may set on foot when he arrives in Japan, and that it is considered wise to discount his efforts beforehand. An amusing point in the criticism is that Count Okuma is blamed for allowing Mr. Hoshi to leave Washington. What is a Foreign Minister to do in such a case, we wonder. Receiving a telegram to the effect that the Japanese Minister in Washington is in a dangerous state of health, and has been medically recommended to seek change of air, is the Minister in Tokyo to say:—"No, I don't believe you and your medical advisers. I don't believe you are sick at all. Remain at your post." That would simply be another way of saying, "resign in disgrace," but of course journalistic Solons do not descend to such paltry details.

A QUIET THRUST.

Japanese writers often indulge in a kind of staid sarcasm that has the charm of seeming prefectly artless and innocent. The Osaka Asahi, for example, commenting on the recent wholesale abolition of regulations and instructions by the Minister of State for Education, says that since the principles inculcated in the rescinded instruments are altogether elementary, there is no need of such enactments, and, indeed, their existence is to some extent an insult to the intelligence of people imparting and people receiving education. But—and here comes the innocent stab—there is a measure of exceptional danger in opening the political arena—or seeming to open it—to the student class at present, for they are already sufficiently excited by observing that Soshi can attain, now-a-days, at one bound to important official positions, and they are consequently not unlikely to think that politics is the best profession an ardent youth can embrace. The "one-bound" business, so gently dovetailed into this context, has a special application and a general significance: the former because a gentleman, skilled in fence, who used formerly to act as bodyguard to a member of the present Cabinet, has been elevated to the headship of a bureau; and the latter because, from the point of view of certain toothless conservatives, the great majority of the present holders of portfolios made their political debut as Soshi. That is nothing new in Japan, however. Some of the greatest of the Meiji statesmen have openly confessed that they were once Soshi of the most lawless type.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MR. HOSHI TORU.

Mr. Hoshi Toru has not brought back in his portmanteau an infernal machine to blow up the Cabinet. On the contrary, he comes home with the quietest and most pacific intentions possible. His resolution to resign, he says, was taken before such a thing as the Kensei-to (Constitutional Party) had any existence. It is quite erroneous to suppose that the former was a consequence of the latter. The fact is that two years' service in Washington was quite as much as he cared for—as much as his health would stand and as much as his interest in domestic politics permitted. He has not come home to demand a seat in the Cabinet. There is nothing particularly attractive about a Ministerial portfolio in his eyes. He hints that he could have one without great difficulty, but his principal sphere of usefulness is not in the Cabinet at present. The advent of party Government has been a little precipitate in Japan, especially when considered as an outcome of the Liberal-Progressist union. The time was not fully ripe for such a union. Cōoperation should have been the programme until the two parties understood each other better, and were ready to join hands, not merely for destructive purposes. However, the die is now cast, and the efforts of all friends of progress should be to prevent a reaction. It will not do to have foreigners conclude that Japan is not capable of living under a constitutional system. It will not do to have the question of suspending the Constitution forced into the realm of practical politics. Mr. Hoshi will exert his influence to avert catastrophes of that kind, and he thinks that he can exert it best outside the Cabinet. So the long and short of the matter is that the Ministry will find in him not a hostile agitator but a staunch supporter.

Judging from the columns of the vernacular journals it really seems as though Mr. Hoshi's whole time must have been devoted to interviews with newspaper representatives since his return. At least half a dozen independent interviews are published. They contain a great deal that is interesting. Mr. Hoshi speaks with evident satisfaction of his own share in bringing about the settlement of the Hawaiian complication. He gives full credit to Mr. Shimamura, Japan's Chargé d'Affaires in Honolulu, for his tact and assiduity in the early stages of the trouble, but says that it would have been impossible for him to conduct the negotiations to a satisfactory conclusion in the sequel of his previous proceedings. Mr. Hoshi, therefore, took the matter into his own hands, and was able to establish his case so thoroughly that, on the day after the joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress in favour of the annexation of Hawaii, the Secretary of State sent for Mr. Hoshi and the Hawaiian Representative, and told the latter in the former's presence that the United States Government desired to see a settlement effected with Japan by way of preliminary to the annexation of Hawaii. At the same time the Secretary of State asked Mr. Hoshi to cut down Japan's pecuniary demand to the lowest possible figure, and Mr. Hoshi, then and there, named 150,000 yen as the irreducible minimum. He had urged from the outset that this Hawaiian problem should be treated as a question not of right but of compensation, and, as the Tokyo Government had agreed to that view, he was in a position at the last to bring the thing to a speedy issue. In return, he obtained from the Washington Government distinct assurances that the Japanese in Hawaii should be placed on strictly the same footing as Occidental subjects or citizens, and thus, so far from immigration being checked under the new regimen, he anticipated that it would assume larger dimensions than ever.

Mr. Hoshi is persuaded that the United States will not annex the Philippines. The wisdom of a strictly self-contained mood is still recognised by the leaders of public opinion and the directors of the country's affairs. Annexation would mean a development of her military burdens for which America is not yet prepared. Still there is a pretty strong section of opinion in favour of an expansive policy, and when Congress meets in October some very interesting and vehement debates may be anticipated.

As to an Anglo-American alliance, Mr. Hoshi does not regard it as a contingency of the immediate future. The drift of American public opinion, he says is not to be gauged by the writing of papers like the New York Herald and the Sun. There is no doubt that events connected with the Hispano-American War have brought the old country and the new very close together, and that the chances of their occupying different camps in any international complications of the future have been greatly diminished. That is a result of the first importance to the world, but it is something very different from an alliance. So, too, in answer to those who urge the conclusion of a triple alliance between Japan, England, and the United States, Mr. Hoshi say that the thing is not possible at present. Such an alliance would involve complications which England does not care to take—leaving America altogether out of the question. There is too much tendency to magnify the importance of Far-Eastern affairs. England has such enormous interests and responsibilities in all parts of the world that the place which the Far East occupies in her scale of political measurements is very different from the place which the Far East occupies in its own estimation. Japan must bide her time and prepare to be a really valuable ally. Above all, she must not take the initiative in seeking an alliance. She may rest assured that neither Great Britain nor the United States will form any final decision about the Philippines without consulting her, and it will be time enough for her to step into the arena when she is invited to do so.

A COLONIAL ADMINISTRATION SCHOOL.

It is stated that when the Ito Cabinet was in power, a project had been almost carried to maturity for establishing a school at which persons intending to serve as officials in Formosa should receive special education. Viscount Yoshikawa, Minister of Home Affairs, and Mr. Nomura, Head of the Administrative Bureau in Formosa, were prominently interested in that most excellent reform, but the Ministry went out of office before the necessary preliminaries had been arranged. We read in vernacular newspapers that the matter has now been taken up by Count Itagaki, at the instance of Mr. Nomura, and that the School will probably be soon organized. The curriculum will include the languages of Formosa and China, colonial-administration and finance, the English language and Japanese law. Fifty students are to be admitted, graduates of Ordinary Middle Schools being eligible, and after two years at the School, those that have successfully passed will be appointed to official positions in Formosa, under obligation to serve there for at least five years. The State will contribute 50 yen annually towards the expenses of each student while at the School, and the total cost of maintaining the institution is estimated at 18,000 yen a year.

The Government seems to have wisely availed itself, and to be still availing itself, of the excellent advice given by Mr. Montague Kirkwood after his visit to Formosa last year. Mr. Kirkwood's views were set forth in epitome by some of the vernacular newspapers on his return to Tokyo, and they struck us as eminently sensible in every point. The journals publishing them were also very outspoken in their applause. Mr. Kirkwood, indeed, had special qualifications for the task entrusted to him, inasmuch as his already very considerable knowledge of such problems had been supplemented by actual study of the system pursued by the British Government in India and Ceylon, which countries he visited on purpose to make investigations. After all, England's colonial methods bear the cachet of unique success, and Japan, who owes so much of her modern progress and development to large-minded adoption of whatever seems good in the systems of other countries, only gives another example of shrewd liberalism when she follows British precedents in the administration of her new territories. Mr. Kirkwood laid great stress on the importance of educating officials so that they should be specially qualified for service in Formosa, and of introducing into the service itself changes such as might induce people to make it a life-long career. The School spoken of above appears to be a part of the machinery required for giving effect to his ideas, many of which were also traceable in the programme of reforms recently carried out in the Island.

THE TREASURY'S SILVER.

The Treasury appears to have been very fortunate in getting rid of its stock of silver—coins and ingots. A market was found in China, and it is stated that, since May 1st, nearly 20 million yen worth of ingots have been sold there. Ten millions have been used for the purposes of the subsidiary coinage, and the 17 millions recently lodged with the Bank of Japan as security for note issues will soon be sold, also in China. Thus only a small quantity—5 or 6 millions—will remain, and that can conveniently be kept for subsidiary coins. Our readers may remember that we always denied the probability of any serious inconvenience in connexion with an inflow of silver yen pieces for exchange against gold. The great point was that the term of exchangeability should not be unduly extended, not because yen coins were likely to come in, but because the sooner this element of uncertainty could be eliminated from the system, the better for the latter's reputation. We did not foresee, however, that the Treasury would find so little difficulty in disposing of its stock of silver. The fact is very satisfactory.

Digitized by Google
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

RESURRECTED ERRORS.

We did not expect to be again confronted by that very stale canard about the withdrawal of British ships from Port Arthur in deference to Russia's representations. But error dies hard. The tale is "resurrected" in the columns of the Japan Times, which, in a list of England's blunders and pusillanimities, mentions "the hasty exit of British war-vessels from Port Arthur at Russia's instance." Of course, if the Japan Times bases its estimate of Great Britain's back-bone on such canards as that, we can not wonder that it is much misled. Does not our contemporary know that the story which it now reviews editorially was proved conclusively to be a gross falsehood? A British vessel was sent to Port Arthur in the ordinary course of naval routine as arranged by the Admiral on the China and Japan Station. She was in receipt of orders to proceed elsewhere before any reference whatever was made to the subject by the Russian Government, and she had left Port Arthur before Lord Salisbury addressed any question to the Admiralty. It was a piece of very objectionable impertinence on Russia's part to convey to Lord Salisbury any comment of the kind, and we can not but conjecture with regret the terms of the answer that St. Petersburg would have received from London had Lord Palmerston been at the Foreign Office. Be that as it may, however, the Japan Times is utterly wrong in saying that there was "a hasty exit of British war-vessels from Port Arthur at Russia's instance."

Another example of British discomfiture quoted by the same journal is "the Bear's triumph at the Lu-Hun Railway exploitation." The arrangement for the construction of the Lu-Hun Railway was concluded with a Belgian syndicate two years ago Its present form shows considerable modifications of the original contract, but the simple fact remains that a Belgian syndicate succeeded where various other syndicates, including a Russian, had failed. What would the Japan Times have had the English Government do? Suppose that instead of empty denunciations our contemporary descends to practical issues. Does it think that the British Government should have forbidden China, under menace, to grant a railway concession to any nationals other than British? We shall be answered perhaps, "there are ways." Yes, there are, but happily the British Government does not tread them. If its people can not succeed in open competition, it does not employ the forces of the State to promote their enterprises.

FOREIGN CAPITAL.

Our readers are probably as tired of reading about the introduction of foreign capital as we are of writing about it. However, there are two points made by the Jiji Shimpo which are worth brief notice. The first is that foreign capital will never come in until the ownership of land in Japan by foreigners becomes lawful. There is no occasion to discuss that proposition. We quote it merely as showing the growth of this particular conviction in the minds of the Japanese. The second point is that foreign capitalists are very ignorant of the state of Japanese finance, as they obtain their ideas of it from the residents at the Treaty Ports, who really know very little about the affairs of the country; or from correspondents of the London Economist, whose writings abound with errors and misapprehensions. Now there is a remark that we desire to make to the Jiji Shimpo. If it has such fault to find with the defective knowledge of the foreigners residing in the Treaty Ports, and with the articles and correspondence written by foreigners on the subject of Japanese finance, why does it not itself give us some enlightenment? Why does it not publish an article, or a series of articles, from which a really comprehensive view of the country's financial condition can be obtained? We are very constant and attentive readers of the Japanese press—have been constant and attentive readers for years—, and we venture to say that in no other civilized country do the public prints take so little trouble, or show so little competence, to present lucid and exhaustive resumés of the national finances, or of the empire's general economic conditions. If Japanese journalists themselves are conspicuous for the scanty information they give their readers on this subject, why does the Jiji Shimpo blame foreigners for not doing better? Where is the average foreigner to obtain really trustworthy and full data? We ourselves have spent weeks, nay months, endeavouring to find our way through the various figures presented to the Diet or procured from other sources. We believe that we have arrived at clear and correct results, and we are not claiming any undue credit when we say that there have appeared in the columns of the Japan Mail articles on Japanese finance far fuller and far more comprehensible than anything ever published by the vernacular press, so far as our knowledge of its contents goes. Frankly speaking, we can never be courageous enough to place reliance on the figures published by our vernacular contemporaries. Let us instance a case in point—a case that has just occurred. Writing last month on the subject of Japanese finance, we published a statement of the National Debt as it stood on March 31st 1898. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun now publishes a statement which it calls the "present state of the Debt." Here are the two tables:—

	"Present Amount" according to Nichi Nichi. Yen.	Amount on March 31 according to Japan Mail. Yen.
Consols	170,293,650	173 857,250
War Bonds	124 571,000	124 572,000
Public Undertakings Bonds	37,900 000	38,000,000
Pension Bonds	29 238,820	29,453 820
Railway Bonds	17,907,350	17,807,350
Naval Bonds	9 213 600	9,288,600
Hokkaido Railway Bonds	1,000 000	1,000,000
Old Loan	5 266,908	5,266 908
	395,401,328	399 245,928

It will be observed that only the last two items in the table—the Hokkaido Railway Bonds and the Old Loan—are the same in both lists. Moreover, if our readers take the trouble to add up the Nichi Nichi's figures, they will find that the total is 395,391,328, not 395,401,328, as stated by our contemporary. That is a perpetual source of bewilderment: the columns of figures given by Japanese newspapers hardly ever make the totals put under them. Of course, it may occur to our readers that the Nichi Nichi's table shows the state of the Debt in August, whereas ours' showed its state at the end of March. May we assume, then, that 3½ million yen worth of Consols have been redeemed since the beginning of April? Nothing has been heard of such a transaction, and moreover the amount of Consols to be redeemed this year stands at only 446,631 yen in the Treasury's Estimates. As for the War Bonds, they do not begin to be redeemable until 1900, yet our contemporary's figure shows a diminution of 1,000 yen; and similarly Public Undertakings Bonds, which do not become redeemable until 1901, have diminished by 100,000 yen. We need not pursue the analysis. Our object in referring to it is merely to show the Jiji Shimpo the immense difficulties that foreigners have to encounter in approaching the problem of Japanese finance, and to traverse its very unjust condemnation of their ignorance. We invite the Jiji Shimpo to enlighten us, and we promise it that if it does so, the fullest attention will be given by the foreign residents to its statements.

FOREIGNERS AND SHARES IN JAPANESE COMPANIES.

